The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to alter and to establish sundry post roads," and the same being read,

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be referred to Mr. THATCHER, Mr. WOODS, and Mr. CLAIBORNE.

Mr. HARPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, enclosing a copy of a letter to him from the commissioners of valuation of houses and lands in the State of New York; which were read, and ordered to be committed to the Committee of the Whole House to whom is committed the bill to provide for equalizing the valuations of unseated lands

CONNECTICUT WESTERN RESERVE.

The bill to authorize the President of the United States to accept, for the United States, a cession of jurisdiction of the territory west of Pennsylvania, commonly called the Western Reserve of Connecticut, was read the third time; and upon the question being put, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ELMENDORF proceeded to show, in a very lengthy discussion of the subject, the invalidity of the claim of Connecticut to the land in question; and against the passing of the bill.

He was followed by Messrs. BIRD, and RANDOLPH, on the same side, and Messrs. EDMOND, E. GOODRICH, and HARPER, in favor of it.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays, and the bill passed—yeas 54, nays 36, as follows:

SUNDRY BILLS.

Mr. HARPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented a bill to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue; which was twice read and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, presented a bill for continuing in force, for a limited time, an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of taking evidence in cases of contested elections for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to compel the attendance of witnesses;" which was twice read, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time on Monday next.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill to make appropriations for the Navy of the United States, during the year one thousand eight hundred; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to authorize the sale and conveyance of lands, in certain cases, by the Marshals of the United States, and to confirm former sales; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to continue in force the act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment.

Ordered, That the said bill be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to incorporate a company by the name and style of "The Mine and Metal Company;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

SATURDAY, April 12.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement exhibiting the tonnage of the shipping of the United States at the close of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee on the bill to support and repair certain light-houses at New London, &c.; which was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act authorizing Seth Harding to locate certain lands in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

Ordered, That the said bill be referred to the Committee who were instructed, on the twenty-fifth of February last, to prepare and report a bill appropriating a tract of land sufficient to satisfy the claims of the Nova Scotia and Canada refugees, and designating the mode in which their respective bounties in land shall be located.

MINE AND METAL COMPANY.

The House again went into Committee on the bill to incorporate a company by the name and style of the Mine and Metal Company, when the debate was continued. Messrs. SEWALL, CHAMPLIN, WALN, S. SMITH, PARKER, and J. BROWN, spoke in favor of the bill and against the motion to strike out. Messrs. NICHOLAS and MACON spoke in favor of striking out the section.

Mr. KITCHELL moved for the Committee to rise; he thought more information might be obtained of the prospect of success attending this experiment. He said there was a gentleman of much respectability who had superintended the works before the war, to whose opinion he should be willing to pay much deference, and which the Committee might procure in two days.

After some few observations, the Committee rose, and on the question for leave to sit again, it was carried—44 to 33.

LOAN OFFICE CERTIFICATES.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the report of the Committee of Claims, which was instructed to inquire whether any, and what, alterations would be necessary to be made in the act passed the 12th June, 1798, respecting loan office and final settlement certificates, indents of interest, &c.

Courts of the United States, &c.

H. OF R.

The Committee of Claims entered in their report into a course of reasoning on the subject, and concluded with an opinion that no alteration ought to be made in the law of June, 1798.

Mr. D. FOSTER hoped the report would not be agreed to. He argued the propriety of granting this species of claim, which was very different from claims in general, and in which no imposition could be perpetrated. He thought it but just to continue the extension of the law for a longer period.

MESSRS. HARPER, GORDON, DANA, SHEPARD, HILL, and READ, also supported the rights of this description of claim, and the justice of extending the bill to them.

MESSRS. GRISWOLD, MACON, S. SMITH, EDMUND, and VARNUM, spoke in favor of the report.

The report was agreed to—yeas 40, nays 30.

The committee also reported that the same decision (whatever it might be) ought to apply to the petitions of Henry and Sarah Waters, and of Lucas Ames; which was referred to the same Committee. This was likewise agreed to.

On the question for the House to concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole, it was carried.

MONDAY, April 14.

Mr. HARPER, from the committee to whom was referred the bill respecting patents, &c., and the amendments of the Senate thereto, reported their opinion that the House ought to agree with the said amendments.

The House concurred.

Mr. DAVIS laid on the table a resolution that the next annual meeting of Congress should be on the first Monday in December next.

The following engrossed bills were read the third time, and passed, viz:

An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1800;

An act to make appropriations for the Navy of the United States for the year 1800;

An act to continue in force for a limited time an act entitled an act prescribing the mode of taking evidence in cases of contested elections of members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to compel the attendance of witnesses;

An act to authorize the sale and conveyance of lands, in certain cases, by the Marshals of the United States, and to confirm former sales;

An act to continue in force an act in addition to an act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States;

An act to provide for rebuilding the light-house at New London, for the support of a light-house at Clark's Point, and for the erection and support of the light-house at Wigwam Point, and for other purposes.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

On motion of Mr. HARPER, the Judiciary bill was called up; when Mr. KITCHELL, after observing that this bill, though in a different shape, had been before the House, by whom it was referred to a select committee, after, in his opinion, an expression of disapprobation of the principle, and a new bill having been reported, moved that the further consideration thereof be postponed to the first Monday in December next.

A warm and lengthy debate was had on the motion for postponement, on which the question was taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 48, nays 46, as follows:

NAYS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, Samuel W. Dana, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, William B. Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, Archibald Henderson, William H. Hill, Benjamin Huger, James H. Inlay, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, Samuel Lyman, John Marshall, Lewis R. Morris, Abraham Nott, Robert Page, Josiah Parker, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

JAMES T. BISHOP.

Mr. WALN presented a petition of James T. Bishop, who stated, that he came to this country in 1794; that he took the oath of allegiance agreeably to the laws of Pennsylvania; that he went to Europe in 1796, with the intent of settling his affairs, so as to make his permanent residence in the United States, where he arrived in 1798; he then, supposing his former oath sufficient, neglected to make the application before the law precluded him. He prays that a law may be passed in his favor to admit him to become a citizen.

Referred to a select committee.

ADDITIONAL DUTY ON SALT.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the resolution reported by the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, that the said committee have leave to bring in a bill to continue in force an act laying an additional duty on salt.

The Committee of the Whole agreed to the resolution, and rose and reported it.

On the question for the House to concur, Mr. CLAY observed it was a subject of very great importance to people who resided in the back countries, who used a considerable quantity of salt for their cattle; he moved for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDOLPH spoke against agreeing with the reported resolution.

The question was then taken and decided in the affirmative—yeas 54, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—George Baer, Theodorus Bailey, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, George Dent, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Dwight Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, William Gordon, Edwin Gray, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, William H. Hill, Benjamin Huger, James H. Imlay, Aaron Kitchell, Silas Lee, Samuel Lyman, James Linn, Lewis R. Morris, Abraham Nott, Robert Page, Josiah Parker, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, William Shepard, John Smith, Richard Dobbs Spaight, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Philip Van Cortlandt, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, and Lemuel Williams.

NAYS—Willis Alston, Phaniel Bishop, Rob't Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William Charles Cole Claiborne, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmendorf, John Fowler, Albert Gallatin, Andrew Gregg, Thomas Hartley, Archibald Henderson, David Holmes, George Jackson, James Jones, Matthew Lyon, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, Joseph H. Nicholson, John Randolph, John Smilie, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, Benjamin Taliaferro, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, Joseph B. Varnum, Robert Williams, and Henry Woods.

STEPHEN SAYRE.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the report of the Committee of Claims upon the petition of Stephen Sayre, who prayed compensation as Secretary of Legation to Mr. Arthur Lee, and other services performed for the United States at Berlin, during the war.

The report was very lengthy, and concludes with an opinion that after full consideration, the former determination of the House was proper; and that the petitioner ought again to have leave to withdraw his papers.

Mr. HARPER made a lengthy answer to the report; when the question was taken on agreeing therewith and carried—yeas 46, nays 27. The House concurred.

TUESDAY, April 15.

The House took up the report of the Post Road Committee on the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill to alter and establish certain post roads; several of which were agreed and some disagreed with.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the bill for the regulation of public arsenals and magazines; which was amended and ordered to be engrossed for its third reading.

Mr. D. FOSTER, from the committee appointed to inquire whether any and what alterations ought to be made in the law, entitled "An act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country," reported an additional bill on that subject, which was twice read and committed to the whole House.

Mr. GRISWOLD from the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, reported a bill to continue in force an act entitled "an act laying additional duty on salt imported into the United States and for other purposes," which was read and referred to a Committee of the whole House.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate insist on their amendments, disagreed to by this House, to the bill, entitled "An act to establish a General Stamp Office," in the fifth line of the sixth section thereof. The Senate also insist on their amendments disagreed to by this House, in the second and fourth lines of the seventh section; and do recede from their amendment in the ninth line of the sixth section of the said bill.

Mr. HARPER, from the managers appointed on the part of this House, to confer with the managers appointed on the part of the Senate, on the subject-matter of the amendments depending between the two Houses to the bill, entitled "An act to establish a General Stamp Office," made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth recede from their disagreement to the amendments insisted on by the Senate to the said bill; and doth agree to the same, with amendments.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they had passed the act to authorize the defence of our merchant vessels against French depredations; and an act for the preservation of peace with the Indians on the frontiers, with sundry amendments. Also that they had passed a bill entitled an act permitting the exportation of certain parcels of gunpowder, muskets, and cutlasses, to which they desire the concurrence of the House.

VIRGINIA LAND WARRANTS.

The House went into Committee on the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Temple Elliot, William Boyce, and Simon Somers, who prayed for patents of lands for services as officers in the Virginia line.

It appeared that these officers had a legal claim upon the State of Virginia, which gave them warrants, but, immediately subsequent, it appeared that the lands, now a part of Kentucky and a part of the Northwestern Territory, were ceded to the United States, but which on that account the petitioners were prevented from locating. They therefore preferred their petitions to the General Government to confirm the former grants, by a law in their favor.

MESSRS. NEW, H. LEE, MARSHALL, RANDOLPH, EGGLESTON, NICHOLAS, and CHAMPLIN, warmly supported the justice of the case, in favor of men who were active in the service of the United States, and the injustice of refusal. It was stated that a very liberal cession of land, sufficient for a nation, was ceded to the United States by Virginia, who reserved out of it only enough to satisfy the claim of her officers in the Continental troops. It therefore to the United States became a claim from Virginia that the Government might enable her to fulfil her engagements to the officers of the Continental line. The amount of claims of this nature was supposed to amount to from 50 to 100,000 acres, which, compared to the immense cession, was nothing to the Government, but much to the meritorious individuals.

Messrs. D. FOSTER, MACON, and GALLATIN, vindicated the report, on the ground that there was no legal claim against the Government, but that it stood in the same situation with many others which had been refused; and except a law was passed to compensate all meritorious services which had been refused on various accounts, it would be improper to favor those individuals. It was adopting a principle, it was urged, to which no limits could be ascertained; it might even extend to the opening of commutation again.

The report was at length disagreed to—yeas 21, nays 45,

WEDNESDAY, April 16.

An engrossed bill for the regulation of public arsenals was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRACE, from the committee appointed on the petitions of several persons in the Northwestern Territory, respecting the lands purchased by Judge Symmes, having obtained leave, presented their report, and "A bill to provide for the disposition of the lands between the Great and Little Miami rivers," which was twice read and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce, reported a bill to establish the district of Kennebunk, and to annex Lyme to New London; to alter the districts of Bermuda Hundred and City Point, and therein to amend the act entitled an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage.

The bill was read twice and committed.

The House took up the amendments of the Senate to the following bills, which they agreed to: An act authorizing the defence of the merchant vessels of the United States &c., and an act to regulate trade, and to preserve peace with the Indians.

The House also took up the act permitting the exportation of certain arms and ammunition; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee on the bill supplementary to the laws now in force, fixing the pay of the officers of the Senate, and House of Representatives.

The blanks being filled the bills were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. LEE called up his resolution for the appointment of a committee to draw up rules and regulations respecting the District of Columbia. Five members were appointed.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS FOR PRESIDENT, &c.

The House went into a Committee on the bill from the Senate prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections for President and Vice President.

The bill having been read, and the first section being under consideration,

Mr. MARSHALL, after speaking of the importance of the subject before the Committee, and the necessity of some salutary mode being adopted for this object, expressed his doubts of the propriety of two points in this first section of the bill, to wit: first, that the Senate were to name the Chairman of the Grand Committee and secondly that the opinion of this Grand Committee was to be final. He therefore moved to strike out of the section so much as related to those principles, and read what he wished to introduce for a substitute.

Some debate was had on this motion, when Mr. NICHOLAS expressing a desire to acquire all the information that was necessary to digest the new principles, moved the Committee to rise; which was done accordingly, and it obtained leave to sit again.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The House then went into Committee on the bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the year 1800. The several items were filled as follows:

Pay of the Army	-	-	$1,018,620
Subsistence	-	-	787,786
Forage	-	-	36,672

Invalid pensions for one year	-	-	93,000
Quartermaster's department	-	-	528,065

Making a total appropriation of - 3,042,576

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read the third time to-morrow.

VIRGINIA LAND WARRANTS.

Ordered, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Alexander Spotswood, referred to them on the twenty-eighth of February last, and that the same be referred to the Committee of the whole House to whom was committed, on the twenty-fifth of February last, the report of the Committee of Claims on the several petitions of Temple Elliot, of William Boyce, and of Simon Sommers.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Claims, made the twenty-fifth of February last, on the several petitions of Temple Elliot, of William Boyce, and of Simon Sommers; to which Committee of the Whole was also referred the report of the Committee of Claims on the memorial of David Jones and William Rogers; and, after spending some time therein, the SPEAKER resumed the Chair, and Mr. RUTLEDGE reported that the Committee had, according to order, again had the said reports under consideration, and directed him to report to the House their disagreement to the report of the Committee of Claims on the several petitions of Temple Elliot, of William Boyce, and of Simon Sommers; and their agreement to the report on the memorial of David Jones and William Rogers.

The said report on the several petitions of Temple Elliot, of William Boyce, and of Simon Sommers, being read in the words following, to wit:

"That the several petitioners seek for grants of land from the United States, in consideration of services performed in the Army of the United States, in the Virginia line, during the Revolutionary war. A report on the said petition of Temple Elliot, was made upon the second of April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, and is herewith submitted. The committee are of opinion it would be proper for the House to agree to the said report,

"The petitions of Mr. Boyce and of Mr. Sommers are grounded on the same principles with those of Mr. Elliot, and the committee report that the same decision which shall be made on the petition of Mr. Elliot, should be applied to the others.

"The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Temple Elliot, heir of Thomas Elliot, late Colonel in the Army of the United States, report: That the petitioner states that the said Thomas Elliot was a Colonel in the Virginia line of Continental troops, during the late war, and was induced to retire from service on account of ill health, at a period when he was not entitled to the bounty in lands engaged by law to certain officers and soldiers of the Continental Army; that, in consequence of his meritorious services, however, the State of Virginia, by a special resolve, on the sixteenth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, granted him a Colonel's bounty in lands, which lands the petitioner has, at considerable expense, had surveyed, platted, and located, in the tract reserved from the cession made by the State of Virginia to the United States, for the purpose of satisfying the grants of land made by said State to officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on Continental establishment, but that he cannot obtain patents for the same from the President of the United States, without the special interposition of Congress.

"The committee find that, in the act of cession which passed in the State of Virginia, on the twentieth of October, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, and which was accepted by Congress on the first day of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four, there is the following clause:

"That, in case the quantity of good land on the southeast side of the Ohio, upon the waters of Cumberland river, and between the Green river and Tennessee river, which have been reserved by law for the Virginia troops upon Continental establishment, should, from the North Carolina line bearing in further upon the Cumberland lands than was expected, prove insufficient for the legal bounties, the deficiency should be made up to the said troops in good lands, to be laid off between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami, on the northwest side of the river Ohio, in such proportion as has been engaged to them by the laws of Virginia."

"As it then appears, by Mr. Elliot's statement, that the deceased Colonel Elliot was not within the provision contemplated by the act of cession, and the cession was in fact made to, and accepted by, Congress before any grant of lands was made to Colonel Elliot, the committee are of opinion that the petitioner has no legal or equitable claim to have the said grant of lands, made by the State of Virginia, satisfied out of lands of the United States; and, therefore, they recommend that he have leave to withdraw his petition."

The question was taken, that the House do agree with the Committee of the whole House in their disagreement to said report, and resolved in the affirmative—36 to 23.

The report of the Committee of Claims on the memorial of David Jones and William Rogers, being then read, in the words following, to wit:

"That they represent that they had the honor of serving the United States in the capacity of Brigade Chaplains, in the Pennsylvania line, during the Revolutionary war with Great Britain; and that, as public servants, they think themselves entitled to all the favors and emoluments conferred on the other parts of the Army; that, finding they were not entitled by the former resolution of Congress to military bounty lands, and apprehending the omission was not intentional, they now, in their own behalf, and that of their absent brethren, solicit Congress to grant to the late Chaplains such quantities of land as they may be thought to merit.

"It is understood that the Chaplains regularly appointed to the several brigades of the late Continental Army, and who served until the close of the war, were entitled to, and did receive, the same pay and emoluments as were granted and paid to Lieutenant Colonels in the line of the Army, the right to military bounty lands only excepted.

"When the grants of land were promised by Congress to such officers and soldiers as should engage, and actually serve, in the Army till the close of the war, it does not appear that it was thought proper or expedient to extend the promise of such grants to the Chaplains, nor does it appear whether the question was or was not agitated. It is presumable that Congress then supposed the encouragement offered to gentlemen to serve in that capacity was sufficient. The committee are of opinion, at this late day, it would not be expedient or advisable to go into a consideration of the subject; and, therefore, recommend that the petitioners should have leave to withdraw their petition."

The question was taken, that the House do agree with the Committee of the whole House in their agreement to the said report, and resolved in the affirmative.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill authorizing the President of the United States to grant patents for the lands due to certain officers for their military services in the Continental Army, during the Revolutionary war; which, by resolutions of the Legislature of Virginia, were granted to them, and which have hitherto been withheld from them in consequence of the act of cession made by the said State to the United States.

Ordered, That Mr. MARSHALL, Mr. NEW, and Mr. HENRY LEE, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

H. OF R.

WILLIAM TAZEWELL.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the report of the select committee on the petition of William Tazewell, secretary to Mr. Gerry; he remained in Paris, and performed other services at the Hague and at London, but in returning he was captured. The Committee reported a resolution that the allowance in consequence of his capture should be granted.

The subject caused some debate, after which the resolution was agreed to—39 to 30. The House took up the report, and agreed to it, and a committee was appointed to report a bill conformably.

THURSDAY, April 17.

The bill entitled an act making appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States for the year 1800, and the bill supplementary to the laws now in force, fixing the compensation to the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, were respectively read a third time and passed.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that the Senate had passed the bill supplemental to the act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory, with amendments.

The bill and amendments were referred to a select committee, and ordered to be printed.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President, and Mr. MARSHALL's amendment being under consideration:

Mr. RANDOLPH moved to amend the amendment by striking out that part which directs the Grand Committee to be chosen by ballot, and inserting that they shall be chosen by lot.

Mr. NICHOLAS then rose, and after noticing the amendments which had been offered, and animadverting at considerable length upon the unconstitutionality of the bill, moved to strike out the first section.

He was followed by Mr. MARSHALL, in opposition, and Mr. RANDOLPH in support of the motion. The Committee then rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that they have passed the following bills with amendments, viz: an act for the government of the Navy of the United States; an act to provide for the removal of the Government of the United States, and an act to fix the compensation of the Paymaster General, and the Assistant to the Adjutant General.

FRIDAY, April 18.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill to provide for the removal and accommodation of the Government of the United States, were referred to a select committee. The amendments to the bill for the better government of the Navy of the United States, and to the bill fixing the compensation of the Paymaster General and Assistant to the Adjutant General were concurred in by the House.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT, &c.

Mr. NICHOLSON called for the order of the day on the bill prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. HARPER moved that it be postponed till Monday.

Mr. NICHOLSON, after expressing his abhorrence of the principles contained in the bill, then moved that it be postponed till the first Monday in December next.

MESSRS. HARPER, DANA, RUTLEDGE, and MARSHALL, opposed this motion; and Messrs. S. SMITH, GALLATIN, RANDOLPH, NICHOLSON, and NICHOLAS, supported it.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 52, as follows.

YEAS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Phanuel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William Charles Cole Claiborne, John Condit, Thomas T. Mr. HARPER's motion for postponement till Monday, was then agreed to—ayes 54.

ADDITIONAL DUTY ON SALT.

The bill to continue in force an act laying an additional duty on salt, imported into the United States, was taken up in Committee of the Whole; when

Mr. S. SMITH, with a view to make the tax perpetual, and the easier to be increased if necessary hereafter, moved to strike out that part of the bill which limits its duration to ten years.

This motion caused a long debate, and was finally negatived—yeas 40, nays 48.

Mr. MACON then moved to limit the operation of the law to two years, instead of ten, as the bill contemplates; which was also negatived—yeas 44, nays 47. The Committee then rose, and

Mr. RANDOLPH renewed the motion for inserting two years; which was negatived—yeas 44 nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Phaniel Bishop, Rob't Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Matthew Clay, William Charles Cole Claiborne, John Condit, John Dawson, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmendorf, John Fowler, Albert Gallatin, Edwin Gray, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Thomas Hartley, Joseph Heister, Archibald Henderson, David Holmes, Geo. Jackson, James Jones, Michael Leib, Matthew Lyon, James Linn, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, Joseph H. Nicholson, Abraham Nott, John Randolph, John Smith, John Smilie, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, Benjamin Taliaferro, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, Joseph B. Varnum, Robert Williams, and Henry Woods.

NAYS—George Baer, Theodorus Bailey, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, Samuel W. The bill was then ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

A message was received from the Senate, notifying that the Senate have passed a bill to fix the rank and pay of the commanding officer of the Marine Corps; and also the resolution sent from this House, authorizing the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to close the present session, by adjourning their respective Houses on the first Monday in May next, with an amendment.

The amendment to the first named bill was concurred in by the House.

To the resolution for adjournment, the Senate propose to strike out first, and insert second, which was concurred in by the House.

Mr. MARSHALL brought in a bill to authorize the allowance of a credit to William Tazewell, and also a bill to authorize the issuing of certain patents; which were respectively read and committed for Monday.

MONDAY, April 21.

Mr. PARKER, from the committee appointed, presented a bill authorizing the purchase of timber for naval purposes; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

An engrossed bill to continue in force an act for laying an additional duty on salt imported into the United States, and for other purposes, was read and passed—yeas 37, nays 28.

The House went into Committee on the bill to establish the districts of Kennebunk, Bermuda, and City Point, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

The House also went into a Committee on the report of the Committee of Claims in favor of the petition of Thomas Johnson, for pay, &c., to a company who went against the Indians in 1794. The report was agreed to, and a bill ordered to be brought in conformably thereto.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that they had agreed to the bill for the division of the Northwestern Territory into two separate governments, with amendments.

A bill was received from the Senate entitled "An act in addition to the act entitled 'An act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country;'" to which they desired concurrence.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole; to which was referred a bill of the same purport reported by a select committee.

Mr. RUTLEDGE from the committee to whom was referred the amendment of the Senate to the bill for settling the limits of the State of Georgia, and for establishing the Mississippi Government, made a report, which was referred to a Committee of the whole House.

ADMIRALS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. PARKER, from the Naval Committee, reported a bill for the appointment of Admirals for the Navy.

[This bill provides for the appointment of one Vice Admiral and four Rear Admirals, and arranges the fleet into squadrons.]

It was read a first time, and on the question for the second reading, it was carried—37 to 31. Having been read a second time, Mr. GALLATIN moved its postponement till the first Monday in December next.

The SPEAKER said the question was, whether it should be committed or not? The question for commitment was carried, 37 to 32. The question was then to make it the order of the day for the first Monday in December next.

Mr. EGGLESTON hoped it would be postponed. He said it would be agreed upon to suspend the building of the 74's for the present year; in addition to this our difference with France would most probably be soon adjusted. Another reason was, it would incur an addition of expense, which it would be improper to go into, having recently agreed to borrow $3,500,000. He was really surprised to hear such a bill proposed; he scarcely could think his colleague sincere.

Mr. PARKER said that the building of the 74's was not suspended, but it was thought advisable not to hurry their building. He stated a number of conveniences that would attend the new arrangement; that the whole expense would not be more than $10,000, but owing to the advantages, he believed it would be a real saving. He did not think there could be any certainty of a peace, from the revolutionary disposition of France; but even if it was certain that peace would be made with that nation, it was not certain that the combined Powers would not renew their hostilities. He wished this measure to be adopted, even if it was at the expense of the Army. The return of peace would render the Army nugatory, except just enough for the garrisons; the whole of the Army expenses, he said, was upwards of four millions, but the whole sum expended on the Navy (really a more efficient defence and advantage) was little more than two millions. He wished our naval defence to be nurtured and rendered respectable, for which the squadron arrangements and appointments of suitable commanders was necessary.

Mr. CHAMPLIN also spoke in favor of the bill, and in favor of its commitment for an earlier day.

Mr. CLAIBORNE could not think the gentleman (Mr. PARKER) sincere in his professions that the Army was not necessary, when he perceived that every motion to reduce the Army, which by other gentlemen was thought absolutely necessary, had as uniformly been opposed by that gentleman. Mr. C. said he did not look forward to a period when the Navy as well as the Army would be unnecessary. This appointment might take place at any time when there should be necessity of it; and, therefore, as it was not pretended the 74's could be built before the next session, it would then be time enough to think of voting these officers.

The SPEAKER said that it was unknown in the Parliamentary proceedings of any country that the merits of a bill were discussed on a motion for postponement; he must therefore say that any discussion on the bill was out of order, and that gentlemen must confine themselves merely on the question of the day this bill should be made the order for.

Mr. HARPER stated some of the inconveniences that must attend gentlemen who brought in, or would wish to support a bill being presented, recommending its provision by a motion to postpone; he conceived the bill a valuable one, and wished for an opportunity of endeavoring to convince the House of that fact, but he was precluded by the decision of the Chair, he must therefore beg leave to appeal from the decision.

The question was put, "Is the decision of the Chair right?" and carried—yeas 65.

Mr. SMITH said he should vote for this bill being the order for December next, but if the 74's were then ordered to proceed, he should vote for this bill, if then proposed.

The yeas and nays were taken on the question, "Shall this bill be postponed until the first Monday in December next?" and decided in the negative—yeas 44, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Phanuel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Matthew Clay, William C. C. Claiborne, John Condit, Thomas

The bill was then made the order for to-morrow.

Mr. HARPER, after again mentioning the inconveniences that must attend the decision of the Speaker against the merits of a subject being entered into, moved that the following might be added to the standing rules and orders of the House:

"On a motion to postpone any bill, motion, or resolution, the merits of the said bill, motion, or resolution, may be discussed."

It was laid on the table.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, &c.

Mr. HARPER moved that the Committee of the Whole should be discharged from the further consideration of the bill from the Senate, respecting the election of President and Vice President, for the purpose of committing it to a select committee. He thought some essential alterations were wanting, which could not be incorporated in the present bill in the House; he particularly referred to the powers of the Committee.

Mr. MARSHALL supported the motion.

Messrs. GALLATIN and NICHOLAS opposed the motion, and hoped, first, the principle would be decided whether there should be a committee at all or not, before its commitment.

The motion was carried—yeas 54. Seven members were appointed.

MINE AND METAL COMPANY.

The House then went into a Committee on the bill to incorporate a company by the name and title of the Mine and Metal Company. A motion to strike out the 3d section, which provides that when $150,000 in shares are subscribed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be empowered to subscribe $50,000 for the United States, was before the Committee.

APRIL, 1800.

A lengthy debate ensued upon the motion to strike out—at length the question was taken thereupon and was 46 to 31.

Mr. WALN then proposed a new section in the place of the one stricken out, which provided that the President of the United States might, whenever the stock of the said company should amount to $150,000, cause the Secretary of the Treasury to lend to them a sum not exceeding $50,000, for the purpose of erecting a machine for rolling the copper into sheets, upon certain security being given for the payment thereof in ten years, at an interest of six per cent.

This was carried, and the bill was ordered for a third reading to-morrow.

TUESDAY, April 22.

An engrossed bill to incorporate a company by the name and style of the Mine and Metal Company was read, and on the question for its passing, it was negatived—36 to 34.

The bill to establish a district at Kennebunk, and annex Lyme to New London, was recommitted to the whole House; when, some amendment having been made, the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. D. FOSTER, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Lapsley, deceased, and also on a number of petitions respecting lost and destroyed certificates, made a report, which was referred to a Committee of the whole House.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill for the division of the Northwestern Territory were taken up, and referred to a committee of five members.

Mr. DENNIS, from the committee to whom were referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill for the removal and accommodation of the Government of the United States, reported their opinion that it was expedient for the House to accede thereto. The House took up the report and agreed to it.

The House went into Committee on the bill to provide for equalizing the valuation of unseated lands. The bill was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed.

The House also resolved itself into a Committee on the bill to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors of the Revenue.

Mr. DAVIS called up his resolution fixing the next annual meeting of Congress on the first Monday in November next; which, after a long debate, was negatived—yeas 27.

Mr. COOPER proposed an amendment, which it appearing difficult to incorporate, and some objections having been made, the Committee rose and obtained leave to sit again.

Mr. CLAIBORNE, from the committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force the law respecting trading houses with the Indians, reported a resolution for reviving that law for one year. It was referred to a Committee of the Whole.

LIMITS OF GEORGIA.

The House went into Committee on the report of the select committee on the amendments of the Senate to the bill for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and for the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory.

The report was, to agree to all the amendments except one.

The Senate had stricken out that part of the bill which prevented the Governor of the Territory from proroguing and dissolving the Legislature at his pleasure.

Mr. RANDOLPH hoped the measure would not be agreed to.

Mr. RUTLEDGE spoke in favor of the measure, he believed it would be the saving of the bill, which held out many great advantages to these people, and, in fact, amounted to all they asked. He observed that the agent, from that country, who was in town, would rather give up this principle than in the least jeopardize the bill.

Mr. NICHOLAS spoke on the other side.

The motion to agree with the Senate was carried—45 to 38.

The Senate also introduced a new section respecting the separate claim of the State of Georgia and of individual claimants; also respecting the extinguishment of an Indian claim to certain lands within the State.

A motion by Mr. JONES, to strike out, caused a lengthy debate; the Committee rose without a decision, and obtained leave to sit again.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. RUTLEDGE observed that great inconvenience attended the meeting of the House at ten o'clock, on account of the necessity of committees meeting in the morning, whereby many gentlemen were prevented attending, while perhaps an engrossed bill (as was the case this morning) might be negatived, which had really a large majority of the House in its favor. He therefore moved that when the House adjourned, it should be till 11 o'clock.

This was carried—42 to 33.

WEDNESDAY, April 23.

An engrossed bill to provide for equalizing the valuations of unseated lands, was read the third time and passed.

An engrossed bill to establish the district of Kennebunk, and to annex Lyme to New London, and to alter the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point, and therein to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," was read the third time and passed.

Mr. D. FOSTER, from the Committee of Claims, presented a bill directing the payment of a detachment of Militia under the command of Major Thomas Johnson, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

H. OF R.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river,' with several amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said amendments were read, and ordered to be referred to Mr. HARRISON, Mr. BRACE, Mr. GORDON, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. GROVE, Mr. LYMAN, and Mr. GALLATIN.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they had passed the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to accept, for the United States, a cession of jurisdiction of the territory west of Pennsylvania, commonly called the Western Reserve of Connecticut," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the said amendment: Whereupon,
Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

MINE AND METAL COMPANY.

Mr. S. SMITH, after expressing an opinion of the importance of the bill which had been unfortunately lost yesterday, moved the following resolution, to which he hoped there would be no objection, as the object was only to incorporate a company, without involving the Government of the United States:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill to incorporate a company for the purpose of procuring sheet copper, to be manufactured within the United States."

Mr. NICHOLAS wished to know if the motion was in order; and upon the SPEAKER's wishing time to decide, it was ordered to lie on the table.

LIMITS OF GEORGIA.

The House, in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the report of the select committee, to whom was referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill supplemental to the act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and for the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory.

Mr. JONES's motion to strike out the latter part of the section being under consideration,

Mr. HARPER called for a division of the question. That part which authorizes the commissioners to settle those claims to the Georgia lands, which had been granted by one and revoked by a subsequent Legislature, being first in order:

Mr. GALLATIN opposed it, on the ground that it had not come regularly before the House; that the claimants had never applied for relief; and deprecated the manner in which it was introduced, as there could be but two votes on the most important measure that ever came before the House.

He was followed by Messrs. MARSHALL, and JONES, against the motion, and Messrs. RANDOLPH, NICHOLAS, and RUTLEDGE, in favor of it.

The question was then taken, and the motion for striking out agreed to—yeas 54, nays 39.

The Committee then rose, and had leave to sit again.

THURSDAY, April 24.

Mr. SMITH called up his resolution for appointing a committee to bring in a bill to incorporate a company for the manufacture of sheet copper; and upon the SPEAKER's declaring that, upon due investigation, he had no doubt the motion was in order, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, Mr. MARSHALL, and Mr. WALN, were appointed the committee.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they have passed the bill in addition to the act fixing the compensation of the officers of both Houses of Congress, with amendments, to which they request a concurrence.

LIMITS OF GEORGIA.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the amendment of the Senate to the bill supplemental to the act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia; and, after further amending the amendment, the Committee rose.

Upon the question, whether the House should concur in the report of the Committee in their agreement to the amendment of the Senate, to strike out that part which abrogates the power of the Governor, given in the ordinance, to pro-rogue the General Assembly at his pleasure, it passed in the negative—yeas 42, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, Samuel W. Dana, Franklin Davenport, John Davenport, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Dwight Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, Robert Goodloe Harper, James H. Inlay, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, Samuel Lyman, John Marshall, Lewis R. Morris, Robert Page, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, William Shepard, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

NAYS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Phaniel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Matthew Clay, William Charles Cole Claiborne, John Condit, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, John Dennis, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas El-mendorf, John Fowler, Albert Gallatin, Edwin Gray, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Thomas Hartley, Joseph Heister, William H. Hill, David Holmes, Benjamin Huger, George Jackson, James Jones, Aaron Kitchell, Michael Leib, Matthew Lyon, James Linn, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, Joseph H. Nicholson, Abraham Nott, Josiah Parker, John Randolph, John Smilie, John Smith, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Benjamin Taliaferro, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, Joseph B. Varnum, and Robert Williams.

So the amendment of the Senate was rejected.

APRIL, 1800.

Upon the question to agree with the Committee in their disagreement to that part of the new section proposed by the Senate, which gave the Commissioners power to settle the rights of claimants to parts of the lands about to be ceded by Georgia to the United States,

Messrs. H. LEE, RUTLEDGE, and BAYARD, spoke in favor of the amendment, and against concurring in the report of the Committee, and Messrs. GALLATIN and JONES in opposition.

Mr. SMILIE, after insinuating that he understood some members to be interested in this question, read the rule of the House, which declares, that no member who is particularly interested in any question shall have a right to vote.

Mr. SEWALL said, he wished the true interpretation of this order to be given by the Chair. In his opinion it was not applicable to the question under consideration, as it appeared to be a general one.

After some observations from Mr. NICHOLAS,

Mr. NICHOLSON said, he hoped there would be no more debate until it was known that some member was actually interested.

Mr. SEWALL, in answer to this challenge, said that he was interested, having been a purchaser of these lands; and added that a number of his constituents were equally interested, and would feel much hurt at the rejection of his vote. He again called upon the Chair to decide as to the propriety of applying the rule to him upon this question.

After some other observations as to the point of order, the business before the House was suspended for fifteen minutes, and a resolution was submitted by Mr. SEWALL, by which the House were to declare their sense upon the subject. Whereupon an adjournment was called for and carried—yeas 39, nays 38.

FRIDAY April 25.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanying an estimate for an appropriation of moneys for carrying into effect the act respecting quarantines and health laws; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanying a letter from the Comptroller, transmitting sundry statements, prepared in pursuance of the "Act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States," made a report; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

The report of the select committee to whom was referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill to provide for the sale of the lands in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river, was concurred in.

Mr. S. SMITH brought in a bill to promote the manufacture of sheet copper within the United States, by the incorporation of a company under the name of the Passaic Copper Company; which was committed for Monday.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill, supplementary to the laws now in force, fixing the compensation of the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, were read and concurred in.

The bill to authorize the issuing of certain patents was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill to provide for the disposition of the lands between the Great and Little Miami rivers; and after some time spent therein the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

Mr. C. GOODRICH, from the committee to whom was referred the amendment of the Senate to the bill to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments, made a report, that the House ought to disagree to the amendment, which proposes striking out the whole bill, and inserting a new one.

The report was concurred in.

The bill directing the payment of a detachment of militia under the command of Major Johnson, in 1794, was also agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow—as was the bill making further provision for the orphan children of Colonel John Harding and Major Alexander Trueman, deceased.

CONGRESS LIBRARY.

Mr. DENNIS said that by the act passed the present session, further to provide for the removal and accommodation of the Government of the United States, a sum not exceeding $5,000 was appropriated for the purpose of procuring a Library. In order to carry that provision into execution, he would move the following resolution:

"Resolved, That — be a committee, jointly with such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, for the purpose of making out a catalogue of books, and adopting the best mode of procuring a Library, at the City of Washington; and for adopting a system of rules and regulations relative thereto."

This motion was agreed to, and Messrs. WALN, EVANS, and POWELL, appointed.

LIMITS OF GEORGIA.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole on the amendment of the Senate to the bill supplemental to an act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia; and for the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory; when

Mr. SPEAKER, having been called on to decide whether the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. SEWALL) had a right to vote upon the question before the House, after explaining the rule, and the cases to which it evidently applied, declared that it could not even be a question of order, that the gentleman had an undoubted right to vote.

Mr. SEWALL then said, from motives of delicacy cy, and to avoid that censure, which, influenced by party spirit, he might incur in exercising his legal right (for he never entertained a doubt on the subject) he would decline giving his vote upon the question.

Immediately after Mr. S. had withdrawn from the House, the question was taken on agreeing with the committee in their resolution of non-concurrence to that part of the new section proposed by the Senate, which authorizes the Commissioners to settle individual claims, and carried in the affirmative, yeas 46, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Phaniel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, John Condit, John Dennis, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmen-dorf, John Fowler, Albert Gallatin, Edwin Gray, Andrew Gregg, William Barry Grove, John A. Hanna, Joseph Heister, William H. Hill, David Holmes, Benjamin Huger, George Jackson, James Jones, Aaron Kitchell, Michael Leib, Matthew Lyon, James Linn, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, Abraham Nott, Robert Page, Josiah Parker, John Randolph, John Smith, John Smilie, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, Benjamin Taliaferro, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg and Robert Williams.

NAYS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Brown, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Dwight Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, Robert Goodloe Harper, James H. Morris, Thomas Pinckney, Leven Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., James Sheafe, William Shepard, George Thatcher, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

Mr. VARNUM observed, that he thought something ought to be done to bring about a compromise with these claimants, and therefore moved an amendment, in place of the words struck out, viz: that the said Commissioners, on the part of the United States, or any of them, be authorized to inquire into the claims which are or shall be made by the settlers, or any other person or persons, whatever, to any part of the aforesaid lands, which may be relinquished by the State of Georgia, and make report thereon to Congress, as soon as may be.

This motion was agreed to, yeas 49; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, concurred in.

SATURDAY, April 26.

The following engrossed bills were read and passed:

An act to authorize the issuing certain patents;
An act directing the payment of a detachment of militia under the command of Major Thomas Johnson in the year 1794.

An engrossed bill to make further provision for the orphan children of Col. J. Harding and Major Alexander Trueman, deceased, was read. Mr. D. FOSTER moved that the bill be recommitted to the same Committee of the Whole to whom were referred the report on the petition of the widow of Colonel Preston, and another on the same subject—his view was to include all in the same bill. Mr. NICHOLAS and Mr. J. C. THOMAS thought the cases dissimilar. The motion was carried, 43 to 37.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce, reported a bill supplementary to the act, entitled "An act to establish the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage, and for other purposes;" which was read and committed for Monday.

The House went into a Committee on the bill authorizing the allowance of a credit to William Tazewell; which was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed.

The House also went into a Committee on the bill providing for the disposition of the lands between the Great and Little Miami rivers: which was ordered to be engrossed for its third reading.

SLAVE TRADE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the bill from the Senate, in addition to the act, entitled "An act prohibiting the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country."

Mr. J. BROWN said, when the motion was first laid on the table, he thought it improper to prevent the citizens of the United States enjoying the benefits of a trade enjoyed by all the European nations. He really was in hopes that the good sense of the select committee would have permitted them to have seen the policy of realizing the act in question. Many members of the House, he observed, knew how the former act was passed; they knew that Congress was drilled into it by certain persons who would not take no for an answer. It was well known that the Abolition Society, otherwise the Society of Friends, as they were called, were very troublesome until they got that act passed. It was also well known that those people did not do much to support the Government, but that they did as much as they could to stop the measures of the Government, and particularly our defensive system, on which our national security depended.

Mr. NICHOLAS asked whether it was in order to abuse any class of citizens in this manner, and particularly since no motion was before the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN said he conceived the gentleman to be in order, since he supposed he was about to make a motion affecting the principle of the bill.

Mr. BROWN resumed. He was only speaking, agreeably to his information, how this bill came originally into existence. He was certain that this nation, having an act against the slave trade, did not prevent the exportation of a slave from Africa. He believed we might as well, therefore, enjoy that trade as to leave it wholly to others. It was the law of that country to export those whom they held in slavery—who were as much slaves there as those who were slaves in this country—and with as much right. The very idea of making a law against this trade, which all other nations enjoyed, and which was allowed to be very profitable, was ill policy. He would further say that it was wrong, when considered in a moral point of view, since, by the operation of the trade, the very people themselves much bettered their condition. It ought to be a matter of national policy, since it would bring in a good revenue to our Treasury. It was not pleasing to him, Mr. B. said, to pay an interest of 8 per cent. for our loan: rather than borrow money, he would wish to be paying off some of our old standing debt, which could be done by increasing our commerce, or rendering it free. He wished it to be free as the wind that blew—from one end of the world to the other. As he observed before, he believed not one more slave would be exported from Africa, while our merchants and our revenue would enjoy the benefit.

Mr. B. said, our distilleries and manufactories were all lying idle for want of an extended commerce. He had been well informed that on those coasts New England rum was much preferred to the best Jamaica spirits, and would fetch a better price. Why then should it not be sent there, and a profitable return be made? Why should a heavy fine and imprisonment be made the penalty for carrying on a trade so advantageous?

But, he observed, if it was thought advisable that the old act should continue, he would wish it could be made to meet the purpose altogether, and prevent the system of slavery entirely, so that equal advantages might be given to all the inhabitants of the Union; without this, it would, as it ever had been, remain a great disadvantage. He therefore moved that the Committee rise, in order to postpone the bill. He believed the House would be better prepared to meet it in a few days.

Mr. NICHOLAS seconded the motion, not but that he was prepared to decide on it, but that there might be opportunity given to express an opinion. He really could not understand the gentleman, when he said that our people being employed in that trade would not add nor diminish the number exported. This was certainly a wrong calculation. These people were enslaved for their masters, or to supply some foreign market. Certainly if the number of purchasers were increased, the number of slaves would be increased. Surely the gentleman would not wish them brought into the United States when he talked of their condition being improved; this was a fact, to be sure, but would it be policy so to do?

But another and an important point was touched upon—that he would wish the law to be made to meet another object, if it was determined to prohibit the trade in this country. As a Southern man, Mr. N. said, he would observe that he was placed in a most unfortunate situation, indeed, in being obliged, in common with other people of those States, to keep men in a state of slavery: but he had the consolation to inform the House, that he believed the people of the Southern States were wiping off the stain entailed upon them by their predecessors, in endeavoring to ameliorate the situation of that race of people as much as possible. This appeared to be an increasing disposition. He hoped the gentleman would have an opportunity to produce all his arguments on this subject, in his endeavors either to get the law repealed or to strengthen it, agreeably to his wish, in order that he might be satisfied that he would not find an advocate in the House.

Mr. D. FOSTER spoke against the Committee rising.

Several sections of the bill were then gone through with, when the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

MONDAY, April 28.

An engrossed bill to provide for the sale of certain lands between the Great and Little Miami rivers, was read and passed; also a bill authorizing the allowance of a credit to William Tazewell.

The House went into a Committee on the bill to promote the manufacture of sheet copper in the United States; which was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed accordingly.

Mr. H. LEE called up the Militia bill, when Mr. BAYARD moved its postponement till the first Monday in December next, which was carried—yeas 50.

Mr. RUTLEDGE proposed a resolution that a committee be appointed to inquire whether any and what alterations are necessary to be made in the act respecting fugitives from justice and persons escaping from their masters. This was negatived—38 to 34.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. RUTLEDGE moved that the Committee of the Whole, to whom were referred the bill for preventing the carrying on the slave trade, &c., be discharged from the further consideration thereof. He conceived it to be one of the most defective bills that ever was before Congress, because the object intended was in no wise provided for, or utterly impracticable.

Mr. BAYARD was of the same opinion. He had taken some pains to examine the bill, but was obliged to conclude it extremely imperfect. The objects of the former bill, and which was intended to be improved, were, to prevent the citizens of the United States having any right in vessels so employed; and also to prevent the citizens of the United States being employed on board any such vessels. He trusted that a great majority of the members of the House would be in favor of those principles, and effectually promote them. It would indeed be extremely dishonorable, in a country like this, to affirm such a trade, so contrary to all those principles held dear in the United States, and which ought to be promoted. His desire was, that a bill should be constructed upon the true principles of the intent of Congress: so far he thought they might go, but no farther. To be sure, as the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. J. BROWN) observed, the Government could derive revenue from the encouragement of this trade, but he thought a more dishonorable item of revenue could not be established.

The Committee was discharged.

H. OF R.

Mr. BAYARD then moved that the bill should be referred to a select committee.

Mr. RUTLEDGE hoped this would not be agreed to; he was not disposed at this late day of the session to take up any new business that was not of urgency. He thought it was perfectly unnecessary to make a new act upon the subject; he believed the former act did everything that was necessary or practicable to be done. What more could be wanted than that persons engaged in this traffic should forfeit their ships and pay a fine, besides, in many instances, imprisonment of the person offending? Surely that was all the occasion required. The different States which had heretofore imported those people into the United States had established the policy not to import any more; but in addition to this willing restriction, the Federal Government thought proper to prevent the trade being carried on, by our ships, to those countries which did suffer their importation. This was going very far indeed, but so far it was thought proper to go, to furnish a peace offering to those philanthropists whose urgency was great to accomplish the general destruction of the trade. However, the activity of the people of the four New England States first engaged them in this profitable traffic; their produce would bring a good price on the African coast, and why they might not enjoy the profit of it as well as the English he could not conceive. He believed it to be impossible effectually to prevent it. Some gentlemen, indeed, had talked of authorizing our cruisers to seize vessels of this kind, but, suppose they were confiscated, what was to be done with their cargoes? They could not be brought into the United States. Where could they be carried? It was not consistent with the policy of the West India islands to suffer them to land there, since it was their practice to keep these people in bondage, and they did not want, nor could they suffer free men to inundate those colonies. He knew of no place where they could be landed but St. Domingo, and as these people would not have been of those who had procured the freedom of slaves there—were not of those who had spread devastation and murder throughout that island, it was probable they would spurn them from their shores. What then was to be done with them? Surely no gentleman would wish them to be drowned, and it would be as absurd to think of sending them back to Sierra Leone! These difficulties he thought insuperable.

Mr. WALN hoped the bill would be committed, and that the provisions of it would be made effectual to its object. As for the people of Pennsylvania, he believed he could say they were unanimously in favor of the trade being put an end to most completely; which was in no wise done by the law now in force, nor by the bill now proposed. He said it was well known, that great grievances did exist for want of the due execution of the law, and much greater than were generally known, and hence it was that no more was heard of it from the people on this subject. He had been well informed that great evasions had taken place, and that this unlawful trade was becoming more and more in use. In the last year he believed that near forty vessels entered the West Indies with this illicit species of commerce. In some parts of the United States, he had been well informed, it was become so popular, that if a vessel was seized and sold, it was impossible to get any person to bid for her, and therefore the owner was enabled to repurchase her at a very low price indeed. It would be much better to repeal the old law, and open the trade, than to suffer the law to continue when nearly a nullity. But this he believed was not the disposition of the House; he believed the House could carry the principle into effect, and he was sure that a very great majority of the American people would wish them to do it.

The motion for recommitment was carried by a very large majority, and three members appointed.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Mr. STONE made a report from the committee to whom was referred the petition of Lawrence Erb and others, imprisoned at the suit of the United States for disabilities in the payment of moneys received by them. The committee saw no necessity of a special interference in these cases, and, in order to try the principle, submitted the following resolution:

“Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law for the personal discharge from prison of the insolvent debtors of the United States.”

It was agreed to, and the committee appointed to carry it into effect.

MILITARY ACADEMY, &c.

Mr. EGLESTON said, since he found the House so much disposed to prepare for the close of the session by postponing unnecessary business, he would move that the bill for establishing a Military Academy, and for the better organization of the corps of Artillerists and Engineers, be postponed till the first Monday in December next.

After some observations against the motion, by Messrs. PARKER, CHAMPLIN, and H. LEE, and in favor of it by Messrs. EGLESTON and SHEPARD, it was carried—yeas 64, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, George Baer, Theodorus Bailey, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Phaniel Bishop, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Matthew Clay, William C. C. DIVISION OF NORTHWESTERN TERRITORY.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that they insisted on the amendments to the bill for the division of the Northwestern Territory, and for establishing limits to the State of Georgia; and that they asked a conference on the bill providing for the sale of the lands above the mouth of Kentucky river, having appointed managers on their part. Managers were appointed on the part of the House.

It was resolved that a conference be requested on the bill for dividing the Northwestern Territory.

TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The House went into a Committee on the bill for the execution of the 27th article of the Treaty with Great Britain.

A motion of Mr. NICHOLAS was under consideration, that no person whose case was cognizable in any of our courts should be delivered up. This caused a lengthy debate; it was advocated by Messrs. S. SMITH, NICHOLSON, and GALLATIN, and opposed by Messrs. BAYARD, DANA, and DENNIS. It was negatived 45 to 42. After which the Committee rose, obtained leave to sit again, and the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, April 29.

An engrossed bill to promote the manufacture of sheet copper within the United States, by incorporating a company for carrying on the same, was read the third time, and passed.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the bill to provide for carrying into effect the 27th article of the British Treaty. An amendment of Mr. NICHOLAS was under consideration, to which Mr. MARSHALL proposed some amendments; which being somewhat opposed, the Committee rose in order to have the amendments printed, and obtained leave to sit again.

A message was received from the Senate requesting concurrence to a bill which they had passed, entitled An act supplementary to the act to suspend part of an act entitled an act to augment the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the bill prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States.

The bill, as amended by the select committee, provided for the appointment of a joint committee, with certain defined, but no decisive, powers.

Mr. NICHOLAS, saw no use for this committee, whose only business was to examine testimony, which, being next to nothing for them to do, would enable them the better to design mischief, if they were so inclined; and the great inconvenience that would attend their being empowered to send for testimony, even from the most distant part of the United States, made him think that all the provisions with which this committee are connected ought to be stricken out; he therefore moved to strike out the first section of the bill.

This was negatived—43 to 39.

Mr. GALLATIN afterwards moved to amend a section which provided the means of ascertaining the votes. Mr. MARSHALL answered. The Committee rose without a decision.

WEDNESDAY, April 30.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act supplementary to the act to suspend part of an act entitled 'An act to augment the Army of the United States, and for other purposes,'" was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. HARPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report on the subject of further revenue; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the Whole on Monday next.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that they had passed an act to amend an act entitled an act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee on the bill prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States.

A motion of Mr. GALLATIN was under consideration, to insert, instead of the principle that in cases of doubt the Houses should divide to their respective chambers to consider the qualification or disqualification of a vote or votes, from their joint meeting, if such question should arise at counting the votes, the following words: "and the question of the exception shall immediately, and without debate, be taken by yeas and nays, and decided by a majority of the members of both Houses then present."

This motion called forth a long debate, and on the division was negatived, 46 to 44.

The Committee having gone through the bill, rose and reported.

THURSDAY, May 1.

The bill from the Senate to amend the act entitled "An act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States," was twice read and committed.

Mr. HARPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report on the subject of further revenue; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. SEWALL, from the committee to whom was referred, on the thirteenth of January last, the petition of Cato West and others, made a further report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Governor of the Mississippi Territory be authorized by law, for the term of one year, to permit by his special license, to be granted after examination of each case in which it shall be requested, any slave or slaves, bona fide the property of a citizen of the United States, or owned by any person resident within the Mississippi Territory, at the period when the Government of the United States was established over the same, to be brought by such proprietor into the said Territory.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that Mr. SEWALL, Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, Mr. WALN, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. HILL, do prepare and bring in the same.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House on the report of the committee to whom was referred, on the seventh of March last, the petition of William Hill and others, and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported two resolutions thereupon; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the sum of — dollars ought to be appropriated by law to defray the expenses of such treaty or treaties as the President of the United States may deem it expedient to hold with any nation or nations of Indians southwest of the river Ohio.

Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law, authorizing and enabling all persons who, under the laws of North Carolina, and in conformity to the regulations and provisions thereof, have entered, surveyed, located, or obtained, grants of any of the lands ceded by the said State to the United States, in such manner as would have vested a good title under the said State of North Carolina, if such cession had not been made, to enter upon, occupy, and possess, the same, or to remove thereto their location from such lands, the titles whereto shall not be extinguished, whenever, and as soon as the Indian title or claim to a sufficient portion of the said land shall be extinguished, under the authority of the United States; and to possess and enjoy the same in as full and ample manner as if the same had been derived from, or under, the United States.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the first resolution; and that Mr. PINCKNEY, Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. NICHOLAS, and Mr. THATCHER, do prepare and bring in the same.

On the motion of Mr. CLAIBORNE, the report of the select committee respecting the continuation of the acts for establishing trading houses with the Indians, was taken up and agreed to, and the committee directed to bring in a bill.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they had agreed to a bill to authorize the sale and conveyance of lands by the Marshals of the United States, with an amendment. The House concurred.

Also, requesting a conference on the bill respecting the Mississippi Territory. Three managers were appointed on the part of the House.

Mr. HARPER, instructed by the committee to whom were referred so much of the President's Speech as related to the revision and amendment of the judiciary system, reported a bill to provide for the more convenient and effectual administration of justice in the Circuit Courts of the United States. It was ordered to be printed.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the bill to establish the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage; and after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and obtained leave to sit again.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The House proceeded to consider the amendment reported, yesterday, from the Committee of the Whole House to whom was committed the report of the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States;" and the same being read,

A motion was made and seconded to amend the said amendment, by striking out, in the first section thereof, the words following:

"That, on the — next following the day when a President and Vice President shall have been voted for by Electors, it shall be the duty of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to choose, by ballot, in each House, four members thereof: and the persons thus chosen shall form a Joint Committee, and shall have power to examine into all disputes relative to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, other than such as may relate to the number of votes by which Electors may have been appointed."

And the question being taken, thereupon it was decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Phaniel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William C. C. Claiborne, John Condit, Thomas T. Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, William Shepard, George Thatcher, John C. Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

A motion was then made and seconded to amend the said amendment, by striking out of the eighth section thereof, the following:

"And sign his name thereto, and if it be founded on any circumstance appearing in the report of the Joint Committee, and the exception be seconded by one member from the Senate, and one from the House of Representatives, each of whom shall sign the said exception, as having seconded the same, then each House shall immediately retire, without question or debate, to its own apartment, and shall take the question on the exception, without debate, by ayes and noes. So soon as the question shall be taken in either House, a message shall be sent to the other, informing them that the House sending the message is prepared to resume the count; and when such message shall have been received by both Houses, they shall again assemble in the same apartment as before, and the count shall be resumed. And if the two Houses have concurred in rejecting the vote or votes objected to, such vote or votes shall not be counted; but, unless both Houses concur, such vote or votes shall be counted. If the objection taken as aforementioned, shall arise on the face of the papers opened by the President of the Senate, in the presence of both Houses, and shall not have been noticed in the report of the Joint Committee, such objection may be referred to the Joint Committee, to be examined and reported on by them, in the same manner, and on the same principles, as their first report was made; but, if both Houses do not concur in referring the same to the committee, then such objection shall be decided on in the like manner as if it had been founded on any circumstance appearing in the report of the committee."

And insert, in lieu thereof, the following:

"And the question on the exception shall immediately, and without debate, be taken by ayes and noes, and decided by a majority of the members of both Houses then present."

And, the question being taken thereupon, it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Phanuel Bishop, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William C. C. Claiborne, John Condit, Thomas T. Another motion was then made and seconded to amend the said amendment; and the question being taken thereupon it was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the said amendment, as amended, be recommitted to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House accordingly, resolved itself into the said committee; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. SPEAKER resumed the Chair, and Mr. RUTLEDGE reported that the committee had had the said amendment under consideration, and made one amendment thereto; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House.

And then the main question being taken, that the House do agree to the said amendment as amended, it was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendment be read the third time to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate request a conference on the subject-matter of their amendments, disagreed to by this House, to the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory,'" and have appointed members at the same on their part. The Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to continue in force an act laying additional duty on salt imported into the United States, and for other purposes." The Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and conveyance of lands, in certain cases, by the Marshals of the United States, and to confirm former sales," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the said message: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the conference proposed by the Senate on the subject-matter of the first mentioned bill; and that Mr. PAGE, Mr. NOTT, and Mr. VARNUM, be appointed managers at the same on the part of this House.

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the amendment proposed by the Senate to the last mentioned bill.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do acquaint the Senate therewith.

On a motion made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to deliver to the members, such volumes of the Journals of the old Congress as may now be in his possession, for distribution"

Ordered, That the said motion be referred to Mr. NEW, Mr. NICHOLAS, and Mr. VARNUM.

FRIDAY, May 2.

Mr. D. FOSTER, from the committee to whom was referred the bill from the Senate in addition to the act, entitled an act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country, made a report, recommending the adoption of sundry amendments to said bill. The report was read a second time, and committed for to-morrow.

Mr. RUTLEDGE moved that the Committee of the Whole, to whom was referred the bill supplementary to the act to fix the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

This motion, after considerable debate, was negatived—yeas 41, nays 44.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, made a further report, recommending the adoption of a resolution making additional allowance to the clerks of the Department of State, Navy, &c., which was read a first and second time; and, upon the question will the House adopt the same, it passed in the negative—yeas 32, nays 36.

DISPUTED ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States," together with the amendment agreed to yesterday, was read a third time; and on the question that the same do pass, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 52, nays 37, as follows:

COMPENSATION OF COLLECTORS.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill supplementary to the act to fix the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of duties on imports and tonnage; and after making some other amendments, reducing the salaries of sundry collectors, the Committee rose, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the report; when

Mr. WALN moved to strike out from the amendment for reducing the Collectors of Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Charleston, the word "Philadelphia," which was negatived—yeas 30.

Mr. PARKER moved to amend the bill by striking out the reduction proposed with respect to the Collector of Norfolk. Negatived—yeas 25.

Mr. CHAMPLIN moved a reduction of the percentage allowed the Collector of the port of New-London, to one and a half per quarter per cent. Negatived—yeas 12.

Mr. SEWALL wished to make the allowance of the Collector of Boston 7-16ths of 1 per cent., instead of 3-8ths—and made a motion to that effect. Negatived.

The further consideration of the report was postponed till to-morrow.

SATURDAY, May 3.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from a select committee, reported a bill to appropriate a certain sum of money to defray the expense of holding a treaty or treaties with the Indians.

Mr. CLAIBORNE reported a bill to revive and continue in force an act entitled an act for establishing trading-houses with the Indians.

A message was received from the Senate requesting concurrence to a bill passed in that House, supplementary to the act entitled an act to establish the Treasury Department.

These three acts were severally twice read, and committed to Committees of the whole House.

An amendment was also proposed to the bill for the support of Government for the year 1800; to which the House concurred.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the committee to whom was referred, on the first instant, a motion relative to the distribution of the Journals of the old Congress, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill for fixing the compensation to the Collectors of the Revenue, upon which some further debate occurred, which was principally confined to the efforts of several gentlemen to prevent any reduction of the per centage heretofore allowed to those officers.

The bill at last was passed through, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading—yeas 44.

DIVISION OF NORTHWESTERN TERRITORY.

Mr. C. GOODRICH made a report from the managers on the part of this House appointed to confer with the Senate on the bill to divide the Northwestern Territory; the report was, that it would be expedient for the House to recede from their amendments and to agree to a farther amendment that was proposed.

Mr. JACKSON moved that the further consideration of this bill might be postponed till the first Monday in December next. He stated this motion to be grounded on a belief that many of the people of that Territory had no knowledge or desire that this division should take place; he had been informed by a respectable gentleman who resided there, that the people were not generally informed that such a measure was in contemplation. Mr. J. said he had doubts whether it would be for their interest or not, and doubting, he wished to act with caution and information, since it was an important thing to them.

Mr. HARRISON hoped the motion would not take place; the information the gentleman had stated came from a person who was interested, residing near Cincinnati, which, although now the seat of Government, would not continue so in case of a division. He knew the information to be inaccurate; he believed nine-tenths of the people were in favor of it, among whom were a great number of the Legislature. He confessed that the Senate had amended this bill in a manner very injurious to the general interests of the people there, but knowing as he did the great importance of the bill, and the general wish of the people, expressed to the House by petitions, he would rather submit to almost anything than postpone the subject till another session. He was sorry the gentleman from Virginia, or any other gentleman, should suppose him to be so void of a wish or endeavor to promote the interests of his constituents as to propose a measure that was not generally approved of; he knew it to be so, or, Mr. H. said, he should not have encouraged it. Indeed every gentleman must know that his interests were interwoven with those of his constituents.

Mr. GOODRICH mentioned the present great inconvenience in the due administration of justice in that extensive Government, and the great inconvenience generally in all the matters where business with the seat of Government was necessary.

Mr. RUTLEDGE also spoke against its postponement; and, on the question, it was negatived without a division.

The House then receded from its amendment and agreed to the one proposed.

SLAVE TRADE.

The House went into Committee on the bill to prohibit carrying on the slave trade to any foreign country. The Committee rose and reported the bill. On the question when it should be read a third time, it was carried for to-day. On the question for its passing, a long and warm debate ensued.

Several attempts were made to postpone its passing, but to no effect. At length the question was taken—yeas 67, nays 5, as follows:

And the House adjourned.

MONDAY, May 5.

Mr. SEWALL brought in a bill to permit, in certain cases, the bringing slaves into the Mississippi Territory; and Mr. STONE, a bill making further provision for the relief of persons imprisoned for debts due the United States; which were respectively read and committed for to-morrow.

Mr. HARPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the two following bills, which were read a first and second time, and committed to a Committee of the Whole, viz: a bill to authorize certain expenditures, and to make certain additional appropriations for the year 1800; and a bill to make provisions relative to rations for Indians, and for their visits to the seat of Government.

The bill entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to establish the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage, and for other purposes,'" was read a third time; and the question being put, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CHAMPLIN moved that the bill be recommended for the purpose of reducing the per centage allowed the Collectors of New London and Wilmington, (Delaware,) which was negatived.

The bill was then passed.

The bill in addition to the act granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers of Vincennes, in the Illinois country, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, and for confirming them in their possessions, was agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that they receded from their amendment, disagreed to by this House, to the bill to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio.

The bill to appropriate a certain sum of money to defray the expense of holding a treaty or treaties with the Indians, was taken up in Committee of the Whole, agreed to without debate, and the bill ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

The bill to provide for the means of intercourse between the United States and foreign nations was taken up in Committee of the Whole, when Mr. NICHOLAS moved to strike out the first section, which made the appropriation for the purposes contemplated in the remainder of the bill permanent; which, after some debate, was carried—yeas 37, nays 34. The bill was then further amended, the Committee rose, and it was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. GALLATIN, on behalf of the managers appointed to confer with managers on the part of the Senate of their amendments, disagreed to by this House, to the bill to amend the act entitled an act to provide for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river, made a report, which was read and concurred in. A message from the Senate informed the House that they also concurred in said report.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the committee to whom was referred so much of the President's Speech, at the opening of the present session, as relates to the defence of the United States, made report, recommending the adoption of a resolution for appropriating the sum of $100,000 for the support and erection of fortifications; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SURVEYORS OF THE REVENUE.

The bill to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue, was taken up, in Committee of the Whole, when Mr. ELMENDORF moved to add a new section to the bill, giving the surveyors power to alter the assessment rates, where patented lands have been returned by two or three officers.

Mr. HARPER opposed the motion, on the ground that it gave too unlimited power to an individual, and which ought alone to be vested in the commissioners.

Mr. PLATT also opposed it; and Mr. ELMENDORF spoke in reply—when the question was taken and negatived.

The Committee then rose, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

INTERCOURSE WITH FRANCE.

Mr. PARKER, after noticing the change of conduct in the French Government, and their disposition to liberate American property, said he wished provision to be made for such of our citizens in France whose vessels have not been condemned, and whose commanders, acting without information or instruction, have conceived themselves authorized to return with cargoes to this country, not having knowledge of the act recently passed, by which both vessel and cargo are forfeited; and therefore moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire whether any, and what, further amendments are necessary to the act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof, and report their opinion thereon by bill or otherwise."

Mr. P. wished this resolution to be immediately acted upon. One vessel had arrived at Norfolk under the circumstances mentioned, and it was probable there would be many more in a few days.

Mr. NICHOLAS wished the resolution to lie on the table. He was unwilling to act in this partial manner, as it would open a door to fraud. If a proposition was made to repeal the whole law, it would meet with his hearty approbation.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

TUESDAY, May 6.

The House proceeded to consider the report, made the third instant, from the committee to whom was referred a motion relative to the distribution of the Journals of the old Congress: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be directed to distribute among the members such volumes of the Journals of the former Congress as have been received by him under a resolution of the last session, or were before in his possession, and the volumes necessary to complete the sets as they may come to his hands.

The following bills were read a third time and passed:

An act, in addition to an act granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers of Vincennes, in the Illinois country, in the Territory of Ohio, and for confirming them in their possessions;

An act to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue;

An act to appropriate a certain sum of money to defray the expenses of holding a treaty or treaties with the Indians;

An act providing the means of intercourse between the United States and foreign nations—the title of which was altered to read, "An act to ascertain the compensation of public Ministers."

INTERCOURSE WITH FRANCE.

Mr. PARKER called up the resolution which he laid on the table yesterday, instructing the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures to inquire whether any, and what, further amendments are necessary to the non-intercourse law; which having been taken into consideration, Mr. P. again contended for the propriety of its adoption.

Mr. MACON moved to amend the resolution by instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of bringing in a bill to repeal the law altogether; which was agreed to by Mr. PARKER, and incorporated in his resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire whether it be expedient to repeal or amend the act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof, and report their opinion thereon by bill or otherwise."

Mr. NICHOLAS moved to amend the resolution by striking out the word in italic, in the third line.

A long debate took place on this motion, in which it was frequently observed that the change of conduct on the part of the French Government, which was manifest, ought to produce an equal change on our part; but that we should not touch our system of defence, without connecting with it another; that the power for ceasing hostilities, which was lodged with the Executive, would no doubt be justly exercised, and whenever circumstances would warrant the measure—which no doubt would happen upon the receipt of the first despatches from our Ministers at Paris.

The motion to strike out was negatived—yeas 23.

Mr. GALLATIN then opposed the resolution, on the ground that it would be highly improper to take any measure, at the present time, which would change our defensive system. He had no wish even to see the bill amended. Persons who may have suffered could obtain relief by petitioning Congress, who no doubt would grant it, wherever there was no fraud or collusion.

The question on the original resolution was put and negatived—yeas 40, nays 43.

SENATE BILLS.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate have passed the two following bills, viz:

"An act supplementary to the act establishing the Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" to which they request the concurrence of this House.

Also, the following bill, with amendments: "An act to establish the district of Kennebunk, and to annex Lyme to New London; to alter the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point, and therein to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage.'"

The amendments to this bill were read and concurred in.

The bill relative to the Mint was read a first and second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the further report of the Committee of Ways and Means, on the subject of the revenue; when the first resolution, laying an additional duty of twenty per centum on wines, after being amended, on motion of Mr. GRISWOLD, to read as follows, was adopted:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to lay an additional duty of twenty per centum on the amount of the present duty upon wines imported into the United States, and to vary the scale of duties in such manner as to comport with the plan of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The second resolution was agreed to without debate as follows:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to lay an additional duty of two and-a-half per centum ad valorem on such goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, as are now subject to a duty of ten per centum ad valorem."

The third resolution was opposed by Messrs. HARPER and S. SMITH, and supported by Mr. GRISWOLD; after which the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

WEDNESDAY, May 7.

Mr. DAVIS, from the select committee to whom was committed the bill from the Senate for the relief of Ithamer Canfield, made a report, that said bill ought to pass. The bill was then ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House, that they have concurred in the amendments of this House to the bill relative to the slave trade with several amendments to which they desire the concurrence of the House; also that the Senate insist on some of their amendments disagreed to by this House, to the bill supplementary to an act for an amicable settlement of limits within the State of Georgia, and for establishing a government in the Mississippi Territory.

ADDITIONAL ARMY.

Mr. HARPER said, that by the terms of enlistment of the additional army, they were engaged to serve for three years, or until an amicable adjustment of the differences existing between the United States and France; from which circumstance, the President was precluded, even if he knew the preliminaries of peace to be adjusted, from disbanding it until a treaty should be actually concluded and ratified by the two Governments—whereby the troops would be kept for perhaps six months in service unnecessarily. The Navy and other parts of our defensive system, were upon a different footing. He wished the Army to be placed on a similar one, and therefore moved the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the President of the United States to discharge the additional army thereof, as soon as the state of things between the United States and the French Republic will warrant the measure."

The resolution was agreed to, and referred to the Committee of the whole House to whom was committed the bill from the Senate to suspend part of the act entitled "An act to augment the Army of the United States."

ADDITIONAL REVENUE.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the further report of the Committee of Ways and Means on the subject of revenue; and the tax on drawbacks being under consideration, Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. HARPER again spoke for and against the motion. Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. HUGER, and Mr. RANDOLPH, also spoke against the motion; after which the question was taken and negatived, only 23 votes being in favor of it.

The third resolution, to lay an additional duty of one half per cent. per pound on brown sugar and coffee imported into the United States, was opposed by Mr. GRISWOLD, who doubted much the propriety of laying an additional duty on coffee, and therefore moved to strike out that article. The motion was opposed by Mr. HARPER, and advocated by Mr. SEWALL, who was of opinion that this article was frequently smuggled, and was apprehensive it would be more so, if an additional duty were laid, and therefore would injure the revenue.

The motion was carried—yeas 38, nays 21.

The question on the resolution as amended was, after some debate, put and carried—yeas 45, nays 28.

MAY, 1800.

Heirs of Harding and Trueman.

H. OF R.

The fourth resolution reported, to retain two-and-a-half per centum on all drawbacks allowed for goods re-exported from the United States, in addition to the sums heretofore directed to be retained by law, and also on the whole of the additional duty on goods imported in foreign ships or vessels, was agreed to without debate. The Committee then rose, and, upon the question, Will the House concur with the Committee in their agreement to the resolution laying an additional duty on sugar? the yeas and nays were called for, and taken, as follows:

NAYS—Phanuel Bishop, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, John Condit, John Dawson, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmendorf, Albert Gallatin, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Joseph Heister, David Holmes, George Jackson, James Jones, Michael Leib, James Linn, Nathaniel Macon, Anthony New, John Nicholas, John Randolph, John Smilie, Richard Stanford, Thomas Sumter, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, and Joseph B. Varnum.—28.

The other resolutions, as amended, were also agreed to, and the Committee of Ways and Means directed to bring in a bill or bills conformable thereto.

HEIRS OF HARDING AND TRUEMAN.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the bill making provision for the orphan children of Colonel Harding and Major Trueman; when the unfavorable report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Mrs. Elliot, which was referred to this Committee, was taken into consideration, and, after some debate, agreed to—yeas 36, nays 28.

The unfavorable reports on the petition of Mrs. Wooster, and on the petition of Mrs. Lynch, were also agreed to.

The bill for the relief of the orphan children was next taken up, and agreed to. The Committee then rose, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the report; when

Mr. HARRISON moved that the decision on the petition of Mrs. Elliot be postponed till the first Monday in December next; which was carried—yeas 40.

On motion of Mr. D. FOSTER, the decision of Mrs. Wooster's case was also postponed until that day.

Mr. MACON then moved that the further consideration of the bill be also postponed to that day; which was negatived, only 24 members voting in favor of it; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

The report on the petition of Mrs. Lynch was concurred in.

THURSDAY, May 8.

The bill entitled an act to make further provision for the orphan children of Colonel John Harding, and the orphan daughter of Major Alexander Trueman, deceased, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of Ithamer Canfield was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HARPER brought in a bill to retain a further sum on drawbacks, for the expenses incident to the allowance and payment thereof, and in lieu of the stamp duties on debentures; and a bill to lay additional duties on certain articles imported; which were, respectively, read a first and second time, and ordered to the third reading. The bills were then engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee appointed, on the twentieth of March last, to examine the accounts of the United States relating to the public debt, and to report the amount respectively incurred and extinguished, and generally such facts as relate to the increase and diminution of the same, since the establishment of the Government of the United States under the present Constitution, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate, to permit the exportation of certain parcels of gunpowder, muskets, and cutlassess, made a report, that the said bill ought not to pass. The question was then put, "Shall the bill pass?" and resolved in the negative.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter enclosing a report from James McHenry, Oliver Wolcott, and James Steele, Esqs., on the subject of the Canadian and Nova Scotia refugees.

The report was referred to the select committee heretofore appointed on this subject, on the part of whom, Mr. GALLATIN immediately brought in a bill regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the Provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia; which was read a first and second time, and committed for Friday.

The House proceeded to consider the report, made yesterday, from the managers appointed to attend a conference with the Senate, on the subject-matter of the amendments depending between the two Houses to the bill, entitled "An act supplemental to the act, entitled 'An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory,'" when the report was concurred in as follows:

Resolved, That this House do recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the first section of the bill above mentioned, and do agree to the said amendment, with an amendment.

Resolved, That this House do recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the ninth section of the said bill; and do agree to the amendment of the Senate to the first amendment of this House to the tenth section, proposed to be inserted by the Senate.

Mr. RUTLEDGE laid on the table the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire and report, whether any and what additional allowances ought to be made to the salaries of the district Judges of the several district Courts of the United States."

The bill to permit, in certain cases, the bringing of slaves into the Mississippi Territory, was taken up in Committee, agreed to without amendment, and ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. CLAIBORNE, from the committee to whom was referred the laws passed by the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory, made a report, recommending the adoption of a joint resolution for repealing two of said laws—the one relating to granting licenses to tavern keepers, the other fixing the fees to be exacted in certain cases by the Judges of that Territory.

The resolution was read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading to-morrow.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill relative to making provision for allowing rations to Indians on visiting the seat of Government; when the bill was agreed to without amendment, and ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill making certain additional appropriations for the year 1800; when the resolution referred to this Committee, making certain additional appropriations for fortifications, was agreed to, and a section for that purpose added to the bill. By this bill $32,000 are appropriated for defraying the expenses incurred by both Houses in doing honor to the memory of General Washington; to the Choctaw nation of Indians, $2,000; for the reimbursement of moneys advanced by Consuls of the United States in defending captured property of citizens of the United States in foreign countries, $5,000; for defraying costs of prosecution before the Court of Appeals in England, $44,000; for expenses of Indians visiting the seat of Government, $7,500; additional compensation to officers of both Houses of Congress, $1,500; for expenses incident to the establishment of the general stamp office, and salary of superintendent, &c., $400; for expenses incident to the establishment of the Indiana Territory, including salary of Governor, Judges, &c., thereof, $4,000; for exploring copper mines on Lake Superior, $1,500; and for fortifications, $100,000.

Mr. CLAIBORNE moved a new section to the bill, authorizing the grant of $1,925 to John Pitchyn, as compensation as interpreter on the part of the United States to the Choctaw nation of Indians, at the treaty of Hopewell, authorized by the old Confederation.

The section, after some debate, was agreed to. The Committee then rose, the House concurred, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

MEMORY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. H. LEE from the select committee appointed to consider what measures it would be proper for Congress to adopt for paying suitable respect to the memory of the man first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen—the deceased General WASHINGTON—made a report, recommending the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the resolution of Congress passed in the year 1783, respecting an equestrian statue of General WASHINGTON, be carried into immediate execution, and that the statue be placed in the centre of an area to be formed in front of the Capitol.

"Resolved, That a marble monument be erected by the United States in the Capitol at the city of Washington, in honor of General WASHINGTON to commemorate his services, and to express the regrets of the American people for their irreparable loss.

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to give such directions as may appear to him proper to carry the preceding resolutions into effect; and that for the present the sum of $100,000 be appropriated for these purposes."

The resolutions were referred to a Committee of the whole House, and immediately taken into consideration; when

Mr. HARPER moved to amend the first resolution, by inserting that a mausoleum be erected for General WASHINGTON, in the city of Washington, instead of the statue proposed, which was carried; the other resolutions were negatived, of course.

The Committee then rose, and the resolution, as amended by Mr. HARPER, was agreed to by the House, and a bill ordered to be brought in pursuant thereto.

COMPENSATION OF COLLECTORS.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they have passed the bill supplementary to the act entitled an act to establish the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, with amendments.

The Senate proposed to add a new section making it the duty of the collectors of the respective ports of Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, Boston, and Charleston, to deposit in the Bank of the United States, or one of the banks of deposit, all bonds by them received, for payment of duties; which bonds are to be collected by and at the risk of said banks, with the usual per centage.

This was agreed to.

FRIDAY, May 9.

The following engrossed bills were read and passed, viz:

An act to make provision relative to rations for Indians and their visits to the seat of Government;

MAY, 1800.

The Treasury Department, &c.

H. OF R.

An act to permit, in certain cases, the bringing of slaves into the Mississippi Territory;

An act to authorize certain expenditures, and to make certain appropriations for the year 1800.

A resolution yesterday reported, by Mr. CLAIBORNE, from a select committee, respecting so much of the laws passed by the Governor and the two Judges of the Mississippi Territory as granted eight dollars for every tavern license to the Governor; and so much of the laws of the said Territory as gave to the Judges certain fees in the Courts thereof, was taken up. The resolution was to repeal and nullify the aforesaid laws. The House unanimously concurred.

The amendments to the act respecting surveyors, were agreed to, except one, which was negatived. The amendments to the other bills were concurred in.

The House went into Committee on the bill to revive and continue in force an act entitled "An act for establishing trading houses with the Indian tribes."

This bill was ordered for a third reading which it subsequently had, and was passed.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The House went into a Committee on the act supplementary to the act entitled "An act to establish the Treasury Department."

The Committee rose and reported the bill—which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should lay before Congress, at the commencement of every session, a report on the subject of finance, together with such plans for improving the revenue as may occur to him.

Mr. GALLATIN and Mr. NICHOLAS opposed the passing of the bill, on Constitutional principles. They observed, that as all money bills were to originate in the House of Representatives, the Senate had no right to propose any bill by which that provision was changed; nor could the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the same ground, propose anything that should originate any money bill. Heretofore, it had been usual, when information was wanting by the House, to call for it from that Department, and the same could be done again.

It was contended by Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. HARPER, that it was not a power to report a bill, but merely the state of our finances, which, for want of due notice, had heretofore been delayed, so as to throw all the most important business upon the close of the session, whereas, by a leisurely and mature examination, the Secretary of Treasury would be enabled to make a timely and complete report.

The bill passed to its third reading—43 to 39.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Amendments were proposed by the Senate to the following bills:

An act to ascertain the compensation to public Ministers;

An act to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue;

An act making appropriations for the Navy of the United States during the year 1800;

An act prescribing the mode of counting the votes in the election of President and Vice President of the United States.

One of the amendments to the bill respecting the election of President, was, instead of the word "rejecting" (in the bill) any vote or votes by a concurrent vote of the two Houses, the word "admitting" was proposed by the Senate.

Mr. HARPER and Mr. BAYARD hoped the House would not concur, as this amendment very materially changed the principle of the bill, inasmuch as it would put it in the power of one or two members of either House to require the majority of both Houses to admit a vote or votes; in default of which, the whole votes of a State might be totally rejected. This was contrary to the former will of the House, after a mature deliberation.

The yeas and nays were called by Mr. NICHOLAS, on the question "Shall the amendments of the Senate be concurred in?" and decided in the negative—yeas 15, nays 73, as follows:

NAYS—Willis Alston, George Baer, Theodorus Bailey, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Phanuel Bishop, Jonathan Brace, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William C. C. Claiborne, John Condit, William Cooper, William Craik, John Davenport, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmdorf, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, John Fowler, Jonathan Freeman, Albert Gallatin, Henry Glen, Elizur Goodrich, Edwin Gray, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Robert Goodloe Harper, Thomas Hartley, Joseph Heister, William H. Hill, David Holmes, George Jackson, James Jones, Aaron Kitchell, John Wilkes Kittera, Michael Leib, Matthew Lyon, James Linn, Edward Livingston, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, Abraham Nott, Robert Page, Thomas Pinckney, Leven Powell, John Randolph, John Reed, John Rutledge, jun., Samuel Sewall, John Smilie, John Smith, Samuel Smith, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, Philip Van Cortlandt, Joseph B. Varnum, Peleg Wadsworth, and Robert Williams.

SALT SPRINGS.

The House went into Committee on the bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to lease certain salt springs, the property of the United States, in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio.

Mr. HARRISON moved to strike out the whole bill, for the purpose of inserting another.

The SPEAKER moved that, for the true understanding of a bill, new in its principles, the Committee rise, which was accordingly done. Leave was refused to sit again, when Mr. CLAIBORNE moved that the bill be postponed till the first Monday in December next. This was carried.

CANADIAN REFUGEES.

Mr. GALLATIN, from the committee to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of War and the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, on the subject of Canadian and Nova Scotia refugees, made a report, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole, to whom was referred the bill regulating grants of land appropriated for the refugees of the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia. The House then went into a Committee on the said bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, which was subsequently done, and the bill passed.

MEMORY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. EVANS, from the committee appointed for that purpose, reported a bill for erecting a mausoleum for GEORGE WASHINGTON, in the city of Washington.

The bill provided that it should be one hundred feet square at the base, and of a proportionate height.

Mr. EGGLESTON wished to hear the estimated price.

Mr. HARPER said he had an estimate from Mr. Latrobe, of Philadelphia, who was the architect employed on the Pennsylvania Bank, the estimate of which had rather been over the actual expense; the estimate was, that a pyramid of one hundred feet at the bottom, with nineteen steps, having a chamber thirty feet square, made of granite, to be taken from the Potomac, with a marble sarcophagus in the centre, and four marble pillars on the outside, besides other proportionate ornaments, would amount to $62,500. He hoped no objection would be made to the price, since it could not occur on any future occasion, as another WASHINGTON would never die.

Mr. NICHOLAS thought every sense of respect would be as well signified by a building of less dimensions, and it would be considerable less expense; he moved to strike out one hundred and insert sixty. After some debate, this was negatived.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for its third reading.

MEETING OF CONGRESS.

A bill was received from the Senate appointing the time and directing the place of the next meeting of Congress, which provided that the two Houses should meet at the city of Washington on the third Monday in November next.

The House went into Committee thereupon, which was reported. On the question for its third reading, it was carried—yeas 32, nays 32. The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative, and it was ordered to a third reading to-morrow.

SATURDAY, May 10.

MEMORY OF WASHINGTON.

The bill for erecting a mausoleum for GEORGE WASHINGTON, in the city of Washington, was read a third time; and upon the question, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KITCHELL called the yeas and nays upon it, and proceeded to give his reasons why he would vote against the bill. He was followed by Mr. HARPER in favor of it, and Mr. RANDOLPH against it; when the question was taken, and the bill passed—yeas 54, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Gabriel Christie, William C. C. Claiborne, William Craik, Samuel W. Dana, Franklin Davenport, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Albert Gallatin, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Edwin Gray, Roger Griswold, John A. Hanna, Robert Goodloe Harper, David Holmes, Benjamin Huger, James H. Imlay, James Jones, John Wilkes Kittera, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, Edward Livingston, Lewis R. Morris, Peter Muhlenberg, Abraham Nott, Robert Page, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jun., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, John Smith, Samuel Smith, Richard Dobbs Spaight, George Thatcher, John C. Thomas, Richard Thomas, Abram Trigg, Philip Van Cortlandt, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

NAYS—Theodorus Bailey, Robert Brown, Matthew Clay, John Condit, John Davenport, George Jackson, Aaron Kitchell, Michael Leib, James Linn, Nathaniel Macon, Anthony New, John Nicholas, John Randolph, William Shepard, John Smilie, Thomas Sumter, John Thompson, John Trigg, and Joseph B. Varnum.

NEXT MEETING OF CONGRESS.

The bill from the Senate appointing the time and directing the place of the next meeting of Congress, was read a third time; when

Mr. BAYARD moved that it be recommitted to a Committee of the whole House, for the purpose of altering the time of commencing the session. After some debate, the motion was negatived.

The question was then put, Shall the bill pass? and resolved in the affirmative—yeas 41, nays 35. The next meeting of Congress will of course take place on the third Monday in November next.

THE MINT.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill from the Senate supplementary to the act establishing the Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

The object of this bill, which is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract with the Bank of the United States for the disposal of the right of coinage for ten years, was objected to by Mr. GALLATIN, who wished the bill to be postponed till next session; or that the coinage should be discontinued, and the implements sold; and not that it should be placed in the power of the bank.

Mr. C. GOODRICH said, that some arrangement should be made on the subject. By the existing law the Mint was to be removed to the seat of Government, at the city of Washington—and it was highly questionable whether the removal would not conduce to the destruction of the institution; the project of the Senate, therefore, appeared to him the best we could adopt; it would relieve us from the coinage, and expense attending the business, at the same time that it would afford a reasonable profit to the bank, who, at first, would incur very great expense, as the dies were extremely defective, and new ones would have to be procured.

MAY, 1800.

Army Bill.

H. OF R.

Mr. GALLATIN moved to strike out the twelfth section of the bill, and insert that the Mint shall be continued at Philadelphia until 5th March, 1801. This would leave it in the power of Congress to take the subject into mature consideration next session.

The motion was carried, yeas 40, noes 31; the Committee rose, and the House concurred.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and having received its third reading, was passed as amended.

A message from the Senate informed the House that they disagreed to this amendment; also, also, that they have passed the bill authorizing the issuing of certain patents, and a bill directing the payment of a detachment of militia under the command of Major Thomas Johnson, in 1794, each with amendment.

Also, that they disagree to the amendment proposed by this House to their amendment to the bill, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue."

The House proceeded to consider the latter bill, and

Resolved, That a conference be requested with the Senate on the subject-matter of the said amendment disagreed to by the Senate; and that Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. HARPER, and Mr. NOTT, be appointed managers at the same, on the part of this House.

[Subsequently the Senate agreed to the conference proposed.]

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The bill making further provision for the relief of persons imprisoned for debts due the United States, was taken up in Committee, agreed to, and upon the question shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading, it passed in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 25. The bill was subsequently read the third time and passed—yeas 39, nays 27.

[By this bill no person indebted to the United States can be discharged from prison, unless he shall have suffered two years imprisonment.]

ELECTIONS OF PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate adhere to their disagreement to the amendments to the bill prescribing the mode of deciding disputed elections of President and Vice President of the United States, made by this House, and subsequently insisted on Whereupon,

Mr. HARPER moved that this House do also adhere to their disagreement to recede; which was carried, and the bill, consequently, is lost.

SUPPLEMENTARY ARMY BILL.

The House went into the Committee of the Whole on the bill from the Senate supplementary to the act to augment the Army of the United States; when

Mr. HARPER, in pursuance of his motion referred to this Committee, moved an additional section, authorizing the President, whenever in his opinion the negotiations with France will warrant the measure, to discharge the additional army, except the engineers, raised in pursuance of the act to which this is a supplement.

Mr. S. SMITH thought the measure warrantable at present, and moved to strike out the responsibility imposed on the President of waiting till the preliminaries of peace were signed.

Mr. RUTLEDGE opposed this motion, as did Mr. H. LEE, and Mr. SEDGWICK.

Mr. S. SMITH spoke in reply, and said he had been the original mover of this army, had voted for retaining it; but was now of opinion it was totally unnecessary, and was sorry it was ever adopted; he thought it of no use, whether this country accommodated her differences or not with the French Republic, so little was the danger of invasion.

The motion was negatived—yeas 38, nays 41.

The section was then agreed to.

Mr. SEWALL moved a new section, for allowing one month's pay, in addition to the allowance now made by law, as a compensation for their services, and expenses in returning home; which was adopted—yeas 42, nays 27. The Committee then rose, and

Mr. S. SMITH renewed his motion for striking out part of the new section added on motion of Mr. HARPER, and called the yeas and nays upon it, which were taken and stood—yeas 38, nays 42, as follows:

NAYS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, William Cooper, William Craik, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, George Dent, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Dwight Foster, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Edwin Gray, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, William H. Hill, Benjamin Huger, James H. Imlay, John Wilkes Kittera, Silas Lee, Lewis R. Morris, Robert Page, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Levin Powell, John Reed, John Rutledge, jr., Samuel Sewall, James Sheafe, William Shepard, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Wain, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

On the question for concurring with the Committee in adding the new section proposed by Mr. SEWALL, Mr. RANDOLPH spoke at considerable length against it, and called the yeas and nays upon it; which were taken and the section adopted, yeas 47, nays 27, as follows.

YEAS—Willis Alston, George Baer, Theodorus Bailey, Bailey Bartlett, Jonathan Brace, John Brown, Gabriel Christie, William Charles Cole Claiborne, William Cooper, William Craik, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, George Dent, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Dwight Foster, John Fowler,

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

MONDAY, May 12.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLAS, the House rescinded a resolution to adjourn the two Houses this day, and a resolution was adopted that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House should adjourn both Houses to-morrow. The Senate amended it by proposing Wednesday. On the question of concurrence, it was carried, 40 to 24.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the bill from the Senate, to amend an act entitled an act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States.

This bill provides that jurors in the Courts of the United States shall be designated by lot, or otherwise, according to the mode now practised in the highest courts of the several States.

The bill was agreed to, read a third time and passed.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the managers of the conference on the disagreeing votes to the bill to enlarge the powers of surveyors of the revenue, made a report, to which the House agreed. The Senate also concurred.

The Senate's amendments to the bill authorizing the payment of a detachment of militia, under the command of Thomas Johnson, and to the bill to authorize the issuing of certain patents, were taken up and concurred in.

A joint committee of conference was appointed on the bill respecting the Mint establishment.

The House proceeded to consider the amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the issuing certain patents." Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate agree to the resolution for postponing the time of adjournment of the two Houses, with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the amendment proposed by the Senate to the resolution for postponing the time of adjournment: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

TUESDAY, May 13.

Mr. C. GOODRICH, from the managers on the part of this House to confer with the conferees of the Senate, on the subject of the disagreement of the two Houses to the bill respecting the Mint Establishment reported their opinion, that it would be proper for this House to recede from their amendment to the said bill, which he moved; but, on the question being taken, it was determined to adhere, 35 to 22. A message was afterwards received from the Senate, notifying the House that they recede from their opposition to the same; so that the bill passed with the amendment of the House, which was that the Mint should remain at Philadelphia, upon the present plan, till 4th of March, 1801.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that they had agreed to the following bills with sundry amendments, to which they desired the concurrence of the House: An act to authorize certain expenditures, and to make certain additional appropriations for the year 1800; An act authorizing the payment of a certain sum of money for holding a treaty or treaties with the Indians; An act to make further provision for the orphan children of Colonel John Harding and Major Alexander Trueman, deceased.

The House concurred in the amendments to the same.

On motion of Mr. DENT, it was Resolved, That the third engrossing clerk in the office of the Clerk of the House, be kept in the service of the House during the recess, on account of the removal of the office to the future seat of Government.

WEDNESDAY, May 14.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate have resolved that the resolution for repealing two of the laws passed by the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory, be postponed till next session of Congress; that the Senate concur in the amendments of this House to the bill supplementary to the act to augment the Army of the United States, with amendments.

The amendments having been taken into consideration, the first, which was to fix the day of disbanding the army on or before the 15th June next, was concurred in.

The second amendment, which was to insert a proviso, that nothing in the act contained should be construed to authorize a deduction of the first four regiments of infantry, two regiments of engineers, and two companies of light dragoons, or of the general and other officers of the staff, appertaining thereto, was also agreed to.

The third amendment was to allow three months additional pay, instead of two, as proposed by this House; which was carried—yeas 35.

MISSISSIPPI LAWS.

Mississippi Territory, moved the following resolution, with a recital, viz :

"Whereas, the extensive Territories of the United States, exclusive of the particular States, have rendered subordinate governments indispensable for local and temporary objects, and a system of this nature, calculated for the Northwest Territory, has been applied to that of the Mississippi, and now pervades the whole by separate jurisdictions, the number of which it is proposed to increase; and in each a Governor, appointed by the General Government, and removed from office at the pleasure of the President of the United States, is made the first and most important official character; whence it is of high concern to the internal quiet and prosperity of the people in those Territories, as well as of much moment to the political interests of the United States, and to the confidence reposed in the President, to continue in office such Governors only as shall have conducted themselves with propriety, and especially within the limits of legal authority; since the experience of all times, and the evidence of all history, prove that Governors, responsible only to those at a distance, are prone to disregard the good of the governed; to usurp authority, and to abuse the trust confided to them, and that connivance and impurity forever become the prolific parents of crime and oppression.

And whereas it is in particular represented to Congress, by the people of the Mississippi Territory, that Winthrop Sargent, the present Governor thereof, has acted under the influence of a faction, and pursued the principles of despotism, by excluding from his confidence a majority of the well-disposed citizens; by indulging an unwarrantable distrust of the great body of the people; and by appointing to offices, civil and military, over them, many persons who were obnoxious for their intrigues and foreign connexions.

That he has practised an avarice hateful to a liberal people, and an extortion odious and oppressive to free citizens, by exacting and receiving fees for passports, and for marriage licenses; and that he has, with others, exercised the most dangerous assumption of power, by enacting new laws for the Territory, instead of adopting laws from the original States, and by annexing to a breach of them the most rigorous penalties of forfeiture and confiscation.

And whereas it appears to this House, that the said Winthrop Sargent did acknowledge that he had deviated from the ordinance for the government of the Territories, whereby it is enacted, "that the Governor and Judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district, such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary, and best suited to the circumstances of the district," inasmuch as, in his letter of the 5th of October, 1799, directed by him and two of the Judges to a committee of the inhabitants of the Territory, he declares, "that there are few laws of this Territory, either of a civil or a criminal nature, but what are derived from some one of the State codes, and where we have ventured to depart from them, it has been in favor of our citizens, by lessening of fines and penalties; but when it has so happened that evils actually existed among us, for the remedy of which no provision could be found in the laws to which we had access, we have not so far distrusted our authority, as not to take immediate steps to prevent their growth and continuance."

That, by the authenticated transcript of the laws thus enacted, which have been officially transmitted to Congress, it does not appear whether the said laws have been taken from the code of laws of any of the States.

That, by one of the aforesaid laws, entitled "a law authorizing the Governor to establish public ferries," after declaring in the preamble of the same, that no law concerning ferries can be found for adoption, it is enacted, that the Governor be authorized to declare, by proclamation or otherwise, from time to time, what ferries shall be established, and by whom to be kept; and that if any person, without authority as aforesaid, shall keep a ferry, he shall forfeit, to the use of the country, the sum of fifty dollars.

That by another of the aforesaid laws entitled "A law respecting crimes and punishments," it is enacted "that any person or persons guilty of treason, shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer the pains of death, and shall moreover forfeit all his, her, or their estate real and personal to the Territory," although the Constitution of the United States declares "that no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attained."

That by another law passed by the said Governor and Judges, entitled "A law to regulate taverns," it is enacted that the Governor should have and receive for every license by him granted pursuant to this law, to sell wine and other liquors, the sum of eight dollars; although the Governor receives, as such, the sum of $2,000 per annum from the United States.

And that by another law thus passed by the Governor and Judges, entitled "A law establishing and regulating fees," &c., it is enacted "that the Judges of the Supreme Court shall be entitled to receive fees for allowing writs of errors and supersedeas, &c., for taking bail, filing bail, &c., for the first motion in every civil cause, taxing bills of costs, signing judgment," and for a variety of other services, particularly enumerated in the aforesaid law, although each of the said Judges receive as such a salary of $800 per annum from the United States.

From whence it is evident, that the said Winthrop Sargent, being, in conjunction with the Judges, entrusted with the important power of adopting for the Territory such laws of the individual States as might be suited to the circumstances of the said Territory, has, in conjunction with the Judges, abused the power thus delegated, by usurping an authority of making new laws, not to be found amongst the laws of the individual States, by prescribing penalties inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, and by combining with the said Judges in enacting laws for the purpose of exacting sums of money from the inhabitants of said Territory, for his and the said Judges' private use and emolument: Therefore Resolved, That the laws passed by the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory, and the petition of Cato West and others, together with all the documents relative thereto, be transmitted to the President of the United States."

Upon the question, Will the House now take the preceding resolution into consideration? a very warm debate ensued; it was finally determined in the negative—only 21 members voting in favor of it; and it was ordered to lie on the table.

CANADIAN REFUGEES.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill regulating the grants of land to the Canada and Nova Scotia refugees, with amendments.

The amendments were taken into consideration, and opposed by Mr. GALLATIN, who said the object of the Senate was to give the refugees land worth ten cents an acre, instead of good land worth one dollar per acre, as proposed by this House; rather than do this, he would give them nothing.

Mr. LIVINGSTON was of the same opinion, and hoped the House would not concur. These people had waited eighteen years, and he thought it extremely hard they should now be put off in this manner.

The amendments were unanimously rejected.

A message from the Senate informed the House that they adhered to the amendment; whereupon,

Mr. GALLATIN moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed till the third Monday in November next; which was carried.

After receiving several messages from the President, notifying the signing of various bills, there appearing no further business before the House, on motion of Mr. C. GOODRICH, a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to wait on the President, and inform him of the proposed recess was adopted, and was concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. C. GOODRICH, from the Joint Committee, reported that they had performed that service, and that the President informed them he had no other communication to make, except his good wishes for their health and happiness, and that he wished them a pleasant journey to their respective homes.

A message having been sent to the Senate to inform them this House was ready to adjourn, after a few minutes a motion was made for that purpose, and carried; when

The SPEAKER, after taking an affectionate farewell of the members, and expressing his wish for their safe return and happiness, during the recess, adjourned the House till the third Monday in November next, to meet in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE SIXTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, NOVEMBER 17, 1800.

MONDAY, November 17, 1800.

In pursuance of the law of last session, the second session of the sixth Congress commenced this day, at the city of Washington, and the Senate assembled, in their Chamber, at the Capitol.

PRESENT:

JOHN LANGDON and SAMUEL LIVERMORE, from New Hampshire;

DWIGHT FOSTER, from Massachusetts;

JAMES HILLHOUSE and URIAH TRACY, from Connecticut;

THEODORE FOSTER, from Rhode Island;

NATHANIEL CHIPMAN, from Vermont;

JAMES SCHUREMAN, from New Jersey;

WILLIAM HILL WELLS, from Delaware;

JOHN E. HOWARD, from Maryland;

STEPHENS THOMPSON MASON, from Virginia;

JOHN BROWN, from Kentucky;

JOSEPH ANDERSON and WILLIAM COCKE, from Tennessee;

ABRAHAM BALDWIN, from Georgia.

The number of members present not being sufficient to constitute a quorum, the Senate adjourned to 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

TUESDAY, November 18.

The number of members present not being sufficient to constitute a quorum, the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, November 19.

There being no quorum, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, November 20.

There being no quorum present, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, November 21.

TIMOTHY BLOODWORTH, from the State of North Carolina; HUMPHREY MARSHALL, from the State of Kentucky; and GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, from the State of New York, severally attended.

The credentials of DWIGHT FOSTER, appointed a Senator by the State of Massachusetts, in place of Samuel Dexter, resigned, were read, and he took his seat in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT being absent, the Senate proceeded to the election of a President pro tempore, as the Constitution provides, and JOHN E. HOWARD was chosen.

The PRESIDENT administered the oath prescribed by law to Mr. FOSTER.

Ordered, That the Secretary wait on the President of the United States, and acquaint him that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that, in the absence of the Vice President, they have elected JOHN E. HOWARD President of the Senate pro tempore.

Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and ready to proceed to business; and that, in the absence of the Vice President, they have elected JOHN E. HOWARD President of the Senate pro tempore.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that a quorum of the House is assembled, and they have appointed a committee, on their part, together with such committee as the Senate may appoint, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled, and ready to receive any communications that he may be pleased to make to them.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolution last recited, and that Messrs. WELLS and TRACY be the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WELLS reported, from the joint committee last mentioned, that they had waited on the President of the United States; and that he acquainted the committee that he would meet the two Houses of Congress, at 12 o'clock to-morrow, in the Senate Chamber.

SATURDAY, November 22.

Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives, that the Senate are ready to meet them in their Chamber, for the purpose of receiving the communications from the President of the United States.

The House of Representatives having accordingly taken the seats assigned them, the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES came into the Senate Chamber, and addressed both Houses of Congress as follows:

SENATE.

Proceedings.

NOVEMBER, 1800.

*Gentlemen of the Senate, and
Gentlemen of the House of Representatives.*

Immediately after the adjournment of Congress at their last session in Philadelphia, I gave directions, in compliance with the laws, for the removal of the public offices, records, and property. These directions have been executed, and the public officers have since resided and conducted the ordinary business of the Government in this place.

I congratulate the people of the United States on the assembling of Congress at the permanent seat of their Government; and I congratulate you, gentlemen, on the prospect of a residence not to be changed. Although there is cause to apprehend that accommodations are not now so complete as might be wished, yet there is great reason to believe that this inconvenience will cease with the present session.

It would be unbecoming the Representatives of this nation to assemble, for the first time, in this solemn temple, without looking up to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, and imploring his blessing.

May this Territory be the residence of virtue and happiness! In this city may that piety and virtue, that wisdom and magnanimity, that constancy and self-government which adorned the great character whose name it bears, be forever held in veneration! Here, and throughout our country, may simple manners, pure morals, and true religion, flourish forever!

It is with you, gentlemen, to consider whether the local powers over the District of Columbia, vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, shall be immediately exercised. If, in your opinion, this important trust ought now to be executed, you cannot fail, while performing it, to take into view the future probable situation of the Territory for the happiness of which you are about to provide. You will consider it as the Capital of a great nation, advancing, with unexampled rapidity, in arts, in commerce, in wealth, and in population; and possessing, within itself, those energies and resources which, if not thrown away, or lamentably misdirected, will secure to it a long course of prosperity and self-government.

In compliance with a law of the last session of Congress, the officers and soldiers of the temporary army have been discharged. It affords real pleasure to recollect the honorable testimony they gave of the patriotic motives which brought them into the service of their country, by the readiness and regularity with which they returned to the station of private citizens.

It is, in every point of view, of such primary importance to carry the laws into prompt and faithful execution, and to render that part of the administration of justice which the Constitution and laws devolve on the federal courts, as convenient to the people as may consist with their present circumstances, that I cannot omit once more to recommend to your serious consideration the judiciary system of the United States. No subject is more interesting than this to the public happiness, and to none can those improvements which may have been suggested by experience be more beneficially applied.

A Treaty of Amity and Commerce with the King of Prussia has been concluded and ratified. The ratifications have been exchanged, and I have directed the treaty to be promulgated by proclamation.

The difficulties which suspended the execution of the sixth article of our Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, with Great Britain, have not yet been removed. The negotiation on this subject is still pending. As it must be for the interest and honor of both nations to adjust this difference with good faith, I indulge confidently the expectation that the sincere endeavors of the Government of the United States to bring it to an amicable termination will not be disappointed.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary from the United States to France were received by the First Consul with the respect due to their character; and three persons, with equal powers, were appointed to treat with them. Although, at the date of the last official intelligence, the negotiation had not terminated, yet it is to be hoped that our efforts to effect an accommodation will at length meet with a success proportioned to the sincerity with which they have been so often repeated.

While our best endeavors for the preservation of harmony with all nations will continue to be used, the experience of the world, our own experience, admonish us of the insecurity of trusting too confidently to their success. We cannot, without committing a dangerous imprudence, abandon those measures of self protection which are adapted to our situation, and to which, notwithstanding our pacific policy, the violence and injustice of others may again compel us to resort. While our vast extent of seacoast, the commercial and agricultural habits of our people, the great capital they will continue to trust on the ocean, suggest the system of defence which will be most beneficial to ourselves, our distance from Europe, and our resources for maritime strength, will enable us to employ it with effect. Seasonable and systematic arrangements, so far as our resources will justify, for a navy, adapted to defensive war, and which may, in case of necessity, be quickly brought into use, seem to be as much recommended by a wise and true economy as by a just regard for our future tranquillity, for the safety of our shores, and for the protection of our property committed to the ocean.

The present Navy of the United States, called suddenly into existence by a great national exigency, has raised us in our own esteem; and, by the protection afforded to our commerce, has effected, to the extent of our expectations, the objects for which it was created.

In connexion with a navy ought to be contemplated the fortification of some of our principal seaports and harbors. A variety of considerations, which will readily suggest themselves, urge an attention to this measure of precaution. To give security to our principal ports, considerable sums have already been expended, but the works remain incomplete. It is for Congress to determine whether additional appropriations shall be made, in order to render competent to the intended purposes the fortifications which have been commenced.

The manufacture of arms within the United States still invites the attention of the national Legislature. At a considerable expense to the public this manufacture has been brought to such a state of maturity as, with continued encouragement, will supersede the necessity of future importations from foreign countries.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

I shall direct the estimates of the appropriations necessary for the ensuing year, together with an account of the public revenue and expenditure, to a late period, to be laid before you. I observe, with much satisfaction, the product of the revenue during the present year has been more considerable than during any former equal period. This result affords conclusive evidence of the great resources of this country, and of the wisdom and efficiency of the measures which have been adopted by Congress for the protection of commerce and preservation of public credit.

NOVEMBER, 1800.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Gentlemen of the Senate, andGentlemen of the House of Representatives :

As one of the grand community of nations, our attention is irresistibly drawn to the important scenes which surround us. If they have exhibited an uncommon portion of calamity, it is the province of humanity to deplore, and of wisdom to avoid, the causes which may have produced it. If, turning our eyes homeward, we find reason to rejoice at the prospect which presents itself; if we perceive the interior of our country prosperous, free, and happy; if all enjoy in safety, under the protection of laws emanating only from the general will, the fruits of their own labor, we ought to fortify and cling to those institutions which have been the source of such real felicity; and resist, with unabating perseverance, the progress of those dangerous innovations which may diminish their influence.

To your patriotism, gentlemen, has been confided the honorable duty of guarding the public interests; and, while the past is to your country a sure pledge that it will be faithfully discharged, permit me to assure you that your labors to promote the general happiness will receive from me the most zealous co-operation.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Nov. 22, 1800.

The PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES having retired, the two Houses separated.

Ordered, That Messrs. TRACY, MORRIS, and BALDWIN, be a committee to report the draught of an Address to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech this day to both Houses.

It was further ordered that the Speech be printed for the use of the Senate.

Resolved, That two Chaplains of different denominations, be appointed to Congress for the present session, one by each House, who shall interchange weekly.

Resolved, That each Senator be supplied, during the present session, with three such newspapers, printed in any of the States, as he may choose, provided that the same be furnished at the rate usual for the annual charge of such papers.

MONDAY, November 24.

JONATHAN DAYTON, from the State of New Jersey, attended.

TUESDAY, November 25.

WILSON CARY NICHOLAS, from the State of Virginia, attended.

The Senate took into consideration the report of the committee of the draught of an Address in answer to the Speech of the President of the United States to both Houses of Congress, at the opening of the session; which, being read in paragraphs, and amended, was adopted, as follows:

To the President of the United States :

SIR: Impressed with the important truth that the hearts of rulers and people are in the hand of the Almighty, the Senate of the United States most cordially join in your invocations for appropriate blessings upon the Government and people of this Union.

We meet you, sir, and the other branch of the national Legislature in the city which is honored by the name of our late hero and sage, the illustrious WASHINGTON, with sensations and emotions which exceed our power of description.

While we congratulate ourselves on the convention of the Legislature at the permanent seat of Government, and ardently hope that permanence and stability may be communicated as well to the Government itself as to its seat, our minds are irresistibly led to deplore the death of him who bore so honorable and efficient a part in the establishment of both. Great indeed would have been our gratification if his sum of earthly happiness had been completed by seeing the Government thus peaceably convened at this place; but we derive consolation from a belief that the moment in which we were destined to experience the loss we deplore, was fixed by that Being whose counsels cannot err; and from a hope that, since in this seat of Government, which bears his name, his earthly remains will be deposited, the members of Congress, and all who inhabit the city, with these memorials before them, will retain his virtues in lively recollection, and make his patriotism, morals, and piety, models for imitation. And permit us to add, sir, that it is not among the least of our consolations that you, who have been his companion and friend from the dawning of our national existence, and trained in the same school of exertion to effect our independence, are still preserved by a gracious Providence in health and activity to exercise the functions of Chief Magistrate.

The question whether the legal powers over the District of Columbia, vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, shall be immediately exercised, is of great importance, and in deliberating upon it, we shall naturally be led to weigh the attending circumstances and every probable consequence of the measures which may be proposed.

The several subjects for Legislative consideration, contained in your Speech to both Houses of Congress, shall receive from the Senate all the attention which they can give, when contemplating those objects, both in respect to their national importance, and the additional weight that is given them by your recommendation.

We deprecate, with you, sir, all spirit of innovation, from whatever quarter it may arise, which may impair the sacred bond that connects the different parts of this empire; and we trust, that, under the protection of Divine Providence, the wisdom and virtue of the citizens of the United States will deliver our national compact unimpaired to a grateful posterity.

From past experience, it is impossible for the Senate of the United States to doubt of our zealous co-operation with the Legislature in every effort to promote the general happiness and tranquillity of the Union.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1800.

Accept, sir, our warmest wishes for your health and happiness.

JOHN E. HOWARD,
President of the Senate, pro tempore.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and desire him to acquaint the Senate at what time and place it will be convenient for him that the Address of the Senate, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress at the opening of the session, shall be presented; and that Messrs. TRACY, MORRIS, and BALDWIN, be this committee.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have resolved, that two Chaplains be appointed to Congress, for the present session, one by each House, to interchange weekly; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate took into consideration the resolution last mentioned; and,

Resolved, That they do concur therein with the following amendment: after the word "Chaplains," insert "of different denominations."

WEDNESDAY, November 26.

Mr. TRACY reported, from the committee yesterday appointed for the purpose, that they had waited on the President of the United States, and that he would receive the Address of the Senate this day, at 12 o'clock, at his own house.

Whereupon, the Senate waited on the President of the United States accordingly: and the President of the Senate, in their name, presented the Address yesterday agreed to.

To which the PRESIDENT made the following reply:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Senate:

For this excellent Address, so respectful to the memory of my illustrious predecessor, which I receive from the Senate of the United States, at this time, and in this place, with peculiar satisfaction, I pray you to accept of my unfeigned acknowledgments. With you, I ardently hope, that permanence and stability will be communicated as well to the Government itself, as to its beautiful and commodious seat. With you I deplore the death of that hero and sage who bore so honorable and efficient a part in the establishment of both. Great indeed would have been my gratification, if his sum of earthly happiness had been completed by seeing the Government thus peaceably convened at this place, himself at its head. But, while we submit to the decision of Heaven, whose councils are inscrutable to us, we cannot but hope, that the members of Congress, the officers of Government, and all who inhabit the city or the country, will retain his virtues in lively recollection, and make his patriotism, morals, and piety, models for imitation.

I thank you, gentlemen, for your assurance that the several subjects for legislative consideration, recommended in my communication to both Houses, shall receive from the Senate a deliberate and candid attention.

With you, gentlemen, I sincerely deprecate all spirit of innovation which may weaken the sacred bond that connects the different parts of this nation and Government; and with you I trust, that, under the protection of Divine Providence, the wisdom and virtue of our citizens will deliver our national compact unimpaired to a free, prosperous, happy and grateful posterity. To this end it is my fervent prayer, that, in this city, the fountains of wisdom may be always open, and the streams of eloquence forever flow. Here may the youth of this extensive country forever look up without disappointment, not only to the monuments and memorials of the dead, but to the examples of the living, in the members of Congress and officers of Government, for finished models of all those virtues, graces, talents, and accomplishments, which constitute the dignity of human nature, and lay the only foundation for the prosperity or duration of empires.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes; and a bill to add to the district of Massac, on the Ohio, and amend the act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill providing for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States.

On motion to strike out of the 7th section, line 48th, the following words: "twenty-fifth day of March and twenty-fifth day of September," for the purpose of inserting "twenty-fifth day of April and twenty-fifth day of October:" it passed in the negative—yeas 14, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Dwight Foster, Franklin, Greene, Hillhouse, Langdon, Livermore, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, Gunn, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, Marshall, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, and Wells.

On motion to amend the 41st section, and to strike out the provision for the compensation to the circuit Judges "$2,000," and to insert "$1,500:" it was agreed to divide the question, and that it be taken on striking out; and which passed in the negative—yeas 13, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Hillhouse, Langdon, Livermore, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, Greene, Gunn, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, Marshall, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Tracy and Wells.

On motion to strike out the whole of the bill after the words "from and after the" section first, line second, for the purpose of inserting as follows:

"Passing of this act, there shall be four circuits in the United States; the first to consist of the district of Maine, the district of New Hampshire, the district of Massachusetts, and the district of Rhode Island; the second to consist of the district of Connecticut, the district of Vermont, the district of New York, and the district of New Jersey; the third to consist of the district of Pennsylvania, the district of Delaware, the district of Maryland, and the district of Virginia; the fourth of the district of North Carolina, the district of South Carolina, and the district of Georgia.

"The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of the Chief Justice and seven Associate Justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum.

"That the Chief Justice and Associate Justices shall allot themselves among the said circuits as they shall think fit, so that there be not more than two allotted to any one circuit, and shall enter such allotment on record, to be hereafter binding; and, in case no such allotment shall be made by themselves, it shall and may be lawful for the President of the United States to make an allotment, as to him shall seem proper, so that no more than two be allotted to any one circuit, and that in all appointments hereafter to be made of a Chief Justice, or Associate Justice, it shall be said to which circuit they shall belong, and such appointments shall be made so as to allot to each circuit two Justices.

"That it shall not be necessary for more than one of the Justices allotted to any circuit to attend the sitting of the courts within such circuit unless the Supreme Court for special cause shall direct the same; or unless in the preceding term the court shall have been divided on the final hearing of a cause, or on a plea to the jurisdiction, in either of which cases it shall be the duty of both the Justices allotted to a circuit to attend, on notice of such division being given to the Justice who was not present.

"That, from and after the present session of the Supreme Court of the United States, the said court shall be holden by the Justices thereof, or any six of them, at the city of Washington, on the first Monday of December in each and every year thereafter; and that if six of the said Justices shall not attend within ten days after the time hereby appointed for the commencement of the said session, the business of the said court shall be continued over till the next stated session thereof.

So it was resolved that this bill pass.

Mr. BROWN, from the committee on the bill making appropriations of land for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia, reported an amendment; which was read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

The Senate adjourned.

MONDAY, February 9.

Mr. DWIGHT FOSTER, from the committee on the bill making the ports of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, and New Bedford, in Massachusetts, ports of entry for ships arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and places beyond the same, reported the bill without amendment.

Mr. MORRIS, from the joint committee, appointed the 27th of January last, to ascertain and report the mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, reported that the committee could come to no agreement.

A motion was made that it be

"Resolved, That, from and after the last day of March next, the towns of Kittery and Berwick, in the State of Massachusetts, shall be annexed to the district of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire, as ports of delivery only; provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the master or commander of any ship or vessel having merchandise on board, destined for either of the said places, from making entry at his option with the collector of the district of New York, and obtaining permits for the delivery thereof as heretofore."

And it was agreed that this motion be referred to the committee, appointed on the 5th instant, on the bill respecting the ports of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, to report by bill or otherwise.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Senate will be ready to receive the House of Representatives in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday next, at twelve o'clock, for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting the votes for President of the United States. That one person be appointed a teller on the part of the Senate, to make a list of the votes for President of the United States, as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, which shall be entered on the Journals, and if it shall appear that a choice has been made, agreeably to the Constitution, such entry on the Journals shall be deemed a sufficient declaration thereof.

Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives of this resolution.

TUESDAY, February 10.

On motion that when the two Houses shall proceed to opening and counting the votes for President of the United States, no person shall be admitted into the gallery, it passed in the affirmative—yeas 16, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chipman, Dayton, T. Foster, Dwight Foster, Hillhouse, Hindman, Latimer, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Cocke, Franklin, Langdon, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

A message was received from the House of Representatives informing the Senate that they have passed a resolution, which the Clerk was directed to bring to the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

“Resolved, That this House will attend in the Chamber of the Senate on Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock, for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting of the votes for President and Vice President of the United States; that Messrs. RUTLEDGE and NICHOLAS be appointed tellers, to act jointly with the teller appointed on the part of the Senate, to make a list of the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, which shall be entered on the Journals, and if it shall appear that a choice has been made, agreeably to the Constitution, such entry on the Journals shall be deemed a sufficient declaration thereof.”

Ordered, That Mr. WELLS be a teller on the part of the Senate for the purpose expressed in the above resolution.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the bill making the ports of Biddeford, and Pepperelborough, and New Bedford, in the State of Massachusetts, ports of entry, for ships arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and places beyond the same; and, having agreed to the report, the bill was ordered to the third reading.

The Senate took into consideration the amendment reported by the committee on the bill making appropriation of lands for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia; and the report was disagreed to.

Ordered, That the bill pass to the third reading.

WEDNESDAY, February 11.

Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is ready to meet them in the Senate Chamber, for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting the votes for President of the United States.

The two Houses of Congress accordingly assembled in the Senate Chamber, and the certificates of the Electors of sixteen States were, by the VICE PRESIDENT, opened and delivered to the tellers appointed for the purpose, who, having examined and ascertained the number of votes, presented a list thereof to the VICE PRESIDENT, which was read, as follows:

STATES.	Thomas Jefferson.	Aaron Burr.	John Adams.	Charles C. Pinckney.	John Jay.
New Hampshire -	-	-	6	6
Massachusetts -	-	-	16	16
Rhode Island -	-	-	4	3	1
Connecticut -	-	-	9	9
Vermont -	-	-	4	4
New York -	12	12
New Jersey -	-	-	7	7
Pennsylvania -	8	8	7	7
Delaware -	-	-	3	3
Maryland -	5	5	5	5
Virginia -	21	21
Kentucky -	4	4
North Carolina -	8	8	4	4
Tennessee -	3	3
South Carolina -	8	8
Georgia -	4	4
	73	73	65	64	1

Whereupon, the VICE PRESIDENT declared that the result of the votes, as delivered by the tellers, was that

THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Va., had - 73
 AARON BURR, of N. Y., had - - 73
 JOHN ADAMS, of Mass., had - - 65
 CHAS. C. PINCKNEY, of S. C., had - 64
 JOHN JAY, of N. Y., had - - - 1

The whole number of Electors who had voted were one hundred and thirty-eight, of which number THOMAS JEFFERSON and AARON BURR had a majority; but the number of those voting for them being equal, no choice was made by the people; and that, consequently, the remaining duties devolve on the House of Representatives.

On which, the House of Representatives repaired to their own Chamber; and the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 12.

The bill, entitled “An act making the ports of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, and the port of New Bedford, in Massachusetts, ports of entry for ships or vessels arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and from places beyond the same,” was read the third time and passed.

The bill, entitled “An act regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia,” was read the third time and passed.

FRIDAY, February 13.

The Senate met to-day, but no business was transacted.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT communicated a letter from Governor Sargent, of the Mississippi Territory, enclosing sundry petitions of the inhabitants thereof, stating certain grievances, particularly from an act passed the last session of Congress, and praying redress; and the letter and papers were read.

Mr. D. FOSTER, from the committee appointed the 5th instant on the petition of Nathaniel Waldron and others, and to whom was also referred, on the 9th instant, a motion respecting the ports of Kittery and Berwick, in the State of Massachusetts, reported a bill, which was read and passed to the second reading.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

I wish to know the pleasure of Congress, and request their direction, concerning the disposition of the property of the United States now in my possession; whether I shall deliver it into the hands of the Heads of Departments, or of the Commissioners of the city of Washington, or of a committee of Congress, or to any other persons Congress may appoint, to be delivered into the hands of my successor, or whether I shall present it myself to the President of the United States on the 4th of March next. Any of these modes will be agreeable to me.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Feb. 16, 1801.

The Message was read and ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT communicated a letter from JAMES SCHUREMAN, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, resigning his seat; which was read.

Resolved, That the VICE PRESIDENT be requested to notify the Executive of the State of New Jersey that JAMES SCHUREMAN hath resigned his seat in the Senate.

TUESDAY, February 17.

Mr. GREENE, from the committee on the bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment, reported it without amendment; and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

WEDNESDAY, February 18.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment, and ordered the bill to the third reading.

The bill to establish the district of Bristol, and to annex the towns of Kittery and Berwick to the district of Portsmouth, was read the third time.

Resolved, That this bill pass, that it be engrossed, and that the title thereof be "An act to establish the district of Bristol, and to annex the towns of Kittery and Berwick to the district of Portsmouth."

Ordered, That the Message of the President of the United States, of the 16th instant, relative to the public property in his possession, be referred to Messrs. NICHOLAS, TRACY, and BALDWIN, to consider and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have chosen THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia, President of the United States, for the term commencing on the 4th of March next.

On motion it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to consider whether any, and, if any, what, measures ought to be adopted for the further accommodation of the President of the United States, for the term commencing the 4th day of March next, to report by bill, bills, or otherwise; and that Messrs. NICHOLAS, TRACY, and BALDWIN, be the committee on the part of the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill extending the privilege of franking to JOHN ADAMS, now President of the United States, in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was, by unanimous consent, read the first and second time, and passed to a third reading.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be transmitted to AARON BURR, Esq. of New York, Vice President elect of the United States, notification of his election to that office, and that the President of the Senate do make out and sign a certificate, in the words following, viz:

"BE IT KNOWN, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, being convened at the city of Washington, on the second Wednesday in February, A. D. 1801, the underwritten, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, did, in presence of said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President; whereupon it appeared that THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia and AARON BURR, of New York, had a majority of the votes of the Electors, and an equal number of votes; in consequence of which the House of Representatives proceeded to the choice of a President, and have this day notified to the Senate that THOMAS JEFFERSON has by them been duly chosen President: by all of which it appears that AARON BURR, Esq. of New York, is duly elected, agreeably to the Constitution, Vice President of the United States of America.

"In witness thereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this 18th day of February, 1801.

"THOMAS JEFFERSON."

And that the President of the Senate do cause the certificate aforesaid to be laid before the President of the United States, with this resolution.

The Senate took into consideration the report of the committee on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill concerning the District of Columbia:

On motion to insert, between the 13th and 14th sections, as follows:

"And that it shall be lawful for the sheriffs and collectors of the public dues for the counties of Montgomery and Prince George's, in the State of Maryland, and for the sheriff of Fairfax county, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and they shall respectively have full powers and authority, to enter into those parts of the now District of Columbia, which were heretofore within the limits of their respective bailiwicks, for the purpose of collecting, by distress or otherwise, as they were heretofore authorized to do, all officers' fees, State taxes, county taxes, levies and muster fines, at this time due, from persons residing, or having property, subject to the payment of such officers' fees, State taxes, and county taxes, and levies, within the said District; and all disputes or controversies that do or may arise between such sheriff or collector and the person or persons from whom he or they may claim such public dues, shall be cognizable before and tried by the respective State courts to whom the trial of such controversies heretofore belonged, and not before the District of Columbia.

"And that it shall and may be lawful for the sheriffs of the said counties of Montgomery and Prince George's, in the State of Maryland, and for the sheriff of Fairfax, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and they shall, respectively, have full power and authority, to enter into those parts of the now District of Columbia, which were heretofore within the limits of their respective bailiwicks, for the purpose of arresting and conducting to the respective jails, under their keeping and care, as they heretofore might have done had this law never passed, each and every person within the limits of the District of Columbia, upon whom such sheriff hath heretofore served a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, capias ad respondendum, attachment, or other process, issuing from any State court, which commands and requires such sheriff to have the body of the persons before the court from which such writ or process hath issued.

And that wheresoever, by the act of Assembly of the State of Maryland, entitled "An act to establish a bank in the District of Columbia," the President of the said bank is authorized to write to the clerk of the General Court, or any county court in the State of Maryland, and to order such clerk to issue any process against a debtor of the said bank, it shall be lawful for the said President, where the debtor or debtors against whom he means to proceed resides within the limits of the county of Washington aforesaid, or has property within the limits of the same, to write to the clerk of the said county to issue such process, as, by the law of Maryland aforesaid, he might have ordered the clerk of the General Court, or any county court in the said State, to issue; which process shall issue and be returnable to the next county court to be held in the said county of Washington; and shall, by the said court, be proceeded upon in the same manner, and subject to the same rules and provisions in other respects, as is prescribed by the said act of Assembly of the State of Maryland, entitled "An act to establish a bank in the District of Columbia."

"And that the inspectors of tobacco and flour within the towns of Georgetown and Alexandria, who are now duly authorized to act as such under the laws of the respective States by which they, or any of them, are so authorized, shall continue to hold the office or offices which they now respectively fill, and to execute and discharge the duties by law imposed upon them, as inspectors of tobacco, until Congress shall otherwise provide. And that the said inspectors shall, during the time of their continuance as such, be entitled to the compensation, governed by the rules, and subject to the same penalties, provided, prescribed, and imposed by the laws of the State under which they have been respectively appointed and now act."

And it passed in the negative—yeas 12, nays 16, as follows:

Mr. DWIGHT FOSTER presented the petition of James Mathers, Thomas Claxton, and Thomas Dunn, praying leave to continue in the houses on Capitol Square, of which they obtained possession from the city commissioners; and the petition was read.

SATURDAY, February 28.

The VICE PRESIDENT addressed the Senate as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

To give the usual opportunity of appointing a President, pro tempore, I now propose to retire from the Chair of the Senate; and, as the time is near at hand when the relations will cease which have for some time subsisted between this honorable House and myself, I beg leave, before I withdraw, to return them my grateful thanks for all the instances of attention and respect with which they have been pleased to honor me. In the discharge of my functions here, it has been my conscientious endeavor to observe impartial justice, without regard to persons or subjects; and if I have failed of impressing this on the mind of the Senate, it will be to me a circumstance of the deepest regret. I may have erred at times—no doubt I have erred—this is the law of human nature. For honest errors, however, indulgence may be hoped.

I owe to truth and justice, at the same time, to declare, that the habits of order and decorum, which so strongly characterize the proceedings of the Senate, have rendered the umpirage of their President an office of little difficulty; that, in times and on questions which have severely tried the sensibilities of the House, calm and temperate discussion has rarely been disturbed by departures from order.

Should the support which I have received from the Senate, in the performance of my duties here, attend me into the new station to which the public will has transferred me, I shall consider it as commencing under the happiest auspices.

With these expressions of my dutiful regard to the Senate as a body, I ask leave to mingle my particular wishes for the health and happiness of the individuals who compose it, and to tender them my cordial and respectful adieu.

After which the VICE PRESIDENT retired.

Whereupon the Senate proceeded to the election of a President pro tempore, as the Constitution provides; and JAMES HILLHOUSE was duly elected.

Ordered, That the Address of the VICE PRESIDENT, made this day, taking leave of the Senate, be referred to a committee, with instruction to prepare and report the draught of an Address in answer thereto; and that Messrs. MORRIS, J. MASON, and DAYTON, be the committee.

Mr. MORRIS, from the committee appointed the 28th ultimo, on the Address of the VICE PRESIDENT, made on his taking leave of the Senate, reported an answer thereto, which was read, as follows:

SIR: While we congratulate you on those expressions of the public will, which called you to the first office in the United States, we cannot but lament the loss of that intelligence, attention, and impartiality, with which you have presided over our deliberations. The Senate feel themselves much gratified by the sense you have been pleased to express of their support in the performance of your late duties. Be persuaded that it will never be withheld from a Chief Magistrate who, in the exercise of his office, shall be influenced by a due regard to the honor and interests of our country.

In the confidence that your official conduct will be directed to these great objects, a confidence derived from past events, we repeat to you, sir, the assurance of our Constitutional support in your future administration.

On the motion to strike out these words: "a confidence derived from past events," it passed in the negative—yeas 9, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chipman, Hindman, Howard, Livermore, Paine, Read, Ross, Tracy, and Wells.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized and directed to pay, out of the moneys appropriated to defray the contingent expenses of the Senate, the sum of two hundred dollars each, to the principal and engrossing clerks in his office, and to the Doorkeeper and Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Hugh McKinley, out of the contingent fund, the sum of two dollars and a half per diem, as a compensation for his labor and attendance on the Senate during the present session of Congress.

Ordered, That Messrs. READ and WELLS be a committee on the part of the Senate, with such as the House of Representatives may join, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that, unless he may have any further communications to make to the two Houses of Congress, they are ready to adjourn.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate pay to Bishop CLAGGETT, the Chaplain of the Senate, for the present session, one hundred dollars out of the contingent fund, in addition to the allowance to which he is by law entitled.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in the resolution of the Senate appointing a joint committee to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the proposed adjournment of the two Houses of Congress, and have appointed a committee on their part. And that the House of Representatives, having completed the business before them, are about to adjourn without day.

Mr. READ reported, from the joint committee, that they had waited on the President of the United States and that he replied, that he had nothing further to communicate to Congress, except his best wishes for the health and happiness of its members respectively.

The Senate then adjourned without day.

PROCEEDINGS OF A SESSION SPECIALLY CALLED,

On WEDNESDAY, March 4, 1801.

To the Senators of the United States, respectively :

SIR: It appearing to me proper and necessary for the public service, that the Senate of the United States should be convened on Wednesday the 4th of March next, you are desired to attend in the Chamber of the Senate on that day, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, to receive and act upon any communications which the President of the United States may then lay before you touching their interests, and to do and consider all other things which may be proper and necessary for the public service, for the Senate to do and consider.

JOHN ADAMS,

President of the United States.

JANUARY 30, 1801.

In conformity to the summons from the President of the United States above recited, the Senate assembled in their Chamber.

PRESENT :

AARON BURR, Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.

SAMUEL LIVERMORE, and JAMES SHEAFE, from New Hampshire;

DWIGHT FOSTER and JONATHAN MASON, from Massachusetts;

THEODORE FOSTER and RAY GREENE, from Rhode Island;

URIAH TRACY and JAMES HILEHOUSE, from Connecticut;

NATHANIEL CHIPMAN, from Vermont;

GOVERNEUR MORRIS and JOHN ARMSTRONG, from New York;

JONATHAN DAYTON and AARON OGDEN, from New Jersey;

JAMES ROSS and PETER MUHLENBERG, from Pennsylvania;

WILLIAM HILL WELLS and SAMUEL WHITE, from Delaware;

JOHN E. HOWARD from Maryland;

STEVENS T. MASON and WILSON CARY NICHOLAS, from Virginia;

JOHN BROWN, from Kentucky;

JESSE FRANKLIN and DAVID STONE, from North Carolina;

JOSEPH ANDERSON and WILLIAM COCKE, from Tennessee;

CHARLES PINCKNEY, from South Carolina;

ABRAHAM BALDWIN, from Georgia.

Mr. HILLHOUSE administered the oath of office to the VICE PRESIDENT, who took the Chair, and the credentials of the following members were read:

Of Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. MUHLENBERG, Mr. SHEAFE, Mr. STONE, Mr. TRACY, and Mr. WHITE.

And the oath of office was administered to Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. MUHLENBERG, Mr. SHEAFE, Mr. STONE, and Mr. WHITE, by the VICE PRESIDENT.

Exception being taken to the credentials of the Hon. Mr. TRACY, a Senator from the State of Connecticut, a debate ensued; and, on motion that he be admitted to take the oath required by the Constitution, it passed in the affirmative—yeas 13, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chipman, Dayton, Dwight Foster, Hillhouse, Howard, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Ogden, Ross, Sheafe, Wells, and White.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Brown, Cocke, S. T. Mason, Muhlenberg, Nicholas, Pinckney, and Stone.

And the oath was accordingly administered to Mr. TRACY by the VICE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, attended by the Heads of Departments, the Marshal of the District, his officers and other gentlemen, came into the Senate Chamber and took his seat in the chair usually occupied by the VICE PRESIDENT. The VICE PRESIDENT took a separate seat on the right of the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, and the Chief Justice of the United States on the left. After a short pause, the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES rose, and addressed the audience as follows:

Friends and fellow-citizens :

Called upon to undertake the duties of the first Executive office of our country, I avail myself of the presence of that portion of my fellow-citizens which is here assembled, to express my grateful thanks for the favor with which they have been pleased to look towards me, to declare a sincere consciousness that the task is above my talents, and that I approach it with those anxious and awful presentiments which the greatness of the charge, and the weakness of my powers, so justly inspire. A rising nation spread over a wide and fruitful land, traversing all the seas with the rich productions of their industry, engaged in commerce with nations who feel power and forget right, advancing rapidly to destinies beyond the reach of mortal eye; when I contemplate these transcendent objects, and see the honor, the happiness, and the hopes, of this beloved country committed to the issue and the auspices of this day, I shrink from the contemplation, and humble myself before the magnitude of the undertaking. Utterly indeed should I despair, did not the presence of many whom I here see remind me, that, in the other high authorities provided by our Constitution, I shall find resources of wisdom, of virtue, and of zeal, on which to rely under all difficulties. To you, then, gentlemen, who are charged with the sovereign functions of legislation, and to those associated with you, I look with encouragement for that guidance and support which may enable us to steer with safety the vessel in which we are all embarked, amidst the conflicting elements of a troubled world.

During the contest of opinion through which we have passed, the animation of discussions and of exertions has sometimes worn an aspect which might impose on strangers unused to think freely, and to speak and to write what they think; but this being now decided by the voice of the nation, announced according to the rules of the Constitution, all will of course arrange themselves under the will of the law, and unite in common efforts for the common good. All too will bear in mind this sacred principle, that though the will of the majority is in all cases to prevail, that will, to be rightful, must be reasonable; that the minority possess their equal rights, which equal law must protect, and to violate would be oppression. Let us then, fellow-citizens, unite with one heart and one mind, let us restore to social intercourse that harmony and affection without which, liberty, and even life itself, are but dreary things. And let us reflect, that, having banished from our land that religious intolerance under which mankind so long bled and suffered, we have yet gained little, if we countenance a political intolerance, as despotic, as wicked, and capable of as bitter and bloody persecutions. During the throes and convulsions of the ancient world, during the agonizing spasms of infuriated man, seeking through blood and slaughter his long lost liberty, it was not wonderful that the agitation of the billows should reach even this distant and peaceful shore; that this should be more felt and feared by some and less by others; and should divide opinions as to measures of safety; but every difference of opinion is not a difference of principle. We have called by different names brethren of the same principle. We are all Republicans: we are all Federalists. If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union, or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated, where reason is left free to combat it. I know indeed that some honest men fear that a Republican Government cannot be strong; that this Government is not strong enough. But would the honest patriot, in the full tide of successful experiment, abandon a Government which has so far kept us free and firm, on the theoretic and visionary fear that this Government, the world's best hope, may, by possibility, want energy to preserve itself? I trust not. I believe this, on the contrary, the strongest Government on earth. I believe it the only one where every man, at the call of the law, would fly to the standard of the law, and would meet invasions of the public order as his own personal concern. Sometimes it is said that man cannot be trusted with the government of himself. Can he then be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the form of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question.

Let us then, with courage and confidence, pursue our own federal and republican principles; our attachment to union and representative government. Kindly separated by nature and a wide ocean from the exterminating havoc of one quarter of the globe; too high-minded to endure the degradations of the others; possessing a chosen country, with room enough for our descendants to the thousandth and thousandth generation; entertaining a due sense of our equal right to the use of our own faculties, to the acquisitions of our own industry, to honor and confidence from our fellow-citizens, resulting not from birth, but from our actions and their sense of them; enlightened by a benign religion, professed indeed and practised in various forms, yet all of them inculcating honesty, truth, temperance, gratitude, and the love of man, acknowledging and adoring an overruling Providence, which, by all its dispensations, proves that it delights in the happiness of man here, and his greater happiness hereafter; with all these blessings, what more is necessary to make us a happy and a prosperous people? Still one thing more, fellow-citizens—a wise and frugal Government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government; and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities.

About to enter, fellow-citizens, on the exercise of duties which comprehend everything dear and valuable to you, it is proper you should understand what I deem the essential principles of our Government, and consequently those which ought to shape its Administration. I will compress them within the narrowest compass they will bear, stating the general principle, but not all its limitations. Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political: peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none: the support of the State Governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies: the preservation of the General Government in its whole Constitutional vigor, as the sheet-anchor of our peace at home, and safety abroad: a jealous care of the right of election by the people; a mild and safe corrective of abuses which are lopped by the sword of revolution, where peaceable remedies are unprovided: absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principle of Republics, from which is no appeal but to force, the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism: a well disciplined militia, our best reliance in peace, and for the first moments of war, till regulars may relieve them: the supremacy of the civil over the military authority—economy in the public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened: the honest payment of our debts, and sacred preservation of the public faith: encouragement of agriculture, and of commerce as its handmaid: the diffusion of information, and arraignment of all abuses at the bar of the public reason: freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and freedom of person, under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trial by juries impartially selected. These principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us, and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages, and blood of our heroes, have been devoted to their attainment: they should be the creed of our political faith; the text of civic instruction; the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or of alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps, and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety.

I repair then, fellow-citizens, to the post you have assigned me. With experience enough in subordinate offices to have seen the difficulties of this, the greatest of all, I have learnt to expect that it will rarely fall to the lot of imperfect man to retire from this station with the reputation and the favor which bring him into it. Without pretensions to that high confidence you reposed in our first and greatest revolutionary character, whose pre-eminent services had entitled him to the first place in his country's love, and destined for him the fairest page in the volume of faithful history, I ask so much confidence only as may give firmness and effect to the legal administration of your affairs. I shall often go wrong through defect of judgment. When right, I shall often be thought wrong by those whose positions will not command a view of the whole ground. I ask your indulgence for my own errors, which will never be intentional; and your support against the errors of others, who may condemn what they would not, if seen in all its parts. The approbation implied by your suffrage is a great consolation to me for the past; and my future solicitude will be, to retain the good opinion of those who have bestowed it in advance, to conciliate that of others by doing them all the good in my power, and to be instrumental to the happiness and freedom of all.

Relying then on the patronage of your good will, I advance with obedience to the work, ready to retire from it whenever you become sensible how much better choices it is in your power to make. And may that Infinite Power which rules the destinies of the universe lead our councils to what is best, and give them a favorable issue for your peace and prosperity.

The oath of office was then administered to him by the Chief Justice of the United States. After which the President of the United States retired. The Senate then adjourned till to-morrow.

THURSDAY, March 5.

WILLIAM HINDMAN, appointed a Senator by the State of Maryland, produced his credentials, and the oath of office was administered to him by the VICE PRESIDENT.

Ordered, That Messrs. NICHOLAS and BALDWIN be a committee to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that the Senate is assembled and ready to receive any communications which he may be pleased to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT communicated a letter from RAY GREENE, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, resigning his seat; which was read.

Resolved, That the VICE PRESIDENT be requested to notify to the Executive of the State of Rhode Island, that RAY GREENE hath resigned his seat in the Senate.

Mr. NICHOLAS reported, from the committee, that they had waited on the President of the United States and that he had informed the committee that he would immediately lay a Message before the Senate. The Message was received, containing nominations to fill Executive offices; which, after being considered, Ordered, That Messrs. NICHOLAS and BALDWIN be a committee to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him, that, unless he has any further communication to make, the Senate are ready to adjourn.

Mr. NICHOLAS reported, from the committee, that they had waited on the President of the United States, and that he had informed them that he had no further communications to make to the Senate.

Whereupon, the VICE PRESIDENT adjourned the Senate without day.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE,

IN SECRET SESSION,

Which took place on the Ratification of the Convention with the French Republic.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1800.

The following Message was received from the
PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I transmit to the Senate, for their consideration and decision, a convention, both in English and French, between the United States of America and the French Republic, signed at Paris, on the thirtieth day of September last, by the respective Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers. I also transmit to the Senate, three manuscript volumes, containing the journal of our Envoys.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Dec. 15, 1800.

The Message and convention were read; and, after progress in reading the other papers accompanying the Message, Ordered, That the further reading thereof be postponed.

WEDNESDAY, December 17.

The reading of the papers communicated with the Message of the President of the United States, of the 15th, was resumed; and, after progress,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed.

THURSDAY, December 18.

The reading of the papers communicated with the Message of the President of the United States, of the 15th instant, was resumed, and the papers being read through,

A motion was made, that it be

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before the Senate the instructions given to our late Commissioners to the French Republic.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

FRIDAY, December 19.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion, made yesterday, that the President of the United States be requested to lay before the Senate the instructions given to our late Commissioners to the French Republic; which, being amended, was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before the Senate the instructions given to our late Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary to the French Republic.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States.

Resolved, That Mr. MORRIS, Mr. TRACY, and Mr. THEODORE FOSTER, be a committee to procure a translation of so much of the journal of the late Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, as is communicated in the French language.

MONDAY, December 22.

The following Message was received from the
PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

In conformity with your request, in your resolution of the 19th of this month, I transmit you the instructions given to our late Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary to the French Republic.

It is my request to the Senate that these instructions may be considered in strict confidence, and returned to me as soon as the Senate shall have made all the use of them they may judge necessary.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Dec. 22, 1800.

On motion,

Resolved, That all confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate, shall be, by the members thereof, kept inviolably secret; and that all treaties which may hereafter be laid before the Senate, shall also be kept secret, until the Senate shall, by their resolution, take off the injunction of secrecy.

WEDNESDAY, December 31.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France; and, after progress,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed.

MONDAY, January 5, 1801.

A motion was made that the following rule be adopted, to wit:

Resolved, (as a standing rule.) That whenever a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification, it shall be read a first time, for information only; when no motion to reject, ratify, or modify, the whole, or any part, shall be received.

That its second reading shall be for consideration, and on a subsequent day, when it shall be taken up, as in a Committee of the Whole, and every one shall be free to move a question on any particular article, in this form—"Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of this article?" or to propose amendments thereto, either by inserting or by leaving out words; in which last case, the question shall be, "Shall the words stand part of the article?" And in every of the said cases, the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present shall be requisite to decide affirmatively. And when through the whole, the proceedings shall be stated to the House, and questions be again severally put thereon for confirmation, or new ones proposed, requiring, in like manner, a concurrence of two-thirds for whatever is retained or inserted.

That the votes so confirmed shall, by the House, or a committee thereof, be reduced into the form of a ratification, with or without modifications, as may have been decided, and shall be proposed on a subsequent day, when every one shall again be free to move amendments, either by inserting or leaving out words; in which last case, the question shall be, "Shall the words stand part of the resolution?" And in both cases the concurrence of two-thirds shall be requisite to carry the affirmative, as well as on the final question to advise and consent to the ratification, in the form agreed to.

It was agreed that the motion should lie for consideration.

TUESDAY, January 6.

The Senate resumed the motion, made yesterday, for an additional rule in the consideration of treaties; and the motion was agreed to, and the rule adopted accordingly.

The Senate proceeded to consider the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France;

And, the second article being under consideration, a question was moved and put, to wit: "Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of this article?" And, after debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed.

THURSDAY, January 8.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France;

And the second article having been debated, a question was moved thereon, to wit: "Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of this article?"

And the yeas and nays being taken, are as follows—yeas 11, nays 16:

YEAS—Messrs. Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Langdon, S. T. Mason, Nicholas, and Paine.

NAYS—Messrs. Armstrong, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Gunn, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Read, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

So it passed in the negative.

And the third article being under consideration, a question was moved and put, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of this article?"

And the yeas and nays being taken, are as follows—yeas 12, nays 15:

YEAS—Messrs. Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Gunn, Langdon, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

So it passed in the negative.

The Senate proceeded in the consideration of the convention, so far as to the fourteenth article; and, after debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed.

FRIDAY, January 9.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France.

On motion, to advise and consent to the adoption of an additional article, to wit:

"It is further agreed, between the said contracting parties, that nothing in this treaty contained, shall be construed or operate contrary to former and existing treaties with other States or Sovereigns."

And, on the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the adoption of this article?" it passed unanimously in the affirmative—yeas 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Gunn, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, Read, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On motion, to advise and consent to the adoption of the following additional article, to wit:

"The present convention shall be in full force during the term of — years, to be computed from the time of the exchange of the ratifications."

And, after debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed.

MONDAY, January 12.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France; and

The motion made on the 9th instant, being amended as follows:

The present convention shall be in full force until two years, to be computed from the day of the signature of the preliminary or other articles of peace, which shall conclude the war in which the French nation is now engaged, or for a term not exceeding — years, to be computed from the time of the exchange of the ratifications, whichever event shall first happen.

On the question, "Will the Senate advise and consent to the adoption of this article?" it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 25, nay 1, as follows:

NAY—Mr. Langdon.

SENATE.

Proceedings in Secret Session.

JANUARY, 1800.

TUESDAY, January 13.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France; and,

On motion,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed until Thursday next.

THURSDAY, January 15.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France: Whereupon,

The VICE PRESIDENT reported to the House, that the Senate, as in a Committee of the Whole, had had under their consideration the convention, and had gone through the same, and had agreed to sundry modifications, which he proceeded to state to the House, and again to put questions thereon, severally, for confirmation, as follows:

On the question, whether the Senate would advise and consent to the ratification of the second article of the convention? it passed in the negative—yeas 10, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Langdon, Marshall, Nicholas, and Paine.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On the question, whether the Senate would advise and consent to the ratification of the third article of the convention? A motion was made to amend the article, by adding to the end thereof, these words, "or paid for." Whereupon,

A motion was made to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following words: "And so 'likewise, the merchant ships and vessels which 'have been taken, and definitively condemned on 'the one part and the other, shall be restored or 'paid for.'"

On the question to agree to the amendment to the amendment, it passed in the negative—yeas 8, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. D. Foster, Hillhouse, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, Read, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bingham, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, Franklin, Langdon, Marshall, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, Ross, and Schureman.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

On the question to agree to the original amendment, to wit: to add the words "or paid for;" it passed in the negative—yeas 7, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Brown, Baldwin, Cocke, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Bloodworth, Chipman, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Hillhouse, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, Marshall, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

So the amendment was lost.

On the question, whether the Senate would advise and consent to the ratification of the third article? it passed in the negative—yeas 13, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Langdon, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On the question, whether the Senate would advise and consent to the adoption of the first additional article, agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, on the 9th instant? it passed unanimously in the affirmative—yeas 28, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bingham, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Hillhouse, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On motion to fill the blank in the second additional article, agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, with the words, "ten years;" it passed in the negative—yeas 9, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Langdon, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Greene, Hillhouse, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On motion to fill the blank with the words "eight years;" it passed unanimously in the affirmative—yeas 28, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bingham, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Hillhouse, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

On motion to amend the second additional article, agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, by striking out these words, "until two years, to be 'computed from the day of the signature of the 'preliminary or other articles of peace, which shall 'conclude the war in which the French nation is 'now engaged;'"

And, on the question, "Shall these words stand?" it passed in the negative—yeas 4, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Livermore, Paine, Read, and Tracy.
NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Hillhouse, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Marshall, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Schureman, and Wells.

And the article having been further amended, by unanimous consent, to read as follows:

"The present convention shall be in full force for the term of eight years, to be computed from the time of the exchange of the ratifications."

On the question, whether the Senate would advise and consent to the said additional article, as amended? it passed in the affirmative—yeas 26, nay 1, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Hillhouse, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Marshall, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, Read, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAY—Mr. Livermore.

Ordered, That Mr. MORRIS, Mr. NICHOLAS, and Mr. DAYTON, be a committee to reduce the several votes on this treaty into the form of a ratification.

MONDAY, January 19.

Mr. MORRIS, from the committee appointed to reduce the several votes on the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France, into the form of a ratification, made a report, which was read; and Ordered, That it lie for consideration.

TUESDAY, January 20.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee appointed to reduce the several votes on the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France, into the form of a ratification.

On motion to amend the proviso, by inserting after the word "third," the words "and nineteenth:"

It was agreed that the further consideration of the convention, and report thereon, be postponed until to-morrow.

On motion,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate such information, (if any such there be,) as may have been received respecting the convention with France, and may, in his opinion, be proper to be so communicated.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States.

WEDNESDAY, January 21.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

In compliance with your request, signified in your resolution of the twentieth day of this month, I transmit you a report, made to me by the Secretary of State, on the same day; a letter of our late Envoys to him of the 4th of October last; an extract of a letter from our Minister Plenipotentiary in London, to him, of the 22d of November last; and an extract of another letter from the Minister to the Secretary, of the 31st of October last.

The reasoning in the letter of our late Envoys to France is so fully supported by the writers on the law of nations, particularly by Vattel, as well as by his great masters, Grotius and Puffendorf, that nothing is left to be desired to settle the point, that if there be a collision between two treaties, made with two different Powers, the more ancient has the advantage; for no engagement contrary to it can be entered into in the treaty afterwards made; and if this last be found, in any case, incompatible with the more ancient one, its execution is considered as impossible, because the person promising had not the power of acting contrary to his antecedent engagement. Although our right is very clear to negotiate treaties according to our own ideas of right and justice, honor and good faith, yet it must always be a satisfaction to know that the judgment of other nations, with whom we have connexion, coincide with ours, and that we have no reason to apprehend that any disagreeable questions and discussions are likely to arise. The letters from Mr. King will, therefore, be read by the Senate, with particular satisfaction.

The inconveniences to public officers, and the mischiefs to the public, arising from the publication of the despatches of Ministers abroad, are so numerous, and so obvious, that I request of the Senate that these papers, especially the letters from Mr. King, be considered in close confidence.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Jan. 21, 1801.

The Message and papers were read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee appointed to reduce the several votes on the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France, into the form of a ratification, together with the motion made yesterday thereon, to wit: to amend the proviso, by inserting after the word "third," the words "and nineteenth." And, on the question to agree to the insertion of the words, it was determined in the negative—yeas 6, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Hillhouse, Read, Ross, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, D. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, S. T. Mason, J. Mason, Morris, Nicholas, Paine, and Schureman.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the convention, and the report of the committee thereon, be postponed until Friday next.

FRIDAY, January 23.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee appointed to reduce the several votes on the convention made on behalf of the United States with the Republic of France, into the form of a ratification, which report is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein,) That they do consent to and advise the ratification of the convention between the French Republic and the United States of America, made at Paris the eighth day of Vendemiaire, of the ninth year of the French Republic, the thirtieth day of September, anno Domini eighteen hundred: Provided, The second and third articles be expunged, and that the following articles be added or inserted:

1st. It is understood that nothing in this convention shall be so construed as to operate contrary to any former and existing treaties between either of the parties and any other State or Sovereign.

2d. It is agreed that the present convention shall be in force for the term of eight years from the time of the exchange of the ratifications.

Whereupon, a motion was made to strike out the whole of the proviso; on which it was agreed to divide the question into four parts, viz:

1st. Whether so much as provides that the second article shall be expunged, shall stand?

2d. Whether so much as provides that the third article be expunged, shall stand?

3d. Whether that part shall stand which restrains it from operating against former treaties?

4th. Whether that part shall stand which provides a limitation of time to its duration?

And, on the question on the first division, to wit: Whether so much as provides that the second article shall be expunged, shall stand? it passed in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not agreeing thereto—yeas 17, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Armstrong, Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Langdon, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

And, on the question on the second division, to wit: Whether so much as provides that the third article shall be expunged, shall stand? it passed in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not agreeing thereto—yeas 16, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Langdon, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

And, on the question on the third division, to wit: Whether that part shall stand which restrains it from operating against former treaties? it passed in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not agreeing thereto—yeas 17, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Greene, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Langdon, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

And, on the question on the fourth division, to wit: Whether that part shall stand which provides a limitation of time to its duration? it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 24, nays 6, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Baldwin, Brown, T. Foster, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

And, on the question to agree to the report of the committee, as amended, it was determined in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not agreeing thereto—yeas 16, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Langdon, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, Nicholas, and Paine.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Dayton, D. Foster, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, J. Mason, Morris, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

MONDAY, January 26.

On motion, that it be

Resolved, That, whensoever a question on the ratification of a treaty, with modifications, shall have been negatived, a question may be proposed for a simple and unmodified ratification.

It was agreed that this motion should lie until to-morrow.

On motion, to correct the Executive Journal of the 23d instant, (to wit, the last question on which the yeas and nays were called,) to read as follows:

“And, on the question, to agree to the resolution as amended;” and to add, after the yeas and nays, these words: “So this resolution was not agreed to; and, therefore, it was “Resolved, That the Senate do not consent to, and advise the President of the United States to ratify said convention between the French Republic and the United States.

And it was agreed that this motion should lie until to-morrow.

TUESDAY, January 27.

The Senate took into consideration the motion made yesterday, for an additional rule in the conduct of the Executive business; and

It was agreed that this motion, the motion made yesterday for correcting the Executive Journal, of the 23d instant, together with the convention made with the French Republic, should be postponed to Monday next.

On motion, that it be

Resolved, That, when any question may have been decided by the Senate, in which two-thirds of the members present are necessary to carry the affirmative, any member who voted on that side which prevailed in the question, may be at liberty to move for a reconsideration: and a motion for reconsideration shall be decided by a majority of votes.

And it was agreed that the consideration of this motion should be postponed until Monday next.

MONDAY, February 2.

On motion, it was agreed that the consideration of the motion made the 27th ultimo, relative to the proceedings in case of treaties, be postponed until to-morrow.

TUESDAY, February 3.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion made the 26th of January last, respecting the proceedings in case of treaties, to wit :

Resolved, That, whenever a question on the ratification of a treaty, with modifications, shall have been negative, a question may be proposed for a simple and unmodified ratification.

And it was agreed to postpone the consideration thereof, and to adopt the following rule :

Resolved, That when any question may have been decided by the Senate, in which two-thirds of the members present are necessary to carry the affirmative, any member who voted on that side which prevailed in the question, may be at liberty to move for a reconsideration ; and a motion for reconsideration shall be decided by a majority of votes.

On motion, it was agreed to reconsider the vote passed the 23d of January, on the report of the committee appointed to reduce the several votes on the convention made on behalf of the United States with the French Republic, into the form of a ratification.

On motion, it was agreed to reconsider the first division of the report, to wit :

"Whether so much as provides that the second article shall be expunged, shall stand?"

And, on the question to agree to this part of the report, it passed in the affirmative—yeas 30, nay 1, as follows :

NAY—Mr. Marshall.

On motion, it was agreed to reconsider the vote of the 23d of January, on the second division of the report, to wit :

"Whether so much as provides that the third article shall be expunged, shall stand?"

And, on the question to agree thereto, it passed in the negative, two-thirds of the Senators present not agreeing thereto—yeas 18, nays 13, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Bingham, Chipman, Dayton, D. Foster, Greene, Hillhouse, Hindman, Howard, Latimer, Livermore, J. Mason, Morris, Paine, Read, Ross, Schureman, Tracy, and Wells.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Cocke, T. Foster, Franklin, Gunn, Langdon, Marshall, S. T. Mason, and Nicholas.

On the question to agree to the ratification, as follows :

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein,) That they do consent to, and advise the ratification of the convention between the French Republic and the United States of America, made at Paris, the eighth day of Vendemaire, of the ninth year of the French Republic, the thirtieth day of September, anno Domini, eighteen hundred : Provided, The second article be expunged, and that the following article be added or inserted :

It is agreed, that the present convention shall be in force for the term of eight years, from the time of the exchange of the ratifications.

It passed in the affirmative—yeas 22, nays 9, as follows :

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Armstrong, Baldwin, Bloodworth, Brown, Chipman, Cocke, Dayton, T. Foster, Franklin, Greene, Gunn, Hindman, Howard, Langdon, Latimer, Livermore, Marshall, S. T. Mason, Nicholas, Paine, and Schureman.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, D. Foster, Hillhouse, J. Mason, Morris, Read, Ross, Tracy, and Wells.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States.

FRIDAY, February 20.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES :

Gentlemen of the Senate :

I request of the Senate, that the letter and journal of our late Envoys to France, and the copy of their instructions, and other documents relative to that negotiation, may be returned to me, or to the office of State.

JOHN ADAMS.

NAYS—Messrs. Baldwin, Brown, Langdon, Mason, Nicholas, and Pinckney.

So it was Resolved, (two-thirds of the Senators concurring therein.) That the Senate do consent to, and advise the President of the United States to ratify the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between His Majesty, the King of Prussia, and the United States of America, concluded at Berlin, the eleventh day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine.

Ordered, That the Secretary lay this resolution before the President of the United States.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE SIXTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1800.

MONDAY, November 17, 1800.

This being the day appointed by law for the commencement of the second session of the sixth Congress, the following members of the House of Representatives appeared, and took their seats in the House, to wit:

From New Hampshire—ABIEL FOSTER, and JONATHAN FREEMAN.

From Massachusetts—WILLIAM SHEPARD, JNO. REED, JOSEPH B. VARNUM, THEODORE SEDGWICK, (Speaker), PELEG WADSWORTH, SILAS LEE, and LEMUEL WILLIAMS.

From Connecticut—JOHN DAVENPORT.

From New York—JOHN SMITH, PHILIP VAN CORTLANDT, JONAS PLATT, HENRY GLEN, JOHN THOMPSON, and THEODORUS BAILEY.

From Pennsylvania—MICHAEL LEIB, RICHARD THOMAS, JOSEPH HEISTER, ROBERT BROWN, PETER MUHLENBERG, HENRY WOODS, and JOHN SMILIE.

From North Carolina—NATHANIEL MACON, RICHARD STANFORD, and WILLIS ALSTON.

From South Carolina—THOMAS SUMTER, and BENJAMIN HUGER.

From Tennessee—WILLIAM C. C. CLAIBORNE.

A new member, to wit: JOHN C. SMITH, returned to serve as a member of this House, from the State of Connecticut, in the room of Jonathan Brace, who has resigned his seat, appeared and produced his credentials.

The SPEAKER observed that it had heretofore been the invariable practice of the House to admit new members to take their seats previously to being sworn, though the Constitution directed directly the reverse. As there was a new member present, he suggested the propriety of administering the oath to him before he took his seat.

Mr. MACON thought such a step premature. He was of opinion that no inconvenience would arise from delaying to administer the oath until a House was formed, and he thought great caution should attend an innovation opposed to all precedent.

Mr. NICHOLAS asked, whether it had heretofore been usual, in the case of a new House, to swear the members before the choice of a Speaker?

The SPEAKER replied that it had not.

Mr. NICHOLAS said, that though, on first thought, he was favorable to administering the oath at the present time, yet this precedent inclined him to think such a step improper.

The SPEAKER waived the question.

The members present not being sufficient to form a quorum, the SPEAKER adjourned the body till to-morrow.

TUESDAY, November 18.

Several other members, to wit: from Connecticut, ELIZUR GOODRICH, WILLIAM EDMOND, and ROGER GRISWOLD; from New York, WILLIAM COOPER and LUCAS ELMENDORF; from New Jersey, JAMES H. IMLAY and FRANKLIN DAVENPORT; from Pennsylvania, ROBERT WALN; from Maryland, SAMUEL SMITH; from Virginia, HENRY LEE, THOMAS EVANS, and JOHN TRIGG; from North Carolina, RICHARD DOBBS SPAIGHT, and JOSEPH DICKSON; and from Georgia, BENJAMIN TALIAFERRO: appeared and took their seats in the House.

And a quorum, consisting of a majority of the whole number, being present,

The oath to support the Constitution of the United States, as prescribed by the act, entitled "An act to regulate the time and manner of administering certain oaths," was administered by the SPEAKER to JOHN C. SMITH, a new member, who appeared and took his seat in the House yesterday.

Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that a quorum of this House is assembled, and ready to proceed to business; and that the Clerk of this House do go with said message.

Ordered, That a Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be appointed, pursuant to the standing rules and orders of the House.

And a committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, Mr. WALN, Mr. FRANKLIN DAVENPORT, Mr. HUGER, Mr. PARKER, Mr. ELIZUR GOODRICH, and Mr. SILAS LEE.

Ordered, That a Committee of Elections be appointed, pursuant to the standing rules and orders of the House.

Proceedings.

NOVEMBER, 1800.

And a committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. DENT, Mr. LEMUEL WILLIAMS, Mr. EDMOND, Mr. MUHLENBERG, Mr. EVANS, Mr. DICKSON, and Mr. CLAIBORNE.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House cause the members to be furnished, during the present session, with three newspapers, such as the members, respectively, shall choose, to be delivered at their lodgings.

WEDNESDAY, November 19.

Several other members, to wit: from Vermont, LEWIS R. MORRIS, and from Virginia, JOSIAH PARKER and JOHN RANDOLPH, appeared and took their seats in the House.

There being no quorum in the Senate, the House adjourned until to-morrow morning, eleven o'clock.

THURSDAY, November 20.

Two other members, to wit: from Virginia ABRAM TRIGG, and from Pennsylvania, ANDREW GREGG, appeared and took their seats in the House.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House have leave to be absent from the service of the House for three weeks.

Resolved, That a Standing Committee of Ways and Means be appointed, whose duty it shall be to take into consideration all such reports of the Treasury Department, and all such propositions relative to the revenue, as may be referred to them by the House; to inquire into the state of public debt; of the revenue, and of the expenditures; and to report, from time, to time their opinion thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. POWELL, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. IMLAY, Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. TALIAFERRO, Mr. WOOD, and Mr. SMILIE, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

Ordered, That a Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business be appointed, pursuant to the standing rules and orders of the House;

And a committee was appointed, of Mr. PLATT, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. ALSTON.

Ordered, That a Committee of Claims be appointed, pursuant to the standing rules and orders of the House;

And a committee was appointed, of Mr. MACON, Mr. JOHN C. SMITH, Mr. MORRIS, Mr. JOHN CHEW THOMAS, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. BARTLETT.

And then the House adjourned until to-morrow morning, eleven o'clock.

FRIDAY, November 21.

Several other members, to wit: from Massachusetts, GEORGE THATCHER; from New Jersey, JOHN CONDIT, AARON KITCHELL, and JAMES LYNN; from Pennsylvania, JOHN A. HANNA; and from South Carolina, ROBERT GOODLOE HARPER; appeared and took their seats in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from Thomas Claxton, the Doorkeeper, stating that certain expenditures will be requisite, and further assistance necessary to be allowed, the better to enable him to fulfil the duties of his station; which was read, and ordered to be referred to Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. POWELL, and Mr. COOPER.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and ready to proceed to business, and that, in the absence of the VICE PRESIDENT, they have elected the Hon. JOHN HOWARD President of the Senate, pro tempore.

Resolved, That Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, and Mr. CRAIK, be a committee, on the part of this House, jointly, with such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled, and ready to receive any communications he may think proper to make to them.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do acquaint the Senate therewith.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have appointed a committee jointly, with the committee appointed by this House, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled, and ready to receive any communications he may think proper to make to them.

Mr. A. FOSTER made a motion for the appointment of two Chaplains of different religious denominations, one to be appointed by each House, to interchange weekly; which was agreed to.

It was afterwards moved by Mr. THATCHER, and agreed to by the House, to strike out those parts of the motion which prescribed that the Chaplains should be of different denominations, and should interchange weekly.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled, and ready to receive any communications he may think proper to make to them, reported that the committee had performed that service, and that the President signified to them he would make a communication to both Houses to-morrow at twelve o'clock, in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the committee to whom was this day referred the letter of Thomas Claxton, Doorkeeper of the House, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That Thomas Claxton be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ one additional assistant, and two horses, for the purpose of performing such services as are usually required of the Doorkeeper to the House of Representatives; and that the sum of twenty-eight dollars be allowed him weekly, for that purpose, during the session, and for twenty days afterwards.

Resolved, That the said Thomas Claxton be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be erected a shelter for the purpose of protecting from the weather, the fire-wood that may be required by the two Houses of Congress; and that he be paid therefor out of the fund appropriated for the contingent expenses of the House.

H. OF R.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. NICHOLAS observed that he had submitted, during the last session, certain propositions to amend the Constitution, as far as it related to the choice of Electors of President and Vice President, and to the election of members of the House of Representatives: but having found that they clashed with the opinions of many members, and not having then maturely considered them himself, he thought it best at that time to waive a conclusive consideration of them. Deeming the object of great importance, and considering the present a fit time to discuss it, he offered two amendments, which he wished to lie on the table for consideration—as follows:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the United States, as amendments to the Constitution of the United States:

1. That, after the third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and one, the choice of Electors of President and Vice President shall be made by dividing each State into a number of districts, equal to the number of Electors to be chosen in such State, and by the persons in each of those districts who shall have the qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature of such State, choosing one Elector, in the manner which the Legislature thereof shall prescribe.

2. That the election of Representatives to Congress, who are to serve after the third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and three, shall be by dividing each State into a number of districts equal to the number of Representatives to which such State shall be entitled, and by the people within each of those districts who shall have the qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature of such State choosing one Representative, in the manner which the Legislature thereof shall prescribe.

Mr. HARPER was of opinion that the necessary propositions on this subject would require more detail than those just moved; he therefore moved their reference to a select committee.

Ordered, That the said motion be referred to Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. HARPER, Mr. MACON, Mr. GRISWOLD, and Mr. EVANS.

SATURDAY, November 22.

Two other members, to wit: from North Carolina, ARCHIBALD HENDERSON; and from Virginia, EDWIN GRAY; appeared and took their seats in the House.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate are now ready, in the Senate Chamber, to attend this House in receiving the communication from the President of the United States, agreeably to his notification to both Houses yesterday.

Mr. SPEAKER, attended by the members of this House, then withdrew to the Senate Chamber, for the purpose stated in the Senate's message; and, being returned, Mr. SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the Speech delivered by the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES to both Houses of Congress, in the Senate Chamber. [See Senate proceedings of this date, ante, page 723.]

Ordered, That the said Speech be committed to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House, accordingly, resolved itself into the said Committee; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. SPEAKER resumed the Chair, and Mr. HARPER reported that the Committee had had the said Speech under consideration, and come to a resolution thereupon; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee that a respectful Address ought to be presented by the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress, at the commencement of the present session, containing assurances that this House will duly attend to the important objects recommended by him to their consideration.

Ordered, That Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. MACON, Mr. CRAIK, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. NICHOLAS, be appointed a committee to prepare an Address, pursuant to the said resolution.

Ordered, That the Speech of the President of the United States be committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

And then the House adjourned.

MONDAY, November 24.

Several other members, to wit: from Massachusetts, HARRISON G. OTIS, and PHANUEL BISHOP; from Virginia, MATTHEW CLAY; and from North Carolina, DAVID STONE; appeared and took their seats in the House.

WILLIAM M'MILLAN, returned to serve as a Representative for the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, in the room of William Henry Harrison, who has resigned his seat, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read, and is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, Nov. 22, 1800.

SIR: I deem it proper, through you, to inform the House of Representatives, that I have obtained the permission of the President of the United States to resign the office of Secretary of the Treasury, at the close of the present year.

I indulge a hope that I may, without presumption, declare, that the different offices with which I have been entrusted since the establishment of this Department, have been executed according to my best skill and judgment, with a conscientious regard to the rights of the public and of individuals, and under an impressive sense of responsibility to the Government. In conformity with these professions, I now freely submit the whole of my conduct to any investigation which the House of Representatives may be pleased to institute.

I cannot omit this only opportunity which may ever be afforded, of expressing the sincere sentiments of gratitude which I now feel and shall ever cultivate, for the many proofs of confidence and indulgence which I have experienced in the course of my official communications with the Legislature; at the same time I request, that, if the liberty I have now taken to invite their attention to a matter of personal concern, should be deemed in any degree unsuitable, the error may be attributed to a just and a reasonable desire, that my conduct may, on proper evidence, appear to have deserved their approbation.

I have the honor to be, with perfect esteem and deference, sir, your most obedient servant,

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

Hon. THEODORE SEDGWICK,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Ordered, That the said letter do lie on the table.

TUESDAY, November 25.

Another member, to wit: JOHN WILKES KITTERA, from Pennsylvania, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

A new member, to wit: NATHAN READ, returned to serve as a member of this House from the State of Massachusetts, in the room of Samuel Sewall, who has resigned his seat, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee appointed to prepare an Address in answer to the Speech of the President of the United States to both Houses of Congress, made a report; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLSON,

Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law for extending the privilege of franking to the Delegate, for the time being, from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, and for making the same compensation to him, for his attendance, that is allowed to the members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. PARKER, and Mr. THATCHER, do prepare and bring in the same.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a congratulatory letter from sundry inhabitants of the District of Columbia, on the first assemblage of Congress at the permanent seat of Government; which was read, and ordered to be referred to Mr. JOHN CHEW THOMAS, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. CRAIK.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. OTIS observed that a letter had been received from the Secretary of the Treasury announcing his intention to resign at the termination of the present year, on which the House had taken no order. Holding a high and responsible office, it appeared the wish of the Secretary, before he retired into private life, to court an examination into the manner in which he had discharged the duties by law assigned him. In his opinion, the highest reward, which a faithful discharge of duty could receive was the approbation of those whose province it was to superintend the management of the public treasure; and believing, as he did, that the Secretary of the Treasury had discharged his official duties with ability and integrity, he was persuaded, that on inquiry, the House would not hesitate to say so. He wished the letter to be referred at present to a select committee, and promised in the course of a few days to offer to the House such instructions as might guide them in the inquiry which they might deem advisable to make. He forbore to state what those instructions would be, as he had not yet made up his mind on the subject. He concluded with moving a reference to a select committee.

Mr. NICHOLAS had no objection whatever to bestowing on a meritorious officer the approbation of the House, and he was disposed to consider the Secretary of the Treasury as of that character. But he was opposed to the precipitancy of the measure proposed. Even the gentleman, with whom it originated, had not digested in his own mind, the subject, nor had he proposed any specific mode of inquiry. He thought this ought to be done previously to a reference.

Mr. OTIS said, that before he stated the manner in which it would be advisable to make the inquiry, he wished to consult precedents, which he had not had time to do. In the mean time, he thought it best to refer the letter generally. The Secretary had a claim on the earliest attention of the House, in case any inquiry was deemed proper.

Mr. GRISWOLD hoped that an immediate reference would obtain. The committee, on examining the nature of the subject, may report the proper mode of procedure. If it be understood that, on the retirement of every Secretary of the Treasury from office, an inquiry is to be made into his official conduct, it will operate as a general stimulus to the faithful discharge of duty. As to the nature of the instructions to be given to the committee, it will be time enough to discuss them when offered.

Mr. NICHOLAS would not ask the mover of the reference what mode he meant to pursue, because he had informed the House that he did not know; but he would ask the gentleman, who had just spoken, what his views were, as on the line pursued depended altogether the propriety of the measure. Until the objects of inquiry were declared, and the mode of procedure designated, he was averse to taking any steps; for on these essentially depended the eligibility of the measure. It was notorious that the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury were so extensive and complicated, that a general inquiry into them all would not be in the power of a large deliberative body. And unless the greatest care were taken, the proposed examination might result in a disregard of those points which required attention, and a notice of those which required no investigation at all. Thus, under the name of an inquiry, nothing but the form of an investigation would be effected.

Mr. H. LEE thought it would be an act of injustice to the character of the Secretary, and an act of injustice to the country at large, to withhold an agreement to the proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It was known to the whole world that the most fictitious charges had resounded from one end of the Union to the other. Believing them to be groundless, in his opinion the honor of the country called for an investigation.

NOVEMBER, 1800.

Address to the President.

H. OF R.

If the charges should be sustained, the Secretary ought to receive the censure of the House; but if they should be demonstrated to be false, we owed him our approbation. While he considered him as combining ability, integrity, and honor, he would give him his support; and he would do all in his power to wipe off the suspicions which, in some minds, had attached to his character.

The question was then taken on the reference, and carried in the affirmative, and a committee of seven appointed viz: Mr. OTIS, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. WALN, Mr. STONE, and Mr. CRAIK.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MORRIS in the Chair. The President's Speech being read by paragraphs, a motion was made to refer a particular part thereof to a committee, and was carried; but on the suggestion of Mr. OTIS that it was unusual to act on the several parts of the Speech, before agreeing to an answer, the Committee rose.

The House being resumed, Mr. H. LEE, after some prefatory remarks, moved the appointment of a committee to report such measures as it may be proper to adopt to carry into effect the resolutions passed last session commemorative of the political services of GEORGE WASHINGTON, to report by bill or otherwise. Ordered to lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, November 26.

A new member, to wit: LITTLETON W. TAZEWELL, returned to serve as a member of the House for the State of Virginia, in the room of John Marshall, who has resigned his seat, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they had agreed to the resolution for appointing Chaplains, with an amendment, directing that the Chaplains should be of different denominations; in which amendment the House concurred—yeas 36, nays 34.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, to whom it was referred to examine the Journals of the last session of Congress, and report therefrom all such matters of business as were then depending and undetermined, made a report, in part; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the reply to the President's Speech, which was read by paragraphs, and reported to the House without any amendments, as follows:

TO JOHN ADAMS, President of the United States:

SIR: The House of Representatives have received with great respect the communication which you have been pleased to make to the two Houses of Congress, at the commencement of the present session.

The final establishment of the Seat of National Government which has now taken place within the District of Columbia, is an event of no small importance in the political transactions of our country: and we cordially unite our wishes with yours, that this Territory may be the residence of happiness and virtue.

Nor can we, on this occasion, omit to express a hope, that the spirit which animated the great founder of this city, may descend to future generations, and that the wisdom, magnanimity, and steadiness, which marked the events of his public life, may be imitated in all succeeding ages.

A consideration of those powers which have been vested in Congress over the District of Columbia will not escape our attention; nor shall we forget that, in exercising these powers, a regard must be had to those events which will necessarily attend the Capital of America.

The cheerfulness and regularity with which the officers and soldiers of the Temporary Army have returned to the condition of private citizens, is a testimony clear and conclusive of the purity of those motives which induced them to engage in the public service; and will remain a proof, on all future occasions, that an army of soldiers drawn from the citizens of our country, deserve our confidence and respect.

No subject can be more important than that of the Judiciary, which you have again recommended to our consideration, and it shall receive our early and deliberate attention.

The Constitution of the United States having confided the management of our foreign negotiations to the control of the Executive power, we cheerfully submit to its decisions on this important subject. And in respect to the negotiations now pending with France, we sincerely hope that the final result may prove as fortunate to our country as the most ardent mind can wish.

So long as a predatory war is carried on against our commerce, we should sacrifice the interests and disappoint the expectations of our constituents, should we, for a moment, relax that system of maritime defence, which has resulted in such beneficial effects. At this period, it is confidently believed that few persons can be found within the United States, who do not admit that a Navy, well organized, must constitute the natural and efficient defence of this country against all foreign hostility.

The progress which has been made in the manufacture of arms, leaves no doubt that the public patronage has already placed this country beyond all necessary dependence on foreign markets for an article so indispensable for defence; and gives us assurances that, under the encouragement which Government will continue to extend to this important object, we shall soon rival foreign countries, not only in the number, but in the quality of arms completed from our own manufactories.

Few events could have been more pleasing to our constituents, than that great and rapid increase of revenue which has arisen from permanent taxes. Whilst this event explains the great and increasing resources of our country, it carries along with it a proof which cannot be resisted, that those measures of maritime defence which were calculated to meet our enemy upon the ocean, and which have produced such extensive protection to our commerce, were founded in wisdom and policy. The mind must, in our opinion, be insensible to the plainest truths, which cannot discern the elevated ground on which this policy has placed our country. That national spirit, which alone could vindicate our common rights, has been roused, and those latent energies, which had not been fully known, were unfolded and brought into view, and our fellow-citizens were prepared to meet every event which national honor or national security could render necessary. Nor have its effects been much less important in other respects.

Whilst many of the nations of the earth have been impoverished and depopulated by internal commotions and national contests, our internal peace has not been materially impaired; our commerce has extended, under the protection of our infant Navy, to every part of the globe; wealth has flowed without intermission into our seaports, and the labors of the husbandman have been rewarded by a ready market for the productions of the soil.

Be assured, sir, that the various and important subjects recommended to our consideration, shall receive our early and deliberate attention; and, confident of your co-operation in every measure which may be calculated to promote the general interests, we shall endeavor, on our part, to testify, by our industry and despatch, the zeal and sincerity with which we regard the public good.

The report of the Committee was immediately taken up, and, on the question to agree to the Address,

Mr. NICHOLAS rose and observed that he regretted the introduction of political matter, calculated to produce discord and division. He was averse to the House spending time in propounding political theories, as no good, but much mischief, might flow from such a procedure. Had no other topics or sentiments been alluded to than those contained in the President's Speech, there would have been much less division in the House than was to be expected from the insertion of extraneous ideas. He had no intention, however, to enter into a detail of the objections he entertained to the Address. For the reasons he had assigned, and others which he felt, he thought the style of the Address not only unnecessary, but worse than useless. He concluded by desiring the yeas and nays to be taken.

The question being taken, was carried in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—Bailey Bartlett, William Cooper, Wm. Craik, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, Archibald Henderson, Benjamin Huger, Jas. H. Inlay, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, James Linn, Lewis R. Morris, Harrison G. Otis, Robert Page, Josiah Parker, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, Nathan Read, Wm. Shepard, John C. Smith, Richard Dobbs Spaight, George Thatcher, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Waln, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

NAYS—Phanuel Bishop, Robert Brown, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, William C. C. Claiborne, John Condit, John Dawson, Lucas Elmendorf, Edwin Gray, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Joseph Heister, David Holmes, George Jackson, Aaron Kitchell, Michael Leib, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, John Randolph, John Smilie, John Smith, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, Benjamin Taliaferro, John Thompson, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, Philip Van Cortlandt, and Jos. B. Varnum.

Resolved, That Mr. SPEAKER, attended by the House, do present the said Address; and that Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. MACON, and Mr. CRAIK, be a committee to wait on the President to know when and where it will be convenient for him to receive the same.

CREDENTIALS OF MEMBERS.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the certificates and other credentials of the members returned to serve in this House, made a report, in part, which was read, as follows:

"That they have examined the credentials of several members, claiming seats in this House, in consequence of resignations which have taken place, and find that, by the certificate of the Governor of Massachusetts, dated the eleventh day of November, eighteen hundred, under the seal of the State, Nathan Read, (of Danvers,) is duly elected, in the place of Samuel Sewall; that by the certificate of the Governor of Connecticut, bearing date twentieth day of October, eighteen hundred, with the seal of the State annexed, John Cotton Smith is duly elected, in the place of Jonathan Brace; and that, by the certificate of the Deputy Sheriff of Henrico, the Sheriff of Hanover, the Sheriff of New Kent, the Deputy Sheriff of Charles City, and the Sheriff of James City counties, composing one entire district in the Commonwealth of Virginia, under their respective seals, Lyttleton Waller Tazewell is duly elected, in the place of John Marshall.

"The committee also find, by an authenticated certificate, signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Legislative Council of the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, dated the seventh day of November, eighteen hundred, that William McMillan is duly elected to represent the said Territory, in the place of William Henry Harrison.

"Whereupon, the committee are of opinion that Nathan Read, (of Danvers,) John Cotton Smith, and Lyttleton Waller Tazewell, are entitled to take their seats in the House, in the place of Samuel Sewall, Jonathan Brace, and John Marshall, who have resigned; and that William McMillan is entitled to take his seat therein, with the right of debating, but not of voting in the place of William Henry Harrison, who has resigned."

Ordered, That the said report do lie on the table.

On motion it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether any, and what, amendments are necessary to be made in the acts establishing a post office and post roads within the United States; and that the said committee have power to report by bill or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. THATCHER, Mr. WOODS, Mr. CLAIBORNE, Mr. DICKSON, and Mr. NEW, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

On motion, of Mr. LEE, it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to report, by bill or otherwise, such further measures as may be deemed expedient to carry into execution the resolutions of Congress, passed the last session, in commemoration of the great events of the military and political life of GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Ordered, That Mr. HENRY LEE, Mr. ELIZUR GOODRICH, Mr. HUGER, Mr. POWELL, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. SPAIGHT, and Mr. BARTLETT, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

Resolved, That this House, will, to-morrow proceed, by ballot, to the appointment of a Chaplain to Congress, on the part of this House.

NOVEMBER, 1800.

The President's Speech.

H. OF R.

THURSDAY, November 27.

Another member, to wit: JOHN BIRD, from New York, appeared and took his seat in the House.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the committee appointed, presented a bill extending the privilege of franking letters to the Delegate from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, and making provision for his compensation; which was twice read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS.

The SPEAKER, attended by the House, then withdrew to the house of the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, and there presented to him the Address of this House in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress; to which the PRESIDENT made the following reply:

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

Compelled by the habits of a long life, as well as by all the principles of society and government which I could ever understand and believe, to consider the great body of the people as the source of all legitimate authority, no less than all efficient power, it is impossible for me to receive this Address from the immediate Representatives of the American people, at this time, and in this place, without emotions which it would be improper to express, if any language could convey them.

May the spirit which animated the great founder of this city descend to future generations; and may the wisdom, magnanimity, and steadiness, which marked the events of his public life, be imitated in all succeeding ages.

I thank you, gentlemen, for your assurance that the Judiciary System shall receive your deliberate attention.

With you, gentlemen, I sincerely hope that the final result of the negotiations now pending with France, may prove as fortunate to our country, as they have been commenced with sincerity, and prosecuted with deliberation and caution. With you, I cordially agree, that, so long as a predatory war is carried on against our commerce, we should sacrifice the interests and disappoint the expectations of our constituents, should we for a moment relax that system of maritime defence, which has resulted in such beneficial effects. With you, I confidently believe that few persons can be found within the United States, who do not admit that a Navy, well organized, must constitute the natural and efficient defence of this country, against all foreign hostility.

Those who recollect the distress and danger to this country, in former periods, from the want of arms, must exult in the assurance, from their Representatives, that we shall soon rival foreign countries, not only in the number, but in the quality of arms, completed from our own manufactories.

With you, gentlemen, I fully agree, that the great increase of revenue is a proof that the measures of maritime defence were founded in wisdom. This policy has raised us in the esteem of foreign nations. That national spirit and those latent energies which had not been and are not yet fully known to any, were not entirely forgotten by those who had lived long enough to see, in former times, their operation, and some of their effects. Our fellow-citizens were undoubtedly prepared to meet every event which national honor or national security could render necessary. These, it is to be hoped, are secured at the cheapest and easiest rate; if not, they will be secured at more expense.

I thank you, gentlemen, for your assurance that the various subjects recommended to your consideration, shall relieve your deliberate attention. No further evidence is wanting to convince me of the zeal and sincerity with which the House of Representatives regard the public good.

I pray you, gentlemen, to accept of my best wishes for your health and happiness.

JOHN ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27, 1800.

The members then returned to their Chamber.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have proceeded to the appointment of a Chaplain to Congress, on their part, and the Right Reverend Bishop CLAGETT has been duly elected.

The House proceeded, by ballot, to the appointment of a Chaplain to Congress on the part of this House; and, upon examining the ballots, a majority of the votes of the whole House was found in favor of the Reverend THOMAS LYELL.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do acquaint the Senate therewith.

FRIDAY, November 28.

Another member, to wit: ABRAHAM NOTT, from South Carolina, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, enclosing a statement of the proceedings which have been authorized by the Board, since their report of the eleventh of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from Oliver Pollock, praying the attention of the House to his petitions, presented at former sessions, for compensation due him for services rendered to the United States during the late war; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill extending the privilege of franking letters to the Delegate from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, and making provision for his compensation; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. MORRIS reported that the Committee had had the said bill under consideration, and made no amendment thereto.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to day.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, after some time spent therein, the SPEAKER resumed the Chair, and Mr. MORRIS reported that the Committee had had the state of the Union under consideration, and come to several resolutions thereupon; which he delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

H. OF R.

Examination of the Treasury.

DECEMBER, 1800.

1. Resolved, That so much of the President's Speech as respects the District of Columbia, ought to be referred to a select committee; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

2. Resolved, That so much of the President's Speech as respects the national administration of justice, ought to be referred to a select committee; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

3. Resolved, That so much of the President's Speech as respects seasonable and systematic arrangements, proportioned to our national resources, for a Navy adapted to defensive purposes, ought to be referred to a select committee; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

4. Resolved, That so much of the President's Speech as respects the fortifications of some of the principal ports and harbors of the United States, ought to be referred to a select committee; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

5. Resolved, That so much of the President's Speech as respects the manufacture of arms within the United States, ought to be referred to a select committee; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. HENRY LEE, Mr. EVANS, Mr. CRAIK, Mr. BIRD, and Mr. SILAS LEE, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the first resolution.

Ordered, That Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. KITTERA, Mr. NICHOLSON, and Mr. HENDERSON, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the second resolution.

Ordered, That Mr. PARKER, Mr. OTIS, Mr. SPAIGHT, Mr. JOHN DAVENPORT, Mr. NOTT, Mr. TALIAFERRO, and Mr. HOLMES, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the third resolution.

Ordered, That Mr. OTIS, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. EDMOND, Mr. FOSTER, and Mr. ALSTON, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the fourth resolution.

Ordered, That Mr. WALN, Mr. SHEPARD, Mr. COOPER, Mr. PAGE, and Mr. WOODS, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the fifth resolution.

CANADIAN REFUGEES.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill for regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British Provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia.

Ordered, That Mr. NEW, Mr. EDMOND, Mr. STONE, Mr. SILAS LEE, and Mr. RICHARD THOMAS, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

MONDAY, December 1.

Several other members, to wit: from Maryland, JOHN DENNIS; from Virginia, JOSEPH EGGLESTON; from North Carolina, WILLIAM H. HILL; and from Georgia, JAMES JONES; appeared and took their seats in the House.

An engrossed bill extending the privilege of franking letters to the Delegate from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, and making provision for his compensation, was read the third time and passed.

TUESDAY, December 2.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, accompanying a report of the Commissioners of the fund for navy pensions and half-pay, pursuant to the act for the better government of the Navy of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LEE, from the committee appointed for that purpose, reported a bill for erecting a Mausoleum to GEORGE WASHINGTON, which was read twice and referred to a Committee of the Whole tomorrow.

The bill directs that the mausoleum shall be of marble, to be erected in the City of Washington, under the superintendence of the four Secretaries.

TRADE WITH THE INDIANS.

Mr. CLAIBORNE stated that during the last session a committee was appointed to inquire into the state of the trade, authorized by law, with the Indian nations. That committee had reported unfavorably to the trade. But desirous of maturing with deliberation a new plan before the old one was supplanted, they had reported a bill for continuing the existing system for one year. The bill had passed the House of Representatives unanimously, but had been postponed by the Senate to this session.

For his own part he was altogether unfavorable to the trade; for he believed that it answered no good purpose in relation to the Indians, while it was a loss to the United States. It was, however, proper that some legislative provision should be made immediately. The old law, regulating the officers who had the superintendence of the trade, had expired, and they were of consequence under no legal control.

He, therefore, moved the appointment of a committee, to inquire into the expediency of carrying on any further trade on a capital furnished by the United States, to report by bill or otherwise; which motion being read a second time, was agreed to, and a committee of three appointed.

EXAMINATION OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. OTIS observed, that at the time he moved for the reference of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, he was of opinion that it might be necessary to give particular instructions to the committee to regulate their measures in the contemplated investigation. But, on further reflection, he thought it would be best to leave the committee at large to make the investigation in such way as they, in the progress of their inquiries, should consider most satisfactory. Objects, not foreseen, might occur, requiring different modes of procedure from any now agreed upon. Such was the opinion of the committee, who had directed him to move an instruction to the committee to examine into the state of the Treasury, the mode of conducting business therein, the expenditures, of the public money, and to report such facts and statements as will conduce to a full and satisfactory understanding of the state of the Treasury, since the appointment of the Secretary.

The motion was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, December 3.

Ordered, That the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Oliver Pollock, made the eighteenth of April last, together with his letter presented the twenty-eighth ultimo, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

THURSDAY, December 4.

Another member, to wit: SAMUEL GOODE, from Virginia, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

The SPEAKER informed the House that the Chaplains had proposed, if agreeable to the House, to hold Divine service every Sunday in their Chamber.

REPORTING THE DEBATES.

Mr. HILL presented a memorial from Samuel Harrison Smith and Thomas Carpenter, representing that they had undertaken to report the debates of the House; that, contrary to their expectation—on the suggestion of inconvenience to the members—they had not received permission to occupy a situation within the bar, without which they were unable to state with fidelity the proceedings and debates; and praying the permission of the House to be admitted within the bar.

As soon as the memorial was read, the SPEAKER rose and observed, that feeling himself responsible to the House for the faithful discharge of the duties attached to his situation, he thought it proper to state the line of conduct he had pursued in this business. He stated that he was applied to by letter on the first day of the session, by Mr. Stewart, requesting permission to occupy a place within the bar; that he immediately took the request into consideration; that, in the mean time, similar requests were made by other individuals; that, on observing the structure of the room and the arrangement of the furniture, it at once appeared to him inconsistent with the dignity of the House or the convenience of the members to grant the permission asked; that the area was too small to afford the necessary accommodation; that the position considered as the least inconvenient to the House was within the window-frames; that, in his opinion, this position would not be agreeable to the stenographers, as the view of the members on the opposite side of the House from either window would be obstructed; that, if a position was assigned in any other part of the House, the stenographers would be between the Chair and some of the members, which would render the preservation of order impossible; that he had stated these reasons, and informed the applicants that, if agreeable to them, he would assign a place in the gallery, which should be set apart for their exclusive use; and that he considered that to be the most eligible position. He concluded by repeating, that it was, in his opinion, absolutely impossible to preserve the dignity of the House, and to maintain the convenience of the members, if the requested permission were given. Such was his first, his invariable opinion—it was unaltered—it was still the same.

Mr. NICHOLAS said, that the members of the House must feel a common interest in having the debates taken with fidelity. If the debates were taken, they ought to be taken with precision. Those who took them should not be debarred from the best means of hearing with accuracy. For his part he could not discern the inconvenience alleged to exist. The desk, which it was necessary to admit within the bar, would not project beyond the window-frame; and as to the remark of the Speaker respecting the inconvenience of such a position to the stenographers, it was easily obviated by the consideration, that any inaccuracy which might occur in the report of the individual who took them on one side of the Chair, would be checked by the reporter situated on the other side.

He thought the desire of the memorialists ought not to be passed over lightly. They had a right to the best place the House could assign. He moved the reference of the memorial to a select committee.

Mr. HILL observed that as the memorial contained no facts that required the investigation of a committee, and as the House possessed all the information that could guide their decision, he did not discern the propriety of the proposed reference. He had prepared a resolution, which, if the motion for a reference were withdrawn, he would offer.

Mr. NICHOLAS immediately withdrew his motion. Mr. HILL then proposed a resolution substantially to this effect: that Mr. Speaker be requested to assign places within the bar for the stenographers.

Mr. OTIS was sorry the gentleman from Virginia had withdrawn his motion to refer the memorial to a select committee, as he thought the subject required examination before a decision was made. There appeared to him much weight in the ideas of the Speaker. Grant, for the sake of argument, that four persons may be accommodated at the windows. Might there not be other applications? Was any gentleman prepared to say how many would be made? If the permission were once granted to one, would it not be necessary to extend it to all? Would the House suffer any individual to have an exclusive benefit where-by a stamp of authenticity would be fixed on his statements.

This business, in one shape or other, had often been before the House, and all conversation respecting it had always issued in leaving it to the regulation of the Speaker. This appeared to him the best termination it could receive.

From the attention he had paid to the debates reported this session, he believed them to be better and more accurately taken, than they had been on former occasions. This to him was a proof that the present situation of the stenographers was a good one. He acknowledged, at the same time, that the ability with which the debates were taken entitled those who took them to the best accommodation the House could afford. He concluded with renewing the motion for a reference to a select committee.

Mr. NICHOLAS replied, that no debate had taken place which could test the accuracy of the stenographers. From his own experience he pronounced the situation at present occupied utterly inconvenient. What he had some days since remarked had been misstated. He well knew that this did not arise from the inability of the reporter to state correctly what occurred. He knew him to be intelligent, and fully capable of conceiving and conveying the meaning of any remarks which could be made in that House. But it arose from his situation, from which it was impossible to hear distinctly.

He declared the objections of Mr. OTIS, in relation to the number of applicants, perfectly chimerical. Did the gentleman suppose that the number would be so great as to make a demand on their seats? As well might he imagine this, as that they would swell to the ideal compass he had given them. It was known to the House, that at Philadelphia the number was small; seldom more than two, and often not more than one persevered during the session, though a greater number appeared on its earliest days. Fact and experience, therefore, demonstrated the fallacy of the danger apprehended from this source.

The question was then taken on the reference to a select committee, and carried, ayes 42, noes 34.

And a committee of five, viz: Messrs, OTIS, NICHOLAS, PLATT, MORRIS, and HILL, was appointed.

FRIDAY, December 5.

Several members, to wit: from North Carolina, WILLIAM BARRY GROVE; from Kentucky, THOMAS T. DAVIS; and from Rhode Island, CHRISTOPHER G. CHAMPLIN, appeared and took their seats in the House.

A petition of Thomas Jenkins and Sons was presented to the House, praying an American register for a vessel, the property of the petitioners; referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. MACON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred, on the third instant, a letter from Oliver Pollock, together with his former petitions, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. H. LEE moved that the House do go into a Committee of the Whole on the bill "directing the erection of a mausoleum to GEORGE WASHINGTON."

On which motion the House divided—yeas 36, nays 34. Mr. MORRIS took the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN, after reading the bill through, proceeded to read it by paragraphs. The first section is as follows:

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a mausoleum of American granite and marble, in a pyramidal form, one hundred feet square at the base, and of a proportionate height, shall be erected, in testimony of the love and gratitude of the citizens of the United States, to GEORGE WASHINGTON."

Mr. ALSTON moved an amendment to the first section, which was, in substance, "that a monument of marble be erected in the Capitol, at the City of Washington, commemorative of the great events of the military and political life of GEORGE WASHINGTON."

Mr. H. LEE said, that during the last session the House, after long debate, had declared itself in favor of a mausoleum, and that as no reasons had been assigned for a change of opinion, he hoped they would persevere in the deliberate result of their judgment.

Mr. OTIS was ready to acknowledge himself unacquainted with many of the circumstances embraced by the subject. He therefore wished additional information to that which he had received. His present opinion was, that a mausoleum was preferable to a monument. He acknowledged that, in forming this opinion, he had felt great deference for the judgment of the committee which had recommended it. It was undoubtedly a subject but little understood. The formation of a proper decision depended upon a concurrence of several circumstances—upon a comparison of the expense with the value of the object to be accomplished. Besides this, it had many peculiar features not comprehended by every gentleman. He thought these considerations sufficient to induce the House to decline voting for the amendment, whereby the plan of the committee, who had maturely considered the subject in all its relations, would be frustrated, unless stronger reasons were assigned than he had yet heard.

Mr. NICHOLAS observed, that the bill directed the erection of a mausoleum of certain dimensions, to ascertain the expense of which an estimate had been made. But that estimate was not satisfactory. It was made without information. The sum to be expended was not fixed. It might vastly exceed any sum now contemplated. The mausoleum was to consist of a huge, ugly mass of stones heaped upon one another, to raise which a heavy and useless expense would be incurred. And what was the object? It was to perpetuate the memory of GEORGE WASHINGTON. Was the memory of that great man to be perpetuated by a heap of large inanimate objects? The best way in which his fame could be preserved would be by bringing his ashes from the place where they now lie, by depositing them in the Capitol at the will of the nation, in interring them in such a manner as had never before been done, in placing over them a plain tablet, on which every man could write what his heart dictated. This, and this only, was the basis of his fame. It was not to be blazoned by figures or representations of any other sort. It consisted in the undecaying recollection of his virtues. It must live in the national feeling, and this called not for useless expense. Twenty thousand dollars was as competent to its expression as two hundred thousand. He hoped, therefore, the amendment would be adopted, and that the terms which related to military and political achievements would be omitted. He hoped a plain monument would be erected.

His preference of a monument to a mausoleum arose not from any indisposition to celebrate the memory of our American hero. He could say as much in his praise as any man. Neither a committee of Congress nor the four Secretaries, on whom the bill devolved the superintendence, felt more zeal for the character of this great man than he did.

Mr. NORR did not rise to consume the time of the Committee by going at large into an examination of the subject, but to explain the reasons for the vote he meant to give. He had, last session, co-operated most cheerfully in all those measures which had been pursued to express the national sensibility at the loss of that great and immortal character. In the feelings of gratitude which his services excited, no man could outdo him. Among other measures, he had been friendly to the erection of a mausoleum. But, on more reflection, he had changed his opinion. He did not believe that a huge mass of stones would add to the reputation of WASHINGTON, or be more expressive of national affection, than a marble monument. This being the case, he preferred the latter, because it was the least expensive.

Mr. GRISWOLD hoped the amendment would not prevail. It was the object of the bill to raise a monument which should last for ages, and which should be a perpetual memorial of the gratitude of America. Such would not be the case if the proposition made by the gentleman from North Carolina should be adopted. The monument proposed by him might be broken and destroyed by a lawless mob or by a set of school-boys. For his part, he would not consent to raise such a monument to the memory of a man who had deserved so well of his country.

The bill proposed the erection of a monument that would stand unimpaired for ages. It is true that it will not perpetuate the fame of WASHINGTON; his fame required nothing which we could do to give it perpetuity; but it will perpetuate the gratitude of the country. It would be a structure that will command respect; it will be pointed to our children; they will enter it with reverence, as the spot in which the ashes of this great man are deposited.

It was undoubtedly a subject of sentiment; and subjects of such a kind must be guided by feeling. Various opinions, therefore, may naturally be expected. His opinion was, that the national sentiment called for the erection of a structure correspondent in size to the character of the man to whom it was raised.

The general outlines of the bill might now be adopted; and if there existed a variance of opinion, the subordinate members of it might be modified.

Mr. H. LEE said, if it were the wish of gentlemen to avoid the adoption of measures commemorative of the talents of the great man we have lost, it would be candid to tell us so at once. For his part, he saw little difference between the adoption of the amendment and the rejection of every plan proposed that was adequate to the occasion. Sir, said Mr. L., there is not a rich man in Europe who loses his mistress that does not raise a trophy to her memory; and shall it be said that we, who have sustained the most irreparable loss in the death of our Chief—shall it be said that we refuse to pay him those honors which are lavished so liberally upon such inferior objects? If you do not mean to come forward on the occasion, say so. Then we shall understand the reasons of opposition to the ground taken by this House last session. As yet no reasons had been assigned for abandoning it. We then declared that we would act. We exhibited a spirit worthy of the immortal WASHINGTON—worthy of the distinguished character of this House.

But should this honorable spirit, kindled by an enthusiasm in the virtues and talents of our departed benefactor, subside and be chilled by the adoption of the proposed amendment, he would condole with the House, and would rather they would be silent forever than disgrace themselves and their country by so subordinate an act.

It is true, sir, that the celebrity and the glory of WASHINGTON hang not on our plaudits. History will transmit to posterity the lustre of his fame, glittering with untarnished purity. It is not in our power either to increase or diminish it. But, sir, we may imitate his virtues and his great example. We are deeply interested in holding them forth as illustrious models to our sons. Is there, then, I ask you, any other mode for perpetuating the memory of such transcendent virtues so strong, so impressive, as that which we propose? The grandeur of the pile we wish to raise will impress a sublime awe in all who behold it. It will survive the present generation. It will receive the homage of our children's children; and they will learn that the truest way to gain honor amidst a free people is to be useful, to be virtuous.

This will not be the act of an individual. It will be the act of a Government expressing the will of a great nation. Seize then, I pray you, seize with rapture, the occasion that is now presented, thankful to the Supreme Disposer of Events for giving you an opportunity of rearing some future WASHINGTON. This is a great object; frown, then, upon all the little efforts made to defeat it.

It is certainly true, that if you erect a mausoleum, you must expend some public money. But are you not the guardians of the public treasure? Does not the selection of the best objects to which to appropriate it devolve on you? And can there be a greater, a more patriotic purpose than this? Is it not your great duty to promote the public good; and can that be more completely promoted in any other way? The sum asked is seventy thousand dollars. Who can show me in what other manner the same good can be effected by so small a sum?

But it is said that the bill vests a discretion in the Secretaries, and they may exceed the estimate. But, sir, are the Secretaries unworthy of confidence? Do not we know that we may safely rely upon them? Besides, if thought expedient, the expenditure may be limited. Thus, surely, without prodigality on the one hand or parsimony on the other, you may do honor to yourselves and your country.

Mr. Macon did not pretend to know much about that kind of things proposed by the bill; but he believed, from the little he did know, that such a thing had not been attempted for a thousand years. The expense attending the proposed measure had been treated lightly. For himself, he was not disposed to consider seventy thousand dollars a trifling sum. He thought it a great sum, and believed every man in the country thought as he did. In forming his idea of any particular sum, he was not carried away by the visionary notions of speculation; he looked at the labor it required to produce it; and he well knew how hardly earned was the money from which this enormous sum must proceed.

He further believed that no man could tell how much the mausoleum would cost. The seventy thousand dollars was only a beginning; and when the object was once begun, experience tells us that we must finish it at all events, let it cost what it might. The base was fixed at a hundred feet. Why not decide its other proportions? Did not the silence of the bill on this point show the ignorance of gentlemen? All was doubt. What strengthened his opinion of the total want of information, was the exhibition last session of two estimates: one of which was predicated on a base of sixty feet, and required sixty-seven thousand dollars; the other was predicated on a base of one hundred feet, making the structure nearly three times as large, and required only seventy thousand dollars. Could this be correct? Both estimates certainly could not be true. The probability was that neither could be depended upon.

For what purpose was this great mass to be raised? He saw no good purpose likely to be answered by it under the sun. Can stones show gratitude? If the nation wished to show its gratitude, let them do it by making a history of the life of WASHINGTON a school-book. Our children then will learn and imitate his virtues. This will be rendering the highest tribute to his fame, by making it the instrument of enlightening the mind and improving the heart.

While there are such rational modes of distinguishing the memory of WASHINGTON, can Congress so far forget the interest of the nation; can they so far forget their own duty, as to expend millions in acts of useless and pernicious ostentation? Since the invention of types, monuments are good for nothing. The records of history will remain long after their decay or destruction.

We are told that the best mode of perpetuating the memory of WASHINGTON is to erect a mausoleum. I have heard, said Mr. M., of Aristides, I have heard of Hampden, but I have never heard of monuments raised to their memories. Yet their virtues shine as bright now as they did while they lived. I have heard of a place called Westminster Abbey, full of the monuments of Kings; yet, notwithstanding these grand memorials, I have heard very little of them after they left this world, and I question very much whether any man, let him have heard what he may, if he were to go there could tell one of them from the other.

But, it is said, that the monument, proposed by the amendment, may be thrown down and destroyed by mobs or school-boys. God forbid that this should ever be the case! I do not believe, said Mr. M., this to be possible. If it were made of glass, frail as it is, it would be safe; all would revere, all would respect it.

The House is told by one gentleman, who advocates the mausoleum, that a rich man in Europe cannot lose his mistress without raising a monument to her memory. Was the gentleman serious when he made this remark? Would he place the memory of WASHINGTON on a footing with that of a rich man's mistress? Better, sir, said, Mr. M., far better would it be, more honorable to the Government, and more conformable to the wish of our deceased friend, to devote the seventy thousand dollars, designed for a mausoleum, to the education of the poor. Then, indeed, we might flatter ourselves with having extended the empire of his virtues, by making those understand and imitate them, who, uninstructed, could not comprehend them.

If he thought that by raising a magnificent monument to WASHINGTON, he could give duration to his fame, or carry his name into a single country which it had not yet reached, he would give the measure his support. But no such effect would be produced. It might indeed adorn this city; and that was the only plausible argument in favor of it.

Before gentlemen act in this business, let them look to Egypt; there they will behold precedents in profusion; men made gods, and statues and monuments and mausolea covering the whole face of the country; but where will they find the virtues or the talents of the men they were meant to commemorate? Now is the time to make a stand against this monument mania. WASHINGTON is admired and beloved by all. No one can be charged with a desire to diminish his fame by opposing a useless expenditure of money. The precedent we now establish will be auspicious to our future measures. If we decline raising a mausoleum to WASHINGTON, no man who succeeds him, can expect one reared to his memory. On the other hand, if we now raise one to WASHINGTON, every pretender to greatness will aim at the same distinction.

Mr. MAcon concluded by declaring himself hostile to the bill, and friendly to the amendment, because it proposed a plan that was more rational, more economical, and more conformable to the resolve of the old Congress, than that contained in the bill.

The Committee then rose without coming to any decision, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act extending the privilege of franking letters to the Delegate from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, and makin provision for his compensation," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the said amendment of the Senate: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the same.

Resolved, That Mr. HUGER and Mr. IMLAY be appointed a committee for enrolled bills, on the part of this House, jointly, with such committee as shall be appointed for that purpose on the part of the Senate.

MONDAY, December 8.

Several other members, to wit: from Connecticut, CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, and SAMUEL W. DANA; and from Rhode Island, JOHN BROWN; appeared, and took their seats in the House.

A new member, to wit: SAMUEL TENNEY, returned to serve in this House as a member for New Hampshire, in the room of William Gordon, who has resigned his seat, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. OTIS, from the committee to whom was referred, on the fourth instant, the petition of Samuel H. Smith and Thomas Carpenter, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Oliver Pollock, made on Friday last: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the prayer of the petition of the said Oliver Pollock cannot be granted.

TUESDAY, December 9.

Another member, to wit: JOHN RUTLEDGE, Jr., from South Carolina, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from JONATHAN W. CONDY, notifying his resignation of the office of Clerk to this House; which was read, and is as follows:

"PHILADELPHIA, December 4, 1800.

"SIR: The state of my health having rendered it impossible for me further to perform the duties of Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, I am reduced to the necessity of resigning that appointment; you will therefore oblige me by notifying my resignation to the House, and at the same time expressing the regret with which I yield to the necessity of withdrawing myself from their service.

"With the most sincere gratitude for the frequent and continued marks of friendship and attention, which I have received personally from yourself, and the indulgence with which I have been favored by the House, in the course of my feeble endeavors to obtain their approbation in the performance of the duties of my office, I am, with sentiments of the highest respect and esteem, sir, your most obliged, most humble servant,

"JONATHAN W. CONDY.

"The Hon. THEODORE SEDGWICK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives."

The House then proceeded, by ballot, to the appointment of a Clerk, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the said resignation; and, upon examining the ballots, a majority of the votes of the whole House was found in favor of JOHN HOLT OSWALD.

The oath to support the Constitution of the United States, together with the oath of office as prescribed by the act, entitled "An act to regulate the time and manner of administering certain oaths," were then administered by Mr. SPEAKER to the Clerk.

REPORTING THE DEBATES.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the committee to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel Harrison Smith and Thomas Carpenter, made yesterday, and which lay on the table; and, the same being again read, in the words following, to wit:

"The committee to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel Harrison Smith and Thomas Carpenter, report the following resolution, which they recommend to the House:

"Resolved, That it is not expedient for this House to make any order upon the subject of the memorial of Samuel Harrison Smith and Thomas Carpenter, presented on the fourth day of December instant."

Mr. CHRISTIE moved the reference of the report to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRISWOLD opposed the reference.

The House divided—for the reference 43, against it 46.

Mr. JACKSON made several remarks, and concluded by calling for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. NICHOLAS said, in a Government like ours, the theory of which is republican, and the practice of which he hoped would always continue to be republican, he considered the representatives of the people responsible to the people, by whom they were created. It was necessary, to give efficacy to this responsibility, that the people, who were to judge, should possess the purest information, as to not only the acts, but the motives of the public agents. It was of little consequence to them to know what laws are enacted, compared with a knowledge of projects that were attempted or prevented, and the grounds on which they were supported or opposed. Nor could the merits of the acts themselves be understood, unless the reasons for them were stated. It was, therefore, of the highest consequence that the reasons for our conduct should be clearly understood, that our measures may be comprehended, and our motives also known, that our constituents may judge whether we have faithfully discharged our duty.

Under this view of the subject, he thought it extremely indelicate to resist the admission within the bar of those persons who thought themselves qualified to take the debates and proceedings of the House. But what rendered the attempt still more improper, was, its being an innovation on the practice of the House. For, since he had been a member of the Legislature, individuals of this description had been placed by the House at their ease, in a situation convenient for hearing what passed. Why is this practice, hitherto unopposed, now to be broken in upon? For such an innovation and departure from the established practice of the House, there ought to be the strongest reasons; particularly when the attempted innovation respected, and was made by, those whose conduct was to be scrutinized.

It was not without deliberation that the practice of the House had been instituted and adhered to. Some gentlemen had, some time since, contemplated the employment of a particular individual, whose services were to be paid for by the House. But the idea was abandoned, from the supposed sanction given by such an act to his statements; whereby the House might be made responsible for his accuracy and talents.

The difficulty attending the business he acknowledged to be great. But, for the reasons he had assigned, he thought the House had acted right in forbearing to interfere, further than by merely assigning a convenient place to the stenographers. It was deemed safest to confide the business to persons not known officially to the House, whose own individual interest would constitute the best pledge for their fidelity. Though no precise resolve had been passed to this effect, it was well understood that this was the course the House meant to pursue, after having given the subject a deliberate and solemn consideration.

Shall we now, said Mr. N., after this mature consideration, on the mere suggestion of personal inconvenience, on a subject of such importance as to invite a gentleman from a considerable distance, [referring to some old plan,] shall we, after the sanction of an uniform practice, fortified by the long period for which it has been observed, on the suggestion of a trifling inconvenience, which, he believed, on examination, would not be found to exist at all, adopt the innovation proposed by the report of the committee? For his part, he thought they were all deeply interested in having the debates well taken, as it was not in their power altogether to prohibit their being taken.

He had heard but two objections made to the old plan. The first was, that by passing a resolve admitting stenographers within the bar, the House gave a sanction to the reports published by them. The second was, that, as the Speaker had heretofore had the management of the business, it would be wrong to take it out of his hands.

As to the first objection, he thought it altogether incorrect. The resolution, submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. HILL,) which he wished the House to adopt, does not propose the selection of any particular person. It admits, generally, those individuals who wish to take the debates. Can this admission make us responsible for the conduct of men we do not know, and over whom we have no control? Have we heretofore been considered as responsible? And wherein consists the difference between our past situation and the situation we shall be in, if the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina be adopted? We shall then only have done that which before had been done by the Speaker. Governed by a sense of duty, the Speaker had refused admission within the bar. It became, therefore, necessary, in order to admit, for the House to pass a resolution. But it did not follow that the least responsibility would arise from such an act.

Indeed, by admitting the stenographers within the bar, the responsibility of the House would be diminished; for, if the House admitted them, no one could then say that it had done anything that interfered with a faithful report of the debates; whereas, by excluding the stenographers, the unavoidable inaccuracies committed, might be charged to the House.

The second objection made to the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina, was that, as the Speaker had heretofore had the management of the business, it would be wrong to take it out of his hands.

Mr. N. in reply to this objection, observed, that the power, heretofore exercised by the Speaker on this subject, had not been expressly delegated to him by the House. It had often been thought of, but no decision had heretofore been made. As the object asked related to the convenience of the members, he thought they were the best judges of the propriety of granting it. The inconvenience alleged to exist was entirely a matter of opinion. He thought it either had no existence or a very limited one. As he had remarked before, the subject was extremely delicate. He would not consent to furnish room for being charged with a wish to suppress the means of making an inquiry into his conduct. He believed that the innovation contended for, would be so viewed; so far, therefore, from considering it as innocent, he viewed it as wrong in itself, and likely to be mischievous in its effects.

Mr. OTIS was one of those who was not disposed to make a strong stand against the resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. He did not view the point in so interesting a light as did the gentleman who had preceded him. It appeared to him in the shape of a question of convenience; and as to his own situation, it could not be affected by any permission given to stenographers to come within the bar. Many of the arguments he had heard, implied that the situation at present occupied by the stenographers was exclusive of all others; whereas if that were inconvenient they might take any other, so that they did not come within the bar.

It is true that the stenographers have hitherto been admitted within the bar. They were admitted because there was room. But, in our present chamber, the room was less; nor could they occupy a part of that little, without materially interfering with the convenience of the members.

In his opinion, the proper question for the House to consider was, whether an admission should take place independent of the Speaker, or whether he should decide its propriety. It did not follow, if the Speaker retained the management, that the exclusion would apply to all occasions. It was true, that the places desired by the stenographers were generally assigned to the high Executive officers of the Government, and the foreign Ministers. But if, in consistence with their accommodation, the indulgence could be granted, during any important debate, he had no doubt of the Speaker's readiness to admit them, and they might thus obtain a temporary place within the bar.

Mr. O. thought the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia covered too much ground. They ascribed to the friends of the report an attempt to preclude the people from obtaining all information of what passed in the House. No such design existed. For his part, he wished the people to know everything that occurred within these walls. There was no doubt of the debates, as heretofore given, being an inadequate organ of the ideas of the members; they had been taken for nearly twelve years, and sometimes they had been accurate, and at other times very inaccurate; and so complete had the distortion of sentiments often been, that had it not been for the name that was attached to a particular speech, the member, to whom it was ascribed, would not have known it to be his. Mr. O. would, notwithstanding, not deny the ability of a person who read the debates, to form a tolerable idea of the arguments used on a particular subject.

The charge of innovation, Mr. O. thought unjust. He proposed to leave the business as it had heretofore been left, free from any resolve of the House, to the control of the Speaker. By this conduct, no sanction would be given to the performances of any reporter; but, on the other hand, if the House passed a resolve, divesting the Speaker of his previous power, they would render themselves responsible, and would virtually give a sanction.

If it were resolved that the House should interfere, he would much rather select and pay an individual competent to the business, and appeal, for the faithful discharge of his trust, to his candor and impartiality.

If the House passed the resolution admitting the stenographers within the bar, Mr. O. asked whether they would not in fact be officers of the House. The only difference between them and the other officers would be that one would be paid and the others would not.

Mr. O. said that, in his opinion, the most inconvenient position in the House had been taken by the stenographers. It was near the Clerk's office, between which and the bar there was a perpetual passage of the members. If an experiment were made of a position on the other side, or in the upper gallery, he was persuaded it would be found very convenient. Are not, said Mr. O., the galleries constructed for the express purpose of hearing? Are they not intended for the good people of the United States? And if they can hear in them cannot the stenographers also?

Mr. O. concluded by stating the extreme inconvenience that would arise from admitting the stenographers; the interference it would produce with the assignation of seats to the Secretaries of our Government and the foreign Ministers; and with declaring his opinion that it was most expedient to adopt the report of the committee.

Mr. NICHOLSON said, that if he understood the objections made by the gentleman from Massachusetts to granting an admission of the stenographers within the bar, they might be classed under three heads: 1. It will be against precedent; 2. It would prevent the members from having elbow-room; 3. There is a possibility that the Speaker may indulge the stenographers.

As to the first objection, he would ask whether the House had not a right to exercise any power themselves that was exercised by the Speaker. Hitherto the Speaker has exercised the power, and admitted the stenographers within the bar; he now refuses to do it, and we are called upon to perform what he refuses. If we think it proper to admit them, we have a right to do it. The power heretofore exercised by the Speaker was derived from us, according to the well known maxim, Qui facit per alium, facit per se.

But we are told that the admission would interfere with the accommodation of the four Secretaries and the foreign Ministers. Suppose it should, said Mr. N.; I ask whether the convenience and the interest of the people of the United States are to be prostrated by our complaisance to the Secretaries and foreign agents? It is our duty to enable the people to obtain the best information of what is doing here that we can supply. Shall we abandon our duty? Shall we sacrifice the interest of our constituents to a sense of politeness to these gentlemen? It would be much better to submit to the inconvenience experienced by the Secretaries and the foreign Ministers, if there is not room for them within the bar, than to conceal from the people the knowledge they have a right to possess. Let, then, the foreign Ministers, if there be such a competition, retire into the galleries.

He considered the subject as of high importance both to the country and the members themselves. They all ought to desire their conduct to be rigidly inspected.

Gentlemen say that the debates have been heretofore imperfectly taken. Will they remedy the evil by excluding the stenographers from places within the bar? If, heretofore, notwithstanding the favorableness of their position, when stillness and silence reigned, they have been unable to take the debates with precision, can it be expected that, driven to a distance from most of the members, surrounded by a crowd in perpetual motion, they will be able more successfully to accomplish their object? Sir, said Mr. N., the expectation is absurd. It cannot be done. I have placed myself without the bar, and I declare it impossible to hear correctly. If, then, you are determined to exclude them from their usual places, you had infinitely better turn them out of the House altogether.

As to the convenience of the galleries for hearing, Mr. N. was not able, from a trial made by himself, to decide upon it. But he had heard but one uniform opinion, which was, that owing to the constant passage of persons, and the frequent crowd it would contain, it was impossible to hear there with any distinctness. With respect to the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts on this point, he thought them altogether inapposite. The gallery was not constructed by us, and if it were a bad place for hearing it arose not from any fault to be ascribed to us. All that we did was to open our doors to all citizens who conducted themselves with decorum.

The personal inconvenience to members alleged, did not, in the opinion of Mr. N., exist. He thought there was ample room. The chamber they occupied was similar to that in Philadelphia, and the positions desired by the stenographers were relatively the same as those in Philadelphia. By advancing the Clerk's table three feet, every difficulty would be removed.

Mr. RUTLEDGE said, that the members who had preceded him had talked much about the necessity of giving the people correct information of the transactions of that House. He believed there was not a single member who did not wish to impart to the people all the knowledge they could receive, and who did not highly prize the means of information furnished by the proceedings of that House. On this point there was no division. No one was desirous of excluding the stenographers, or prohibiting the publication of debates. The only question really before the House was, whether they should persevere in the old plan; whether they should confide in the integrity and the talents of the Speaker, who had hitherto merited their confidence, or whether, divesting him of his power, they should exercise a right themselves hitherto attached to his office.

Such a mode of procedure as had been pursued on this occasion was not conformable to that heretofore practised. An application somewhat similar had been, some time since, made to the Speaker. The Speaker decided, and the House, without debate, acquiesced in his decision. A stenographer had grossly misrepresented a member, and when required to correct his false statement, had insolently refused to do it, and added to the previous injury of misstatement insult of the most contumelious kind. The Speaker dismissed him from his place for this barefaced misconduct. Some of his friends made an appeal to the House. The House acted wisely, and, with becoming dignity, refused to interpose.

Now, said Mr. R., if any other stenographer, like the one I have alluded to, shall make it his systematic practice to misrepresent, and he continue as heretofore to hold his place at the tenure of the Speaker's permission, he may be dismissed by the Speaker without troubling the House. But should the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina prevail, we shall be perpetually appealed to, and occupied in debate. For these reasons he trusted the report would be agreed to.

Mr. HILL said he considered the subject as simply involving an address to the sentiments of the members on the ground of personal convenience, and that on that ground he was ready to sacrifice any little inconvenience to the accommodation of the stenographers; stating at the same time his entire reliance upon the integrity and talents of the Speaker.

Mr. GRISWOLD said, this is nothing less than an appeal from the Chair. To the Speaker has heretofore been committed the regulation of the admission of all persons whatever within the bar. This is the only correct mode in which such an object can be accomplished. The Speaker must exercise the discretion hitherto vested in him, otherwise the order of the House cannot be preserved. The object now is to take this power from the Speaker, and to open the area of the House to the stenographers, without the Speaker's approbation. It is said that only two persons at present apply. But if the door be once opened to admission in this way, there may be no end to intrusion. The Speaker being divested of power to act, and the necessity of acting being evident, the House will be perpetually troubled with appeals.

In his opinion, the power confided to the Speaker had been exercised in this case with great propriety. It must be apparent to everybody that the area was too small to justify the admission of the stenographers. He believed it to be an idle pretence that the stenographers could not hear. He believed it to be a mere matter of pride, which would be gratified by an appeal from the Chair, and a reversal of the decision of the Speaker by the House.

Mr. THATCHER, persuaded that all the information derived from the debates of this House was of little comparative importance when viewed in relation to the general mass of information possessed by the people, cared but little for the event of the resolution before the House. Upon this ground he felt no anxiety whatever. As a matter of order, it might perhaps be of some importance. As to the convenience of position, he doubted whether a more correct account of the debates could not be given from a situation from without the bar than within it. His reasons were these: It was well known that for four or five sessions after the organization of the Federal Government stenographers never came within the bar, and their positions during that period were as remote from the members as at present. Yet if any man would appeal to the debates then taken, he would find them as correctly taken as they have been at any time since. It is true, there were complaints of inaccuracy, but the debate takers never assigned, as a justification of their errors, the inconvenience of their situations; on the contrary, they declared that they did as well as they could, and contended that their reports were as correct as the nature of the case permitted.

When the seat of Government was transferred to Philadelphia, and the stenographers occupied places within the bar, complaints increased, the debates were taken more incorrectly, and two or three of the stenographers were actually turned out of the area within the bar; one of whom, he believed, was sent into the upper gallery.

The incorrectness of the published debates did not arise so much from an inability to hear as from an inability to take down a rapid speech.

Mr. T. said he believed the debates as taken down by Mr. Lloyd, were as accurately taken as any taken before or since. The conclusion he drew from these facts was, that if the stenographers were admitted by the House within the bar,

DECEMBER, 1800.

H. OF R.

the public would gain nothing by it. He had, however, no objection to their admission, if the Speaker approved it. They might, as far as he cared, take any place in the House; even seats along side of the Speaker.

Mr. DAVIS had expected to hear substantial reasons in support of the report of the committee. None such had been offered. It was said that the stenographers could hear very well from their present positions. He denied it. The reporter could not possibly hear. Though himself nearer the gentleman, he had not heard a word that fell from the gentleman from North Carolina.

He trusted the House would admit the stenographers within the bar. If not admitted, the conversation and passage of the members around them will at once prevent the debates from being well taken, and be a perpetual excuse for their errors. But if admitted, they will have no such apology, and they will be within the power of the House.

The great mass of our citizens are too remote to attend your debates. They rely on those who report them. Not more than forty or fifty persons transiently appear in the galleries, who are not equal to diffusing a knowledge of your proceedings. Exclude the stenographers, and you may as well shut your doors. It may be said that you print your Journals; but who reads them? They are scarcely read by the members themselves. On great national questions the people ought to know, not only what you do, but also the principles that guide you.

The gentleman from South Carolina was willing to place the stenographers under the coercion of the Speaker, but was unwilling to place them under the coercion of the House. For his part, he thought differently. He did not wish to see them at the mercy of the Speaker.

Several allusions had been made to the treatment of a reporter at Philadelphia, who had been driven from the House by the Speaker. He recollected the affair, and, in his opinion, the Speaker had in this case been actuated more by personal enmity than by any other motive.

Mr. H. LEE next rose. He said he put it upon the candor of his colleague from Virginia to declare whether, in his opinion, any gentleman in that House wished to suppress his sentiments, or was disposed to shrink from an avowal of them. If an individual were to judge from the debate of to-day, he would infer that it was the desire of some members on that floor to conceal their sentiments from the people. No such thing was the case. We are as anxious as those who differ with us that the people should know what we think, say, and do.

The only question was, whether the Speaker shall exercise a certain power which he can conveniently, and which he has hitherto honorably exercised, or whether we shall assume it with all its inconveniences. He hoped we should not. He feared no inaccuracy so long as the debates published received no sanction from the House.

Have you, said Mr. L., no greater objects to engage your attention than whether this man or that man shall go out of your bar or remain within it? He thought the House might be better employed.

Mr. MACON understood the subject before the House very much as his colleague did. The question was simply whether we will take upon ourselves inconveniences alleged to exist, or keep the stenographers without the bar. He was convinced that the situations occupied by the stenographers were badly calculated for hearing, as even within the bar the members could scarcely hear each other.

One reason had great weight with him. It was, that if the House made a rule in relation to the admission of the stenographers, it would be placing law in the room of discretion. He preferred a certain rule to a vague discretion.

The danger apprehended from a crowd of stenographers was farcical. Since he had been in Congress he had never seen more than three or four. And if the number admitted should prove inconvenient, it would be time enough, when the inconvenience was experienced, to remedy it.

Mr. S. SMITH said the question was entirely one of convenience. He would not ascribe to any member a desire to suppress his sentiments. The speeches never went forth as delivered. Yet it was desirable to assign to the stenographers the most convenient places. He had heard gentlemen on both sides of the Chair declare they would experience no inconvenience from the admission of the stenographers. For himself, from his situation, he could experience none. He believed, indeed, that the members could be heard from any part of the House, and nearly as well in one place as in another. But as other gentlemen hold a different opinion, and the stenographers had hitherto been admitted within the bar, he had not the least objection, and would vote for their admission.

In this stage of the debate, the SPEAKER arose, not, he said, to inquire into the consequences of the House acting in the business, but again to repeat the line of conduct he had pursued, and the motives which had influenced his conduct; he did this for the information of members not in the House at the time he had before addressed the House. The SPEAKER then repeated what he had before stated, viz: that on being appealed to by Mr. STEWART, he had declared to him his decision before any other application had been made; that he had spoken to many members, all of whom, without a single exception, had approved his ideas, and concluded with again declaring, as he had before declared, that the stenographers could not be admitted within the bar without violating the order of the House and the convenience of the members. It was, he said, for the House to decide—to them only was he responsible.

Mr. NICHOLAS understood it to be the object of those who supported the admission of the stenographers within the bar to place them upon the same footing they had heretofore held. This was his object. All the remarks, therefore, made respecting their independence of the Chair, were inapplicable. They would still be subject to his control, except as to the single point of situation. In short, the business would be restored to its old form.

H. OF R.

His colleague had made an appeal to his candor. He wished to know whether he (Mr. N.) thought that he or any other gentleman in that House wished to suppress his sentiments, or was disposed to shrink from an avowal of them? He would answer the appeal made by his colleague, and would tell him that he did not feel himself at liberty to form conjectures respecting the opinions of others, but decided from facts. If he heard gentlemen make use of arguments so weak as those he had heard that day in defence of their sentiments, he would say that their feelings differed essentially from his. He would say that, judging them by their arguments, they do not wish publicity to be given to the debates of this House.

What do the gentlemen tell us? Does it not amount to this: that their complaisance for the Speaker suffers him to judge for them in a case where they are the best judges; and would not this complaisance go to this length, that if the Speaker should judge wrong, they will not interfere to correct his error?

We are told by a gentleman just up that the application made proceeds from pride, and that it can proceed from nothing else. But the gentleman has not assigned his reasons for this extraordinary charge.

It is contended that any place without the bar will be convenient for the stenographers. Let the place be pointed out. Let the gentlemen who urge this show us a place without the bar inaccessible to the whispers of the members and the pressure of a crowd. Do they imagine that any particular place can be assigned to which they can insure a profound silence, and from which every person can be withheld? Do they not know, have they not experienced, that when business presses, when subjects of importance are discussed, a crowd is produced, noise ensues, and interposing obstacles render it impossible either to hear or see the members? In such cases, by far the most interesting that can occur, a recess within the bar can be their only protection.

The gentleman from Massachusetts had put the business upon a very extraordinary footing—a footing that he did not expect from him. He represented that it would be safe to trust the reporters to the Speaker's indulgence. For his part, he did not think it would be safe in such hands. Shall the Speaker have the discretion of saying what debates shall be taken and what shall not? Shall he, and he only, have the public ear? Could the Speaker desire this? Surely he could not. He ought rather to desire the House to decide generally than thus impose upon him such an invidious task.

Mr. N. said, he considered those who report the debates as appearing in this House on behalf of the people of the United States, to whom they communicated what passed here. The people were entitled to this information; and if, as observed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, either foreign Ministers or Secretaries, or any other gentleman in long robes, interfered with such an object, they ought to give way. He knew not wherein consisted the propriety of assigning them particular seats. What right had they to exclusive seats? He knew no connexion that subsisted between them and this House. Be the right as it may, he was not for sacrificing a solid benefit to mere complaisance.

But a gentleman has told us that one stenographer, for his misrepresentation and insolence, had been discharged by the Speaker. In the course of debate, Mr. N. said, he had studiously avoided any allusion to this circumstance. Nor would he now say anything about it, as he thought it altogether foreign from the present question.

The respect which gentlemen expressed for the Speaker appeared to him to lead them from the object they professed to have in view. For, at present, the stenographers are not under the control of the Speaker. But admit them within the bar, and if they are guilty of misconduct, if they infringe any of the rules of the House, the Speaker has them within his power.

Some gentlemen apprehend the admission of a crowd of stenographers. The thing is morally impossible. When Congress met in a large populous city, where several daily papers were printed, we saw but two reporters. Here, removed from the busy world, where the demand for that description of labor which arose from publishing the debates was not nearly so great, and, of consequence, the profit less, it could not be expected that there could be more.

Mr. N. concluded by declaring that, in his opinion, it was the duty of the House to decide in this case. The Speaker had changed the established practice of the House. It became, therefore, the House to inquire whether he had done what he ought to have done; which, if he had omitted to do, it devolved on them to see effected.

Mr. WALN spoke in favor of the adoption of the report.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays, on agreeing to the report of the select committee, and carried by the casting vote of the Speaker. There being yeas 45, nays 45, as follows:

Another member, to wit: MATTHEW LYON, from Vermont, appeared and took his seat in the House.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for erecting a Mausoleum to the memory of GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. ALSTON was in hopes, when he first made the motion now under consideration, that a question would have been taken upon the amendment without debate; but, as his wish upon that subject had not been complied with, he held it to be his duty to give to the House the reasons which actuated him.

He said that he by no means wished to detract anything from the merit of that illustrious character whose memory we were now about to perpetuate; that it was his wish that his character might be handed to the latest posterity unimpaired, and that he really thought the amendment equally calculated to effect that desirable purpose with the bill; that the difference of expense was a matter of importance to the people of this country; that the expense of a mausoleum, from the best information he had been able to collect, would amount to at least 150 or $200,000; that a monument, such as was contemplated by the amendment, would not cost more than one tenth as much as a mausoleum, as contemplated by the bill as it now stood. Indeed, he believed that the bare expense of interring the remains of General WASHINGTON in a mausoleum would cost as much as the proposed monument.

Mr. A. said he considered Congress pledged, as far as the resolutions of the last session went; that the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. ORIS,) who was up a few days ago upon this subject, had requested information; in answer to which he had only to observe that if that gentleman would have given himself the trouble to have examined the proceedings of the last session of Congress he would have been better informed than he appeared to be; that a committee equally respectable with that which had reported the bill at the present time, had then fully investigated the subject, and had made a report, which was to be found upon the journals of the last session of Congress, recommending a monument such as was contemplated by the proposed amendment, and that the request made by the President of the United States to Mrs Washington, in conformity to the report of that committee, was for a monument; to which request she had consented; he, therefore, considered Congress as pledged thus far and no farther; that a motion was made in this House to change the monument to a mausoleum; that the recent death of General WASHINGTON at that time, prevented any person from opposing any measure which was offered, let the expense be what it would; but that the time which had elapsed since, had enabled the public mind the better to judge.

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. LEE) and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GRISWOLD) had dwelt a great deal upon the subject of public gratitude. It was by no means his wish or intention to lessen that sentiment, but he said that he could not give his consent to an expensive measure like that contemplated in the bill, when a measure far less expensive, in his opinion, would answer every purpose as well.

Mr. ALSTON was followed by Mr. HUGER, who advocated the erection of a mausoleum.

Mr. SMILIE replied. He considered the erection of a mausoleum as productive of unnecessary expense, as a monument would answer every rational purpose contemplated in the bill.

Mr. H. LEE next spoke at some length in favor of a mausoleum, and read a letter received from Mr. King, our Ambassador at London, enclosing a plan, presented to him by an eminent foreign artist, for a mausoleum of one hundred and fifty feet base, and the same height, the expense of which was estimated at $170,000.

Mr. CHAMPLIN, after some remarks, moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Which motion being carried without a division, the Committee rose; and on the question to grant them leave to sit again, only three members rose in the affirmative.

Mr. CHAMPLIN then moved the recommitment of the bill to the same committee that reported it, with the addition of two members, which was carried, and Messrs. CLAIBORNE and CHAMPLIN appointed.

After Mr. CHAMPLIN's motion for a recommitment of the bill to a select committee was carried,

Mr. CLAIBORNE said he had risen to move that the committee just appointed be instructed to inquire into the expediency of carrying into effect a resolution passed by the old Congress, on the 7th of August, 1783, directing an equestrian statue of General WASHINGTON to be erected at the place where the residence of Congress shall be established.

Mr. C. said, that on a question which could not fail to excite the sensibility of every American heart, it was a subject of great regret that a division of sentiment should arise. The memory of our departed patriot lives in the affections of a grateful country, and will triumph over time. During a long life, so usefully and honorably employed, WASHINGTON had reared to himself a fabric of fame, the lustre of which can neither be diminished nor heightened by any measure that we can take. But, sir, from a respect for our own, as well as for the feelings of the nation, we should endeavor to unite in the last act of attention which we propose to show this venerable character.

Mr. C. said that the proposition for a mausoleum was calculated to create division. The expense of such a monument would be immense, and would be viewed by many as a profuse and useless expenditure of the public money. He believed that the statue recommended by the old Congress could be better justified upon principles of economy, and would meet with more general support. Here Mr. C. read from the Journals of the old Congress the following resolutions:

"Resolved, (unanimously, ten States being present) That an equestrian statue of General WASHINGTON be erected at the place where the residence of Congress shall be established.

"Resolved, That the statue be of bronze—the General to be represented in a Roman dress, holding a truncheon in his right hand, and his head encircled with a laurel wreath. The statue to be supported by a marble pedestal, on which are to be represented, in basso relievo, the following principal events of the war, in which General WASHINGTON commanded in person, viz: The evacuation of Boston—the capture of the Hessians at Trenton—the battle of Princeton—the action of Monmouth—and the surrender of York. On the upper part of the front of the pedestal, to be engraved as follows: 'The United States in Congress assembled ordered this statue to be erected, in the year of our Lord, 1783, in honor of GEORGE WASHINGTON, the illustrious Commander-in-Chief of the Armies of the United States of America, during the war which vindicated and secured their liberty, sovereignty, and independence.'

A monument thus designed, (continued Mr. C.) would portray in lively colors the military achievements of our late illustrious Chief, and is calculated to impress upon our posterity a grateful recollection of his eminent services. Mr. C. was the more interested in support of a monument of this kind, because it had been sanctioned by an unanimous vote of those venerable philosophers and statesmen who presided in our councils, at a time of the greatest danger, directed the storm of war, and tamed the rage of tyranny.

It was true, that this equestrian statue would not express any of the great events of WASHINGTON's civil life, but, of these, we have already many honorable testimonials; the first in order, and which he hoped would be the last in durability, was the Constitution of the United States; to this instrument his name was annexed, and would be noticed with gratitude by the lovers of freedom in every age and every clime; this city is another memento of his civil life, and, if it should be the residence of all that piety, wisdom, and magnanimity, which was so devoutly prayed for by each branch of the Legislature, at the commencement of the present session, this city would remain an honorable testimonial of the civil virtues of its great founder.

There was no doubt, said Mr. C., but that many gentlemen were also solicitous that the body of General WASHINGTON should be deposited within the walls of the Capitol; of this number Mr. C. was one, and was desirous that a plain but neat apartment should be speedily prepared for its reception. But over his remains, instead of an expensive monument, Mr. C. thought it most advisable to place a plain but neat tomb-stone, of American marble, and prepared by an American artist. And in order to convey to posterity, in impressive language, the feelings of the American nation, when the loss of our patriot, sage, and hero, was first announced, Mr. C. wished to see engraved upon this tomb the addresses of each House of Congress upon this occasion to the President of the United States, together with the President's replies thereto.

Mr. C. concluded by moving the instructions stated in the commencement of his speech.

Mr. CLAIBORNE was followed by Messrs. CRAIK and NOTT.

The instruction to the committee, moved by Mr. CLAIBORNE, with a slight modification, was agreed to.

THURSDAY, December 11.

A letter was presented from Mr. L'Enfant, stating the services he had rendered in the formation and execution of the plan of the City of Washington, complaining of the ill treatment he had experienced, and requesting the attention of Congress to the propriety of rendering him compensation for his services.

A letter was received from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by a statement of appropriations necessary for the year 1801, and a statement of the receipts and expenditures preceding the 1st day of October, 1800. Referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The committee to whom was referred the congratulatory address of sundry citizens of the Territory of Columbia to Congress, reported that the address contained sentiments expressive of a laudable attachment to the Government of this country, and of a sincere solicitude to accommodate the members of the Government, and concluded with a resolution that the SPEAKER be requested to enclose to the committee appointed on behalf of the citizens a copy of the report. Report agreed to.

CLAIM OF MAJOR JACKSON.

Mr. RUTLEDGE presented a petition from Major Jackson, an officer in the Army of the United States, stating that the Secretary of War had refused to allow him double rations, to which he considered himself entitled as the commandant of a post, and desiring Congress to take his claim into consideration.

Mr. R. moved to refer the petition to a select committee.

Mr. GRISWOLD hoped it would go to the Committee of Claims. They were more competent, from their acquaintance with the nature and extent of the various claims made, to investigate the present claim. It is further desirable that a general system should be adopted and applied uniformly to all cases. This could only be accomplished by all the objects of this kind being laid before one committee. In this way only could an uniformity of decision be attained.

Military Establishment, &c.

Mr. CLAIBORNE was in favor of a reference to the Committee of Claims. He had himself, during the last session, presented a petition of a similar kind, which he wished to go to a select committee; but he had been opposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, at whose instance it was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. OTIS thought the claim made by the petitioner much better for the consideration of a special committee than for that of the Committee of Claims. The claim, he understood, was founded by the petitioner on the spirit of a law that allowed double rations to every officer who was a commandant of a particular post. He was informed that the petitioner had had the command of several posts in succession; and that, not exclusively confined to one, he had had the direction of several. The construction put on the law by the Secretary of War might be legal, but not equitable. If so, it became the House to change the provisions of the law, and to render them conformable to cases which had not been contemplated at its passage. If this were the case, it presented objects distinct from those usually submitted to the Committee of Claims.

The question was then taken on a reference to the Committee of Claims, and carried—48 members rising in favor of it.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. VARNUM laid a resolution on the table to this effect: "That it is expedient so to alter the 'Military Establishment of the United States' that the second regiment of artillery and engineers shall consist but of three battalions."

Previous to offering this resolution, Mr. VARNUM took a concise view of the progress made since the year 1796 in the Military Establishment, and stated that in 1799 a new organization was made, whereby each regiment ordered to be raised was made to consist of four battalions. One battalion was not yet raised, but according to that system it would soon be raised unless countermanded. He was of opinion that in the present state of the country it was quite unnecessary, and therefore hoped that the House would concur with him in altering the present law in such a way as to prevent the raising another battalion.

DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. NEW called up the resolution laid by him yesterday on the table, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, alterations are necessary to be made to the several acts "laying duties on spirits distilled within the United States, and on stills," and that they be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. NEW observed that his object in making the motion was to have the law so amended as to allow the proprietors of stills to use them when they pleased, and have the option of paying by the gallon, or on the capacity of the still. Agreed to, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

FRIDAY, December 12.

A letter was received from the Secretary of the Treasury, enclosing a statement of the loans made in relation to the city of Washington, and a report from the Commissioners, containing an account of the expenditures from November 18, 1799, to November 18, 1800—referred to the committee of Ways and Means.

A letter was received from the Secretary of State, enclosing a list of impressed American seamen, with an account of the measures pursued for their release. Ordered to be printed.

The report of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, allowing Robert Hooper a drawback on fourteen pipes and three quarter casks of Madeira wine, was agreed to, and the same committee instructed to report a bill for that purpose.

JENKINS AND SONS.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures on the petition of Thomas Jenkins and Sons. The report is as follows:

"That the object of the petitioners is to obtain a register for a ship built on the remains, or hulk, of a British ship, burnt at the port of New York; three-fourths of which ship, they set forth to be built with timber, plank, and other materials of the United States.

"The committee are of opinion, that the prayer of the petition ought not to be granted, and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition."

A debate of some length, in which Messrs. S. SMITH and OTIS supported the report, and Messrs. BIRD, HUGER, and ELMENDORF, opposed it, ensued. On the question to agree to the report, it was carried.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

Mr. McMILLAN observed that appropriations of particular tracts of land in the Northwest Territory had been made for the establishment of schools and the support of religion, and that in particular a tract of land six miles square had been set apart for these purposes out of a tract granted to John C. Symmes & Co. One of the terms of the appropriation had been the location thereof, with the consent of the Government of the Northwest Territory, within a certain time, which had not been done. He also stated, that in each township, one lot had been appropriated for the support of schools, and one for the support of religion; but that Congress had not vested them in any particular persons. It followed that the property not only remained unimproved, but was much injured by the encroachment of individuals. He had been directed to apply to Congress to take the subject into consideration, that such provisions might be made as would redress the existing evils. For which purpose he moved the appointment of a committee to inquire into the situation of certain tracts of land, appropriated to the support of schools and religion, out of a tract of land granted to John C. Symmes, to report by bill or otherwise what measures are necessary to be adopted to render the said tracts productive.

The report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented, a bill for the relief of Robert Hooper; which was read and committed.

MONDAY, December 15.

Another member, to wit: THOMAS PINCKNEY, from South Carolina, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. COOPER, after some prefatory remarks, moved the appointment of a committee to inquire into the expediency of repealing an act for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and for the enumeration of slaves, within the United States.

Ordered to lie on the table.

ROBERT HOOPER.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Robert Hooper. After being read by the Chairman, the bill was reported to the House without amendment; and on the question of engrossing it for a third reading,

Mr. GRISWOLD said he wished to be informed wherein the facts, on which the committee at the present session had founded a favorable report, differed from those on which the committee in 1797 founded a different report, which then stated that the loss of the petitioner had arisen from a want of care on his part.

Mr. S. SMITH said he had been a member of both committees. In 1797 the petitioner supported his claim only by his own assertions; he was therefore against allowing it; the report was unfavorable, though he believed it had never been acted upon by the House. During the present session full proof had been exhibited that the loss of the petitioner did not arise from any misconduct of his, but from the inattention of the custom-house officer.

Mr. OTIS thought the case one of the plainest that could occur. The petitioner had imported certain specified goods; had declared his intention to export them; and had applied to the proper officer for coastwise certificates and clearances, and all other papers necessary for effecting his purpose. It was well known that the deputy collector was generally supplied with blanks, which he filled up as the case required. The petitioner, after expressing his wishes, and receiving from the deputy collector certain papers, asked "Have I got all my papers?" the answer was "yes." Afterwards, when too late to retrieve the error, he found that he had not one.

Mr. WALN, on a former occasion, had been opposed to the claim, because proof had not been produced of landing the goods in a foreign country. Proof of this fact was now furnished. As he had no doubt of the exportation of the articles, and of their having been landed in a foreign country, which is all the law requires to entitle the exporter to drawback, he thought that the claim ought to be allowed.

On the question for engrossing the bill for a third reading to-morrow, it was agreed to without a division.

WILLIAM NICHOLS.

On motion of Mr. LEIB, the House went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of William Nichols, late Marshal of Pennsylvania.

The report was read, which allows the claim made by William Nichols for the expenses of the attendance of jurors and witnesses on the trial of insurgents in '95, before the Circuit Court of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MACON observed that the money stated by the petitioner to have been paid by him, was not warranted by any law existing at the time. The reason assigned by the petitioner for paying the sums he wished to be reimbursed was that at the time he was young in office. The sum allowed by the report, was the highest allowed in any State to jurors and witnesses, and was even higher than that paid in Pennsylvania. Under these circumstances he moved that the Committee should rise, and report progress.

Mr. WALN said that the judges had sanctioned the sums allowed in the report; and, though there was no law that authorized it, the measure was justified by the necessity of the case. The allowance made was to individuals in the double capacity of jurors and witnesses. It was thought equitable that they should be compensated in both characters. The sums allowed were the same as those that were allowed in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. These considerations made him friendly to the report.

The question for the Committee's rising was lost.

The Committee then concurred in the report of the Committee of Claims, which concurrence being reported to the House, was confirmed by them, and the Committee of Claims instructed to report a bill.

TUESDAY, December 16.

An engrossed bill for the relief of Robert Hooper was read the third time, and passed.

WEDNESDAY, December 17.

Mr. MACON, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred, on the eleventh instant, the memorial of Peter Charles L'Enfant made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the prayer of the memorial of the said Peter Charles L'Enfant cannot be granted.

Mr. H. LEE, from the committee to whom was referred, on the twenty-eighth ultimo, so much of the President's Speech as respects the District of Columbia, made a report, in part; which was read and ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. H. LEE, from the same committee, presented the following bill concerning the District of Columbia; which was twice read and committed:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the laws of the State of Virginia, as they existed on the first Monday of December in the year 1800, shall be and continue in force in that part of the District of Columbia which was ceded by the said State to the United States, and by them accepted for the permanent Seat of Government: and that the laws of the State of Maryland, as they existed on the said first Monday in December, shall be and continue in force in that part of the said district which was ceded by that State to the United States, and by them accepted as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all executive and judicial officers, appointed by the respective States of Virginia and Maryland, and who had jurisdiction in or over the said district, or any part thereof, on the said first Monday of December, according to the tenor of the Constitution and laws of the said States, shall continue to hold and exercise such jurisdiction until removed by the President of the United States; and that the appointment of all such officers hereafter, shall be made in the manner designated by the second section of the second article of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall in any wise alter, impeach or impair the rights granted by or derived from the acts of incorporation of Alexandria and Georgetown, or any other body corporate or politic within the said District.

REDUCTION OF ARTILLERY.

MR. VARNUM, called up his resolution, laid on the table on the 11th instant, for reducing the second regiment of artillery to three battalions: it at present consists of four battalions.

MR. OTIS declared himself surprised at the resolution offered by his colleague, as he had not known any act passed in that House with more unanimity, or which appeared at the time or since to be attended with more general satisfaction, than the act on which the present establishment of artillery and engineers was founded. At the time the act was passed, the body of artillery and engineers thereby raised was considered and declared to be part of the permanent army; and in this view it had since received the sanction of the House in every form in which it had been presented.

To show that this was the case, it would be only necessary to exhibit a history of the establishment of this body of our military force.

Prior to the year 1794, the corps of artillerists and engineers consisted of one battalion.

In May 1794, in a time of profound peace, an act passed increasing the establishment to a regiment, consisting of four battalions.

In May 1796, an act was passed recognising and confirming the existence of the regiment, previously directed to be raised.

In April 1798, before Congress contemplated the existence of that emergency which afterwards occurred, before the Provisional Army was authorized, or a naval equipment with a view to actual hostility with a foreign Power was begun, an act passed directing the raising an additional regiment, to consist of three battalions, and this not merely for three years, as had been hitherto usual, but for five years.

On the 3d of March 1799, an act passed for the better organization of the troops of the United States, augmenting the numbers of the companies and regiments of infantry and cavalry, and directing that the second regiment of artillery should consist of four battalions instead of three. The provisions of this act were such as manifested the determination of Congress that the artillery thus directed, and that only, should be raised in any event. Thus the augmentation was not authorized for the purpose of meeting the crisis or of constituting a part of the temporary arrangements for defence, but as a resource for instruction and defence at all times and upon all occasions.

In the last session of Congress two acts were passed which materially affected the Military Establishment. One of which suspended all further recruiting in reference to the twelve regiments, but was silent in respect to the artillery; the other for authorizing the President to disband the infantry and cavalry, but expressly restraining him from diminishing the numbers of the artillery. Was he not therefore warranted in the assertion that the present establishment of the two regiments of artillery and engineers had been authorized with the greatest deliberation, and sanctioned as a favorite measure? That it was intended to be cherished as a nursery for those branches of military science which are most difficult of acquisition, which cannot be learnt or practised upon a sudden emergency? While every other part of the Military Establishment had experienced a radical reform, the organization of the artillery had hitherto remained exempt from objection and dispute.

This being the case, was it not incumbent on the gentleman, who had submitted the resolution before the House, to point out some of those discriminating circumstances, for the adoption of a measure at this time which has been hitherto inexpedient? Was it not incumbent on him to show that he did not intend the accomplishment of this measure as a prelude to the entire annihilation of the little germ of an army that now remains to this country?

For his part, MR. OTIS declared he was not ambitious of assuming either credit or responsibility that would arise from a reformation that would leave the country destitute of defence. He was willing that those who succeeded in the administration of the Government should reap the honor and advantage of this reform.

Whether the force at present authorized by law was more than adequate to the protection of our extended sea-board, and our no less extensive frontier, would clearly appear by a statement of the distribution of it that is intended when the regiments are complete.

He had taken some pains to inform himself of this fact, and had prepared a document to show, exclusive of officers commissioned and non-commissioned, the numbers that would be stationed at the respective posts. MR. OTIS then went minutely into a statement of the numbers allowed to every post and garrison where the artillery are to be employed; the results of which were as follows:

H. OF R.

Reduction of Artillery.

In Georgia and South Carolina - - -	192
Virginia and Maryland - - -	192
Pennsylvania - - -	144
New York - - -	288
Connecticut - - -	48
Rhode Island - - -	144
Massachusetts - - -	192
On Northwestern frontier, from Niagara to Mobile Bay. - - -	336

Total - - - - - 1536

And this number was to be divided among nearly thirty different garrisons.

Now let any man, acquainted with the extent of our country, and who knew how vulnerable it was in many points, forming a line in one direction of fifteen hundred miles, and in the other direction of more than two thousand: let any man decide whether such an extended country could be adequately defended by a force less than two thousand in number? When the numerous harbors to be defended, on the seaboard, and the number of forts on the western frontier, requiring garrisons to protect them from the attacks of the Indians, were considered, could any reasonable man affirm that two thousand artillerists and engineers were too many?

Cannot we support this establishment? Are we too poor? True economy itself would dictate a continuance of the force. For the militia, however useful in other circumstances, could afford but little defence to our forts and harbors without a corps of regular artillery to support and encourage their efforts. He put entirely out of view all considerations derived from the four existing regiments of infantry. They were entirely occupied in defending our western frontiers from Indian invasion. Their services were there required, as the militia could not be kept in readiness to repel sudden aggressions, but at an enormous expense.

We are extremely young in the science of engineering. However competent the militia may be to the great purpose of ultimately defending the country, they are not in such a situation as to be enabled to protect our forts and harbors on a sudden invasion. If the militia are incompetent to this end, we must rely upon a standing force. Infantry and cavalry might soon be created, but artillery and engineers were not the growth of a day. By diminishing these, you deprive yourselves of all the solid advantages to be derived from the militia, who in co-operation with a small regular force of this description would be formidable, but who, unaided by them, would be inefficient.

The resolution in question he also considered as quite premature. What change, he inquired, since the last session, when the maintenance of this battalion was recognised as expedient, had occurred in our foreign or domestic relations? A convention, it is said, is made with France. But we are ignorant of its terms, its nature, or extent. It has not yet been ratified, and when ratified, who will answer for its due execution, or the consequences which may ensue? If it restores our friendly relations with France, may it not produce a misunderstanding with other Powers? Do not circumstances exist that render it highly prudent to secure and strengthen our western posts? He was persuaded that if a powerful nation like the United States, should declare its inability or reluctance to support this moderate military force, it would incur the contempt of other nations. They would hardly condescend to treat with us for a compensation of injuries, or if they made treaties, they would violate them in the full confidence of impunity.

But it was said by the gentleman, that as this battalion had not yet been raised, the inference was obvious that it was not necessary.

But for what reason had the raising of it been delayed? It would be recollected that during the last session of Congress, the late Secretary of War presented to this House a project for reducing the two regiments of artillery to three battalions each, and in lieu of the fourth battalion to substitute a corps of artillerists and engineers, and a military academy, in which they might be initiated into the principles of these useful and necessary sciences. While that report was pending before the Legislature, it would have been improper and inexpedient to recruit for this fourth battalion. Had the substitute been adopted, the measure would have been superseded. But the report of the Secretary, though many parts of it were, in his opinion, highly deserving of attention, was not accepted by Congress. Since that period, the seat of Government had been removed. The former Secretary of the War Department had resigned, and some time of course had been lost; he knew, however, that some of the officers had been appointed, and had reason to believe that the corps would soon be perfectly organized. Another reason, Mr. OTIS alleged, was, that the intention of Government had been principally directed to organize the temporary army; it being conceived that the permanent establishment might proceed more leisurely. On the whole, Mr. O. said, that he was not one of those who were dismayed at the crisis in the political affairs of the country, and he trusted there was still a majority in the House, who, unawed by a change of times, and unshaken by the prospect of seeing their measures hereafter reversed, would persevere while they had the power in maintaining the principles and measures to which the nation was indebted for its dignity and prosperity. If the administration of the Government is destined to change, let those who succeed take upon themselves the burden of reform; and if it was intended by this resolution, that he should have an opportunity to partake in the glory and advantages of it, with all due acknowledgment, he begged to decline the offer.

Let those into whose hands the future Government might fall, realize the expectations that have been raised, let them perform all the engagements they have made, let them preserve and augment the public prosperity, and while they enjoyed the exclusive credit of their measures, they should on those conditions receive all the support and approbation which in his humble sphere he could afford. But he had no idea of adopting measures that would betray symptoms of regret and contrition for the past, and he hoped his friends would do nothing that should be construed into a death-bed repentance of a conduct which constituted their glory and their pride. Retiring himself from a short political career, he had the consolation to reflect that his efforts had been directed to the support of no measure, which would not be a source of satisfaction, if he were retiring from the sphere of existence. And he doubted not that the other gentlemen had been actuated by the same motives, and would unite in the evidence of their sober conviction, by voting against the resolution.

Mr. VARNUM observed that his colleague had not confined himself to a true statement of facts. It was well known that the military force raised in 1794 was for a standing army, of which character was the first regiment of artillery. But when the second regiment was raised, the country was in a state of alarm. We were told that war menaced us, and were terrified with the idea of invasion. Still, it was determined by Congress that the regiment should consist of no more than three battalions. If, then, at that period, when the danger was exaggerated by our fears, three battalions were thought sufficient, can more be thought necessary now, when there is no alarm, no danger of war or invasion?

Mr. V. was of opinion that the three battalions were sufficient for every rational purpose to be accomplished by artillery. He did not mean to say that they were equal to the defence of the country in case of invasion. The idea would be childish. In such a case our reliance must be upon the militia, upon the great body of the people themselves.

The gentleman who had preceded him had dwelt on the unfavorable condition of the militia, and the little knowledge we had yet acquired in relation to artillerists and engineers. Yet that gentleman must know, that in Massachusetts alone, there were forty companies of artillerists and engineers, well equipped and well disciplined, ready, at a moment's notice, to turn out in defence of the laws of the United States, or of that State. Other States were probably as well provided.

The only occasion, said Mr. V., we had for this description of troops, was to defend our harbors and posts from any sudden attack. For this purpose twenty-eight companies were fully adequate. On the occurrence of a great danger, we must not look up to these men, but to the people. Our true defence, our great and only defence, consisted in the militia. He believed them to be in such a state as to protect us from any danger.

Mr. RUTLEDGE was surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. He had stated no facts, he had referred to no documents, but had confined himself to a declaration of his belief that the four battalions of artillery are unnecessary, and had concluded by pronouncing, as he had frequently before done, a panegyric upon the militia. He thought as highly of the militia as the gentleman did, and he felt more for them. He did not desire to drag them from the plough, and the enjoyments of domestic felicity, to carry them to the seacoast, there to confine them for long periods in forts, under the pretence of a miserable economy. A comparative view of the relative expenses of a standing force and the militia, would convince the gentleman that the latter was by far the more expensive. Let him call to recollection the state of our fortifications at the close of the Revolutionary war. Fortifications then covered the face of the country. But no sooner was peace restored to us than the people believed it would last forever. Government received the same impulse, and suffered the defence of the country to fall into decay. And what were the consequences? We were now called upon to repair them. This very result would be produced by that pitiful spirit of economy that the gentleman wishes to revive.

Mr. R. spoke not from documents, but what he said was derived from actual observation. In travelling from the southward he had seen on the seacoast harbors and forts miserably garrisoned. His friend from Massachusetts (Mr. V.) had not been correct in his statement. The numbers he had assigned to different places were not those actually there, but those contemplated to be stationed when the establishment was complete. In the whole extent of South Carolina and Georgia, there were stationed only one hundred and ninety-two men, and in North Carolina, only one hundred and forty-two.

Discarding, as Mr. R. was compelled to do, all view to false economy, there was another view that naturally presented itself. Was the state of the nation materially changed; and, if it were, should that change have any influence on the measure under discussion? If the establishment of the two regiments of artillery was part of a permanent system, and not derived from any existing or apprehended state of things, and this had been his opinion, and was, he believed, the opinion of Congress, any change whatever in the state of the country would not affect the question before the House.

Artillery, said Mr. R., from their very nature, ought to be permanent. Infantry and cavalry can be soon raised and made effective; but not so with artillery. They require time to render them serviceable. We all know the force of artillery in war. The brilliant successes of the French were owing to the superiority of their artillery to that of their enemies. The First Consul had himself been an artillerist; he had been bred in the school of Paris. In the great war waged against Prussia, Frederick had converted almost the whole of his force into artillery; he had himself invented the horse artillery. By these means he had triumphed.

The Secretary of War had last session made a report recommending the formation of a military school. But his plan had not been embraced. This having failed, he hoped a strong Military Establishment would be substituted in its room.

Mr. R. was indisposed to diminish the corps of artillerists and engineers; not that he wished to keep up an army for purposes of parade; the present establishment was not more than competent to our defence. If a reduction were to be made, he would much rather diminish the infantry or cavalry than the artillery, for the reasons he had already assigned.

Whether the state of the country was changed, or was not, it was not for him to say. If called upon to give his opinion, he would say that he thought the state of the country was changed. Two years ago the prospect of war was threatening. He now believed we should have peace; and if we did obtain it, it would be owing to the exertions of his honorable friend and of those who acted with him. To the energetic measures pursued by them, by which the people had been roused from apathy to a lively exertion of their powers and an exhibition of their spirit, we should owe its blessings. Their patriotic labors had warded off the dangers that threatened us, and prevented the adoption of measures in which we might have found our ruin. Mr. R. concluded with declaring that it was not for him to say what changes had taken place in the internal situation of the country.

Mr. SHEPARD said that a great expense had already been incurred in raising the artillery, which would be useless if they were now dismissed. He believed, too, the artillery to be the most important part of our Military Establishment. For this and other reasons, in the expression of which other members had anticipated him, he was against the motion for the reduction.

Mr. S. SMITH was perfectly agreed, on general principles, with the gentleman who had just sat down. A preference ought certainly to be given to that description of troops which required much previous instruction before they could be useful. In 1794 he had heartily concurred in adopting measures calculated to call into existence gentlemen of capacity to be instructed in enginery. An additional regiment had been urged at that time. It had been urged in 1796. A report was afterwards made of the number of men required. Upon that report the new regiment had been bottomed. It was then declared it would be no defence against an invading enemy; and it was replied that it was proposed to organize it for the particular purpose of defending our ports and harbors, and as a school of information. At that time we had the prospect of a war before us. Still, it was understood as a part of our permanent arrangement. If the establishment then formed was sufficient, why was it not now sufficient, when we have no new forts except those in the South-western Territory?

A proof of the uselessness of the additional battalion, said Mr. S., was derived from the conduct of the Executive. Neither the Secretary of War nor the President had called it into service.

The great object of the regular troops was to take care of the arms, forts, &c., and not ultimately to defend them. That object could only be accomplished by the militia, on whom, in periods of danger, we must rely for our substantial defence; for no man can suppose ninety-six men equal to the defence of Fort Mifflin, if attacked by an invading enemy.

Mr. S. said he thought the present number of artillerists sufficient. Indeed, one company might be spared from Fort Jay, and one from Newport. Fort Jay was in the vicinity of a populous city, from which any aid could be obtained. The harbor at Newport he considered of the utmost importance, as he thought in a time of war we must look to that port for the protection of our Navy.

Mr. S. was not an enemy to measures of defence. He had been among the foremost in proposing and supporting them. But he thought the grand defence of this country rested in the Navy and Militia. Let us then encourage and advance these. They will be our true friends in times of danger. Congress had applied a sum of money to be laid out in arms to be put into the hands of the militia; and yet not one stand of arms had been given to that useful body. Why had this not been done? The want of money he presumed was the cause. He was not among those who wished to complete the destruction of defensive measures. Nor was he for rushing into childish expense, barely to make a boast of our strength.

Mr. S. affirmed that the fourth battalion had been raised in a back-handed way, and not in the fair, regular manner, that had been pretended. Without taking up the subject by itself, a bill had been passed in 1799 barely directing that a regiment should consist of four battalions; and so back-handed did the President deem it, that he had never raised the additional battalion, not considering it the wish of the House that it should be raised; and, as to the Secretary of War, he had given it up last session for a military school.

One gentleman was greatly alarmed about nations not treating with us, as if our having one or two battalions of artillery would have any influence upon foreign nations. No injury could be done to the country by the proposed reduction. It only affected the future establishment. It did not diminish in the least the existing force. As to the measures of the new Administration, no one can tell what they will be. He trusted that they would be what they ought to be.

It appeared to Mr. S. strange to urge the raising of a new body of the military while the old body remained so incomplete. There were nominal corps in existence without a man. Why appoint officers for such corps? But if officers are wanted, there were one hundred and fifty vacancies in the old corps; fill them. The gentleman from Massachusetts had shown that this corps was useless. Mr. S. had shown that it had been authorized by the Legislature without having been called into existence by the President when war threatened us, and now when gentlemen tell us they expect (and he believed they expected truly) peace with all the world, we are called upon—strange inconsistency!—to organize this force.

The sum of forty-five thousand dollars, to be saved by the proposed retrenchment, had been called pitiful. He was far from thinking forty-five thousand dollars a pitiful sum.

DECEMBER, 1800.

Reduction of Artillery.

H. OF R.

Mr. S. disclaimed harboring the most distant idea of diminishing the present effective force of the United States, and more particularly that of the artillery. That at present in existence he thought useful and sufficient.

Mr. H. LEE thought a view could be taken of the subject before the House that would demonstrate the inexpediency of adopting the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Let a view be taken of our forts, their distance from each other, the amount of our ordnance, and our infant Navy, and the number of men required for all these objects; and he would ask the mover of the resolution whether he could persist in his purpose? A statement had been made of the number of our forts, and of the men that garrisoned them. He would call upon gentlemen to say, whether the number of men was more than adequate to meet ordinary objects that arose during a state of peace. This was not sufficient. We must contemplate our predicament in a state of war. The militia had been represented, in such a state of things, as our great defence. But it was a fact, that before they could be operative a very inferior force might sweep out of our hands many of our most valuable forts.

The gentleman from Maryland had given it as his opinion, that the force stationed at Norfolk might be reduced. Mr. L. held an opposite opinion. He knew Elizabeth river to be very important, and he also knew that it was badly protected. If you do not defend your forts well, you had much better not do it at all. Newport and New York were also very important stations. Hampton road commands your attention. How, under your present establishment, would you defend your Navy riding in that road? In case of a war with England, your little Navy must fly to your shores for safety; and, when there, how are they to be protected?

This battalion not having been raised by the President has been tortured into an argument against the measure, under the belief that the President thought it useless. Mr. L. said he was disposed to pay the highest respect to the President of the United States, and he was happy to hear other gentlemen unaccustomed to express such respect, unite with him on this occasion. But he was, notwithstanding, not disposed to sacrifice his own opinion, though he thought the conduct of the President had been otherwise satisfactorily explained by a gentleman who had gone before him in the debate.

Mr. L. wished gentlemen to feel the full force of those remarks which had enforced the great weight of artillery in military operations. In the various campaigns conducted by the Chief that was now no more, we were without artillery, in consequence of which much American blood had been spilled. From the want of artillery we had lost Ninety-Six. In the loss of that place a fatal blow had been inflicted upon our arms. One engineer of talents would have saved it.

Mr. L. was not disposed, by adopting the motion, to cut up by the roots the only military school we have left. It was within our power, and it was undoubtedly our duty, to retrench all useless expenditure of public moneys. But he held it to be a still higher duty not to hazard the welfare of the country. If you are determined to reduce the Army, strike at the infantry and cavalry. The evil which you will then do may soon be repaired. A few weeks will make soldiers of this description. But, if by a wanton blow, you destroy science, study, and experience, you cannot soon repair the loss.

The SPEAKER said he rose to observe that it was not in order to make use of arguments derived from the execution of a law by the President, as no Constitutional control could be exercised by this House.

Mr. MACON said that the true question was whether the House thought it necessary at this time to raise the additional battalion. Does such a state of things exist as requires its being raised? If it does not, it ought not to be raised, the nominal existence of the battalion on paper to the contrary notwithstanding. As it never yet in reality existed, and we had done very well without it, he saw no occasion why we should call it into being now. As to the alleged use of it at a future period, he thought the idea futile. For then twenty battalions, for aught we can say, may be thought necessary.

Gentlemen had said that the old argument of saving the public money had been used. Mr. M. said he thought the argument a very good one on all occasions. On all occasions, unless a good reason could be assigned for spending the public money, it ought not to be spent. Suppose you raise the battalion. Experience will soon demonstrate its uselessness; and then you will discharge the men, and give them three months pay to go home with.

We have been told that in a certain event, not very improbable, the Western posts will be struck at, and we shall be obliged to go to war. Mr. M. hoped that the days of alarm were past, and the reign of terror over. From whom was this blow to come? He did not know any nation likely to strike at our posts. We had got, it was said, a treaty with France. If so, we had nothing to fear from that quarter. If no greater sum than forty-five thousand dollars was saved by the proposed reduction, he should still be for it, as he thought the additional battalion altogether useless.

Mr. KITCHELL made a few remarks, not heard, and concluded with moving the taking the yeas and nays, for which a sufficient number of members rose.

Mr. CHAMPLIN said, that he had been among those who thought the aggressions of France not only justified, but called for a declaration of war from us. He had been for taking the direct road. But as other gentlemen had differed from him in opinion, he had voted for the new regiment of artillery as a measure calculated, in connexion with other measures, to produce that, step by step, which he could not directly obtain. He had therefore voted for the additional regiment then as a temporary arrangement. But though, when first formed, he voted for the regiment as a part of the system of defensive measures, he now thought it would be permanently useful.

H. OF R.

Reduction of Artillery.

DECEMBER, 1800.

In reply to the remarks of gentlemen, Mr. M. could assure them that several officers had already been appointed. When, at the close of the last session, Congress had manifested a disposition to destroy every military arrangement, they had, notwithstanding, been impressed with the expediency of maintaining the two regiments of artillery. Nothing had since occurred to change his opinion.

Mr. RANDOLPH said that all the attention he had bestowed on the subject convinced him of the justness of the ideas expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina. The true question had been misrepresented. That did not consist in estimating, abstractly considered, in relation to a future period, the benefits or inconveniences attached to an increase in the establishment of artillery. The simple question was whether this additional body was necessary now. That it was not necessary he was fully convinced, as it had been dispensed with in periods of apprehension and danger. This conviction confirmed him in his adherence to those ideas which had been forcibly expressed by the member from North Carolina.

The House had been told by a gentleman from South Carolina, that from tenderness to the militia he would dispense with their services. In my opinion, said Mr. R., this is a mistaken tenderness, that neither he wished to manifest, nor did the militia themselves desire to receive. In a similar strain of affected tenderness a Roman Emperor had excused a Roman Senate from the exercise of their legislative duties, and had informed them that from a regard to their ease he would pass laws for them; and that Senate had abjectly returned their thanks to the Emperor for his kindness to them. He hoped that no similar proposition would be made to that House, or similar answer returned by them.

In his belief that this corps was unnecessary, Mr. R. was confirmed by the remarks that had fallen from the gentleman from Rhode Island. That gentleman had informed the House that the measure had received his approbation as tending to involve the country in a war with France: and was the House, at this day, to be called upon to adopt, piecemeal, those measures that had been framed for the production of this effect?

The gentleman from Massachusetts had sounded the tocsin of party, and had called upon a majority of that House to meet with firmness what he conceived an honorable political death. He had proclaimed his indisposition to recede from those dignified measures that had hitherto been pursued. Mr. R. confided in the integrity of the gentleman, and did not entertain a doubt of his receiving his most cheerful co-operation in that change of measures which he had portrayed as impending over the House; and he was happy to say, that if such a disposition were manifested by that gentleman, and by those who acted with him, it would be met by correspondent sentiments of harmony on his side of the House.

The question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and it passed in the negative—yeas 39, nays 46, as follows:

Mr. MACON, from the Committee of Claims, made report on the petition of Mr. L'Enfant, that the petitioner had no just claim against the Government of the United States—which report was read a second time by unanimous consent, and agreed to without a division.

Mr. COOPER called up his resolution for appointing a committee, to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act directing the valuation of dwelling-houses, and enumeration of slaves.

On motion of Mr. OTIS, the motion was so altered as to make the reference to the Committee of Ways and Means, and then agreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. COOPER,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States."

Ordered, That the said motion be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

THURSDAY, December 18.

Another member, to wit: JAMES SHEAFE, from New Hampshire, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the situation of certain tracts of land which have been appropriated for the support of public schools and seminaries of learning, and for the support of religion, situated within the limits of a tract of land granted to John Cleves Symmes and his associates, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio; and that the said committee take into their consideration what meaasures are necessary to be taken in order to render the lands so appropriated productive of the benefits contemplated to result therefrom; and that the said committee have power to report thereon by bill, or otherwise.

Ordered. That Mr. PINCKNEY, Mr. IMLAY, Mr. VARNUM, Mr. MORRIS, and Mr. M'MILLAN, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

FRIDAY, December 19.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee to whom was referred so much of the President's Speech as relates to the Judiciary of the United States, presented a bill to provide for the convenient organization of the Courts of the United States; which, having been read twice, was referred to a Committee of the whole House on Monday.

The Committee on Unfinished Business reported in part a list of certain laws relative to revenue which expired with the present session, and recommended to refer the expediency of continuing them to the Committee of Ways and Means. Which report, being read twice, was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY.

Mr. CLAIBORNE laid before the House, a memorial of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory, stating some inconveniences which had arisen from the want of authority in the Governor to issue writs of election, in case of improper returns; suggesting also the want of disposition on the part of Governor Sargent to have the General Assembly organized, and stating the advantage which would accrue to the Territory if an earlier day for the meeting of the Legislature was fixed by a law of Congress. The memorial was referred to Mr. CLAIBORNE, Mr. GOODRICH, and Mr. NOTT, with authority to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DAVIS moved the reference to the same committee of certain resolutions submitted by him to the House during the last session, but then not acted upon, stating the alleged existence of several unconstitutional laws in the Mississippi Territory, whereby unjustifiable extortions were practised on the citizens.

The resolutions were read. After the reading, Mr. GRISWOLD desired a postponement of the motion for a reference till Monday, which was agreed to.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. H. LEE, from the committee to whom was referred the several propositions made commemorative of the services of GEORGE WASHINGTON, reported a bill for the erection of a mausoleum, differing in no other respects from the former bill reported, except as to the materials of which the mausoleum is to be constructed; the present bill directing it to be made of stone, the former one directing it to be made of marble. He said that the committee, after maturely considering the relative merits of all the plans proposed, had preferred the mausoleum, as well from its superior durability as cheapness, to any other.

The bill was read twice, and referred to a Committee of the whole House on Tuesday.

MONDAY, December 22.

AFFAIRS OF MISSISSIPPI.

The motion made on Friday by Mr. DAVIS, to refer to the committee to whom had been referred a memorial of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory, on the official conduct of Governor Sargent, the following resolution, (concluding a specification of unconstitutional laws enacted by the Governor in conjunction with the Judges, and of sundry oppressive acts committed by him) viz: "Resolved, That the laws passed by the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory, and the petition of Cato West and others, heretofore presented to the House, together with all the documents relative thereto, be transmitted to the President of the United States," was taken up; and, on the question of reference.

Mr. GRISWOLD said the whole subject, of which the resolutions now offered formed a part, was already referred to a committee. The charges laid in the resolutions were serious. To refer them would be to give an indirect sanction to their truth, and he thought any such sanction highly improper until they are proved. The committee already appointed had full power to investigate all the facts that existed. The result of their investigation would be reported, and it would then be time enough to express an opinion on the propositions now offered. These same resolutions had been offered to the House the last session, and had then been rejected. Mr. G. hoped the same course would now be pursued.

Mr. DAVIS said he had always thought that a committee, to ascertain facts, and to shape business for that House, proceeded from a knowledge, that a committee consisting of a few members could with more facility gain a knowledge of those facts than the House in its collective capacity could do. He could, therefore, see no good cause for withholding the resolutions from the select committee, who were appointed to consider the remonstrance from the Legislature of the Mississippi Territory. His resolutions contained facts, and he was ready to support them, from the documents before him. It would be criminal in the House to withhold from the committee any facts it was in their power to furnish. If this resolution contains misstatements, let the gentleman from Connecticut show them, and he would readily join in expunging them, so as only to let pure facts go to the committee. He wished no imposition; he wanted only a fair examination into the conduct of Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory, whose administration had been marked with so much restlessness and discontent, and he believed justly. At the last session of Congress some alleviation was intended to be offered to the distresses of this oppressed people; but their Governor had defeated the object by omitting to give notice of the election, as he ought to have done. He was enjoined, by the laws of the last session, to give notice of the election, and to appoint a judge or judges to attend it; he had omitted to do so, and had refused to issue a writ of election (doubting for the first time his power.) This conduct had drawn from their Legislature a remonstrance which required the further interposition of Congress, to enable them to organize their body. This remonstrance makes a general allusion to the unconstitutional laws made by the Governor and Judges; the resolution particularizes those laws, and will bring them in a precise manner before the committee. If gentlemen doubted the accuracy of the resolution, he would convince those, who were not opposed to conviction, that it was correct. [Here Mr. D. read several of the laws made by the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory, and some clauses of the Federal Constitution to prove that the laws were unconstitutional.] Here then are abundant proofs of unconstitutional and oppressive laws, under which the people of that Territory labor, and of which they complain; and will this House afford no relief, from a tyrant, who has trampled on their rights with a tiger's stride; and plucked from them, by voracious and disgraceful laws, their hard earnings?

H. OF R.

The Governor of that Territory receives annually a salary of two thousand dollars for his services, and each of the Judges a salary of eight hundred dollars per annum. This was supposed by the law a competent compensation; their acceptance of those offices for that sum acknowledges it to be enough; still you find laws here that give the Governor, a fee of eight dollars on tavern licenses, &c. As well might the President of the United States claim fees for giving patents or any other writing to which he affixes his name. The Judges of this Territory, who, conjointly with the Governor, made the laws have taken care of themselves. Hear their table of fees, giving to themselves fees for certain services, rendered by them in their Judicial capacity. And is not this a shameful abuse of the Legislative power they are vested with? [Here Mr. D. read the table of fees.] Congress cannot raise their own wages; the Constitution has wisely forbidden it, yet Winthrop Sargent and the Judges give themselves what fees they please, without regarding the spirit of the Constitution. If this resolution accompanies the remonstrance of the Legislature of the Mississippi Territory, the committee will be able to judge whether the Governor withheld the writ of election from a fear of exceeding his power, or whether he did it to prevent the organization of the Legislature; for had the Legislature been formed, those very laws by which he and the Judges satiate their avarice, would have been repealed.

The gentleman from Connecticut says, that the resolution contains direct charges against a man high in office, and this House ought not to sanction them until they are proved. I trust I have proved them by a reference to the laws now before me, and if they are not proved, let the gentleman take the laws and show wherein I am incorrect; and so much as is found defective, let him expunge. The gentleman says, that despotism is charged against the Governor. Why, said Mr. D., what stronger proof of tyranny or despotism can you ask, than to see a man set no bounds to his conduct, and break through the limits set for him by the supreme laws of the land?

It is true this resolution was offered by me at the last session, but it was not rejected as the gentleman supposes—it was not acted upon; but if the gentlemen from Connecticut, and other gentlemen on this floor, after seeing that Winthrop Sargent has openly violated the Constitution of the United States, consider him a fit object to rally round; if, after they see he has violated the ordinance designed for the government of that Territory, they consider him a fit object for them to cling to; if after seeing the shameful abuse of the Legislative power vested in his hands, and his disgraceful avarice; if, after seeing and hearing all this, they consider that he acted consistently with Federal principles, and is entitled to Federal support, they will unite, and stifle this resolution here, and never let the committee see it. It may be that this resolution will be lost to-day, perhaps it would be to-morrow, but the time is approaching when the conduct of a public officer will not be veiled in this manner. The sun of Federalism is nearly set—not three months, and it sets forever.

If this resolution contained anything new or strange there would be some excuse for the objections made to a reference; but its having been presented during the last session must have imprinted the facts charged in it on the minds of every member present. Besides this, those complaints have been made from the first hour Winthrop Sargent came into office, and have been heard from one extremity of the continent to the other. It is a fact well known, that at the time this man was appointed Governor of the Mississippi Territory, he was hated and despised by the people of the Western country. His pride, his insolence, and tyrannical disposition, had rendered his name odious to the Western country. In this, the gentleman who represents the Northwestern Territory, and who was nearer the theatre of his actions than I was, can bear me witness. Still he was appointed. We felt indignant at the promotion of such a character by our Government; but we have guardedly repressed our resentment.

The object, however, for which this man was set over us, has not been accomplished. His mission has failed. Though we felt the just indignation of freemen, we had more wit in our resentment than to commit any extravagant acts that would authorize "the chief who now commands," to lead "a heaven-born band" among us. We were apprized of the disposition; we were apprized that an excuse was all that was wanted. But the reign of terror is almost at an end. If you want to conciliate the affections of the Western people, and to bring them over to your Administration, refer this resolution. If you do this, they will suppose that the complaints of their fellow-citizens are heard and attended to, and that there is a hope of speedy redress; but if you reject it, the reverse will be the effect.

You have no idea, said Mr. D., of the mischief this man has done in the Western country; particularly in the Mississippi Territory. His conduct has reared a powerful opposition to your Administration, which will grow with our growth and increase with our strength, unless you remedy the evils that oppress our suffering fellow-citizens. His conduct has alienated the affections of the Western people from your Government; and this effect it will have while our fellow-citizens are suffered to complain unheard, and the conduct of their oppressor is justified. Ask a well informed man from that Territory, or from almost any part of the Western country, Why are you opposed to the administration of the Government? He will tell you in a moment, "I know, that Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory, has openly violated the Constitution of the United States in sundry instances. I know he has outrageously violated the ordinance of that Territory. I think he has shamefully exercised the legislative power put in his hands, by making it a cloak under which he has exacted the most exorbitant fees from the people to gratify his avarice. I know he has never received even a rebuke from the Chief Magistrate for all this. I consider Winthrop Sargent but a small vein of a great body; I am acquainted with the pulsations of that vein; I know it beats towards aristocracy; I know it swells with tyranny and despotism. I consider the great body that feeds this small vein as also contaminated." This will be the answer you will receive; and this will eternally be the language you will hear from those people, until you release them from the tyrannical bondage under which they are laid by the oppressions of their Federal Government.

Mr. OTIS was averse the last session, when this subject was before the House, to commit himself by a vote without possessing an accurate knowledge of the circumstances attending it. The same want of information under which he then labored he still felt. Casting his eyes over the resolutions just read he discovered that they contained two serious declarations; the first, that laws hostile to the happiness and prosperity of the citizens of the Mississippi Territory, and at variance with the Constitution, had been enacted; the second, that these laws had been passed under malignant intentions.

On the truth of these declarations Mr. OTIS was not prepared to decide. He required that information which the committee already appointed would be most likely to furnish. If the gentleman from Kentucky had moved the appointment of a committee, either to inquire into the expediency of repealing those laws that were complained of, or to report facts whereupon an impeachment could be grounded, he would have pursued the usual course; but when he commits a speech to writing (for by no other name could he designate the string of resolutions which he had moved) criminating in terms of harshness the conduct of a public officer, he considered him as proposing an unprecedented step. As well might he move to refer what had fallen from him in debate this day.

In his opinion, Mr. O. said, the subject desired by the gentleman from Kentucky could be accomplished with much greater propriety in the usual way, than in that now proposed.

But the gentleman asks, if the charges are true that are contained in the resolutions, why not pass them; if false why not expunge them? How, said Mr. O., are these charges proved? He confided in the veracity of the gentleman, and was persuaded that he would not say what he did not himself believe; but his belief could not impart to other gentlemen the same strength of conviction with himself.

If the people of this Territory are really oppressed, if they groan under the pressure of tyrannical and unconstitutional laws, let those laws be examined, and repealed. But when he found a gentleman coming from the neighborhood of the Territory, actuated by personal and local considerations, and animated by a zeal that dictated sentiments which in cooler moments the gentleman himself would not approve, he could not avoid hesitating in taking his opinion as the guide of his vote.

This sir, said Mr. O., is not a question of Federalism or anti-Federalism. If the sun of Federalism, as the gentleman from Kentucky asserts, be set; if the Administration be changed; may not such a measure as this strike back upon its authors, and produce a change in the tide of events. If the sun of Federalism be set, would it not be unkind in us, the very day after it, to suffer the gentlemen to injure themselves by such an act?

I hope, continued Mr. O., that the sun of Federalism is not set. If it really be set, I hope that the satellite which that gentleman inhabits will not soon experience the want of its animating and protecting influence. I believe it is not set, and ardently hope that that quarter of the Union, as well as all the rest, will long continue to feel its vivifying effects.

It might be proper to repeal the obnoxious laws, without branding with corrupt motives those who enacted them. Mr. O. concluded with declaring that in the accomplishment of this purpose, if examination and inquiry warranted it, as well as in every proper step to gratify the citizens of the Mississippi Territory, he would heartily concur.

Mr. RANDOLPH made some remarks on the reference of the memorial of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory.

The SPEAKER said the question was on the reference of the resolutions, and not the memorial.

Mr. RANDOLPH replied that his observations had respect to a resolution founded on the memorial, and requested that it should be read.

The SPEAKER put the question whether it should be read, which was carried. And after the reading of those parts of the resolutions before the House which were requested to be read,

Mr. RANDOLPH again rose.—I do not find any assertion made in these propositions the truth of which may not be substantiated, by every member, from the documents before the House. The first proposition is predicated on the resolutions of the citizens of the Mississippi Territory; and with respect to the other propositions, which gentlemen say "may possibly be true," if they would give themselves the trouble of turning to the code of laws for the Mississippi Territory, which had been laid before them, in an official shape, by the President of the United States, they will find no charge founded on them that is not completely substantiated.

I do not consider the resolutions as covering dubious ground, but as resting upon firm facts; and the gentleman from Kentucky, who introduced these resolutions, ought to be contemplated as discharging his duty as a member of this House, as an upright citizen, and as a neighbor to the oppressed Territory. There is no misapplied feeling expressed in the resolutions; on the contrary, they contain little more than abstract propositions. I trust, therefore, that this House will throw no impediment in the way of examination. I trust they will be referred to a committee, and that such committee will present the whole affair before the people and the Government.

The Government was called upon, if it regarded its honor, to inquire into these charges. They were high and serious ones, and, if true, required immediate and decisive redress. The gentleman from Massachusetts ought to co-operate in the accomplishment of this end, without involving in the discussion considerations of Federalism, of which he may consider himself as the primary orb, and other gentlemen as the satellites.

Mr. OTIS explained. He made no such allusion, either to himself or the gentleman from Kentucky, of whom he had only spoken as of one who inhabited a satellite—meaning by that phrase Kentucky.

Mr. RANDOLPH.—I did not assert what the gentleman denies. I did not say the gentleman actually did, but may, consider himself as the primary orb.

I hope the House, after what I have said, will no longer be insulted by the declaration, on this floor, that laws officially communicated may have been passed. I hope that, in any event, effectual measures will be adopted, which shall not even wound the squeamishness of gentlemen.

When this officer was appointed, these charges were made and supported; the unconstitutional laws existed; still he was armed and fortified with destructive power.

Sir, said Mr. R., I never wish to blunt the sword of justice by directing it against innocence or virtue; I wish it only turned against the criminal. The object of the resolutions is to acquit Governor Sargent, if innocent—to convict him, if guilty. Is not this fair; is it not honorable; and ought not this House to promote it?

Mr. HARPER.—I apprehend that the honorable member has totally mistaken the course of the business. He was corrected when he rose, but he still persists in error. The people who complain ought to be heard; they will be heard; they will obtain justice. What is the object of the motion? Does it not embrace a string of resolutions traducing a high public officer? This was the object of it. There was no other object. If there be another, what is it? The motion is not in the form of an address to the President desiring from him the removal of an officer who had violated his duty, but it offers you a string of preambulatory stigmatizing remarks, and concludes with directing certain laws, alleged to be unconstitutional, to be transmitted to the President. Does the President want these laws? Is he ignorant of them? Had he not them before we received them from him?

Are we then, by this side wind, to hint to the President that we wish the Governor of the Mississippi Territory removed? It would be more consistent with the ideas of honor expressed by the gentleman from Virginia, to come forward fairly and avowedly with such an address. Such a measure would certainly be novel, but still it might be right.

These were not the plain, fair means pursued for the attainment of an avowed end. The means were very different. They tended solely to the traduction by this House of a public officer.

The gentleman from Kentucky had called the Governor of the Mississippi Territory, after heaping reproaches upon his character, a vein of the great trunk. The allusion did not answer his purpose; but if it did, I will ask the gentleman, whether, even if the vein were removed, the great trunk would not still remain? The simile was, therefore, nugatory.

The same question had been before the House at the close of the last session. It had been then offered on the very last day. It had been laid aside. The same circumstances, then existing, attend it still. It is inherently the same.

The contents of the resolution had gone forth to the world. They had carried with them that weight that was derived from their having been offered by a member of this House. They struck at the honor and integrity of a man, who to the age of fifty-six years sustained a character, not only unimpeached, but embellished with many virtues. Though this character may be impaired by more recent incidents, since his appointment to the government of the Mississippi Territory, of which Mr. H. was entirely ignorant, all the charges now made were opposed by the preceding acts of his life.

Upon the whole, if a proper plan be pursued, instead of sanctioning these resolutions by a reference of them, a committee may be appointed, who may inquire extensively into the subject; after reporting to us all the information they can collect, the gentleman from Kentucky can add his, and a just decision be then made. This conduct will be more appropriate than any implied address to the President. For if the charges are true, we should be lost to political integrity, and should betray our trusts, if we did not immediately take higher ground; if we did not proceed ad hominem, and impeach the flagrant violator of his duty; and I pledge myself, that in such event, if no other member shall, to move his impeachment.

Mr. CLAIBORNE.—I cannot subscribe to the character given to Winthrop Sargent by the gentleman from South Carolina; and when that gentleman calls him amiable, I can only tell him that such an opinion is opposed by the united voice of the Western world. But on this subject I must forbear, for with the whole part of Western America I have feelings that would hurry me into an expression of sentiments which a member of this House should not indulge.

The gentleman from South Carolina was not truly informed on this subject. The memorial, on which some of the charges were made in the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, was addressed to Congress, and not to the President of the United States. It was fair to suppose that the President was unacquainted with its contents; for had he known them, it were to be hoped, that, for the sake of vindicating the rights of an oppressed people, he would have removed their tyrants.

The gentlemen from South Carolina and Massachusetts declare themselves averse to the reference of the resolutions, lest by it they should give a sanction to the charges preferred. But does the House sanction the facts set forth in a petition by referring it? Do they not, on the contrary, refer for the very purpose of ascertaining them? Was not this the case every day? Was such a resolution or petition, on this ground, ever before opposed? If it had been, it was not since he was a member of this House.

If the resolutions be referred, what will be the effect? If the charges exhibited are found to be untrue, the investigation will terminate in the triumph of innocence; if, on the other hand they are proved to be true, he would proceed further—as far as the gentleman from South Carolina—and apply a Constitutional corrective. By a Constitutional corrective, he meant an impeachment; and he would not only have this man punished as a tyrant, but he would hold forth his punishment as a terror to others.

Mr. GRISWOLD.—The remarks made by the gentleman go to show an indisposition in members of this House to investigate the subject. This is not the fact. We say that the investigation is in a train of being made. The petition of Cato West, and the memorial of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory, have been referred; under these circumstances, the subject generally is before the committee. To go further at present, would, we say, be wrong. For if we do refer also the facts stated in the resolutions, we take it for granted that they are true, and refer to the committee the expediency of adopting an inference from them. The facts charged might be true, for anything Mr. G. knew. He knew not whether they were true or not. He knew nothing of Winthrop Sargent; he was no acquaintance of his. But, Mr. G. said, he was swayed by higher motives than those which were personal. He knew that the House had no right to pass censure upon any man, until his conduct had been fairly investigated, and his criminality proved. Then, and then only, had they a right to pronounce upon the character of any man.

Never before had he seen a resolution prefaced by such a number of whereases, only tending to place the character of this man upon the rack. This was introducing an old principle—a principle which it was our boast that we had discarded. A rack was brought into this House—not, as of old, to rack the body, but what was still worse, to rack the mind.

Gentlemen say the charges are either true or false; if false, refer them to a committee, and that committee will, on inquiry, tell you so, and thus you will get rid of them; and if true, they ought to be acted upon by this House. But who could depend upon their truth? Few members had investigated them in such a way as to form an honest conviction. If they shall appear to be true, after a faithful inquiry, the course proposed by his friend from South Carolina ought to be taken. The culprit should be summoned before the bar of this House, and should be impeached.

Mr. G. concluded by repeating that he was against the resolutions; not because he was averse to an investigation, but because he felt averse to censure any man for offences uninvestigated and unproved.

Mr. HARPER here explained what had fallen from him in a previous part of the debate. He had not said, or, if he had said, it had not been his design to say, that these resolutions were intended to traduce the character of an individual, but that such were their effect. He knew nothing about the intention of the mover.

Mr. DENNIS thought the question then before the House an improper one. For, whether adopted or rejected, it would inadequately express the opinion of members. On the one hand, it was contended, that if agreed to, it would contain a sanction of the truth of serious charges against the character of a public officer; and if rejected, it would express an opinion that those charges were false. Mr. D., who was not prepared either to approve or condemn the conduct of Winthrop Sargent, hoped the House would pursue another course; and if, in conformity to his wishes, the resolutions then offered should be dismissed, he would himself propose a more general resolution, for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, and report to the House the result of their inquiries. Such a resolution would convey neither approbation nor censure; and it would be free from that long string of preambles which prefaced the present resolutions. These were certainly improper; for, however gentlemen might concur in certain general deductions, few men agreed in all points in the reasons assigned for any particular act.

Mr. CRAIK thought the object of the resolution itself improper. He desired to know in what part of the Constitution was to be found the right to move for the dismission of a public officer, or to impose a censure upon him? What was the view of the mover of the resolutions? He had not said that his object was to impeach. On the contrary, his real object appeared to be to obtain from this House an expression of their censure against a high public agent; and by the expression of such censure to effect his removal. Such a step would be improper. It involved in it the exercise of powers which we did not possess. If the object of the gentleman, as professed, was to communicate information to the President, this object could be attained by the gentleman by his withdrawing the papers then before the House, and delivering them, in the capacity of a private citizen, to the President, who alone was authorized by the Constitution to remove a public officer, except by impeachment.

Mr. DAVIS.—The opposition to these resolutions has assumed various shapes. One gentleman is startled at the long preface, another is alarmed at the number of whereases, and others say that by referring them, you will sanction the truth of the charges. This was not the case. They stand upon the same footing with any petition presented, which always contains some facts, to test the truth of which a reference is invariably made. The reference amounts to nothing more than an acknowledgment by this House that it is their duty to hear the complaints of the people, and when heard to inquire into their truth. Will not the committee, when appointed, compare the charges made with the facts that are proved, and from such a comparison make a report; and will not that report be open to examination, revision, and amendment, by any member of this House?

The gentleman from South Carolina, as was usual with him, had made remarks on this subject, without knowing where to begin; and had asked if the laws complained of had not been presented by the President to the House? It was certainly true that they had been so presented. But this was saying very little for the President, when it admitted that the President had seen the laws that violated the Constitution, and oppressed the people, without checking the officer who had usurped unconstitutional power, and exercised flagrant oppression.

The gentleman from South Carolina had cailed the charges contained in the resolutions mere assertions. Mr. D. denied the truth of the remark. There was not a charge made that was not proved. If he had told the House that he had laid hold of the threads of a conspiracy, he might have been charged with making mere assertions.

Mr. D. was not acquainted with the early character of Winthrop Sargent. But he was acquainted, which was more material, with his late and present character. He did know that in his recent actions he had exhibited the character of a tyrant. It was very probable that before he was corrupted by power he was a virtuous man. But with him, as with many other men, no sooner had he got power, than he assumed the character of the tyrant, and oppressed those whom he had been appointed to protect.

Mr. D. cared but little for the present fate of his motion; for, let the House decide as it would on this day, a proper decision would soon be had. The reign of terror in this country would soon reach its end.

Mr. MACON.—The subject already referred does not embrace the contents of this resolution. The memorial from the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory only relates to the election for Washington county, and the conduct of the Governor in relation to it; whereas the charges on which this resolution is founded are numerous and dissimilar.

The subject had been, last session, introduced at a late day, and had from that circumstance been laid aside. He was then convinced, and still was convinced, that the charges are true. They are specially stated and supported by a reference to their proofs. Can more be required? Why not then refer them? Will not a committee inquire into their truth? and should they be found untrue will not the committee say so? A reference presented the only course whereby justice could be done to those who complain; to the country at large; and to the individual criminated.

It appeared to Mr. M. that it became that House to be more attentive to these charges, as they came from a territory unrepresented in our Federal Councils.

Gentlemen say, impeach this officer, if guilty. Could there be a more appropriate mode of leading to this effect, than by the appointment of a committee, on whose reported statement of facts the House would be justified in acting? This had been the uniform mode. It had been practised in the case of the failure of the Western expedition under St. Clair. A committee had been appointed to inquire into the subject; though he granted that he did not recollect that the word whereas (so much objected to on this occasion) had been then used.

Nothing had been more common than to appoint a committee, and then give them certain instructions; this resolution was nothing more. But we are told from all quarters that we cannot pass the resolution without sanctioning the charges, and staining the character of Governor Sargent. It was not so. Gentlemen were mistaken. A reference involves no opinion, other than that a subject may be better investigated by a select committee than by this House.

Mr. HARPER asked whether it was in order to amend the resolution.

The SPEAKER answered that it was.

Mr. HARPER.—I then move to strike out the whole of the preamble, and so much of the resolution that follows, as to make it read, "that a committee be appointed to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, which shall be authorized to send for persons, papers, and records."

Mr. H. declared his object was to bring about an impeachment of Governor Sargent, if he appeared on investigation to be guilty.

Mr. CLAIBORNE said he admired the object avowed by the gentleman from Massachusetts; but he then rose to ask the Speaker whether the amendment was in order.

The SPEAKER said it was.

Mr. EGGLESTON.—I hold in my hands the rules of the House, where I find it declared that a motion for commitment shall preclude all amendment.

The SPEAKER, after some hesitation, said it certainly was so.

Mr. RUTLEDGE said gentlemen all seemed to agree as to the essence of the case, but to differ on the mode. He thought the instance referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina fully in point, and altogether against him. In that case a committee had been appointed barely to inquire into the causes of the Western expedition. The resolution had not been prefaced by a long preamble; it had not ascribed motives of cowardice, or other reprehensible motives to General St. Clair. The subject seemed to be entangled by the rules of the House. He approved the mode recommended by his colleague, and for the purpose of attaining that he would move the previous question.

The previous question was then put, viz: "Shall the main question be now put?" Which passed in the negative—ayes 36, noes 48.

Mr. HARPER then moved to strike out the preamble.

Mr. MACON moved a postponement of the question till to-morrow; motion lost.

Mr. KITCHELL moved an adjournment.

Mr. THATCHER.—If we adjourn till to-morrow, when we meet then, what will be the question before the House? We have decided that the main question shall not be put; can that then be the question? Where will it be? Where shall we find it?

Mr. HARPER called to order; on a motion to adjourn there could be no debate.

Motion for adjournment lost.

Mr. DAVIS moved a commitment of the amendment to a select committee.

The SPEAKER declared the motion not in order.

Mr. DENT asked if it was not in order to commit the motions of both the gentlemen from Kentucky and South Carolina to a committee.

The SPEAKER said a vote on the main question had just been put.

Mr. EGGLESTON said the vote had been on the previous question, and not the main one.

The SPEAKER acknowledged that it was so, but declared the proposition of Mr. DENT out of order.

The question was then taken on striking out the preamble, and carried—48 members rising in the affirmative.

Mr. HARPER then moved to amend the concluding resolution moved by Mr. DAVIS, by striking it out, and introducing in its room the motion already stated as made by Mr. HARPER.

Mr. RANDOLPH desired to know, whether it was in order to move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER said it was in order.

Mr. RANDOLPH then moved the reference to the committee of the laws, documents, and other papers accompanying them.

The SPEAKER said that appeared to him to be the amount of the original resolution.

Mr. RANDOLPH replied that the original resolution was for the transmission of them to the President.

The SPEAKER acknowledged that it was so; and stated the motion of Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. CHAMPLIN thought the motion out of order.

Mr. HARPER rose to call the gentleman to order. The Speaker had already decided the motion to be in order.

The SPEAKER again pronounced the motion to be in order.

A desultory debate ensued between Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. HARPER, and Mr. NOTT—Mr. HARPER's motion under consideration.

Mr. RANDOLPH would say, however hazardous the remark, that the House had never been more idly employed than on this occasion. All the gentlemen who have spoken against the original resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, say they are agreed to the thing, but they dispute with tenacity every mode that we point out for accomplishing it. Whichever way we proceed, their ingenuity meets us at every step; and thus they strive to baffle every motion whose object is a fair and full investigation.

Mr. R. thought the direct point should be directly aimed at. The committee proposed to be appointed by the gentleman from South Carolina, uninstructed as to what charges they are to investigate, may be as blind as the gentlemen themselves who had spoken. He hoped, therefore, the House would compel them to take them into view.

Mr. RUTLEDGE was in this stage of the business opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, though he had no objection to agree to it, after the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS appealed to gentlemen, whether they were serious in wishing to send for persons and papers? Could they expect to get them during the session from a country 1,700 miles off?

The SPEAKER called to order. The main question was not before the House. Whatever was said must be on the amendment.

Then, said Mr. DAVIS, I will say nothing about it, and sit down.

The question on Mr. RANDOLPH's motion was then put and lost—ayes 29.

Mr. CLAIBORNE moved to strike out of the motion made by Mr. HARPER, the words, "to send for persons, documents, and papers." His motion was dictated by a desire to obtain speedy justice for this oppressed people. The necessary proofs were before the House. If the committee were tied up from making a report until a message had been sent to, and returned from, the Mississippi Territory, he should despair of justice overtaking this man. The committee may certainly immediately inquire into the subject; and, from the documents that would be laid before them, they would be able to act with effect without much delay or great expense. To test the sincerity of gentlemen he moved to strike out those words.

Mr. HARPER said that the motion carried an implication that his friend from Tennessee would not be willing to allow—either that a criminal might escape unpunished, or an innocent man be punished. Suppose the committee think the charges insufficient for the object of removal or impeachment, and yet they are of opinion that they are sufficient to justify strong suspicion and presumption of guilt, would it not be desirable to invest them with the right of making further inquity? Suppose, on the other hand, that the charges appear to them true, had not the experience of ages justified the propriety of the maxim audi alteram partem? How can this dilemma be surmounted but by imparting to the committee all the powers required for making a full and fair inquiry? Unless this be done you may convict the Governor without testimony, or dismiss him, though you think him criminal.

Mr. SMILIE.—If extortion has been practised by Winthrop Sargent; if unconstitutional laws have been passed, it is the duty of Congress to interpose its authority, and redress these great evils. In such cases delays are dangerous. He was, therefore, for those measures that provided the most immediate and effectual remedy.

Mr. CLAIBORNE.—The gentleman from South Carolina has done justice to my feelings in supposing that I would recoil at the idea of punishing an innocent man. I would recoil at such an idea. But the testimony upon which I stand forbids the indulgence of such a fear. Before the exhibition of the documents I had suspicions; but now I have convictions. The unconstitutional laws, officially communicated, are proofs whose authority I dare not resist. They are before the House; any member may read them. I deny, pursuing the course we wish to pursue, that Winthrop Sargent can be punished unheard. The committee, after solemn inquiry, will report to us a statement of facts, on which an impeachment may be grounded; and when impeached, Winthrop Sargent will be heard in his defence, and your managers may be empowered to send for persons and papers. Let gentlemen who hesitate on this subject, recollect that a delay of justice is often equal to a denial of it.

Mr. C.'s last words were scarcely uttered, when a person in the gallery clapped.

"Sergeant," said the SPEAKER, "see to that man!"

[The Sergeant went into the gallery and took the person out, without resistance. He was kept in confinement by the Sergeant for about two hours, in consequence of which, and the loss of his horse, which he had fastened to a shed near the Capitol, and which was not to be found when he was released, he that very day obtained a warrant from a magistrate against the Sergeant-at-arms for illegal confinement.]

Mr. CRAIK wished a full inquiry to be made, and of course thought the committee ought to be empowered to send for persons and papers. This measure, in his opinion, so far from evidencing an indisposition to meet the subject, was the strongest evidence of the sincerity and adherence to justice of those who supported it.

Mr. NOTT considered the point in dispute as of little, if any, importance.

Mr. GRISWOLD hoped the words would not be struck out; for if they were struck out the effect would then be that the committee should not send for persons or papers. He was astonished at the ideas of some gentlemen. Could they expect this House to be governed by the opinion of any one member, who tells them that, in his opinion, certain facts exist that criminate a high public officer? If the documents are thus decisive, the committee need go no further; if not decisive, shall they substitute the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee in the place of their own convictions? He hoped not. If gentlemen are serious in the expression of their wishes for a fair inquiry, let them give the committee full powers.

Mr. MACON asked gentlemen in favor of retaining these words, to consider the distance to which they would have to send, which was 1,700 miles, and to calculate the time occupied in going and returning from the Mississippi Territory, and then to say whether a return would not be impracticable during this session. He thought it would, and for this and other reasons, was for an immediate inquiry.

Mr. BIRD.—Is it the intention of gentlemen that the committee they wish appointed shall be exclusively guided by those documents, which they, as accusers, hold in their own hands? Is this their idea of justice? If it were, he differed widely from them.

Not a proposition had been made by gentlemen who desired such an inquiry as justice prescribed, but had been clogged by the suggestion of imaginary difficulties, and tortured into the most perverse meaning. It was strange that gentlemen of such talents should, after wandering so long round a meander, not half an inch in diameter, come at last to the simple resolution, which appointed a common committee with common powers. He called them common, for every committee appointed on such a subject have similar powers. It was presumption to suppose, as the arguments of gentlemen did suppose, that the committee about to be appointed will desire to exculpate Winthrop Sargent. Was it candid to imply that they would be corrupt? The supposition of a denial of justice went on the idea that they would violate their duty in screening from punishment a criminal. If the laws are unconstitutional the committee will say so. But having done this, there remains a duty still more important—they must go into the intentions of Winthrop Sargent. How could they be ascertained but by that comprehensive investigation that would be derived from examining persons and papers? Why, then, deny this authority in the first instance, when it will ultimately be necessary? The ideas on which it was opposed, such as the distance and the time it would require, were frivolous, such as he could neither admit as reasons, or argue from as premises.

Mr. RANDOLPH.—The gentleman who has just sat down, has impeached with unwarrantable acrimony the purity of our motives and our candor, because we differ from him on the course proper to be taken on this subject. Mr. R. was truly sorry that the gentleman had suffered such an accumulation of rancor to collect in his mind, as he had just poured out upon his side of the House. Every imputation hurtful to a feeling mind had been lavished. Since then, said Mr. R., the gentleman has become the ensor morum and inquisitor of our hearts, permit me to draw the outlines of theirs.

DECEMBER, 1800.

Mississippi Affairs.

H. OF R.

The gentleman, after an unbroken silence during the whole debate, rises and tells this House, that they have spent their time most fruitlessly and idly, and that after wandering for hours round a meander not half an inch in diameter, they had got back to the very point from which they had started. Did that gentleman recollect that the half-inch meander of which he spoke, designated the understanding of those with whom he acted, who, perpetually moving in a circle, after all their labors, arrived at the point from which they first set out?

Instead of uniting with us in an inquiry into those serious charges you have heard; instead of aiding us with their talents; instead of performing their duty, gentlemen satisfy themselves with holding up before us a mere ignis fatuus. Under the idea of desiring a substantial investigation, they are converting us into a jury on life and death; and they will not suffer us to take a single step to bring a criminal to justice, without previously possessing the most incontrovertible proofs of his guilt. It is in vain that we answer that we are an initiating body, and that our present measures lead to that stage of the business in which legal testimony will be required; still, deaf to our reasons, they call up expedients that can only tend to defeat the measure, and have the boldness to tell us that we are moving in that very meander which they themselves occupy.

Gentlemen on this subject are unusually hard of hearing. They will not hear, or, if they do hear, they will not regard the passage of laws putting money into the hands of the Governor and Judges; laws warranting various descriptions of extortion: laws violating the Constitution of the Territory. These grievances are sounded in their ears; they are informed of the necessity of immediate redress; of the danger of unredressed oppression, and they still continue to talk of justice, and yet recommend nothing but what will delay, and, perhaps, defeat it. They may talk then of justice, and of their regard to the Constitution, as they please; the people will consider a delay of justice as a denial of it; they will say that the present Congress intend to do nothing.

A motion was made to adjourn, and lost.

Mr. CLAIBORNE's motion to strike out the words "to send for persons, documents, and papers," was then put and lost.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved to postpone the question till the 3d day of March; the motion was lost.

The question was then taken on Mr. HARPER's amendment by yeas and nays, and carried—yeas 70, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, John Bird, Phanuel Bishop, John Brown, Robert Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, Gabriel Christie, Matthew Clay, John Condit, William Cooper, William Craik, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, John Dennis, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Samuel Goode, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Edwin Gray, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove,

NAYS—Theodorus Bailey, William Charles Cole Claiborne, Joseph Eggleston, Lucas Elmendorf, Andrew Gregg, George Jackson, Matthew Lyon, Nathaniel Macon, Thomas Sumter, Benjamin Taliaferro, and Abram Trigg.

The resolution, as amended, was then agreed to, and referred to Messrs. HARPER, CLAIBORNE, C. GOODRICH, NOTT, DAVIS, BIRD, and OTIS.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved that the laws passed in the Mississippi Territory, and the petition of Cato West, and others, with the documents, be referred to the same committee; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARPER moved that the committee, to whom had been referred the memorial of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory be discharged, and that the memorial be referred to the committee appointed to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent; which was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanying a report of the Commissioner of the Revenue, and sundry statements respecting the internal revenues of the United States, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the eleventh day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight; and of a resolution of this House, passed on the sixth day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

TUESDAY, December 23.

Mr. HARPER observed that experience had proved the existence of some deficiencies, as well as inconveniences, in the provisions of the bankrupt law. He therefore moved the appointment of a committee to inquire whether any, and if any, what amendments are necessary to be made in an act for establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Carried, and a committee of three appointed.

On a motion made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized to adjourn the respective Houses on this day, to Tuesday, the thirtieth instant."

The question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do carry the said resolution to the Senate and desire their concurrence.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate have agreed to the resolution of this House for an adjournment of Congress, to Tuesday, the thirtieth instant.

A memorial of sundry inhabitants of the Northwestern Territory, residing on lands purchased from John Cleves Symmes, was presented to the House and read, praying that the said Symmes may be allowed to complete his contract with the United States, or that such other relief may be granted to the memorialists, as to the wisdom of Congress shall seem meet. Referred to the committee appointed, on the eighteenth instant, to inquire into the situation of certain tracts of land which have been appropriated for the support of public schools and seminaries of learning, and for the support of religion, situated within the limits of a tract of land granted to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio.

A petition of the messengers and office-keepers of the several Departments of State, of the Treasury, of War, and of the Navy, was presented to the House and read, stating the insufficiency of the compensation allowed them by law; and praying that the same may be increased, and rendered more adequate to their services. Referred to Mr. OTIS, Mr. TALIAFERRO, and Mr. WOODS.

A petition of Charles Tomkins, in behalf of the parties concerned, was presented to the House, and read, stating that, by a resolve of Congress, passed the first of October, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, one complete and entire township of land, subject to the reservations as in other townships, agreeably to an ordinance of the twentieth of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, was granted to Arnold Henry Dohrman, and by said resolve he was permitted to make choice of the said township, out of any of the three last ranges surveyed; that the said Dohrman after having made his election of the thirteenth township, in the seventh range, has been under the necessity of assigning his right to the said land, for the benefit of his creditors; but that, on application at the office of the Secretary of State, by the trustees of the creditors of the said Dohrman, for a patent, it appears that there is no authority under the present Government for granting the same; and praying relief in the premises. Referred to the Committee of Claims.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. H. LEE moved the going into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for erecting a mausoleum to GEORGE WASHINGTON.

On this question the House divided—yeas 42, nays 34.

Mr. MORRIS took the Chair, and read the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. H. LEE said the merits of the bill had been so often discussed, and the subject was so delicate, that he would not again offer his sentiments generally on it. As it was the opinion of several members, that the dimensions of the mausoleum should not be fixed in the law, but that they should be governed by the sum appropriated, he moved to strike out "100 feet at the base and of proportionate dimensions."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. H. LEE then moved an amendment confining the ground on which the mausoleum should be erected to public property.

Mr. HARPER opposed the amendment, which was lost, only 31 members rising in favor of it.

Mr. H. LEE then moved to fill the blank, fixing the sum to be appropriated for erecting the mausoleum, with $200,000.

Mr. SMITH said he hoped the House would not with its eyes open go into a measure that might involve incalculable expense. It was proposed to appropriate $200,000. This was probably but a small part of what would be ultimately required; and when the thing was once begun, it must be completed, cost what it would. If the architect would give security for accomplishing the work for $200,000 he would not be so much opposed to it. But, as it stood, he was opposed to it, as a useless expenditure of public money.

Mr. HARPER said the old story was again rung in their ears. An object, in itself, highly important, was proposed, and, forsooth, because it cost some money, on the ground of economy it must be rejected.

He would ask the gentleman just up whether he knew anything about the expense of a mausoleum? And yet not professing to be informed, professing indeed to know little, he had put his vague conjectures in the room of estimates formed with deliberation by artists of the first eminence. These clamorous objections were well understood. Their sole object was ad captandum vulgus; to create alarm about what was termed useless expense. They were intended for nothing else.

To satisfy the solicitude of gentlemen an artist of talents universally acknowledged had been desired to furnish an estimate; which estimate stated that a pyramid of 100 feet base would cost $67,000. This was the estimate of an artist of such accuracy that in the greatest work ever undertaken in America, and the greatest, perhaps of its kind, ever undertaken in the world, (he alluded to the water works of Philadelphia,) the expense actually incurred had fallen short of the estimate. The same accuracy had characterized his plan and execution of the Bank of Pennsylvania, which was probably the greatest work of the kind executed in this country. And yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania will place his vague doubts, and (Mr. HARPER begged pardon for the expression) his total want of knowledge against the calculations of a man of practical science.

The gentleman had asked whether any one could be found, who would be responsible for the execution of the work for the proposed sum. Mr. HARPER said, if it were proper for a member of that House to say so, he would undertake himself to erect a mausoleum of 150 feet base, and 150 feet high, for $200,000; and for the performance of his engagement he could give the most unquestionable security, such as every member of that House would approve. He further believed that the artist before alluded to, if required, would give the necessary security. The accuracy of the estimate had been tested by every circumstance that the nature of the case admitted. The same course had been pursued, in this case, that every reasonable man was accustomed to take in his own private concerns. Every such individual, who designed building a house obtained first an estimate from a skilful workman, which satisfied him. If men acted not in this way, there could be no progress in human improvements.

After this information, furnished by such an artist, gentlemen ought to be satisfied without opposing to it their own crude conceptions; and Mr. HARPER said he hoped they would cease to talk on a subject on which they were so ignorant, until they became better informed.

Mr. MACON did not see the subject in the same light with the gentleman from South Carolina. He was disposed to pay the greatest respect to his talents, but he could not give up his own opinion. The estimate made by the artist amounted to $140,000; yet the gentleman from Virginia required $200,000. Does not this show that the gentlemen themselves have not confided in the estimate of the artist?

Mr. H. LEE explained, and said that he thought the most proper plan for adoption was that of Mr. West; pursuing that plan $200,000 might be required, as there would be interior arrangements to make, additional to those contemplated by the estimate.

Mr. MACON said he thought $140,000 would be sufficient. He knew not how to reconcile the difference between the estimate made in Philadelphia and that made in Washington; the first was only $67,000; which was a sum much below any calculated here. He did not pretend to any information on this subject, and the various modifications the bill had undergone convinced him that no member was well acquainted with it. The estimates differed materially from each other. They could not therefore all be correct. He could not, from these considerations, feel confidence in the estimates of the gentleman from South Carolina, or the other gentleman; for if they really possessed correct information, how came they so radically to differ; and the committee itself to propose so many alterations in the original bill?

Mr. SMILIE replied to Mr. HARPER. The object of his remarks was to show that Mr. H. possessed as little information on the subject as himself.

Mr. RUTLEDGE.—The substance of what the gentleman says, is that he wants to do nothing. He had long thought so, and he was now confirmed in his opinion. When the man, whose loss the world deplored, departed from us, we were all shrouded with sorrow; the mournful event awakened our deepest regrets; and resolutions expressive of the national affliction at his death, and commemorative of his services, were unanimously passed by both Houses of Congress. Those resolutions were not carried into immediate effect owing to the disagreement of the two branches of the Legislature. Now, when we propose to carry them into effect, objections are started to every measure offered; objections that rise eternally in our horizon; which, whenever we pursue, fly from our reach, and which, always moving in a circle, we can never overtake.

Gentlemen tell us they are unaccustomed to spend public money without estimates. To satisfy the vigilance of their economy we obtain them. They then tell us they are inaccurate; their objection arises from a want of detail; they wish a minute statement of each separate charge. Again we consent to gratify their wishes, anxious for their sanction to our measures, that they may express the unanimous sentiment of Congress. We produce an estimate as minute as was ever furnished by an artist on any occasion. The total amount of estimated expense is $140,000, and to avoid the necessity of calling on Congress again, the gentleman from Virginia asks for $200,000.

Still after all our trouble and solicitude to satisfy the scruples of gentlemen, they continue to urge objections. One gentleman says the estimate made at Philadelphia differs from that made here; another gentleman will not confide in any estimate, and another wants security.

Does it become the dignity of the House thus to be occupied with trifling objections on such a subject; and, in the spirit of bargaining, to waste its time in saving a few dollars?

Many gentlemen, anxious for this measure, had agreed to postpone the consideration of it, hoping thereby to accommodate other gentlemen in their views, and expecting ultimately an unanimous vote. But he now abandoned it. He saw no period to objections. Much time had already been idly wasted. They had delayed too long to do what ought to have been done at once. Let us then take the question at once, and get rid of it, though a veto should be passed upon the bill.

The question was then taken on filling up the blank with $200,000, and carried—yeas 41, nays 38.

Mr. DENT moved to amend the section appropriating the sum, by substituting the word "for" in the room of the word "towards," which would fix the whole sum to be appropriated instead of leaving it uncertain.—Agreed to.

The Committee then rose and reported the bill as amended. On the question to agree to the $200,000 appropriated, the House divided—yeas 41, nays 38.

The SPEAKER then put the question on engrossing the bill for a third reading.

Mr. CLAIBORNE was opposed to the engrossing of the bill. He hoped no gentleman would ascribe his opposition to a want of respect to the memory of our great patriot. His respect for this illustrious character had been almost coeval with his life, and would follow him to his grave.

He was opposed to a mausoleum, because it would not be so respectful to the memory of WASHINGTON as the equestrian statue directed by the old Congress, who had directed the battle during our Revolutionary struggle, and for whose character he felt the highest veneration. The present Government could not refuse to carry into effect this act of the old Congress without a violation of moral principle. He preferred a statue to a mausoleum, because the former, from representing the form and the features, would inspire the beholder with more lively emotions than a mass of stones formed into a pyramid.

H. OF R.

Mausoleum to Washington.

DECEMBER, 1800.

Were the expense of a statue greater than that of a mausoleum, he would, notwithstanding, prefer it; but he believed the reverse would be the fact. He not only wished a statue raised, but also was in favor of an immediate appropriation for depositing the remains of our departed friend within these very walls, in such a manner as would not disgrace them.

Mr. CHAMPLIN had heretofore voted from a spirit of conciliation. He was now not a little surprised to find the gentlemen from Tennessee and South Carolina (Mr. CLAIBORNE and Mr. ALSTON) opposed to a mausoleum, though their names appeared, from an inspection of the journals of last session, among those who were then in favor of it.

He considered a mausoleum as preferable to a statue, because the first was calculated to celebrate all the virtues of the statesman as well as the hero, while the latter would be limited to his military exploits.

Great opposition had been made to the erection of a mausoleum, with the professed view of avoiding expense, and I admit generally that economy ought to be observed, in the expenditure of public money. But on an occasion highly interesting to the feelings, and deeply involving the character of the nation, even the appearance of parsimony should be carefully avoided. It is necessary to consider the nature and magnitude of the object for which money is required. It is not asked for, in the present instance, to commemorate a man distinguished only on the field of battle. It is not wanted to gratify family pride, or to raise a monument of despotic power and slavish submission. It is to be furnished by a great and free people, to record, in a manner worthy of themselves, their gratitude for the important services rendered to them by one of their fellow-citizens; the fruits of which I cannot but hope will be enjoyed and recognised by future generations. We are called upon by the public voice to erect a monument suited to the character of WASHINGTON, who has been emphatically styled, the man of the age, and whose virtues may, by the record we shall make of them, become the property of distant ages.

These virtues will doubtless be the theme of some able biographer, and it is wished that posterity may not search in vain for some striking evidence of our acknowledgment of them. It is indeed of infinite importance to civil society, that the memory of that great man should be perpetuated, by every means in our power. We may thus sow the seeds of virtue, honor, and patriotism, in our country. He will be held up a model, to which the finger of wisdom will constantly point, to which the attention of youth will be irresistibly drawn, and the mind of every man aspiring to pre-eminence among a free people will be riveted. The proposed mausoleum would be a structure well calculated to resist the ravages of time. As to the hand of man, at least of civilized man, we need not guard against it. The depository of the ashes of WASHINGTON will never be assailed by it. It may indeed be attacked by the ruthless hand of some invading barbarian. But its only security against such an attack must be derived from the courage and fortitude of the people of the United States. And I trust they will never tamely yield up the land of their forefathers.

Mr. BIRD was against the bill, because it proposed the erection of a mausoleum, which would not be equal to the object for which it was raised without the expenditure of a vast sum of money; whereas a statue could be made, somewhat correspondent to the occasion, for a moderate sum. It was in vain for gentlemen to talk about a structure commensurate to the object. Such a thing was impossible. He moved the recommitment of the bill to a Committee of the whole House.

The question being put, the House divided—ayes 39, noes 39; and it passed in the negative by the casting vote of the Speaker.

Mr. SHEPARD said, I will do as much as any man to honor the memory of WASHINGTON. I have fought and bled with him several times. I have always supported and will continue to support him. But on the score of expense I think we are going too far. I will go so far as to have his remains placed decently within these walls. Further I will not go; for I do not think we have a right to throw away the public money.

Mr. MACON delivered his reasons against a mausoleum, and in favor of an equestrian statue: and among other remarks, said, the idea that a mausoleum would be equal to the character of WASHINGTON was preposterous. Few individuals in the world were capable of drawing his character. In a few words, he would say that no character that had ever lived was equal to him, and it was his firm belief, that the world would never see his equal.

Mr. BROWN thought General WASHINGTON the best man that had ever lived; and he was surprised at the ideas of gentlemen on the ground of expense. If the mausoleum were agreed to, it would not cost each person in the United States four cents; and if the equestrian statue were also made, (which he hoped would also be done, for the sake of general accommodation) it would not cost more than two cents. It seemed to him that some gentlemen were averse to doing anything, though they did not wish the people to think so.

Mr. ALSTON would not have risen, had he not been marked by the gentleman from Rhode Island as an object of inconsistency.

Mr. CHAMPLIN explained by saying he did not mean to censure the gentleman for his change of opinion, for which he doubtless had good reasons.

Mr. ALSTON.—Let the measures of Congress be reviewed, and it would appear, that the House itself and the gentleman from Rhode Island had been as inconsistent as himself. He would appeal to the gentleman whether it was more honorable to desert his duty and fly a vote, than to act as he had done?

Mr. HUGER said it was unnecessary at this time to take into view the old arguments that had been urged. The proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, for an equestrian statue, was the only one he should notice. So impressed was he with the inadequacy of a common statue to express the gratitude of America, that he would rather have nothing done, than to have what was done in this backhanded way.

DECEMBER, 1800.

Mausoleum to Washington.

H. OF R.

He was disposed to treat with respect the acts of the old Congress. But the act, to which the gentleman from Tennessee had alluded, and which he wished this House exclusively to carry into effect, was passed in reference to the military exploits of Gen. WASHINGTON, because, at the time it was passed, his life had been most characterized by them. Since that period circumstances had changed. If we are bound by the acts of the old Congress, are we not equally bound by those of the last session? If you adopt the ideas of the gentleman, do you not hold out the Commander-in-Chief of the American Army as deserving a splendid monument, and the father of the Constitution and other great civil acts as deserving nothing?

Without any concert whatever, a remarkable concurrence had taken place between West, Trumbull, and other respectable artists, who all gave an unequivocal preference to a mausoleum; which, in his opinion, would be far less expensive than a statue. The expense of the latter, as would appear from an estimate in the office of the Secretary of State, could not be less than forty thousand guineas, deliverable at Paris; and when the additional charges of transportation, insurance, and other incidental expenses, were considered, he was persuaded it could not be completed for less than two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. J. C. SMITH considered the Government as pledged to do that which they had promised, and which the national feeling required.

Mr. RANDOLPH must consider the present as a tedious and useless debate. The gentleman had declared the Government to be pledged. To whom were they pledged, and for what? It was to the relics of the deceased; to have them placed within these walls. For this, there were the strongest reasons, as such a measure would be agreeable to the venerable lady to whom he had been united. If then they were so pledged, why violate this pledge, by referring the business to the Secretary of State, of the Treasury, of War, and of the Navy; though what connexion there was between the office of the Secretary of the Navy and the performance of this trust, he could not tell?

One consideration with him was insuperable. The departure from the original plan tended, unjustly, and most cruelly, (however pure the intention,) to violate the feelings of a lady, so much troubled already.

Mr. J. C. SMITH said it had been declared by some gentlemen that the reputation of WASHINGTON might be safely confided to the record of history. Was it the opinion of those gentlemen that the record was to be found in the charge of murder against that illustrious character? Was it to be found in the patriotic effusions of men who had pronounced all expressions of national gratitude a mockery of woe, and had declared that it was high time for those who were the sincere apostles of liberty to be done with such foolery; or was it to be found in the denunciations of a printer, supported by a State that perpetually boasted its regard to Republicanism?

Mr. HARPER could not but regret that a gentleman, who possessed so lively a regret for the venerable lady alluded to, should have exhibited in this discussion so glaring a contrast between his professions and his actions, by introducing that lady into the debate, and indelicately expressing her wishes, in reference to the place where the relics of her deceased partner should be deposited. Was it conceivable that to her the place could be of any importance? Or was it possible that this House could be enslaved by the trifling circumstance of the locus in quo, or that the paltry consideration attending an action of trespass could be gravely introduced into such a debate. All that this venerable lady says amounts to this, that accustomed from the example of her deceased friend to obey the national wishes, she submitted to that disposition of his remains that Congress may make. Shall we, then, in violation of the plain meaning of her words, enter into whispers of hearsay respecting wishes, which, from his knowledge of her good sense, he was persuaded had never been uttered?

Mr. RANDOLPH rose to explain. He had neither said, nor intended to say, that he possessed any knowledge beside that which appeared on the journals; and from that knowledge he was justified in saying that Mrs. WASHINGTON's compliance, as expressed by her, was not with any public will that might be expressed, but with that will which had been already expressed. Whatever insinuations the gentleman from South Carolina may mean to convey, his feelings of respect for every woman were sacred; nor were they limited to that sex alone. He was not disposed on this occasion to take the advice of the gentleman, who judging me by his own heart, said Mr. R., may imagine me capable of disrespect to the sex.

Mr. HARPER wished the gentleman would avoid any further interruption, and reserve his remarks until he was done. He did not know, nor was he concerned to inquire into the motives of the gentleman from Virginia. Such inquiry would, of all others, be the least profitable or interesting, either to the House or to himself. Neither had he any idea of giving advice which that gentleman would follow. He well knew that it was the most hopeless of all things to give advice to one whose own sense of propriety did not tell him what was right. Those, who were incapable of receiving lessons from their own minds or feelings, were not likely to receive them from any other quarter.

The feelings ascribed to Mrs. WASHINGTON were unfounded. The lady was incapable of entering into trifling disputes about place or time, such as the House had this day witnessed.

The arguments, by which the superiority of a statue to a mausoleum was attempted to be established, were fallacious. The form and features of our illustrious friend would be preserved without the erection of any statue by us. Pictures by celebrated artists were everywhere multiplied and caught at with avidity; and the sculptor and the painter will be employed unceasingly to keep pace with the increasing demand. Likenesses may be found everywhere, and as perfect on the other side of the Atlantic as on this.

A mausoleum would last for ages, and would present the same imperishable appearance two thousand years hence, that it would now. Whereas a statue would only remain till some civil convulsion, or foreign invasion, or flagitious conqueror, or lawless mob, should dash it into atoms; or till some invading barbarian should transport it as a trophy of his guilt to a foreign shore.

I have beheld, said Mr. H., a monument erected to a man, once considered as the patron of America, defaced, mutilated, its head broken off, prostrated with the ground. A statue, erected by the Legislature of Virginia to perpetuate the virtues of a man to future ages, had been destroyed.

Besides, a statue was minute, trivial, and perishable. It was a monument erected to all that crowd of estimable but subordinate personages, that soar in a region, elevated indeed above common characters, but which was infinitely below that occupied by WASHINGTON.

The greatest honor which this country ever has received, the greatest honor which it ever could receive, was derived from numbering with its sons the immortal WASHINGTON.

Shall then a mistaken spirit of economy, and a still more mistaken jealousy arrest us? Honor him, it is true, we cannot. The world has charged itself with that task. Posterity, as long as the world shall endure, will celebrate his virtues and his talents; those virtues and talents of which every ingredient of their happiness will be a perpetual evidence. But though we cannot honor him we may dishonor ourselves; though we cannot increase the lustre of his fame, we may show our own meanness, cowardice, spite, and malice; and show an astonished world that we are deplorably unworthy of the high honor conferred by Nature in giving us a WASHINGTON.

I am, said Mr. H., awfully impressed by the subject. I sink under the sublimity that surrounds it. No words can reach it; mine are totally inadequate; to the feelings of the House then it must be submitted: they, after anticipating all that genius or eloquence can say, will still far surpass their boldest effusions.

Mr. RANDOLPH was very unfortunately situated, as he was compelled to rise, not in his own defence, but in defence of the calumniated reputation of that State which he revered, since from it he derived his birth.

I will not, said Mr. R., enter into an elucidation of the motives of the gentleman from South Carolina, which have produced so much asperity, and such a virulence of rancour against the State of Virginia, but will confine myself to the question on engrossing the bill.

The gentleman has talked to us about his disregard for the locus in quo. Mr. R. said he cared as little for the quo modo, as the gentleman did for the locus in quo.

He had further told us that a statue might be overthrown by a licentious mob; and that this had actually been the case in the State of Virginia. But, why had it been so? Because that statue had been erected in the life-time of the person it celebrated; because it had been erected under the Colonial Government; and because, like every other fetter of tyranny, it was broken by the Revolutionary spirit that established our liberties.

But, says the gentleman, statues are raised for subordinate men, for this admiral or that general, who may deserve well of their country, but who do not merit the highest distinctions of national gratitude. If this measure of raising a mausoleum is to be only a cover for obtaining statues for temporary and secondary and trifling characters, it may have a very alarming influence upon us.

It is not easy, for a man of even less sensibility than myself, to hear in silence the State in which I was born, and one of whose Representatives I am, calumniated in the manner in which it had been that day, by the gentlemen from Connecticut and South Carolina. In defence of that State, actuated by a love to it, and not from any respect to its detractors; not to repel any imputation of meanness, of cowardice, of malice, which the gentleman from South Carolina has called ours, (meaning, I suppose, his own,) I will inform him, and the gentleman from Connecticut, that that State was the first to celebrate the fame of the Hero of America, by erecting a statue to him in the Capitol at Richmond.

The gentleman from Connecticut objects to a confidence in the record of the historian. Does the gentleman wish to suppress the history of the political events of 1776? Or does he believe that these events will be handed down in association with the bloody buoy, and Porcupine's works? Perhaps he has formed from his own mind a proper selection for our children, and is against the press handing down anything else?

Mr. H. said, that the gentleman from Virginia had misstated what he had said. He had cast no reflection on the State of Virginia; but had barely stated two instances of statues overthrown and destroyed, to illustrate their frailty.

During the preceding debate, Mr. CLAIBORNE stated that the committee to whom this subject had been committed, had obtained several estimates; among which was one in writing, by Dr. Thornton, which states with confidence that the expense of an equestrian statue would not exceed from eight thousand to fifteen thousand pounds currency.

After some remarks from Mr. SHEPARD and Mr. LYON, the yeas and nays were taken on engrossing the bill, and were—yeas 44, nays 40, as follows:

The third reading of the bill was fixed for Thursday week; when the House adjourned to Tuesday the thirtieth.

TUESDAY, December 30.

Another member, to wit: ROBERT WILLIAMS, from North Carolina, appeared, and took his seat in the House.

A memorial and remonstrance of the Legislature of the State of Georgia was presented to the House and read, protesting against the establishment by the United States of the Government of the Mississippi Territory within the limits of the said State; and praying a repeal of the acts authorizing the establishment thereof; as being unconstitutional, injurious to, and subversive of, the rights of the State of Georgia.

Ordered, That the said memorial do lie on the table.

A memorial of Pleasant Henderson and others, inhabitants of the State of North Carolina, was presented to the House and read, stating their claims to certain lands ceded by the State of North Carolina to the United States, with a reservation of the claims of the petitioners; the possession of which lands the United States have since guaranteed by treaty to the Chickasaw and Cherokee Indians; and praying relief in the premises.

Ordered, That the said memorial do lie on the table.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed, to be denominated "The Committee of Privileges;" and that Mr. JOHN C. SMITH, Mr. COOPER, Mr. THATCHER, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. NOTT, be the said committee.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from Joseph Wheaton, Sergeant-at-Arms to this House, stating that, in consequence of his having executed the order of the Speaker, in arresting a certain James Lane, for disorderly behaviour in the gallery of the House, on Monday, the twenty-second instant, he was apprehended and conducted before a magistrate of the city of Washington, detained for a certain length of time, and finally discharged, in consequence of the non-appearance of the said James Lane, to prosecute his complaint.—Referred to the Committee of Privileges this day appointed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, to whom it was referred to examine and report what laws have expired, or are near expiring, and require to be revived or further continued, made a farther report, in part; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, enclosing a report on the claims of certain Canadian refugees, made in pursuance of the act, entitled "An act for the relief of the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia;" which were read, and ordered to be referred to the committee appointed, on the twenty-eighth ultimo, to prepare and bring in a bill for regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, instructed, on the seventeenth instant, to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States," made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the same committee, presented a bill to continue in force the acts laying duties on licenses for selling wines and foreign distilled spirits by retail; on property sold at auction, and on carriages for the conveyance of persons; which was read twice and committed.

WEDNESDAY, December 31.

Ordered, That the memorial of Pleasant Henderson and others, inhabitants of the State of North Carolina, presented yesterday, be referred to Mr. PINCKNEY, Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. NICHOLAS, and Mr. THATCHER.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee of Elections, made a further report, in part; which he delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as follows:

"The Committee of Elections further report, that, by the certificate of the Governor of the State of New Hampshire, under seal, and dated the twenty-second day of November, one thousand eight hundred, it appears that Samuel Tenney is duly appointed a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, until the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one. It is further made to appear by information from several members of this House, from the said State, that such appointment was made to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Gordon. Whereupon, the committee are of opinion that Samuel Tenney is entitled to take a seat in this House in the place of William Gordon."

DUTIES ON LICENSES.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for continuing in force "an act laying duties on licenses for selling wine, and foreign distilled spirituous liquors by retail, on property sold at auction, and on carriages."

Mr. VARNUM moved to limit the duration of the bill to two years from the 1st day of March, 1801.

The motion was supported by Messrs. VARNUM, RANDOLPH, and NICHOLAS, and opposed by Mr. GRISWOLD.

On the question being taken, there appeared 39 ayes and 39 noes. The Chairman declaring himself in the negative, it was lost.

Mr. BIRD disliked that part of the bill which gave to the judicatories of the several States the right of taking cognizance of suits for duties payable under it. He declared himself averse to this investment of Judicial power, on the ground of expediency; but said he should not, on this occasion, oppose the bill for that reason. But he deemed the Judicial power, as delegated by the bill, to be unconstitutional. The bill must be amended before it could obtain his vote. He, therefore, moved so to amend the first section, as to confine all Judicial power exercised under the bill to the Federal courts.

The Constitution expressly declares that "the Judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States," &c. If the Judicial power extended to all cases, surely it must extend to the present case. The Constitution further declared "that the Judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish." It was self-evident, that the State courts could not be embraced by the expression "one supreme court." And as to the expression "inferior courts," he would ask whether the State tribunals could come within its meaning? It was evident to him that they could not, as they were not appointed by Congress; as no cause of error lies from the State to the Federal courts, or writ of mandamus. It followed that they were not included in the true meaning of the term "inferior" courts; they were neither ordained nor appointed by Congress.

Further, the Constitution prescribed that the judges should receive fixed salaries, payable by the United States, and hold their offices during good behaviour. This direction of the Constitution precluded all other but Federal courts.

Besides these Constitutional injunctions, which, on his mind, were irresistible, on a view of the expediency of the delegated powers, it would appear that extensive and great inconvenience attended the exercise of it. Under the jurisprudence of the several States, such a variety of laws and mode of procedure existed as produced the greatest embarrassments. Besides, it was not unfair to suppose, in the succession of events, the occasional existence in particular States of a spirit of hostility to some measure of the Federal Government.

On the whole, Mr. B. said, that he considered Congress as equally incompetent to transfuse into the State Courts, the right of judging on cases that occurred under the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government, as they were to transfuse Executive or Legislative power, derived from that Constitution, into the hands of the Executive and Legislative organs of the State Governments.

Mr. DENNIS was so impressed with the importance of a full and fair discussion of the point submitted to the House by the gentleman from New York, that he recommended a suspension of any consideration of it, until the Judiciary bill came before them. Then the question might be met directly. He, therefore, moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and sit again; which was accordingly done, and leave to sit again granted.

THE TERRITORY OF COLUMBIA.

On motion of Mr. H. LEE, the House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill in relation to the Territory of Columbia.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved to strike out the first section, which is in these words:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the laws of the State of Virginia, as they existed on the first Monday of December, in the year 1800, shall be and continue in force in that part of the District of Columbia which was ceded by the said State to the United States, and by them accepted for the permanent seat of Government; and that the laws of the State of Maryland, as they existed on the said first Monday in December, shall be and continue in force in that part of the said District which was ceded by that State to the United States, and by them accepted, as aforesaid.

Mr. H. LEE said, that he was far from considering this bill as an act of supererogation. The Constitution had prohibited the States of Virginia and Maryland from legislating for the Territory; and it now became a question, whether the existing laws of those States were in force, which question might come before the Judiciary. To obviate all doubts, this bill, in the shape of a declaratory one, was reported.

Mr. NICHOLAS said, this bill is not, in my opinion, merely an act of supererogation, but an act of immense mischief. I do not agree with my colleague in the construction he gives the Constitution. He is of opinion, that the powers given to Congress on this subject must be exercised by them. I think differently. These powers are like many others conferred, which may or may not be exercised. It had never been contended that we are obliged to carry into execution all the powers with which we are invested. It is true, that we have nearly exhausted the letter of our charter, in the extent to which we have gone; but this fact furnished no reason for going still further.

A construction contrary to that contended for had been given by Congress in the exercise of their power. The act of acceptance passed by Congress, confirming the cessions made by Virginia and Maryland, expressly declares, "that the operation of the laws of the State within such District shall not be affected by this acceptance until the term fixed for the removal of the Government thereto, and until Congress shall otherwise by law provide."

DECEMBER, 1800.

District of Columbia.

H. OF R.

Great force was attached to that part of the Constitution which gave Congress exclusive legislation over the Territory. But the same clause of the Constitution gave the same power over forts, magazines, arsenals, &c. Yet this power had never been assumed by Congress. The possession of the right had heretofore been considered as sufficient; the exercise of it was reserved until peculiar circumstances should occur, which rendered it necessary.

I believe the Committee are not prepared to sanction this bill. To sanction it would be to place the inhabitants of the Territory in a situation for which they would not be thankful. It would impose upon them all the laws of Virginia and Maryland, as they existed on the first Monday of December, without those improvements which experience may suggest.

If this bill passed, it would leave a considerable portion of the inhabitants of the Territory without any judicial authorities to which they could appeal. There were parts of Fairfax, Montgomery, and Prince George's counties, which would have no courts to which they could apply.

Another consequence that would result from the construction attempted to be given to the Constitution, was the deprivation of the inhabitants of all participation either in Federal or State legislation. As, by the construction, they would cease to be the subjects of State taxation, it could not be expected that the States would permit them, without being taxed, to be represented.

Could any man desire to place the citizens of the District in such a state? To deprive them of the common right of participating in the passage of laws which all the citizens enjoyed?

If the construction be sound, that we are bound to legislate, then all the judicial proceedings which had taken place since the first Monday in December, whatever affected either property or persons, were mere nullities. I do not, however, believe the construction to be sound. I believe it opposed both to the spirit of the Constitution, and to the construction hitherto given by Congress. But were the construction just, to adopt the proposed bill would be to act in a way inadequate to the importance of the subject, which, involving in it a system of government for a large portion of citizens, ought not to be acted upon with precipitation, but ought to be conducted by the collected wisdom of Congress, derived from mature and deliberate reflection.

Mr. H. LEE said, my colleague is wrong in supposing this bill a part of a permanent system. It is only intended to cure an evil which some persons have supposed to exist, from the doubtful jurisdiction of the States of Virginia and Maryland.

Mr. OTIS said, though I respect the talents of the committee who brought in the bill, yet I cannot discover that it contains a single new view or provision. Though I am myself at a loss to account for the necessity of the bill, the committee were certainly right, if they entertained doubts, to attract the attention of the House to them.

By the first act of Congress accepting the cession, the United States have legislated in the very way the gentleman from Virginia now proposes. As it appeared at that time impossible to form a code of laws, those of Maryland and Virginia were confirmed till Congress should legislate.

If it were true that Congress were bound to legislate themselves, an equal obligation existed at that time with that which existed at present. Their not having done so was a strong argument against the construction now contended for.

To pass such a law as that now offered, instead of removing, would be the very means of exciting doubt. The time may arrive when Congress must go into the subject in detail, and make those provisions that were necessary for a great city. But at present such a step was not called for: the Territory had gone on very well for ten years without the interposition of Congress, and I have no doubt it will continue for some time to come to do well without it.

Mr. BRID said, this question, in my opinion, is susceptible of a very clear and precise solution. Did the acts of cession by the States, and of acceptance by Congress, take away the jurisdiction of those States, and vest it in Congress? The acts of Maryland and Virginia make a complete cession of soil and jurisdiction to Congress. This cession has been accepted by Congress. What is the consequence of one sovereign transferring all jurisdiction to another sovereign? Does not the power that cedes give up all right whatever to that which accepts? The words of the Constitution are that Congress shall exercise exclusive legislation. If Congress exercise exclusive legislation, does it not follow that no other body can exercise any legislation whatever?

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NICHOLAS) does not deny the power altogether, but limits it, as a power that may or may not be exercised by Congress; and in illustration of his opinion, instances the power to naturalize and to pass bankrupt laws. But the cases are not analogous. These last are powers that Congress may or may not exercise. The Constitution does not apply to them the term exclusive; nor are they shut out by the actual words of that instrument, or by necessary inference.

Over some objects Congress have partial authority; but in this case their authority is absolute and exclusive of all other; from which irresistibly follows the absolute cessation of all power in the ceding body.

It was undoubtedly the intention of the framers of the Constitution, that, after this Territory became the actual seat of Government, no authority but that of Congress should be in force.

The act of cession by the States, after stating the terms of cession, contains a proviso, that the power of legislation thereby vested in Congress, shall not impair the force of the laws of Maryland and Virginia, till Congress shall otherwise by law provide. A proviso is to prevent something from being done that without it would be done. Congress declared the same thing when they accepted the cession with the same proviso. This proviso tends to supersede the cession. Having this effect it must fall, as conflicting with the act to which it is a proviso. It must be considered as absolutely void. A proviso is intended to prevent the operation of a particular thing, not to give an operation to it. It may prevent the enactment of a particular law, but it cannot re-enact that law.

H. OF R.

A difference of opinion seemed to exist as to the period when the powers of the States were superseded. It was the opinion of some gentlemen that they ceased on the completion of the act of cession. The committee consider them as ceasing on the first Monday in December of the present year. It became the House solemnly to settle this point before they entered into the consideration of a complicated system of government. If the legislative powers of the States had ceased, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that the Judicial powers had also ceased.

For these reasons I think it will be best to declare that things shall remain in status quo. If the ordinary jurisdiction established be not competent, it may easily be made so.

Mr. RANDOLPH was not prepared to enter into a discussion of the important point before the Committee. He would only state the dilemma in which the inhabitants of the District of Columbia would be placed by the construction given to the Constitution by his colleague, who was of opinion that all Legislative and Judicial powers derived from Virginia and Maryland, ceased on the first Monday of December. If this construction were true, was it not equally true that the bill now proposed would be of the same validity, and of no more validity, than the act of acceptance passed by Congress.

From his being unprepared, what he offered was submitted more in the form of hints than of correct arguments. But it seemed to him that if the construction contended for should prevail, it would disfranchise the corporations of Georgetown and Alexandria, and all other corporations within the District. Would it not place the Territory in the situation of a conquered country? According to this construction, the Territory was in a state of anarchy, and murder, if committed, would be no crime.

Further, if the Constitutional provision is obligatory upon us to assume exclusive legislation, are we not bound to establish uniform laws throughout the entire District? and of course are we not prohibited from establishing one system in one place, and a different system in another?

One other objection merited the gentleman's notice. The laws of Virginia precluded every officer under its Government from holding any Federal office.

From the impression made on his mind by these considerations, Mr. R. said, he would be wanting to himself and to his country, if he agreed to the bill. He hoped, therefore, that the Committee would rise, and not precipitate a decision.

Mr. HARPER was in favor of the motion that the Committee should rise, for the purpose of recommitting the bill to a select committee. He would state his reasons: The object of the first section was to assume the jurisdiction. That was his object. He wished the establishment of a Judiciary competent to the carrying into effect the laws now existing. He wished this object to be accomplished in a fair, open, direct way. At some future period Congress might find it necessary to enter on a system of legislation in detail, and to have established numerous police regulations. At this time, the present exigency would be provided for by confirming the laws of Virginia and Maryland, and by giving effect to them by the institution of a competent Judicial authority.

Mr. NICHOLAS said, that he should vote for the Committee rising, from a different motive from that which actuated the gentleman from South Carolina. He hoped the business would be suffered for the present to sleep.

The construction given to the Constitution by the gentleman from New York, did not render it merely expedient in Congress to assume jurisdiction, but rendered it an absolute duty. In reply to his remarks, the gentleman had alleged that the authority given by the Constitution in relation to this Territory, differed from the other powers vested in Congress, inasmuch as the former investment of power had connected it with the word exclusive; whereas the latter had not. The meaning which Mr. N. affixed to that word, was altogether different from the one now contended for. The Constitution does not say Congress shall possess exclusive power of legislation; but that they shall have power of exercising exclusive legislation.

The acts of cession and acceptance contained a construction directly opposed to that now made. They declare that the laws of Maryland and Virginia shall continue till Congress shall alter them. Their cessation is made to depend on an uncertain event, viz: whether Congress shall legislate or not. Not a title in the Constitution or in our practice, under the Constitution, infringed our liberty to act or not to act.

What would be the effect of this law on the inhabitants of the Territory? It would impose on them the laws of Maryland and Virginia, as they existed on a particular day, without any capability of improvement from the improved code of those States.

Mr. N. had heard of no inconveniences which had arisen from the non-assumption of power by Congress. The people in the Territory of Columbia had been a happy people for more than a hundred years under their State Governments; and, he had no doubt, would remain so without the interposition of Congress, who, at present, were unqualified to act.

After some further remarks by Messrs. HARPER and H. LEE, the question was taken on the Committee rising, and carried without a division.

The Committee rose; the Chairman requested leave to sit again, which was not granted.

Mr. HARPER then moved to recommit the bill to the same committee that introduced it. He said, the objection made by the gentleman from Virginia to the assumption of power by Congress goes to say that the Constitutional provision, the acts of cession of Maryland and Virginia, and the act of acceptance by Congress, shall be all a dead letter; and that the Territory shall continue, as heretofore, under its old jurisdiction. This was, to all intents and purposes, the amount of the gentleman's remarks. He asked, what necessity for the exercise of power by Congress? Had not the citizens lived happily for a hundred years under the State Governments? This Mr. H. did not dispute. It was probably true that they had lived as happily as other portion of citizens under the State Governments. But the provision of the Constitution on this subject had not been made with this view. It was made to bestow dignity and independence on the Government of the Union. It was to protect it from such outrages as had occurred when it was differently situated, when it was without competent Legislative, Executive, and Judicial power, to insure to itself respect. While the Government was under the guardianship of State laws, those laws might be inadequate to its protection, or there might exist a spirit hostile to the General Government, or at any rate indisposed to give it proper protection. This was one reason, among others, for the provisions of the Constitution, confirmed and carried into effect by the acts of Maryland and Virginia, and by the act of Congress.

The object of the gentleman was to defeat all these acts, and all these arrangements, in subversion of that provision which the Constitution had made, and of that necessity which it had foreseen.

The gentleman from Virginia requires more time. He thinks we are not prepared to legislate. But if his (Mr. H.'s) ideas were adopted, there would be no occasion for this. The Territory has laws; and Mr. H. believed these laws would answer very well for fifty years, without giving Congress much trouble to modify them.

The establishment of a Judiciary would be very easy, and would require little time. As to a police, it may be necessary hereafter. At present it was not necessary. With regard to a corporation, he was against it at present, and he did not think it would ever be necessary.

Mr. NICHOLAS did not consider the power imparted by the Constitution as imperative. He, therefore, could not fairly be charged with a desire to deviate from the designs of its framers. The power was like a coat of armor, intended to protect the Government in periods of danger, and not to be worn at all times for parade and show.

Remarks had been made to show that the dignity and independence of the Government required the assumption. All such arguments, when set against the happiness of the people, were inconclusive. Mr. N. had always been taught to consider the true dignity of the Government as indissolubly connected with the happiness of the people; and was unable to unlearn all that he had heretofore acquired to this effect.

Mr. CRAIK agreed with the member from South Carolina, as far as his remarks went, but he did not think they went far enough. He was himself friendly to the institution of a local government for local purposes, leaving all Federal powers to Congress. If the bill should be recommitted, he would be prepared to offer a plan conformably to these ideas. He felt no alarm at the doubts suggested of the validity of the laws of Maryland and Virginia. He believed that they were still in force; and did not think there was any absolute necessity for Congress to act at all at present. Still, he thought that delay would only multiply the inconveniences already experienced in the formation of a plan of government. A plan might be framed, to protect the General Government as well as, in some degree, the inhabitants of the Territory, from any tyranny that some gentlemen supposed might be exercised by Congress.

He concluded, by expressing a hope that a completely organized system might be formed and adopted.

Mr. DENNIS coincided with his colleague in desiring an assumption of jurisdiction by Congress. But, before he committed himself by an opinion, he wished to see an entire plan submitted. As to the bill before the Committee, it was little more than an abstract proposition.

Mr. D. believed that the assumption by Congress would be agreeable to the inhabitants, if a good system were adopted.

Mr. C. GOODRICH advocated the recommitment of the bill, that a more complete system might be devised, and submitted to the House in a more direct way.

The question of recommitment was carried, and two members were added to the original committee.

The Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business reported it as their opinion, that it would be proper to continue the Sedition law, which expires with the close of this session, for two years longer.

Ordered, To lie on the table.

THURSDAY, January 1, 1801.

The House of Representatives having received information of the death of Major General THOMAS HARTLEY, one of its members, who has represented the State of Pennsylvania, in that branch of the National Legislature, from the commencement of the Government until his death, do, therefore, unanimously, Resolve, That the members testify their respect for the memory of the said THOMAS HARTLEY, by wearing a crape on the left arm, for one month.

Resolved, That the SPEAKER address a letter to the Executive of Pennsylvania, to inform him of the death of THOMAS HARTLEY, late a member of this House, in order that measures may be taken to supply the vacancy occasioned thereby.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

An engrossed bill concerning GEORGE WASHINGTON was read the third time; and, on the question that the same do pass,

Mr. DAWSON moved to recommit it. Lost—ayes 39, noes 44.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved to refer the bill to a select committee. Lost—ayes 32.

Resolved, That the title of the said bill be, "An act to erect a Mausoleum for GEORGE WASHINGTON;" and that the Clerk of this House do carry the same to the Senate, and desire their concurrence.

FRIDAY, January 2.

Another member to wit: JAMES A. BAYARD, from Delaware, appeared and took his seat in the House.

On motion of Mr. GRISWOLD the House went into a Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary bill; the House dividing—yeas 44, nays 33.

The bill was read through, when the Committee reported progress, and asked and obtained leave to sit again.

A petition of sundry citizens and inhabitants of the county of Wayne, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, was presented to the House and read, stating the uncertain tenure by which they hold the lands now occupied by them, and praying relief therein; and, also, that the aid and patronage of Congress may be extended to them in the establishment of schools for the education of their youth, and that a township of land belonging to the United States may be appropriated in the said county for the support of the Gospel, and for erecting the buildings necessary for the celebration of divine service.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to Mr. PINCKNEY, Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. IMLAY, Mr. ELIZUR GOODRICH, and Mr. KITTERA.

Mr. HARPER presented two papers; one of which was a defence by Governor Sargent of himself, against charges preferred against him by a member of the House of Representatives; being a letter to the Secretary of State, put by him into the hands of Mr. HARPER; and the other, the presentment of a grand jury in the Northwest Territory on charges made against Governor Sargent, &c.

The papers were read and referred to the committee of inquiry into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent; as was a Message of the President, enclosing a copy of laws passed in that Territory between June 30, and December 31, 1799.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HARPER moved the following resolutions, which were read, and referred to the Committee on the Territory of Columbia:

Resolved, That it is expedient for Congress to assume, forthwith, the jurisdiction of Columbia.

Resolved, That the laws of Virginia and Maryland now in force in the parts of the said district contained within the limits of those States respectively, ought to be continued in force therein, until Congress shall otherwise provide by law.

Resolved, That for the administration of justice within the said District, there ought to be established two Inferior, and one Superior Court; the Inferior Courts to sit at Alexandria, and the City of Washington, for such parts of the said District as lie on the different sides of the river Potomac respectively; to have a limited civil and criminal jurisdiction with competent powers; and to be composed of three Judges each; and the Supreme Court to be held at the City of Washington, to have full powers as a Court of Equity, original jurisdiction in all cases civil and criminal not within the jurisdiction of the Inferior Courts, and appellate jurisdiction from the said courts in all civil cases above the value of — dollars; and to be composed of a Chief Justice, who shall also be superintendent of police for the said District, with competent powers, and two associates.

Resolved That the salaries of the said Judges ought to be established by law, and to be paid by the United States.

Resolved That provision ought to be made for the appointment of a Marshal for the said District, and of clerks and other officers for the said courts, for the preservation of records, and for the due confinement and security of persons committed or imprisoned.

Resolved That for the better ordering of affairs in the said District, it ought to be divided into three townships, so that one township shall include Alexandria, one Georgetown, and one the City of Washington; and that a Corporation ought to be established within each of the said townships, to be composed of a suitable number of persons annually elected by the freeholders within the same; and to be vested with power to make provision within their respective townships, by by-laws respecting streets, highways, markets, and other matters of a similar nature, to be particularly described; the said by-laws to be subject to the revision of the Superior Court of the District, and to be annulled thereby, upon complaint by any person or persons aggrieved, notice to the proper officers of Corporation, and cause shown.

SEDITION LAW.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, made the thirty-first ultimo, which lay on the table, and the same being again read, in the words following, to wit:

"The Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business further report, in part:

"That, on examining the statutes of the United States, they find that the act, entitled 'An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States,' passed the fourteenth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, will expire on the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one.

"And the said committee report their opinion, that the above-mentioned act ought to be continued; and, therefore, recommend the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business be authorized to report a bill for continuing the act, entitled 'An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States,' passed the fourteenth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight."

It was moved and seconded that the said report be committed to a Committee of the Whole House. And the question being taken thereupon, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 47, nays 33, as follows:

Ordered, That the said report be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Tuesday next.

Ordered, That Mr. HARPER and Mr. OTIS be excused from serving on the committee appointed, on the twenty-second ultimo, to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory; and that Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH and Mr. BAYARD be appointed in their stead.

MONDAY, January 5.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented a bill making appropri-tions for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

Ordered, That Mr. DAVIS, Mr. NOTT, and Mr. CLAIBORNE, be excused from serving on the committee appointed, on the twenty-second ultimo, to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory; and that Mr. ROBERT WILLIAMS, Mr. TALIAFERRO, and Mr. PINCKNEY, be appointed in their stead.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to inquire into the expediency of appointing agents in Kentucky and the Northwest Territory to pay pensions becoming due.

JUDICIARY BILL.

The House resolved into a Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary bill.

The CHAIRMAN proceeded in reading the paragraphs until he came to the fifth section, which,

Mr. EGGLESTON moved so to amend, as to preserve the plan at present existing, which establishes one court for Virginia, instead of dividing the State into two districts, and having two courts, one to sit at Richmond, and the other at Fredericksburg, as proposed by the bill.

On this motion a lengthy debate ensued.

Messrs. EGGLESTON, NICHOLAS, RANDOLPH, JACKSON, and MACON supported, and Messrs. GRISWOLD, HARPER, BAYARD, H. LEE, and OTIS, opposed it.

Those who supported the motion contended that the proposed alteration was unwarranted by any change which had taken place in Virginia; that heretofore much business had been done in the Federal court from an accumulation of unsatisfied demands incurred previously to the formation of the Federal Constitution; that these demands, for the most part, were now settled; that the existing demands are few, and which one court was fully equal to attending to; that the fact was that justice had been administered under the present system with the greatest dispatch; and that at the last term the docket was so completely cleared, in a sitting of ten days, that the court, not satisfied with deciding on suits which had gone through the usual forms, had actually decided on several returnable to the ensuing term; that the additional court was not desired by the citizens of Virginia, whose convenience, so far from being furthered, would be injured by it; for that the plan of having one court held at Richmond, and another at Fredericksburg, which were not more than seventy miles apart, would place a large portion of the citizens at a greater distance from the seats of the courts, than they were at present from Richmond; which was, besides, the capital of the State, and the place to which the citizens very generally repaired for the transaction of their ordinary affairs;—that it behooved those gentlemen who recommended this extension of the Judiciary system, to show the peculiar necessity and advantages of it.

Those who opposed the motion observed, that it became the Government of the United States to organize the Judiciary in such a way as to insure an obedience to its laws, and to insure the faithful collection of revenue; that this last object could only be attained by the institution of Federal courts, not so remote from each other, as to prevent the convenient attendance of prosecutors, parties, witnesses, and jurors at the seats of the courts; that the recovery of duties derived from this source could only be made before the Federal courts, and if the places at which infractions of the revenue laws took place were very remote, however ardent the patriotism of the citizens, they could not be expected to encounter the great expense and loss of time that would be required in attending a court three or four hundred miles distant; that the most solid objection to an extension of the courts was their expense; that in fact the extension would probably be an economical arrangement, as the facility of recovering dues to the public would be increased, and with it the productiveness of the revenue; and a considerable sum would be saved in the expenses, defrayed by the public, of a grand jury, which from its very nature must be drawn from all the parts of each State, by the contracted size of the district from which they were taken; and that the same remark would apply, in a smaller degree, to common jurors, witnesses, prosecutors, &c.; that, so far from the statement made by the gentleman being correct, it was understood that several suits in which the public was interested, had been protracted for several terms; that the little business alleged to have been brought before the Federal court of Virginia, was the most conclusive evidence of the inconveniences attending the present plan, whereby, owing to the remote situation of the greater part of the citizens, they were induced to prefer an appeal to the State, in preference to the Federal courts.

It was further declared to be very doubtful, on Constitutional ground, whether Congress could delegate judicial powers to the State courts; and if they could, it was a delicate question how far State Judges were amenable to the United States, for a faithful discharge of their duty, inasmuch as, if they violated the laws of the United States, they were not Constitutional subjects of impeachment by Congress; that, at any rate, the effect might be the inexecution of the laws; from which an imbecility in the Government would arise, the more fatal as it affected the vital principle of the administration of justice; that it was not doubted but that Virginia would be well satisfied with one court in preference to two, or with no court whatever in preference to one; that it would be wise in Congress to conform as nearly as they could, in consistence with economy, to the ideas adopted by the several States, as well as the established principles of common law, which brought justice home to the door of every man: that it would therefore be advisable, if the expense were not too great, to divide Virginia, not merely into two, but into four or eight districts, with a court in each; that it was a lame argument, that because we could not do all that was required, we should do nothing; that as to the idea thrown out, that the convenience of the citizens of Virginia did not require an additional court it was entitled to no weight; as the additional court would not be instituted merely for the convenience of Virginia, but for rendering justice to foreigners and the citizens of other States, and to insure the dignity and independence of the Government.

It was further observed that if the division of Virginia, contemplated by the bill, was inconvenient, it might be altered; though it was believed that the objection arose from a want of geographical knowledge in the gentlemen who made it.

In reply to these remarks, it was said by a member, who represented the Western district of Virginia, that there had been but one suit carried before the Federal court from his part of the State for ten years, and that at present there was not a single one depending.

Other gentlemen observed that it behooved those who avowed that this additional court was not intended to answer the convenience of the citizens of Virginia to answer, that, notwithstanding the contrary declarations of some gentlemen, who on this occasion, had betrayed the same ignorance of the physical state of the country that on previous occasions they had manifested of its moral and political state, the new arrangement would increase, instead of diminishing the existing inconveniences, inasmuch as the citizens of the counties of Essex, Caroline, Louisa, and Orange, would be removed to a greater distance from Fredericksburg, the contemplated seat of their court, than they now were from Richmond.

It was further contended that the State courts were fully competent to discharge all the duties assigned them; and that in Virginia the Federal laws had been either invariably obeyed or enforced; that no spirit of hostility to the Federal Government had appeared, and that it would be time enough to guard against it when it should appear; that, from the remarks of some gentlemen, it really appeared, as if they wanted an additional Judge, and knew not where to locate him.

The question was then taken on Mr. EGGLERSON'S motion to strike out, and lost—yeas 39, nays 44.

A motion was then made that the Committee rise; which was lost—yeas 36, nays 39.

Mr H. LEE moved so to amend the section, as to produce a division of Virginia laterally, instead of longitudinally, and to make Staunton instead of Fredericksburg, the seat of justice.—Carried, yeas 45.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The House took up the report of the Committee of Privileges on the letter of Joseph Wheaton, Sergeant-at-Arms, which is as follows:

The Committee of Privileges to whom was referred the letter from Joseph Wheaton, Sergeant-at-Arms, report:

That the representation made by the Sergeant-at-Arms contains a correct statement of facts; and that he, in the opinion of the committee, is to be commended for the promptitude and fidelity with which he executed the order of the Speaker to apprehend the person guilty of indecent and disorderly conduct in the gallery.

The committee have reason to believe, from the best information they can obtain, that the person who committed the disorder, (and who has since absconded,) was at the time intoxicated with liquor.

The magistrate, by whose warrant the Sergeant-at-Arms was arrested, and held in custody, for discharging his duty in the premises, has explained his conduct in a letter accompanying this report. The suggestion made to him, that any one member of this House was consulted with regard to the prosecution of the Sergeant-at-Arms, is presumed by the committee to be false; as it would imply in such member not only a disregard of all sense of personal propriety, but also an inexcusable contempt for the honor and dignity of the House.

That although the arrest and confinement of an officer of the House of Representatives for any act by him performed in its service, and in obedience to its orders, must be deemed a high breach of its privileges; yet as the magistrate, in the present case, seems rather to have been deceived by false representations, than influenced by improper views, the committee cannot consider his conduct as a subject of animadversion.

They are, therefore, of opinion that it is not expedient for the House to take any further order on the letter from Joseph Wheaton.

The following is the letter of the magistrate alluded to:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1801.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I will endeavor to state what took place between James Lane and myself respecting the warrant I granted at the instance of the said Lane against Joseph Wheaton, which is in substance as follows:

On Monday the 22d ultimo, I was called on by a young man of genteel appearance, whose name he said was Lane, and informed (for the first time) that he had been arrested in the gallery of Congress by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and by him confined in one of the committee-rooms upwards of an hour, on suspicion of clapping a member of the House of Representatives while addressing the Speaker, which charge he at that time denied being guilty of. He also stated that Mr. Wheaton, after keeping him confined during the time above-mentioned discharged him, and that he was arrested a second time by the said Wheaton on the public square, some distance from the Capitol, who wrested from him, his horse without producing a written authority from the Speaker of Congress, or any other evidence to justify his conduct. I thought, under such circumstances, it behooved me as a justice of the peace for Prince George's county, to take cognizance of the last charge, although I embarked in the business with great diffidence and reluctance. I issued a warrant to have Mr. Wheaton apprehended, which was served by Mr. Spalding (the constable) on the Wednesday following, by whom Mr. Wheaton was brought before me. On hearing his defence, which was corroborated by others who were present, I made no hesitation in discharging him, as I was well satisfied that his conduct had been that of a vigilant officer, and I made no hesitation in declaring that, so far as his conduct has fallen under my own observation, it has been marked with the strictest probity. Mr. Lane informed me that he had consulted with one or two members of Congress respecting his case, who thought he had been treated with improper severity, but he did not name any particular member. I have endeavored to state every circumstance that took place on this disagreeable subject, and hope my conduct may not be unfavorably construed, so as to lead to the smallest suspicion that I meant to offer an indignity to the representatives of this my native country, or any of its officers.

I remain with sentiments of due respect, your obedient servant,

RICHARD FORREST.

The following is the letter from the Sergeant-at-Arms:

To the Hon. Theodore Sedgwick, Esq., Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States:

SIR: I conceive it to be my duty to report to you, for the information of the House of Representatives, the circumstances which have attended and the proceedings which have followed my obedience to your orders for arresting the person who had been guilty of contemptuous and disorderly behaviour in the gallery on Monday the 22d inst. Upon proceeding to the gallery I found that the disorderly person was one James Lane, whom I accordingly arrested, conducted to the Clerk's office, and treated with all possible civility, until the adjournment of the House, when he was released, and suffered to go where he pleased.

On the Wednesday morning I was apprehended upon a warrant issued by Richard Forrest, Esq., in the name of the State of Maryland, commanding Thomas Barton Morris or Richard Spalding to arrest the body of Joseph Wheaton, and I was accordingly conducted before the said Justice Forrest, and was detained a prisoner from 10 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and was at length discharged because the aforesaid Lane did not appear to prosecute his complaint.

I have the honor to be, faithfully, your obedient, humble servant.

JOSEPH WHEATON.

December 30, 1800.

Mr. NICHOLAS thought the report contained opinions that it would be improper in the House to sanction. It improperly censured the conduct of a magistrate, who did not appear to have violated his official duties, as he had waived the prosecution as soon as he was informed by the Sergeant of the real nature of the circumstances. More could not be required. To expect the magistracy to forbear calling to account the officers of a Legislative body, in all cases whatever, would involve a violation of every legal principle.

As Mr. N. understood the affair before the House, the Sergeant had been directed by the Speaker to see to the man who made the disturbance in the gallery. He knew not that this order gave any authority to confine the man. He had not himself been present at the time; but, from the circumstances he had heard stated, he did not believe that the idea of arrest and confinement had entered into the head of any man. But the conduct of the Sergeant did not stop here. He had been told, and he believed truly, that the Sergeant, after removing the man from the gallery, had dismissed him, and had returned to the House; when, on the suggestion of some members, he again pursued the man, who was in the street, and arrested him a second time, when there was no disturbance, and held him in confinement, without any authority whatever.

The opinions expressed by the committee would be of little importance, if they did not go to establish the incompetency of the magistracy of this country to inquire into the conduct of men who might be guilty of misconduct; of that magistracy on whom we must rely, in a great measure, for our protection.

Mr. DAVIS moved to refer the report to a Committee of the whole House.

Mr. SMILIE hoped the House, before it committed itself by any judgment, would inquire by what authority the Sergeant had acted in this most extraordinary transaction, that the citizens might in future be protected from outrages similar to that under discussion.

Mr. BAYARD said that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. NICHOLAS) had entertained the House with an enumeration of doubts, which he hoped they would take no notice of. The facts before them came from a select committee, who were the only organ of a correct investigation of facts. If the facts were doubted the reference of them to a Committee of the Whole, with the view of ascertaining their truth, would be perfectly futile.

As to the sentiments of the gentleman on the report, he could not say he was surprised at them. They amounted simply to this, that there was something so sacred in the rights of a free citizen of a free country, that it was altogether immaterial how he acted, or in what manner he treated the constituted authorities of his country. Mr. B. felt as much as the gentleman for the rights of the citizen; but he also felt some degree of respect for the Government; as he believed that much, not merely of its dignity, but of the happiness of the people, depended upon an adherence to the settled principles of order. The gentleman had told the House he doubted its power in several respects. Did he doubt its power to take the most instantaneous steps to preserve its tranquillity and order? To advance such a doctrine would be to degrade the House below the grade of the most pitiful county court. There was no such court that did not possess the power of committing for a contempt.

Mr. NICHOLAS said that his remarks had been misstated. They were, that the magistrate was right in issuing his warrant; and that all that could be expected from him was an admission of the plea of the Sergeant, which had actually been done. But to say that a magistrate shall not call your officers to an account in any case, is saying more than had ever been said elsewhere. Cannot your officer commit abuses? Have not gentlemen heard of abuses committed elsewhere? Have they not heard, too, of their punishment? In such circumstances what other course can be pursued, than that whereby a complaint is first made, and the defence then heard?

Mr. N. did not think the committee had reported a true statement of facts. The Sergeant had himself declared that he had released the man, and afterwards arrested him a second time. He was, therefore, authorized in supposing, not that the committee had suppressed facts, but that they had not made a full inquiry into them. It was, then, an acceptable service to give this information to the gentlemen, in the hope that they would be influenced by it.

He was surprised at the imputation thrown on a member, who was alluded to, as having advised the prosecution of the Sergeant. This conduct, so far from being disgraceful, he considered as highly honorable, coming as it did from a member enjoying an inviolability of character.

Mr. N. concluded with the expression of a hope that the business would be buried in oblivion, without controversy.

Mr. DANA said there were two features of the report that seemed to excite the sensibility of the gentleman from Virginia; one was the improper opinions expressed in it; the other, the imputation thrown on a member. He would have been truly surprised at the remarks he had heard on this occasion, had not very similar remarks often been expressed. Could any gentleman, pretending to judicial knowledge, doubt the power of the House? Could any man doubt that to arrest an officer of this House for discharging his duty was a violation of privilege?

As to the imputation thrown on a member, if any member had advised the prosecution, was not the imputation merited? For could any member of this House, impressed with a just sense of his station, so far degrade himself or the House as to request the interference of a magistrate? This, indeed, would be a miserable degradation of the House.

Mr. HARPER was prepared, if this were a fit time, to show that the Speaker clearly possessed the power he had exercised. It could be established by the best authorities. He was against a reference to the Committee of the Whole, which was the only question before the House. If gentlemen wished to try the abstract principle of privilege, they should move a recommitment to the select committee, and assign for reason the objectionable parts of the preamble.

The SPEAKER said that whatever words he may have used in giving his orders to the Sergeant, it was his intention to have arrested, and held in confinement, subject to the order of the House, the man who had committed disorderly behaviour in the gallery. He thought then, and he still thought, that his power extended to this length. If the Speaker did not possess this power a member might be assaulted without the bar, a debate might ensue, and before the House could come to any decision, the object to be answered might be defeated. It was, therefore, only justice to the Sergeant to declare that whatever he had done had been in obedience to his orders.

In the case of disorderly behaviour in the galleries, there were but two courses which could be pursued. One was to clear the galleries of all the persons in them. This would be to punish the innocent for the guilty. [The other was not heard distinctly.]

JANUARY, 1801.

Question of Privilege.

H. OF R.

Mr. DAVIS spoke against the report, and in favor of referring it to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITTERA advocated the report.

Mr. SMILIE declared his decided disapprobation of the conduct of the Speaker, the Sergeant, and the Committee.

Mr. OTIS spoke at considerable length. He defended the conduct of the Speaker, the Sergeant, and the Committee. He observed that the authority of the Speaker to direct a momentary arrest was conceded. To arrest for an instant was as great a trespass as to arrest for a day. It could not admit of question that the Sergeant was bound to execute the orders of the Speaker; and these given in the presence of the whole House, without the House making any interference, were equal to the actual orders of the House.

It should be noticed by gentlemen that the species of outrage recently committed was more to be dreaded than any other kind of outrage. In other countries it had been fatal. In the French Republic it had produced much bloodshed, and other mournful transactions. Designing men attended for the express purpose of inspiring terror, thereby hoping to carry their favorite measures; and, in case they were called to account, they too generally found adherents, or lost themselves in a crowd. This description of outrages was, therefore, more to be feared than open assault upon the members.

Mr. MACON conceived that, in an affair of this kind, which presented the first instance in which a complaint had been made against an officer of the House for the arrest of a citizen, it became the House to act with deliberate caution. He was for a reference to the Committee of the Whole. He was not disposed to go at length into the arguments, urged by gentlemen in favor of the report. But he did not believe that the dignity of the House had anything to do with the business.

Mr. NICHOLAS had little doubt but that the sentiments contained in the preamble would hereafter be quoted as authorities. In this point of light he considered them as dangerous. They tended to extend, under the name of privilege, the powers of an Assembly, placed in circumstances peculiar to itself; and this extension could only be made at the expense of the magistracy of the country. The truth was that the civil authorities had powers, in many cases concurrent with those of the House; and it became not the House in such cases to countenance an exclusive exercise of them.

Mr. N. had no doubt of the Speaker's making a true statement, according to his own impressions. But he did doubt the actual correctness of his statement. His own opinion was that no authority had been given to the Sergeant to take the man into confinement.

[Mr. N. here stated, in corroboration of his opinion of the correctness of the facts reported by the Committee, the declaration made to him by several gentlemen as to the conduct of the Sergeant. His statement was substantially the same with that of Mr. ALSTON, which will be found below.]

The SPEAKER rose to explain what he had previously stated. He had said that he considered himself as possessed of the power to arrest and confine a person for disorderly behaviour during the present sitting, subject to the instructions of the House. He had not said that he had any power to confine an individual beyond that time.

The words in which he had conveyed his orders to the Sergeant, were he believed: "Take care of him." He would take this occasion to say that there was in the public prints of that day a gross misrepresentation of what occurred in the House.

[The editor of the National Intelligencer would deem it an act of pusillanimity to shrink from noticing this declaration of the Speaker. It is possible that it may not refer to his statement of the proceedings of the House; but the probability is that it does refer to that statement, inasmuch as it is the most particular which has been published, and the only one which states in detail the order of business of that day.

The day referred to is December 23d, 1800; and the debate that which took place on certain resolutions relative to the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent.

By a reference to that debate it will appear that, during the day there were sixty-nine successive risings of members, (including the Speaker;) that numerous points of order were started and decided upon by the Speaker; that embarrassment followed embarrassment; and that in several instances the Speaker, on the information of members, reversed his own decisions.

As a faithful reporter, a statement of these circumstances was published; as well as the words which fell from the Speaker on the disturbance in the gallery, which were: "See to that man."

Deeming it peculiarly important to be correct as to the words uttered by the Speaker, before they were published, the editor asked a gentleman, whose correctness cannot be questioned, and whose nearness to the Chair enabled him distinctly to hear, whether these were the words? he replied that they were.

This statement is extorted by the charge of gross misrepresentation. These are words which convey anything or everything. Without much latitude of construction they may be applied not only to the act, but the intention.

They tend, therefore, to impair that character for a sacred and undeviating adherence to truth, which the editor claims as of right. While he stands on the ground of truth, (and he never can stand on any other ground,) he knows that his statements will continue to be received as fair and correct representations of facts.

He will not deny his inability always to understand the meaning of the Speaker, even when he hears all his words. His consolation, however, is, that the misfortune is not peculiar to himself. The close of this day's debate will show that at least three members of the House labor under the same inconvenience.]

Mr. RUTLEDGE had been informed by the Sergeant that there had not been a second arrest.

The account given to him at the time of the outrage, and that given him to-day, precisely corresponded. The account was this: that when the Sergeant went into the gallery, the man who had committed the disorderly behaviour braved the vengeance of the House; in consequence of which he was taken down stairs by the Sergeant; he then broke from the custody of the Sergeant, and was finally conducted into the committee room, where he remained till the House rose, when the Speaker released him.

Nothing so gross as this had occurred under the Government, except once in Philadelphia, when the Speaker had actually confined all the citizens in the gallery by locking them in for a time. So that this power of confinement, which gentlemen declared to be novel, had been exercised, and that too in a much more extensive degree.

Mr. ALSTON observed that, had it not been for the observations which fell from the gentleman from South Carolina, who had just sat down, he should not have troubled the House with any remarks upon the present occasion; but that the statement of facts given by that gentleman to the House, so far as they related to the information which he had received from the Sergeant-at-Arms, was so entirely different from that which he himself had received from that officer, that he conceived himself bound to state to the House what he had himself heard that officer say. That upon the evening after the transaction took place, sitting by the fire-side in the presence of ten or fifteen gentlemen, who, Mr. A. said, he was very confident would bear him out in what he was about to relate, the Sergeant-at-Arms said that, in executing the orders of the Speaker, respecting the noise in the gallery, he had turned the disorderly person out of the gallery, and intended to have let him go about his business; but upon returning into the House, he had been advised by some of the members not to let him go; that it was extremely improper. Upon this he returned, and found the man some distance from the Capitol, upon his horse; that he again arrested him, and conducted him into the Clerk's office, or one of the committee rooms, and there detained him until the House adjourned.

Mr. A. then observed, that if the Sergeant-at-Arms had been capable of relating in language so diametrically opposite, the transaction which had taken place, as had been just given by the gentleman from South Carolina and himself, that, instead of his conduct being praiseworthy, as was stated by the report of the committee, in his opinion it merited reprehension, and that he should, therefore, give his vote against concurring with the report of the committee.

Mr. STANFORD observed, that what he knew of the subject did not come from the Sergeant; but he had good authority for saying, that the person who had committed disorder in the gallery, had been set at large after he was taken, and arrested under the advice and influence of certain members of the House, one, at least, if not more; that he himself could establish these facts; of course, that the report of the select committee was incorrect, and he hoped the business would be committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NOTT spoke in approbation of the report, and stated in detail the facts which had attended the business; but not having heard with distinctness more than half the words he uttered, and these in a broken way, we cannot state even the substance of his statement.

Mr. STANFORD begged leave more particularly to state that, on the day of the disorder, after the House had adjourned, he stepped into the Clerk's office. He there found the young man, the subject of the present inquiry, held in custody. He then expressed his surprise to the young gentlemen of the office, that the Sergeant had confined him, and exposed him to this humiliating mortification so long; that, as it was a thoughtless act on the part of the young man, to have turned him out of the gallery was sufficient punishment for the offence, and, indeed, the usual course. The answer was, that the Sergeant had done no more at first, but that, at the instance, it seemed, of one or more of the members, and not by the authority of the Speaker, he had afterwards gone, rearrested, and thus confined him.

Mr. S. hoped that the matter might go to the Committee of the Whole; the facts, he alleged, could then be substantiated, and the report of the select committee, so evidently erroneous, might be corrected.

Mr. EDMONDS thought that the conduct of the Speaker and Sergeant had been just what it ought to be. Nor did the different statements of facts, in the least, affect the propriety of the steps taken. In consequence of the order of the Speaker the Sergeant had arrested the individual, who was immediately in confinement. After this arrest the Sergeant had no power to liberate him without the permission of the Speaker or the House. Whether, therefore, he had remained personally in the custody of the Sergeant, or whether he had been disengaged from him, still he was substantially and legally under arrest and in confinement; and if he had withdrawn from the custody of the Sergeant, the latter had only done his duty in retaking him.

The question was then taken on referring the report to the Committee of the whole House, and lost—ayes 34, noes 48.

Mr. DAVIS, after making a statement of facts in correspondence with those of Mr. ALSTON, moved a reference of the report to a select committee. Lost—ayes 38, noes 47.

The question on agreeing to the resolution, with which the report concludes, recurring, the yeas and nays were agreed to be taken.

Mr. VARNUM. Is it in order to move to strike out the preamble?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not in order. The preamble to a resolution may be struck out. But he believed no preamble, that barely assigned the reasons of a committee, had ever been struck out.

Mr. VARNUM was of opinion there had been such instances; and referred to a report of the Committee of Elections in 1795.

The SPEAKER declared that the preamble was not before the House; the only question was on agreeing to the concluding words.

On which the yeas and nays were taken.

When the Clerk called the name of Mr. SPAIGHT, he rose, and asked the Speaker whether the preamble would be inserted on the journals? declaring that if it were not, he would vote for the resolution.

The SPEAKER replied, in words that we considered as equivalent to a declaration that it would not be inserted. So impressed, Mr. SPAIGHT said, "aye."

On enumerating the yeas they were 58, and the nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William C. C. Claiborne, William Cooper, William Craik, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Samuel Goode, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Andrew Gregg, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, John A. Varnum.

The SPEAKER then made some remarks on placing the preamble on the journals.

Mr. KITCHELL said he had voted for the resolution from the declaration of the Speaker that the preamble was not to be inserted on the journals. If it were to be inserted he would change his vote.

The SPEAKER declared he had not said so.

Mr. SPAIGHT had been similarly impressed with Mr. KITCHELL. He, too, must request permission to change his vote.

Mr. GREGG declared he had voted under the same impression.

The members were not permitted to change their votes.

Mr. KITCHELL said that, in order to have an opportunity of fairly expressing his opinion, he moved a reconsideration of the question just taken.

On which question the yeas and nays were taken—yeas 45, nays 42, as follows:

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented, a bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

Ordered, That the committee to whom was referred, on the twenty-third ultimo, the petition of the messengers and office-keepers of the several Departments, be discharged from the consideration of the same; and that the said petition be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

WEDNESDAY, January 7.

Ordered, That the memorial and remonstrance of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, presented the 30th ultimo, and which lay on the table, be referred to Mr. DANA, Mr. TALIAFERRO, Mr. TENNEY, Mr. NOTT, and Mr. EGGLESTON.

JUDICIARY BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary bill.

A considerable number of amendments were offered by Mr. HARPER, and approved.

Mr. DENNIS moved an addition to one of the sections, in the form of a proviso, declaring that nothing contained in the act should be so construed as to repeal so much of an act for securing duties on stills, &c., as vests in the courts of the several States a jurisdiction in certain cases therein mentioned.

He made this motion, not with reference to his own decision, but to try the sense of the Committee on the constitutionality of the power thus delegated; which, on a former day had been contested by a gentleman from New York, (Mr. BIRD.)

He had himself no doubt of the constitutionality of the power. Under our present system of Government, as well as under the Confederation, it had been exercised in analogous cases. The old Congress had expressly vested in the State courts the jurisdiction over Admiralty cases.

The Constitution has empowered Congress to establish judicatories, which might be made the sole organs of decision in certain specified cases; but it had not prescribed that they should absolutely be the exclusive organs. He recollected that in the Convention of Virginia that ratified the Federal Constitution, the advocates of it urged, as an argument for its adoption, that though Congress had the right of establishing independent judicatories, it was not probable that they would extensively exercise the right; but that they would devolve Judicial powers on the State tribunals.

As to the expediency of delegating Judicial powers to the State courts, it presented a more difficult inquiry. It was certainly a kind of clumsy affair. Under all other Governments the Judicial authority was at least coextensive with the Legislative; and in many Governments it went beyond it in a decision of cases under the law of nations.

Besides, Mr. D. discerned no way of compelling State Judges to perform their duty; and there appeared to be peculiar hardships in obliging courts and juries, supported by particular counties, to perform Federal duties.

Mr. HARPER had as little doubt of the Constitutionality as he had of the expediency of this delegation of power. At present we are not under the necessity of establishing a Judicial system as extensive as the powers of Congress. If we were constitutionally obliged to do this, we should be compelled to cover the whole ground, and to institute a great number of new courts. It is true that we cannot enforce on the State courts, as a matter of duty, a performance of the acts we confide to them; but we give them the power, and until they refuse to exercise it, we have no cause to complain. He did not believe this proviso necessary. But as some gentlemen thought it was necessary, he would vote for it.

Mr. BIRD declared himself still of opinion, that the delegation of Judicial power to the State courts was unconstitutional. This is denied by the gentleman from Maryland. The argument he makes use of stands thus: He denies the unconstitutionality of the transfer, because we have practised it; therefore we have the power. Is this correct reasoning? Does the practice of a particular thing demonstrate it to be right?

The extreme difficulty of stretching out Judicial power in federal tribunals, which was alleged, was not a question of right, but of expediency. If it were a question of right, then must the question of right, as superior, supersede the minor question of expediency.

Some gentlemen seemed to think that, as soon as Congress pass a particular law, there exists a right and a duty in the State courts to execute it. But our own practice destroys this idea; for all our laws on the subject actually give power to the State courts; the expression is, "they may have jurisdiction in certain cases."

It had been asked, whether the laws of the United States did not bind the State Judges? He answered that they bound them as citizens but not as Judges. Even the gentleman from South Carolina admits that there is no obligation imposed upon them to act. This furnished a strong argument of the inconsistency of gentlemen, as the Judges were neither bound to execute our laws nor punishable for omitting to execute them. Further, the institution of a Judiciary coextensive with the other branches of the Government, was essential to the due administration of all just plans of civil policy. On the Judiciary depended the fair administration of justice. It was an organ of essential use and necessity. It should be attached to the system of which it formed a part, independently of all other systems. As well might the organ of one human body expect to derive support from the organ of another disconnected body, as the Federal Judiciary expect to gain support from State tribunals. So thought the framers of the Constitution; and a contemporaneous commentator on it has declared that a Judiciary coextensive with the Legislature is so natural as not to require argument to support it.

Mr. B. then went over the same ground with that taken by him in a former debate.

He concluded by declaring that, until the point was better cleared of Constitutional objections, all arguments of in expediency were perfectly futile.

Mr. NOTT said, the simple question was, whether the Congress of the United States had or had not the Constitutional right of transferring to the State judicatories the power of trying causes arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. In discussing this question he should not consider the consequences resulting from the decision, for although the consequences might be as his colleague (Mr. HARPER) had represented, that the Judiciary of the United States must be made coextensive with the State Judicatories, if this power was not admitted, yet if so the Constitution was written, so it must be understood. The Constitution could not be bent as convenience might require. The decision, therefore, must be made by the instrument itself.

H. OF R.

The Constitution provided that the Judicial power of the United States should be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress might from time to time ordain and establish; and also that they should hold their offices during good behaviour, &c.

Mr. N. said, the clause in the Constitution requiring inferior courts, was equally imperative with that requiring a Supreme Court, with this difference only, that the Supreme Court was limited to one, but the details of the inferior courts were left to Congress. The expression "inferior courts" was a technical expression, as well understood by every lawyer as any in our law books. It meant a court possessed of subordinate powers within the same Judiciary system, and necessarily implied a superior court, capable of controlling an undue exercise of those powers; that the State Legislatures might with as much propriety be called inferior to the Federal Legislature, or the Executive of any State be called a subordinate officer of the President of the United States, as the State courts could be considered inferior courts of the United States.

The words in the Constitution were, "such inferior courts as Congress may ordain and establish;" and it was not sufficient to say that by giving the power to try causes arising under the Constitution, &c., you, quo ad hoc, made them courts of the United States; for there was an essential difference between ordaining and establishing courts and transferring power to courts already ordained and established. The obvious meaning of the Constitution, was that the Judicial power of the United States should be confided to courts established and organized by their own Government. Besides, Mr. N. observed, it was required that the Judges should hold their offices during good behaviour; but this was not the case in the several States; in some, he said, they held their commissions for a limited time; in others during the pleasure of the Legislature, and in others they could not hold them after a certain period of life.

There was another objection, he said, to this mode of appointing officers of the United States. The Constitution has provided that the President should appoint all the officers of the United States not otherwise appointed by the Constitution, except Congress should by law provide otherwise, as mentioned in the same clause of the Constitution. The Judges were not, however, of that description of officers contemplated by the Constitution, the appointment of whom Congress might vest in some other department, and if they were, that power had never yet been exercised by Congress. This, in effect, would be to divest the President of the power given him by the Constitution of appointing all officers, and to exercise it ourselves.

The doctrine he contended for would be further obvious by a reference to the second section of the third article of the Constitution, expressing the cases to which the Judicial power of the United States should extend:

"The Judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers, and Consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizen of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State, claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State and a citizen thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects. In all cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers, and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

He said there was a marked difference between the words of the Constitution relating to the catalogue of cases enumerated in the first part of that section, and those in the latter part of the same. The word "all" was prefixed to each of the cases first mentioned, down to the words "admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" inclusive, but was omitted in all the subsequent cases. He could see no reason why that word was added in the former part of the section, and omitted in the latter, except it meant that there was no case of the former description to which the Judicial power of the United States should not extend; in fact that the courts of the United States should have exclusive jurisdiction of all those cases, and in the latter their jurisdiction should be concurrent with the State courts.

It was further to be observed, he said, that the first description of cases here enumerated, were such as had received their birth from the Constitution and laws of the United States, and could not have existed previous to the establishment of the Government, or be such as immediately involved the rights and interests of the General Government; but that the latter were such as the individual States might have jurisdiction of, previous to that period. He presumed the State courts were not vested with more power under the present Constitution than they were before, unless given them by the Constitution; nor are they divested of any, unless by the same instrument, or by Congress, in pursuance of the power therein given to them. And he had seen no part of the Constitution that delegated this power to the State courts, or that authorized Congress to do it. It appeared to him that the meaning of the Constitution was to give to the courts of the United States exclusive jurisdiction over cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and also over all cases immediately affecting the general interests, and to reserve to the individual States the exclusive jurisdiction over their own local concerns; and that in cases involving their own interest and the rights of others, they might have concurrent jurisdiction. It was acknowledged by the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. BAYARD) that Congress had no power to compel the State courts to perform that duty, but that the Judges of the several States were bound to obey all the acts of Congress. Other gentlemen had observed, that this doctrine would go to deny that the stamp act, or any similar act, was binding on the State Judiciaries. On this Mr. N. observed, that the State courts were bound to observe all the Constitutional laws of Congress. When, therefore, Congress passed a law that no instrument of writing for the payment of money should be received in any State court as evidence of such debt, unless the same was upon stamped paper, the Judges were bound to obey it; but if they should pass a law giving power to any county court within the United States, to try persons guilty of treason against the United States, that law would not be obligatory upon them; nevertheless, it would be an act of Congress. Mr. N. said, the distinction was between cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and those that did not. His idea might be further illustrated by the act above mentioned (the stamp act.) If a person should give a note of hand for a hundred dollars on unstamped paper, with a view of evading that act, he was liable to a penalty; that would of course be a case arising under a law of the United States, and would be exclusively cognizable in the courts of the United States. But an action brought on a note of hand written on stamped paper, is not a case arising under the law of the United States, but arises from the contract itself; and, although no note had been given, the contract would, nevertheless, have existed. The stamp act does not require a contract to be in writing; but if people will have their contracts tested by written evidence, it requires that paper should be stamped.

H. OF R.

Mr. N. said, wherever a duty was enjoined by law, the person who was guilty of the non-performance of that duty incurred the penalty annexed, and that penalty could be recovered no other way but by indictment, unless otherwise expressly provided by the law itself. And how would gentlemen frame an indictment in a State court, to embrace a case that had occurred under a law of the United States? It was essential in every indictment, to lay the offence to have been committed against the law of the State, and to conclude against the peace and dignity of the same. But, surely, gentlemen would not contend that an offence against a law of the United States was an offence against the law of an individual State, or against its peace and dignity. The gentleman from Delaware (Mr. BAYARD) had observed that penalties incurred under the revenue laws were not considered as crimes, but were recoverable in actions of debt. But, said Mr. N., merely changing the action or the mode of recovering the penalty cannot alter the nature of the offence, nor the tribunal before whom it is to be tried. It was still a case arising under a law of the United States, and although a debt, it was one in which the defendant not even in contemplation of law had any agency. And to contend that because a penalty is by an act of Congress recoverable by an action of debt, therefore they have a right to transfer these cases to the State courts for adjudication, is to say that Congress may first give themselves the power to delegate it, and then exercise the power that is acquired.

But, said Mr. N., if it is true that Congress have a right to impose this duty on the Judges of the State courts, they must have the right to compel a performance of it. It was incompatible with the idea of sovereignty, to pass laws and not to have the power and the means of carrying them into execution.

Upon the whole, he had seen no part of the Constitution that authorized Congress to delegate such power to the State courts, or that authorized the State courts to execute it, and he should therefore vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. BAYARD considered the question of the delegation of power altogether misapplied. The proviso moved by the gentleman from Maryland related to the jurisdiction of the State courts, not over offences, but over civil suits, which were brought by the United States for debts arising out of contracts with the individuals indebted to the Government. Now, it would puzzle him to say why the State courts should not decide cases in which the United States were a party, as well as in any other description of cases, when it was known that their jurisdiction extended over all actions for debt.

Mr. NICHOLAS desired to know whether there did not exist other laws than the one embraced by the proviso, to which it would be proper to extend its provisions? for which purpose he moved that the Committee rise. Motion lost—ayes 34, noes 37.

Mr. BIRD, wishing an amendment to the bill that would fairly and fully meet the question of constitutionality, recommended to the gentleman from Maryland to withdraw his proviso; in which case he would, at a proper period, present an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DENNIS withdrew his motion.

The CHAIRMAN then read the 13th section, one clause of which is as follows:

"The circuit courts shall have cognizance of all actions, or suits, matters or things, cognizable by the Judicial authority of the United States, under and by virtue of the Constitution thereof, where the matter in dispute shall amount to — hundred dollars, and where original jurisdiction is not given by the Constitution of the United States to the Supreme Court thereof, or exclusive jurisdiction by this act to the courts of Admiralty hereby established."

Mr. NICHOLAS moved to fill the blank with 500, so as to confine the jurisdiction to debts above $500. Among other reasons assigned by him, he stated that the estate of Lord Fairfax, with the quit rents due thereon, had been confiscated during the Revolution by the State of Virginia; notwithstanding the confiscation, the heirs of Lord Fairfax had sold all their rights, (which the assignees contended remained unimpaired.) It might be their wish to prosecute in a Federal court, expecting to gain advantages in it which could not be had from the courts of Virginia. His object was to defeat the purpose by limiting the jurisdiction of the circuit courts to sums beyond the amount of quit rents, alleged to be due by any individual.

[It is understood that the present assignees of the claims of Lord Fairfax, are General Marshall, General Lee, and a third individual, and that they maintain their claims under the British Treaty.]

The motion was opposed by Messrs. HARPER and BAYARD.

On the question being taken, it was lost by the casting vote of the Chairman—ayes 37, noes 37. The blank was then filled with $400—ayes 41.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

THURSDAY, January 8.

JUDICIARY BILL.

In Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary bill—

Mr. NICHOLAS moved to add to the 17th section the following clause of the act, passed September 24, 1789, which is omitted in the bill now before the Committee, viz:

"Nor shall any district or circuit court have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made, except in case of foreign bills of exchange.

Mr. N. stated his object to be to leave the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, as far as respected debts created by assignment, in the situation in which it now stood.

On this motion a debate of considerable length took place. The supporters of the motion were Messrs. NICHOLAS, RANDOLPH, and ALSTON; the opponents, Messrs. GRISWOLD, HARPER, and BAYARD.

Those who supported the motion contended that by giving jurisdiction to the Federal courts over assigned debts, a great mass of suits would be transferred from the State to the Federal tribunals; that this would be done by a collusive assignment; that it would thereby be in the power of a creditor, by nominally assigning his claim to a citizen of another State or to a foreigner, to bring his debtor into any Federal court he pleased, and occasion an increase of trouble and expense; that if any benefit did attach to the creditor by the right of instituting process in a Federal court, which was, however, not granted, that very benefit would violate the established principle of law that the assignee of a debt ought not to be placed in a better situation than the assignor; that when a citizen made a contract with a foreigner, he knew the consequences, but when he made a contract with a citizen, he entertained no idea of amenability to the Federal courts, and had no idea of being dragged to a distance in case of a controversy with his creditor; that in the Southern States, and particularly in Virginia, this power would be highly injurious; for that in Virginia all bonds were assignable, and a great mass of the debts contracted were in bonds and promissory notes; that if the power were bestowed, it would place the debtor at the mercy of the creditor; inasmuch as the latter would choose his court, and the former would in many cases be drawn two hundred miles from his home, where the debt had probably been contracted, where only were to be found his witnesses, and where a jury could be formed acquainted with his general character; that the power would operate severely to the prejudice of the citizens of North Carolina, as in that State there circulated a paper currency which was 25 per cent. below par, and which was a lawful tender in the State courts; whereas judgments were given in the Federal courts for specie only; the effect, therefore, would be that the creditor would commence his suit in the Federal courts, and by that mean obtain 25 per cent. more than was really due to him, as the contracts made in that State were predicated on the depreciated state of the paper currency.

Those who opposed the motion demanded to know whether a real bona fide debt could not be created by endorsement; whether it was not one of the most common operations among merchants; and whether the person who thus received an endorsement was not as completely and substantially the creditor as the original holder of the obligation? The effect of the amendment would be to shut out from the Federal Courts all persons of this description, whose claims would be as much affected by local passions and prejudices, as though they had not assigned. It was contended that this was one of the precise cases for which the Constitution had provided; and that the attempt to defeat this essential provision was another evidence of that invariable and unabating disposition to defeat the most important provisions of the Constitution, to destroy its energy, and to withdraw from it the respect of the citizens, which on every occasion was manifested by some gentlemen in that House.

The reasons offered in defence of the amendment were declared to be fallacious. There would exist no irrational, unfounded predilection of the creditor to the Federal tribunals; in most cases the creditor would prefer the State courts; in all cases, except those in which he had a strong dread that the undue influence of sinister feelings would bias them. If gentlemen simply desired to repress suits for demands not bona fide assigned, an express provision could be made to this effect, to which the House would generally agree; for that provision, while it gratified the desires of several gentlemen, would not impair one of the vital principles of the Constitution, established on the conviction that an alien did not in the State courts stand on an equal footing with a citizen. It was contended that the observations derived from the situation of the State of North Carolina was not correct; as it was not believed that the Federal courts could alter a contract from its original form; and that, of course, in those cases where contracts had been made in paper money, judgment would be given, not for money, but in the nature of provisions, or some similar way, as no power could exist to deteriorate the contract.

It was not true that the great mass of debts incurred were in bonds or promissory notes; the great mass of debts were in the shape of book debts, which were not transferable.

It was further observed that if a disposition to evade the spirit of the law existed, it would be extremely easy in the creditor, when making his bargain, to obtain a note payable to a person in another State, or to an alien; and in this way his object of getting access to the Federal courts would be completely effected.

It was further contended that this amendment violated the Constitution. By it a citizen of one State had a declared right of suing the citizen of another in the Federal courts. As to the idea of additional expense in the Federal courts, if it had any weight, it would as forcibly apply to the creditor as the debtor.

In reply it was contended, that facts were stubborn things, and that they established, notwithstanding the ingenious theories of gentlemen, that judgments in North Carolina were actually given in the Federal courts in specie, while in the State courts they were given in paper money; and that as to the idea of discriminating between bona fide and mala fide assignments, it would produce one of the most intricate and embarrassing questions that could come before the courts; that in most cases all the knowledge to be obtained must proceed from the party interested in suppressing it; and that in consequence an extensive scene of perjury would be opened by appealing to his oath.

To this remark the opponents of the motion rejoined, that the operation would be a very simple one, consisting only in a resort to the equity side of the court to obtain, an oath of the assignee, a true statement of facts; and this resort had actually been had in Pennsylvania.

The question was then put on agreeing to Mr. NICHOLAS's motion, and carried—ayes 42, noes 27.

Mr. HARPER moved to strike out sections 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, which established a number of distinct courts with Admiralty jurisdiction.

On reflection, Mr. H. said it had been thought advisable at present not to constitute these new courts, but to establish two or three additional district courts, in the most maritime positions, with Admiralty powers; for which purpose Mr. H. would prepare an amendment.—Motion carried without a division.

The Committee here rose, and had leave to sit again.

FRIDAY, January 9.

THE JUDICIARY BILL.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary bill.

The forty-eighth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 48. And be it further enacted, That each of the Circuit Judges of the United States to be appointed by virtue of this act, shall be allowed as a compensation for his services an annual salary of two thousand dollars, to be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States; and that the salaries of the District Judges of Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New Jersey, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, shall be, and they hereby are, augmented to the like sum of two thousand dollars annually, to be paid in like manner."

Mr. GREGG moved to strike out $2,000 and to insert $1,800.

Mr. CLAIBORNE declared himself in favor of the motion. He considered $2,000 as too high a compensation. In the State which he represented (Tennessee) it would be immoderate. The bill established three Circuit Courts for Kentucky and Tennessee, the Judges of which would receive $6,000, which was a larger sum than the total amount of the expenses of the Government of Tennessee. The Judges of the Supreme Court of Tennessee receive but $500 each, and the present Federal Judge received only $800. The duties which the Federal Judges would have to discharge would not equal those of the State Judges. Such an exorbitant salary would be distressing to the State of Tennessee. It would either lessen the respect of the citizens for their own Judges, or rouse their pride to afford them salaries equal to those of the Federal Judges, even to their own oppression. As, therefore, such an expenditure would exhibit an instance of shameful profusion of public money, and would deeply wound the interests of his State, he would give his decided vote against it.

Mr. ORRIS, persuaded that if the Judiciary were not filled with men of the first talents and integrity, the system we are now devising would be injurious instead of being beneficial, was opposed to the motion. Talents of this order were not to be obtained for a small compensation. The sum proposed in the bill, as far as his knowledge extended, was not greater than that now allowed in the Superior State Courts. In his part of the country a lesser compensation to men qualified to decide those great and intricate questions, which often come before them, would be deemed a shameful parsimony. As to the idea of discriminating the compensation of different Judges, he thought the benefits to be derived from it were trivial compared with the evils it would create.

Grant that the effect of this bill will be the affording a higher compensation to the Federal Judges than is at present made to those of the States. The effect, he thought, would be a good one. It would operate as a powerful stimulus to the State Judges ably and faithfully to discharge their duty, that they might be qualified for, and likely to receive, Federal appointments.

So convinced was Mr. O. of the importance of this part of the bill, that he would rather not see it pass at all than pass without it. It might, in that event, be rationally expected that the community, realizing the inconveniences to which they would be inevitably exposed, would be awakened to the obligations of a more liberal policy.

Mr. DAVIS said, if he seriously believed that additional salaries would inspire men with brighter talents, he would not object to the increase contemplated by it. But as he knew full well that, in making appointments to office, the only inquiry made would be, what were the candidate's politics, he should object to the increase.

Hitherto, the entire compensation given to the Judges in the Western country has not exceeded $2,000; and now we add three Judges, whose duties, individually, will of course be greatly diminished, and at the same time increase their compensation!

Mr. HARPER.—The gentleman from Kentucky, in making his remarks on the exclusive inquiry that will be made in respect to the qualifications of a candidate for office, has forgotten to state one circumstance. He has forgotten to state that in appointments to office the choice of talents is altogether confined to men of one description of politics. Though this be the notorious fact—though men of one description of politics possess the great mass of talents—yet it is certain that men of this class possess among themselves different and various degrees of talent. The tendency of this motion is to fill Federal Judicial offices with trifling characters—with men whose want of talents and reputation would degrade the Government, and render it an object of contempt instead of an object of admiration and affection.

If the pride of Tennessee and other States took alarm at the high salaries of the Federal Judges, and, to place themselves on an equality, increased the salary of their own Judges to their standard, he should consider this effect as the strongest argument in favor of the provisions of the bill; and it would be an evidence that their pride enlisted itself on the side of their understanding.

It is in the administration of justice, in the application of our laws to the interests of the people, that the benefits of the Government are felt and brought home to them. Protecting by its salutary energies the lives and the property of the citizens, they feel a respect for the Government from which they derive their support. Shall we, then, seduced by a deceitful spirit of parsimony, after erecting the scaffolding of our Judicial system, hesitate, by the expenditure of a trifling additional sum, to render the system itself respectable? Weighed with such an object, a few thousand dollars was a paltry consideration.

It was not denied that the expenses of living in some States were greater than in others. But on this ground to graduate a scale of compensations, would be to do what no State had done, and what would inevitably produce unpleasant jealousies.

Mr. S. SMITH was for a liberal but not profuse compensation. He was also for accommodating the compensation made to the duties to be performed, and the expenses of living in the several States.

Heretofore, when the salaries were lower than those proposed by the bill, there had been no want of talents. He said, that in the State of Maryland, the office of District Judge had been twice successively filled by men of first rate talents.

Mr. DENNIS opposed the amendment as it applied to all the Judges. If it were rejected, he would propose an amendment for reducing the salaries of the Judges of Kentucky and Tennessee.

Mr. SMITH was in favor of the amendment. In Pennsylvania the Judges of the Supreme Court received only $2,000. They were men equal in legal talents to any in the Union, and had to go into every county of the State every year. It was well understood that $2,000 presented no temptation to a lawyer at the bar of Philadelphia who was in full practice. But did gentlemen suppose patriotism to be so low that all our officers were actuated by mere mercenary views?

Mr. CLAIBORNE again rose, and went over the ground of argument, declaring that his wish was to be frugal, but not parsimonious—liberal, but not profuse. He was persuaded that in Tennessee five suits would not appear on the Federal dockets in a term. For myself, said Mr. C., I pay little regard to that wisdom that rises up in a day—to that wisdom which has sprung up since the third day of December. Our old principles I consider as good ones, and I am still for them. He then moved to strike out the whole section, with a view of introducing an amendment for apportioning the salaries of the Judges to their duties and expenses.

Mr. HARPER said gentlemen had committed one egregious mistake; they had confounded District with Circuit Courts; in the last of which the expenses of the Judge were to be determined by the distance he had travelled, and not by the number of suits he had tried.

Gentlemen were mistaken in their notions about the degree of business in the Federal courts. The very gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. DAVIS) had on a former occasion stated the existence, he knew not of how many hundred suits in the District Court of that State. There was not a doubt of there being in the Western country great litigation about titles to lands, and a lively jealousy of the State courts among claimants who lived at a distance.

The present District Judge of Maryland, notwithstanding the possession of a handsome private fortune, had been obliged to retire from Baltimore and live on his farm. And yet his travelling expenses were trifling compared with those of the Circuit Judges, who have to perform five times as much travelling as the State Judges.

When you deduct all travelling expenses, you will reduce the salaries below $1,500.

Mr. S. SMITH.—The gentleman from South Carolina is incorrect in his statement of facts. With respect to the District Judge of Maryland, he believed (as he had the information from the Judge himself) that he had retired of choice to an elegant country seat, which he purchased two years ago, before he was appointed Judge, with a view of residing on it.

Mr. H. LEE was in favor of adequate and liberal compensation to the members of the Judiciary; such compensation attracted to those offices talents, integrity, and reputation, which cemented and strengthened the Union. He did not understand those sentiments of jealousy that were so often expressed. We are too apt to view our Federal Government as a foreign one. These prejudices were unworthy of Americans. As a citizen of Virginia, who was a member of the Union, he beheld the Federal Government with sentiments of filial affection, as the protectress of all the States. He did not suppose that a part of the whole could be expected or ought to render compensations as liberal as the whole itself.

Mr. DAVIS, in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. HARPER,) acknowledged that he had on a former occasion stated the existence of a good deal of business in the District Court of Kentucky. Then there was but one Judge, with a salary of $1,000; and now, when the business has diminished, we are to have two Judges, whose salaries are to be doubled. He placed no confidence in the hope which some gentlemen cherished of cementing the Union by giving high salaries to our officers. Sir, said Mr. D., it is not the passage of this bill that will produce this great effect. Relieve the people from oppressive taxes, and that will produce the effect.

Mr. CHAMPLIN said the ideas of the gentleman from Tennessee, if carried into effect, would be fatal to the system contemplated by the bill. Each circuit was to be formed of three Judges who would embrace three States. The trouble and expense of Judges in the same circuit would be the same, though one of them might be appointed in a large, and another in a small State. So far as his personal knowledge extended, he was authorized in saying that the district Judge of Rhode Island, from the inadequacy of his salary, had been obliged to fly from the town to the country.

Mr. OTIS was not much surprised at the motion made, so far as it respected Kentucky, but he was greatly surprised at it, so far as it applied to other States. For his part he wished the Government to hold out inducements to men of talents, not broken down by the excessive fatigues of their profession, or by the debility of advanced age. He did not wish the Judicial corps to be a hospital for invalids. Nor did he feel a perfect reliance on the patriotism to which some gentleman had alluded. For he thought a court of justice the worst place that could be imagined for the indulgence of patriotic feelings. It ought to be filled with men, honest, sober, and independent, and so cool as to be little influenced by the impulses of patriotism. He had been at a loss to account for the high reliance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the efficacy of the influences of patriotism, until he recollected that in that State a proposition had lately been made to destroy in effect all the legal decisions, books, and principles, now in existence. Then indeed we might resort to patriotism, as our only remaining refuge.

Mr. NICHOLAS.—The very idea of gentlemen, on which rests their opposition to the present motion, furnishes in reality the strongest argument in its favor. They say that unless you give your Judges salaries that will enable them to run before all the State Judges, you will not make them so respectable as they ought to be; you will not place them on the ground they ought to occupy. In this event will the gentlemen say what becomes of the State Judges? If the reputation of the Federal Judges be increased, will not that of the State Judges be impaired?

As to the idea, avowed by some gentlemen, that this measure will cement and strengthen the Union, Mr. N. considered it as directly the reverse of the truth. Tending, as it did, to aggrandize the Federal at the expense of the State courts, so far from cementing, its immediate influence would go to impair, the Union. In his opinion that man respected as little the Federal Union who, in his zeal for the General Government, overlooks the State Governments, as he who alone regards, to the exclusion of the General Government, the Governments of the several States.

My colleague says that this Government is too often considered in the light of a foreign one. Mr. N. said he did not believe that the charge would be so often made unless there were some truth in it. He would ask his colleague, if immediately after having left his constituents he declares himself a new man, not their particular representative, governed by new views—he would ask him whether such sentiments did not furnish the strongest argument to convince the people that this Government was foreign to their interests, foreign to their settled habits?

It appeared that the greatest compensations made to the State Judges but little exceeded one thousand six hundred dollars; and that in other instances they did not exceed one thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. N. thought it would be right to go over the ground, to inquire into the compensations made in the respective States, and to accommodate the salaries of the Federal Judges to what appeared in this view to be adequate. This will enable us to go on prosperously and harmoniously with the State Governments.

Mr. H. LEE spoke with great indignation of the sentiments ascribed to him by his colleague, and declared that he never did say, he defied his colleague to prove it, either in public or private, that he mistrusted the States. He always had considered the States as an essential part of the whole, necessarily benefitted by whatever promoted the general good.

Mr. BAYARD observed that the whole expense contemplated to be saved by the amendments was four thousand eight hundred dollars. The measure should not, therefore, on this ground receive opposition. There was in truth nothing to alarm in it. But few subjects could be introduced, in which the tocsin of alarm is not rung against the expenses of the Federal Government. Is it possible that the addition or subtraction of four hundred dollars, as it respects the salaries of our Judges, can affect the sovereignty or independence of the State Governments?

Without amusing ourselves with fine-spun theories we ought to resort to the solid motives that influence men. Patriotism, though a fine sounding word, will not sustain a family. It was a common proverb that few lawyers were born with silver spoons in their mouths. On the contrary, they were generally born in the humble spheres of life; and were incapacitated, however enthusiastic their feelings, from serving their country through pure motives of patriotism. Beside, the direct effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to throw these offices into the hands of the aristocracy of the country. None but the rich will be able to hold them.

In fixing a compensation we ought to consider what sum will induce lawyers of the first talents to leave their practice. If this end were not accomplished, and men of small talents were placed on the bench, the bar would inevitably rule the bench instead of being ruled by it.

Mr. B., coming from one of the smallest States in the Union, thought himself competent to forming a just opinion of the lowest allowance to the Judges that would be adequate. In the State of Delaware, a lawyer in full practice received at least four thousand dollars; which was double the salary allowed by the bill. From this view of the subject, as well as from the other views that had been taken, he considered two thousand dollars as only a moderate compensation.

As to the idea that the Federal Judges have but little business to do, he thought the fact, even if true, had no weight; as a Judge was not paid so much for the actual duties he performed, as for abandoning his practice, and holding himself prepared for, and applying his talents exclusively to, the public business whenever it occurred.

The question was then put on striking out the section, and lost—yeas 40, nays 43.

A question was then taken on Mr. GREGG's motion, to substitute sixteen hundred dollars in the room of two thousand dollars; and lost—yeas 39, nays 49.

Mr. DENNIS moved to reduce the proposed salaries of the Judges of Kentucky, and of East and West Tennessee to $1,500.

Mr. CLAIBORNE moved the reduction to $1,200.

Mr. DENNIS withdrew his motion.

The question was taken on Mr. CLAIBORNE's motion, and carried, yeas 46.

Mr. CHRISTIE hoped that the Committee would rise, and the House adjourn. As the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HARPER) appeared to rule the roast on the other side, he trusted he would make no objection.

The Committee accordingly rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

Mr. MACON then moved that when the House adjourn, it adjourn till Monday.

Mr. HARPER opposed the motion, which in his opinion arose from a disposition in gentlemen to throw every obstacle in the way of the bill. This was an attempt to procrastinate its progress. He concluded by moving an adjournment in the usual form, whereby the House would be adjourned till to-morrow. The motion was lost.

Mr. MACON's motion then recurred, on which the House divided. The SPEAKER, having counted the members, declared the motion lost—yeas 38, nays 39.

Mr. RANDOLPH said there must be a mistake, and desired another count.

The members took their seats, and the House was again divided; when the motion was carried, there being 43 yeas, 39 nays.

The House then adjourned—yeas 44, nays 39.

MONDAY, January 12.

Another member to wit: ALBERT GALLATIN, from Pennsylvania, appeared and took his seat in the House.

JUDICIARY BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to provide for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States; and, after some time spent therein, the bill was reported with several amendments thereto, which were read.

The amendment, reported from the Committee of the whole House, to the fifth section of the said bill, being under consideration, to wit: To insert, in lieu of certain words stricken out from the fifth section by the Committee of the whole House, the following words:

"Eastward of a line, to be drawn from the river Potomac, at Harper's Ferry, along the Blue Ridge, with the line which divides the counties on the East side thereof from those of the West side thereof, to the North Carolina line, to be called the Eastern District of Virginia; one to consist of the remaining part of the said State of Virginia, to be called the Western District of Virginia."

The question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and resolved in the affirmative—yeas 49, nays 42, as follows:

Several other amendments reported by the Committee of the whole House to the said bill, were, on the question severally put thereupon, agreed, and others disagreed to by the House; but an adjournment being called for, the several orders of the day were further postponed, and then the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 13.

Ordered, That Mr. GALLATIN be added to the committee appointed, twenty-eighth of November last, to prepare and bring in a bill for regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia.

The House being informed that JAMES JONES, one of the members for the State of Georgia, died this morning;

Ordered, That Mr. TALIAFERRO, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, Mr. MACON, and Mr. HUGER, be appointed a committee to take order for superintending the funeral of the said JAMES JONES, and that this House will attend the same.

Resolved, unanimously, That the members testify their respect for the memory of the said JAMES JONES, by wearing crape on the left arm for one month.

Resolved, That the SPEAKER address a letter to the Executive of Georgia, to inform him of the death of JAMES JONES, late a member of this House, in order that measures may be taken to supply the vacancy occasioned thereby.

JUDICIARY BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments reported from the Committee of the whole House to the bill to provide for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States; whereupon the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to the thirteenth section, being under consideration, to fill the blank in the thirteenth line thereof, with the word "four," the question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and resolved in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 18, as follows:

A motion was then made and seconded further to amend the said amendment, by adding to the end thereof, the following words, to wit: "and of promissory notes and bonds, payable to order or assigns."

And, the question being taken that the House do agree to the said amendment to the amendment, it passed in the negative—yeas 36, nays 53, as follows:

Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that the funeral of JAMES JONES, Esq., a member of this House, who died yesterday, will be attended this day at twelve o'clock; and that the Clerk of this House do go with the said message.

THURSDAY, January 15.

The following resolution was referred to a Committee of the Whole:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill to repeal the act entitled, "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States," with a proviso that nothing therein contained shall be construed so as to prevent the assessing and collecting of the direct tax, passed the 14th July, 1798.

Mr. OTIS, as chairman of the committee appointed to inquire into the state of the Treasury, in conformity with the request of the late Secretary, informed the House that the committee expected to be prepared to report in two or three days. In making the investigation, the committee had not considered it as incumbent on them to enter into an examination of all those long details which had already been under the eye of the House. They had, however, carefully examined those statements which had not been minutely exhibited to the House; and, indeed, had made every inquiry that, in their opinion, was necessary to a correct understanding of the state of the Treasury. As, however, the committee, in the inquiry made, had been left almost entirely to their own discretion, and might perhaps have failed to take all those views that members might desire, he was instructed by the committee, at the instance of the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, to invite any members, who were desirous of having any particular information, to state their request, which might be attained by proposing specific instructions to the committee, who would most cheerfully co-operate in the furtherance of their object.

Mr. OTIS presented a long letter from the Secretary of the Navy, exhibiting a comprehensive view of the Naval Department, which was ordered to be printed without being read.

Mr. OTIS presented a petition, praying the interposition of Congress in affording relief to the holders of certain descriptions of paper money, whose reference he moved to the Committee of Claims.

The reference was opposed by Messrs. MACON and GRISWOLD, on the ground of the prayer of the petition having been already decided upon. On the question, the reference was lost by almost an unanimous vote. It was then resolved that the prayer of the petition cannot be granted.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, on a motion made by Mr. COOPER to repeal the act for the valuation of lands and dwelling houses, &c.

On this subject some debate ensued, which terminated in the Committee of Ways and Means being instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act.

A motion was made to go into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, recommending a continuation of the Sedition law, which was rejected.

DUTIES ON LICENSES, &c.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill to continue in force the acts laying duties on licenses for selling wines and foreign distilled spirits by retail, on property sold at auction, and on carriages for the conveyance of persons.

The CHAIRMAN reported an amendment, limiting the duration of the bill (which was originally without limitation) to the 3d of March, 1803. On the question of agreeing thereto, the yeas and nays were taken, and were—yeas 41, nays 47, as follows:

DUTIES ON LICENSES, &c.

An engrossed bill to continue in force the acts laying duties on licenses for selling wines and foreign distilled spirits by retail; on property sold at auction, and on carriages for the conveyance of persons, was read the third time; and, on the question that the same do pass, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 46, nays 31, as follows:

THE JUDICIARY BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments reported from the Committee of the whole House to the bill to provide for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States; and the said amendments being again read, were, on the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

The said bill was then further amended at the Clerk's table; and, together with the amendments, ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time on Tuesday next.

MONDAY, January 19.

Mr. WALN, from the committee to whom was referred, on the tenth ultimo, the petition of Samuel Lewis, senior, made a report; which was read and considered: whereupon,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment upon a judgment obtained against him in favor of the United States; with a proviso, that he shall first assign and convey all the estate, real and personal, which he may now own, and be entitled to, for the use of the United States; and that the said judgment shall remain in full force against any estate which the said Samuel Lewis may hereafter acquire.

Ordered, That Mr. WALN, Mr. GROVE, and Mr. IMLAY, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

Mr. WALN, from the last mentioned committee, presented a bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment; which was twice read and committed to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented a bill to incorporate the persons therein named and their associates, as a mine and metal company; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Thursday next.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the same committee, presented a bill to provide for the erection and support of a light-house on Cape Poge, at the north-easterly part of Martha's Vineyard; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. NEW, from the committee appointed, on the twenty-eighth of November last, to prepare and bring in a bill for regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia, made a report; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Wednesday next.

Mr. NEW, from the same committee, presented, a bill regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia; which was twice read and committed to a Committee of the whole House last mentioned.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the committee to whom was referred, on the second instant, the petition of Solomon Boston; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the Committee had had the said report under consideration, and directed him to report their agreement to the same.

The said report being then read at the Clerk's table, in the words following, to wit:

"That the petitioner is, and for upwards of six months last past, has been confined in the public jail at Dover, in the State of Delaware, upon process at the suit of the United States, founded upon a judgment for one thousand dollars, being a penalty forfeited by the petitioner under the act of Congress, regulating the collection of duties on imports and tonnage. It appeared to the committee, that under the same act the petitioner had forfeited and lost a vessel and the cargo on board of her; and that he is destitute of any means of satisfying the judgment against him. The committee having taken into consideration the offence committed by the petitioner, and the punishment he has suffered, are of opinion, that the petitioner has been sufficiently punished for the wrong done by him, and that he ought to be relieved by an exoneration from any further claim against him on the part of the United States."

Resolved, That this House do agree to the same, and that Mr. BAYARD, Mr. THATCHER, and Mr. SPAIGHT, be a committee to prepare and bring in a bill or bills pursuant thereto.

FRANCIS B. CHANDLER.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the committee to whom was referred, on the eighth instant the petition of Francis B. Chandler and others; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the Committee had had the said report under consideration, and directed him to report to the House their agreement to the same.

The said report being then read at the Clerk's table, in the words following, to wit:

"That the object of the petitioners is to obtain an extension of the seventy-ninth section of the act of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," so as to include Frederick town, on the river Sassafraz, in the routes allowed for the transportation of goods to and from Philadelphia and Baltimore. The committee, perceiving no inconvenience relative to the revenue, which could arise from complying with the request of the petitioners, are of opinion that the prayer of their petition ought to be granted."

Resolved, That this House do agree to the said report, and that Mr. BAYARD, Mr. FOSTER, and Mr. LINN, be a committee to prepare and bring in a bill or bills pursuant thereto.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire and report by bill, or otherwise, the expediency of making further provision by law to facilitate the communication between different parts of the United States, by means of post roads.

Ordered, That Mr. HENRY LEE, Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, Mr. SHEAFE, Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, and Mr. HARPER, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of William Nichols, late Marshal of Pennsylvania; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the Committee had had the said bill under consideration, and made no amendment thereto.

Ordered, That the said bill be engrossed and read the third time to-morrow.

TUESDAY, January 20.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of W. Nichols, late Marshal of Pennsylvania," was taken up for a third reading.

Mr. GREGG said, that when this bill was before the House yesterday, there appeared a very considerable difference of opinion as to facts. He believed papers might now be obtained which were not before the Committee of Claims, when they reported the bill, that would enable them to make such a statement of facts as would reconcile these different opinions, and lead to a different decision from that contemplated by the bill. He would therefore move that it be committed to the Committee of Claims. This motion was carried in the affirmative.

A memorial of Sylvanus Bourne, Consul General of the United States for the Batavian Republic, in behalf of himself and many of his colleagues residing in Europe, was presented to the House and read, praying that a law may be passed for allowing a general compensation to Consuls of the United States, for services by them rendered. Referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Commissioners of the City of Washington, requesting that an arrangement may be made for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Capitol.

Ordered, That the said letter be referred to Mr. RUTLEDGE, Mr. KITTERA, and Mr. SILAS LEE.

Mr. BAYARD, from the committee appointed, presented a bill for the relief of Solomon Boston; which was twice read, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have disagreed to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Hooper."

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the committee appointed, presented a bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to allow the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, to and from Philadelphia and Baltimore, by the way of Appoquinimink, and Sassafraz; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented a bill making the port of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, and the port of New Bedford, in Massachusetts, ports of entry for ships or vessels arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and from places beyond the same; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House tomorrow.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution reported on Thursday last, from the Committee of the whole House to whom was committed the report of the committee on the memorial of Matthew Patterson and others.

And the said resolution being again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That for extending the benefits of civil government to the settlers on and near the head of French Broad river, it is expedient to cede to the State of South Carolina the right of soil and jurisdiction, in, of, and to, such part or parts of any lands which may be found to belong to the United States, and which lie to the South of the thirty-fifth degree of latitude, and contiguous to the western boundary of that State, as will include the lands at present occupied by the said settlers.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that Mr. NOTT, Mr. BIRD, and Mr. HARPER, do prepare and bring in the same.

The House, then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to provide for the erection and support of a light-house on Cape Poge, at the northeasterly part of Martha's Vineyard; and reported one amendment thereto; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendment, be engrossed, and read the third time tomorrow.

JUDICIARY BILL.

An engrossed bill to provide for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States was read the third time, and, on the question that the same do pass, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, William Craik, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Samuel Goode, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, Archibald Henderson, William H. WEDNESDAY, January 21.

An engrossed bill to provide for the erection and support of a light-house on Cape Poge, at the northeasterly part of Martha's Vineyard, was read the third time, and passed.

An engrossed bill for the relief of Solomon Boston was read the third time, and passed.

A Message, was received from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Director of the Mint, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A resolution in the following words, presented to the House by Mr. RUTLEDGE, was read and ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed on the part of this House, jointly with a committee on the part of the Senate, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President, and of notifying the persons elected of their election, and to regulate the time, place, and manner, of administering the oath of office to the President.

Mr. NICHOLSON proposed a resolution in the following words, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, viz:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of making further provision to prevent the concealing and harboring of slaves escaping from one State into another, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

SEDITION ACT.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on a resolution reported by the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business for continuing in force the act commonly called the Sedition law.

The resolution reported by the committee was, that it would be expedient to renew the law in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States.

Mr. PLATT, chairman of the committee, explained the reasons of the committee for proposing a resolution for its continuation. The only arguments that could be adduced against it were, as to the constitutionality and as to the expediency of the measure. That it was Constitutional, he contended could be well and plainly proved without entering into the question upon the grounds and proofs exhibited at the period of the original passage of the bill, from the decision in its favor, after a lengthy examination in both Houses of Congress, and its adoption into a law. Added to this was the solemn decision and concurrence of the Judiciary.

After these deliberate decisions in favor of it, to doubt the constitutionality of this law would be absurd. To those who took every occasion to show their opposition to the Government, and were accustomed to vilify the conduct of its warmest adherents, this law must be obnoxious; but those who considered the Government a bless-sing, and worthy the protection of a free people, must approve of the provisions of this law, as one of the most valuable institutions in its support.

As to the expediency of the measure, the committee thought it was a wholesome and ameliorating interpreter of the common law, established to assist the Government upon the most fair and equitable principles. On the one hand, the right of the Government in support of itself is established; on the other, that right of protection is so established as not to injure in the least the honest and well-intended individual, but to afford him the means of exculpating himself, although engaged in scrutinizing measures of the administration of the Government; for, unless it can be made evident to a court and jury that the thing written was done with a false and malicious intention, the precaution is useless. He saw nothing in this law, notwithstanding all that had been said about it, which an honest man ought to fear. No Government in the world demanded the public confidence more than ours, when well administered; and should a Government be brought into popular disrepute with impunity, through the false and malicious writings of those who peaceably enjoy its blessings? He trusted not.

The House had been told on a former occasion that the sun of Federalism was about to set: he confessed that he viewed with horror the awful night that would follow. But, notwithstanding that, whilst he possessed a seat in that House, he thought himself bound to legislate in favor of measures to support the Government which the people had honored by their choice. This reverse of things should never drive him from measures which it became his duty upon the most solemn conviction to adopt, since no injury could result but to those whose wilful and habitual slander opposed it by falsehood. For his part, he was not afraid of the new order of things; he had nothing to fear from the existence of this law.

To those who believed the rules of common law of force and effect in the United States, this law must be truly gratifying. By the common law two practices were established, which this law most effectually removed by its ameliorating provisions. First, the common law rejected the evidence of truth in cases of libel. Secondly, the court had unlimited authority to ascertain the penalty. By this law the truth must be given in evidence, and the penalty is ascertained. He trusted that whilst the liberty of speech and of the press (privileges to be prized above all others) were made secure, the House would see the propriety of preventing the unlimited abuse of this blessing, so injurious to the preservation of social order—an abuse which was to be judged as to its extent by an impartial jury—a privilege by which are secured to every individual, and to the Government, equal rights.

Mr. Davis said, the gentleman from New York and himself had as different feelings as to the manner of deciding the constitutionality of the law, as they had of its utility. Had the decisions of the courts been made with all the moderation and solemnity that usually attend judicial decisions, he might answer that there had been proceedings in the courts of the United States calculated to establish the constitutionality of that law, so far as the opinions of the Judges went. For he must acknowledge that the Judges had the power of deciding the constitutionality of a law under which they were to act; but he denied that those deliberate decisions had been made under it, that ought to establish it as a Constitutional law with the Judges generally. Even in Great Britain, where we are too apt to look for examples, he believed such hasty adjudications could not be found. He was acquainted with English books, and could not then recollect any case where the accused had been summoned, indicted before the grand jury, and tried by the venire or petit jury, in the space of a few hours, or one day at most; more especially where the accused had made affidavit that he had material witnesses absent, as had been the case in two trials under this Sedition law, one at Philadelphia, the other in Richmond, Virginia. If those were decisions that had rivetted the constitutionality of the law in the mind of the gentleman from New York, he had taken slippery ground, from which he could be easily driven. But a Judge of the United States having determined the law to be Constitutional, did not bring conviction to his mind. He still entertained the same opinion he had formerly entertained, and he believed it would be difficult to persuade the American people that the law was either Constitutional or expedient. The gentleman from New York says there is nothing in the law an honest man should object to. Why then do honest men take shelter behind it? We are all fond of having our good deeds made public, and of concealing our bad ones. Now let the public judge who are the honest men; that gentleman and his political associates, or myself and those who usually vote with me. We are willing to submit our actions to public scrutiny, and to rise or fall by public opinion.

If that gentleman and his friends intend to act honestly, why do they wish this law to hide their actions? Why lay the hands of power on the lips of the people, who ought to have the right of examining their political conduct and approving or condemning it? While they boast of honesty, why skulk in darkness and shelter behind a sedition law? In my opinion, this neither argues honesty, nor is ominous of good; at all events this is the true difference between the parties in this House. That gentleman and his friends form a party who wish to conceal their public conduct from the prying eyes of the public, and who say, if you see you shall not speak. Myself and my political associates are willing to spread our actions before the tribunal of the people, and to be judged by them. Now let the world judge who are the honest men, we, who expose our actions to public view, and say to them, judge, and approve or condemn us for our deeds; or those who say, be silent; we are above you; if you open your lips the penalty of the law shall be inflicted on you.

We are told by the gentleman from New York,

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

there is to be a new order of things. I believe there will be. It looks as if we should burn all the old and begin a new. What! are gentlemen not contented with the Sedition law to protect them, do they want a wall of fire around them?

This law has been in force two years, and what have been its effects? A few printers, and a few miserable newspaper scribblers, have fallen victims to it, and it has disgusted a large portion of the American people who have loaded your table with petitions praying for the repeal of the obnoxious law; and why will you again agitate the public mind by reviving a law so foreign to their feelings and hateful to their sights? Will gentlemen never yield their party views to the public voice, and drop a law that has produced so much discontent?

If this law had been good and Constitutional, and but a few people had been dissatisfied with it, there would be some excuse for continuing it; but the very reverse is the fact. I am not afraid of the law, I am not afraid that I shall ever be subject to its operation, for, in my opinion, the Administration, when it is presented in the fairest forms of truth, will afford sufficient ground for all my animadversions. I can turn to pages, and lay my finger on paragraphs which would authorize me to say more than I wish to.

The gentleman from New York says, they have been told that the sun of Federalism would shortly set. I, on a former occasion, did say so, and I again repeat it; this very law, if it has ever done any good, has done it in this way. I believe it has hastened the declension of the Federal sun. Instead of controlling public opinion, as it was intended, the opposite effect has been produced; men have acted up to their opinions, though they were forbidden to speak. Your own weapons have been turned against you; you find the public mind acting strongly against you, though it dare not speak.

The gentleman from New York says, that those who consider Government an evil will vote against this law. I consider good Government a blessing, and am, therefore, willing to let the people examine freely and fairly the fruits of Government. Those who wish to make it a curse, wish also to conduct it out of the sight of those immediately interested in its operations. This hidden way of conducting the concerns of the nation will never be pleasing to the free people of America. Already very many of them are opposed to the Administration, and, while you conduct their important concerns out of their sight, they will be jealous, and withdraw their affections from an Administration that shuns the light.

Mr. RANDOLPH said, when he first considered this report, he viewed it merely as the fulfilment of an obligation which the committee thought imposed upon them by the House, and he had supposed that it would have been suffered to remain on the table without any intention of being called up.

He would not enter into a view of the unconstitutionality of the law. How strongly soever the gentleman supposed that question to have been decided by the Congress who passed the law, he would tell that gentleman and all his adherents, that he had a still higher tribunal to appeal to—one higher than they could produce: he meant the American people. Their voice was more powerful than that of those courts and this President, to whom the gentleman referred. The will of the people had been fairly and fully expressed upon this subject, and, notwithstanding all inferior decision, this ought and this ultimately must be attended to; the people would be heard. He would ask gentlemen whether it was expedient, at this time, for the House to show their contempt of the opinions of the people; whether it was prudent to insult their understanding in a matter so well appreciated by them as this law, and at a period when they have so evidently declared that their rights shall be no longer infringed? The moment in which this measure was renewed, reminded him of the spirit which actuated the fallen angel, as related by the great poet of the English language: when he could no longer be victorious, he would evince his revenge.

The Legislature of the State which he had the honor to represent, Mr. R. said, had given instructions to her Representatives and Senators in Congress, to oppose, by every effort in their power, any attempt that might be made to renew this monstrous and destructive act. From which, were he not even convinced of its unconstitutionality, of which he could not entertain a doubt, he felt himself particularly bound to express the opinion of that State, and to give his utmost opposition to the law in its several stages. Were he to act otherwise, he really ought to humble himself in dust and ashes before an insulted and indignant people, for the perpetration of an act so inimical to their instructions, as well as to all the feelings and good sense of the American people.

Mr. GRISWOLD said, it would be well for the Committee to attend to the whole of the law. The gentleman said that all the old writings were destroyed, and we must begin anew.

[Mr. DAVIS explained, that he said it seemed as though the old papers were to be burned up and that we should begin anew.]

Mr. GRISWOLD then hoped, from a due examination of this law, this would be one part he would wish to preserve from destruction. Surely the insinuations made against the whole law could not be of force; some of its parts were certainly unobjectionable. The first part provides a punishment against unlawful combinations to oppose the National Government. It is possible, said Mr. G., the gentleman may think such persons ought not to be punished, but I do; and, in my opinion, the preservation of this provision is essential to our very existence.

Another part is against persons who rise in insurrection, or those who encourage it by counselling and abetting it. That such acts should be punished appears to me a self-evident proposition, whatever the gentleman might think of it; yet he thinks the law ought not to be renewed! Surely a moment's consideration must prove that such persons ought to be punished, and that their punishment ought not to be left to the unlimited discretion of the court as by common law, but should be defined by a statute.

JANUARY, 1801.

Sedition Act.

H. OF R.

But the most essential opposition appears to be against that part where libelling the Government is made an offence and punishable. That this part should be opposed by a gentleman whose orderly conduct removes him beyond the fear of the penalty, he was much surprised. What is the effect of this provision? It is, that if any person should publish untruths against the Government, with an intent to bring it into disgrace, such offender should be punished. Is there any gentleman in this Committee who wishes to publish falsehoods, and malicious falsehoods? He trusted not; and, if not, why should gentlemen be unwilling to make this wilful offence punishable by statute? There could be no ground for alarm, since the penalty was only intended to affect the publication of falsehoods. Falsehoods tended to much evil; nay, they were evil in themselves, and it was necessary to punish them, in order to preserve to the Government its merited popularity. The provision was exceedingly important, and he thought the ideas of his friend from New York must have considerable weight with the Committee.

It was a well known fact, that at common law the truth could not be given in evidence; it was equally well known, that the punishment for crimes was left undefined, and at the will, he had almost said the arbitrary will, of the court. He did not think it right to leave this power in the hands of the court, nor did he think it right to stifle the evidence of truth in behalf of the accused. He did not believe it to be the wish of the House or of the Administration to suppress truth; if the Government acted in such a manner as not to bear the test of truth, it certainly merited animadversion, and with severity. To continue the right of giving truth in evidence, and to keep the power of prescribing a punishment with the Legislature, he hoped the law would be re-enacted.

As a Constitutional question, he thought no doubt could now exist, whatever might have been entertained before the question was settled on its present principles. The Judiciary had decided it to be a law effectually within the Constitution. There might be some other quorum to which gentlemen would wish to appeal; perhaps they might be better satisfied by appealing to the people, but he could not be. He believed the decision to be made in a Constitutional mode, and was desirous of giving it his decided support.

Mr. NICHOLSON said, had he been a member of the House at the time when this bill passed, he should have most assuredly given his opinion that it was unconstitutional and inexpedient; and all that he had heard or seen since that period, in the various examinations it had undergone, had not contributed to create a doubt in his mind upon the accuracy of that decision. It had ever been his opinion that a virtuous Administration, whose actions flowed from good motives, required not the aid of a statute to defend it from the attacks of slander. The abuse of the power confided by the people, and not its Constitutional use, could alone fear the shafts of reproach, and power thus used merited no better fate.

These, Mr. N. said, were his ideas, at the period when the bill passed. If its inexpediency was so evident to him at that period, how much more so must it appear at the present time! In order to call this to the view of the Committee, he would bring to their remembrance the prosecutions which had taken place under it during the two years of its existence, from which he could make it plainly appear that the administration of this law was extremely objectionable.

The first fact he noticed was, the arraignment, trial, and conviction of a member of the House, who was committed under the care of a severe keeper, to an unwholesome and loathsome dungeon, and the treatment of that member whilst in confinement; in all of which were evinced a spirit of party highly unworthy the character this country ought to bear. The next was the case of a printer, who was made to stand on his trial, but notwithstanding he pleaded the necessity of producing evidence, which he stated was material to his defence, time was refused him to procure their attendance. He need not expatiate, he presumed, on the rights of every man to demand, when brought before a tribunal of justice, time to produce witnesses material for his defence, or of the right of the court to grant every opportunity to afford the means of defence: these were too evident to be opposed. Another instance was that of a trial proceeding, wherein important testimony was asked, but refused, because the person required to give the evidence was a high officer of the Government. The accused was told by the judge that he had no right to that testimony. Another instance had occurred of testimony, stated to be material to the defence, but, because it was at a distance, time was refused to produce it, and the trial and judgment proceeded without it. Another, and more fatal instance, was that of a printer, who died in prison, where he lay convicted under that law. From a view of all these cases, Mr. N. said, he must conclude that the administration of this law was extremely objectionable. Although many of these persons were foreigners, yet they had not the less claim upon the justice of the country. It mattered not whether they came from the tropics, from the poles, or whether they first drew their breath in this country, all men possessed an equal right of demanding a free and impartial trial, and to all men alike it ought to be granted.

It was and might be further urged, that the act was only aimed at false and malicious libels, tending to defame the Government. He granted it; but who were to be the judges? The bench themselves; they perhaps might be the subjects of animadversion, but if not, were the creation of the person grieved. By them the materiality of the testimony, which ought to go to the jury, was to be judged, and, therefore, the principle that the truth might be given in evidence, was of but little importance, if that truth was not suffered to appear.

The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GRIS-would) had adduced parts of this law, which he supposed could not be objected to. Mr. N. admitted that the cases of insurrection and unlawful combination against the Government, ought to be provided against, and if the gentleman had proposed a resolution for the continuance of those parts, he would not have objected. No, the objectionable part was that which the people of the country, in a voice of thunder, had said ought not to have been enacted, and which, therefore, now ought to be suffered to sleep—that part which stifles every investigation into the affairs of the Government. It was certainly true, that the existence of this law forbade inquiry into the affairs of the Government, for who (most particularly having those instances in view) would dare scrutinize into the conduct of men in power, when they could apprehend that they should afterwards be handled by a court and jury so unlikely to do impartial justice to them? It must prevent men saying what they think, much less what they know; for, though it might be truth, how could they assure themselves of their own testimony?

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

What, he asked, had the Government to fear from untruth? The publication of falsehood must carry the evidence of its infamy, and would undoubtedly meet its due appreciation. The characters of public men, in whom the people of this country had been wont to repose confidence, need not shrink at the apprehension of the publication of falsehood. The people would discriminate, and to their own observation it might with safety be confided; for the truth must ultimately be made to appear.

He concluded by expressing his regret that this subject should again be called up to irritate the House. He wished not to have said or heard anything upon so unpopular a subject, but as it had he must inform the Committee that the resolution should have his most decided negative. But, as he had before said, if one was produced containing the principle of re-enacting the other parts of the law, he would give it his support.

Mr. DANA said, a principal part of the arguments of gentlemen in the opposition, were calculated to prove that the Administration of our country was wilfully corrupt. They had told the House that necessary testimony had been refused, and that various abuses of this kind had actually occurred in our courts, which were actuated by a spirit of party, to the great injury of persons not born in this country.

[Mr. NICHOLSON.—I spoke facts: I did not say the Administration was wilfully corrupt—these are the gentleman's own words.]

Mr. DANA.—There could be no other implication from the gentleman's words, nor was it in the power of human invention to distinguish between a violation of the principles of justice in the manner represented, and a most wilful and gross corruption. As it would be extremely improper to leave so great a charge in this unqualified manner, Mr. D. would proceed to examine the conduct of the Judges of the United States. Who are those judges? Nominated by the President of the United States, and chosen by the Senate agreeably to the Constitution. How long, or at whose pleasure are these judges to continue in their high offices? At the pleasure of no man, nor set of men, but during good behaviour. Surely if there be any part of the Government, or any set of men in the United States, who were placed above the spirit of party, and beyond the reach of corruption, it is the Judges of the United States; and yet, above all others, these are the men charged with a party spirit, and with corrupt principles—these men, who are singled out as men of the most profound wisdom and integrity among us, and who are superior to the dread of removal from office, excepting only by impeachment for misbehaviour. Yet this is the substance of the reasons gentlemen assume why this law should not be continued.

Would not prudence dictate; would not justice, that justice which is due to the character of every man, demand that before these charges would be even suggested, the proof ought to be decisive; that it ought to be "damning?" This has not been produced.

He would not go into the details of the law, but examine it upon general principles. He would admit that there had been much opposition to this law, and that most particularly it had been opposed and condemned by the Legislature of one of the largest States in the Union. But he was not inclined to judge of a measure upon the opinions of others; that House ought not to be overawed by the multitude of petitioners, nor by the remonstrances of the Legislature of any State whatever; it should act with a spirit of independence.

One of the extravagances of that State, and many of the people, had been to arraign, to their extremely weak and partial judgment, the common law; the existence of it was altogether denied. That common law which most undoubtedly secured to every individual its most endeared rights, and afforded security against every species of legal oppression, whilst it preserves to the Government that protection against the licentious and false slanders which polluted some of the presses of the United States, and maintained upon established principles the rights of our jurisprudence and our morality. This was the true character of what was termed the common law.

It would seem to him, Mr. D. said, that no honest man could wish for a liberty to utter defamation and falsehood. It was directly incomprehensible to him how a man who held dear the principles of liberty and of good government, could attempt to utter falsehoods against the Government. The rights of the people and of the press were held up. How, he would ask gentlemen, could the rights of the people require a liberty to utter a falsehood? How could it be right to do wrong? If this was liberty, he had been hitherto totally ignorant of its principles, and wished to remain so. And yet the only crime made by that part of the law so much the subject of complaint, is the uttering of a scandalous and malicious falsehood, with intent to defame. Most certainly truth is not always the motive of investigating the measures of our Government, and so far as truth is deviated from, so far is the Government libelled, and virtue proportionately becomes beclouded by misrepresentations. Could not public opinion become corrupted? Could no falsehood be disseminated that would gain credit from the people? Then how could gentlemen pretend to suppose that truth could overcome falsehood? how could they suppose that misrepresentation and calumny could do no manner of harm? How often are calumnies and falsehoods published against the Government; but when is a contradiction of those falsehoods seen in the same paper? No: falsehoods will have their effect, and even if afterwards contradicted, it is not so until the falsehood has had its effect, and at that time the truth avails but little. Thus, though upon general principles, truth may be said to be an antidote to falsehood, truth does not always make its appearance in time to prevent the evil intended by the evil-disposed. Suppose the reputation of the Government to have been attacked, and the affections of the people weaned from it, of what avail will be the remedy? The poison is swallowed beyond the power of expulsion, even by the most powerful antidote. If this, then, be true, and that it is, is indubitable, a check ought to be provided in due time, whilst yet its qualities may completely prevent any possible harm.

And what danger, Mr. D. asked, could result from this law? As he observed before, it was not the will of the judges—those arbitrary party-spirited characters—that could convict. No: every cause is submitted to a jury of twelve honest men, who are sworn to decide upon the fact; and the security is so great that if but one man out of the twelve should be of opinion that the person arraigned is not wilfully an offender, and that he has not traduced the Government falsely and maliciously, he must be acquitted of the indictment. What better barrier to the liberty of an individual can be presented than this? The only answer that gentlemen can give is that the juries are packed. But, he would ask, whether the juries were not returned as fairly in this as in other cases under the laws of the land? If, then, there was an evil, it was not solely applicable to this law, but to all laws, and to the general principles upon which juries were selected. He could scarcely conceive that men of character, under the solemnity of their oath, could act so unprincipled.

Upon the whole he could see nothing but unfounded arguments in opposition to this law, and that gentlemen had no other way to get rid of their dilemma but by charging the courts and juries with corruption. And when men began to charge with evil design the sanctuary of justice, it was time to bid adieu to all public happiness, and every hope to enjoy the blessings of freedom.

Mr. HUGER acknowledged that he had been somewhat surprised, when the report of the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business was first made, and found it to be their wish to renew and continue in force this act, so well known by the appellation of the Sedition law. It had been generally understood, he thought, on all hands, that this act would be allowed to expire in peace, and without further notice, on the 3d of March next. As the subject, however, was again brought forward, he was happy to perceive that gentlemen were inclined to treat it with calmness and moderation. There appeared indeed no great anxiety in the Committee to enter largely into the discussion of this question; neither did he feel himself any strong inclination to do so; but as he should in the present instance probably vote in opposition to the sentiments of most of those with whom he was usually in the habit of acting, he would beg leave to state some of the reasons which led him to differ from them on the present occasion. He felt some little pain, however, he acknowledged, at the idea of dissenting from and acting in opposition to his friends on this important and interesting question, because no man had a stronger conviction than himself of the general correctness of their political views and principles, or was more persuaded of their honest intentions and patriotic views.

Mr. H. said he would not enter into an investigation of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of this law. The gentlemen who preceded him had not done it, and it would become him less to do so; for, although it was true, he had never given it the sanction of his vote, yet if he felt any doubt as to the constitutionality of this law, it would certainly come with a very ill grace from him to urge them at this late day, and in the present state of things.

Waiving, then, the question of constitutionality, Mr. H. called upon gentlemen to show the expediency or necessity of renewing this act, and continuing it longer in force. For his part, he had heard nothing, nor could he see any reason, which led him to think such a measure either expedient or necessary at the present moment. Granting that Congress possessed the Constitutional power of laying some restrictions on the licentiousness of the press, and of punishing libels, yet it certainly does not follow of course, that they must necessarily, at all times and on all occasions, carry that power into operation. In time of imminent danger; in the midst of a great crisis, it might be proper to avail ourselves of such a power. And such indeed was the state of things when this law was originally enacted. Our country was at that time threatened with foreign, and perhaps domestic war. We had to guard against the machinations of an artful and well-disciplined foe, who was endeavoring to rouse up our citizens against the Government, and would, no doubt, have availed themselves of every possible means to mislead the public mind, and to spread abroad falsehoods, which might have had the most direful and fatal effects, before it was possible to detect and expose them. At that time, and in the then state of things, he was one of those who was for exerting every nerve, and bringing into operation every means in our power to defeat the schemes of our enemies, and repel the impending danger. Taking it, therefore, as one of the measures adopted at that awful period, and regarding it as a part of the general system of defence then deemed necessary, he had always been inclined to view it with a favorable and partial eye, but the state of things was now actually changed. The smiles of peace had again visited our shores, and a convention had lately been concluded, which he trusted would finally put an end to all our dissensions with the French nation. Why then renew or continue longer the provisions of this act, when the storm which gave rise to them is blown over?

There was another point of view in which the subject presented itself to Mr. H., and which would greatly influence his vote upon the present occasion. Without going so far as to assert with some gentlemen, that nine-tenths or even two-thirds of our citizens had declared themselves decidedly opposed and hostile to this act, he would venture to say, without any fear of being contradicted, that there certainly was a very great difference of opinion, and contrariety of sentiment, both as to the constitutionality and policy of the measure. As little noise has been made with respect to this law in the State he had the honor of representing, as in perhaps any part of the Union; yet it certainly had occasioned some uneasiness in the public mind even there; and he was convinced the great majority of his constituents would not willingly see it again renewed at the present time. He would venture even to go so far as to say, that the freedom of speech and of the press, though carried even to a certain degree of licentiousness, was in general deemed preferable by them to anything like an appearance of restraint on either. Their good sense might lead them to acquiesce in, and perhaps even approve of temporary restrictions in the moment of impending danger, but such restrictions even then would be unpleasant and distressing to their feelings, and excite all their jealousies; nor would they easily reconcile themselves to anything of the kind in peaceful and common times.

It had been argued that no Government depended so much upon public opinion as our own, and it was consequently necessary to continue these restrictions at all times, as a safeguard against misrepresentation and falsehood. He could not, however, acquiesce in this conclusion; during the eight years of the Administration of that great man, who bore so conspicuous a part in forming and carrying into operation the present Constitution, as well as during the first two years of the present Administration, the Government had progressed and prospered, without the aid of any such law. And if the crisis of the moment had two years since called forth an expedient of this kind, it was now at an end, and he saw no reason why we should not allow things to revert to their ancient channel. He was willing, indeed, to admit that some inconveniences, some mischiefs even did occasionally arise from the unprincipled and unbridled licentiousness of the press. He had had but too much reason to lament the truth of this fact. In the present political state of society, however, these evils, he was inclined to believe, were far more than counterbalanced by the advantages which we reaped from the entire freedom of speech and of the press. He was content, therefore, to take the good with its concomitant evil. For so nice and delicate were the shades of distinction between the licentiousness of the press, and a necessary freedom of discussion, that it was upon the whole better perhaps, in times like the present, when the thing would probably work its own cure, to leave the measures of Government and its Administration entirely open to investigation and animadversion, without attempting to repress the eccentricities and exuberances of public discussion by even an ideal restraint.

Mr. H. begged leave to make one other observation before he sat down. It was evident to all that a change of men was about to take place. It was equally well known, that those who were about to enter into the administration of the Government, had on all occasions declared themselves openly and unequivocally hostile to the principles of this act. It was no doubt honorable in those gentlemen who had heretofore supported this measure, to show their willingness to continue and submit to it, in a change of circumstances, which might enable their political opponents to turn it against themselves. But with what appearance of consistency, with what propriety, upon what principle, could these gentlemen avail themselves of the provisions of this law. To him it appeared impossible, that they could act under it. If renewed, then, it must remain a dead letter. And why load your statute book with laws, which could not be carried into execution, and would of course answer no end.

Upon the whole, the motion appeared to him ill-timed. The measure, it was admitted on all sides, had occasioned much difference of opinion, and considerable uneasiness in the public mind. The state of things which originally gave rise to it, was at an end, and there appeared to be no circumstance which rendered it peculiarly necessary or expedient to continue the law longer in force. All restrictions of this kind were discordant and uncongenial to the American feelings and wishes; and even if the law should be continued in our statute book, it would, according to all human probability, not be acted upon. Under these impressions, and in this view of the subject, he could have wished the present motion had not been made, but, at all events, he felt himself bound to give it his negative.

Mr. CLAIBORNE made a short reply to some observations which had fallen from Mr. HARPER. Mr. C. said, that spirit which the gentleman from South Carolina dreaded, he highly venerated; that fanaticism against which the gentleman so much declaimed, was the will of the people, and their voice could alone be terrible to the satellites of despotism. It was that voice which had heretofore broken the fetters of our transatlantic subjection, and will never suffer political chains to be forged for our country, either by foreign or domestic tyrants. Mr. C. believed that the sentiments of the American citizens were much averse to the law under consideration; they viewed it as an arbitrary and oppressive act, dangerous to their freedom and happiness, and during its existence the public mind would never be tranquil.

Mr. C. declined an examination into the constitutionality of the law in question. He waived this inquiry, because this point had been so frequently and ably discussed that it was not in his power to introduce any new argument. He would say, however, that the measure had always been viewed by him as a violent outrage upon the great charter of American rights—the Constitution—and from this and other causes had arisen his former opinion. Mr. C. was of opinion that the revival of the Sedition act was highly inexpedient. It would be remembered, that for eight years after the organization of this Government, the powers vested in the different Departments were exercised without the aid of a sedition act. That great character who was then at the head of the Government asked no such shield, and required no such protection. To calumny he opposed virtue and integrity, and, thus fortified, the shafts of calumniators can inflict no wound.

Mr. C. remarked that the conduct of our public men should always be investigated; that free investigation was inseparable from a representative Government, and essential to its preservation; that in such investigation base men might resort to calumny, but this was an evil which could not be remedied without rendering insecure a valuable privilege. Mr. C. anticipated no good that could flow from this act, but, on the contrary, he apprehended much mischief.

If an Administration is honest and wise, it needs not the support of this law, but its existence may do such Administration immense injury. Awed by the fear of punishment, the labor of calumniators will be veiled in secrecy, and the operations of detraction will be so private that a detection will be difficult, and truth and virtue may thus be assailed with success. But repeal this act, lay no restraint upon inquiry, and then political investigation of every description will come boldly out, error may be met by truth and calumny by virtue.

Mr. NICHOLAS, in a speech of some length, opposed the resolution.

Mr. RUTLEDGE had not intended to have raised his voice on the present occasion, nor should he now trouble the Committee, if it was not for the purpose of giving correction to some misstatements which had been made by the honorable gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. NICHOLSON.) In recapitulating the evils and mischiefs which had resulted from the Sedition law, he had mentioned as facts some of the tales of detraction and falsehood which had been very generally circulated, and which, owing to popular delusion and credulity, had been very generally believed.

The first in order was a pathetic history of a printer, who, as we are told, was a martyr to this law, and pursued under it to death. Mr. R. had often heard and read of the case of Adams, the printer, who, it was stated in most of our public prints, as it was this day stated by the member from Maryland, had been prosecuted under the

Sedition act, thrown into a sickly dungeon, where, loaded with chains, he had died. In the course of the last Summer, I happened to be in Boston, and, after inquiring about the business, learned the following facts: that a printer, of the name of Adams, had been prosecuted at common law, in the State courts of Massachusetts, for a libel against the Senate of that Commonwealth, and died some time after he was released from jail. So that the Sedition law had nothing to do with this case. The proceedings were under a State law and in a State court, and the story which the gentleman from Maryland believed to be a fact, and which had been mentioned as one in many of our papers, turns out, upon investigation, to be a fiction—a mere opposition trick, practised for the purpose of injuring the Government. He had given to the Committee the history he received at Boston of this transaction, but his friend near him, who is the representative of that city, had just now interrupted him to say the latter part of the narrative was incorrect, for the printer is still living; so that the victim we just now saw in a foul dungeon, loaded with chains and dead, it now appears is alive. Thus much for the history of the printer. After having been told of his prosecution under the Sedition law and dying in jail, we were reminded of the hard sufferings of a member of this House—the respect due to all its members forbids making comments upon this case. The trial of Cooper, at Philadelphia, was adverted to by the gentleman, (Mr. NICHOLSON,) who had made an implicit charge of cruelty on the Judge for having refused leave for taking the testimony of the President of the United States. What motives governed the decision of the Bench he could not say; but many very strong reasons present themselves why the request ought to have been resisted, and why the Chief Magistrate should not be drawn from place to place as a witness in courts of law. In the case of Cooper, it was believed at the time, and afterwards known, that his object in soliciting the attendance of the President was merely to perplex the court and induce a postponement of his trial. This was proved by his conduct to many of this House—so many of them had been summoned by him as witnesses, that Congress was obliged to adjourn to enable them to attend the court, where, after remaining from ten to three o'clock, they were told, upon the Judge's promising to have them sworn, that they would not be wanted. This was the conduct of Mr. Cooper, whose trial he attended, and which he could say with great confidence, as many members who now heard him also attended, was one of the fairest and most deliberate that ever was had. As the gentleman from Maryland had been mistaken in his facts, Mr. R. deemed it important to correct his misstatements, inasmuch as it is highly desirable to keep the public proceedings correct, and to undeceive the people of errors into which they have been led by the tales of rumor. In Governments like ours, where all political power is derived from the people, and whose foundations are laid in public opinion, it is essential that the people be truly informed of the proceedings, the motives, and views of their constituted authorities. It is the duty of the latter to keep in a state of purity the channels of public information, and to make liable to exemplary punishments malicious persons, who, by wantonly disseminating unfounded suspicions, impose upon the understandings, inflame the passions, and mislead the judgments of their fellow-citizens. In a Republican Government, where public opinion rules everything, it is all-important that truth should be the basis of public information. Government, which is the preservative of the general happiness and safety, cannot be secure if falsehood and malice are suffered to rob it of the confidence and affection of the people.

Although my sole motive for rising, said Mr. R., was to correct the misstatements of the gentleman who had preceded me, yet, as I am up, I will trouble the Committee with a few remarks upon the observations which have been heard from the other side of the House.

The member from Kentucky, (Mr. DAVIS,) in a speech in which more acrimony was exhibited than he usually displayed, had painted in very vivid colors the evils to be entailed upon us by the re-enacting of this law; but, after recapitulating them, had concluded with saying "he had nothing to fear from it, because he was an honest man." If, sir, honest men have nothing to apprehend from this measure, whence all this clamor against it, and wherefore all this fear and horror? Why sound the tocsin, and why agitate the country, when honest men have nothing to fear? If this law, which subjects men to a punishment who publish false, scandalous, and malicious writings against the Government, with intent to defame and to bring it into disrepute; and men who stir up sedition and excite unlawful combinations in the United States; and men who encourage the hostile designs of a foreign nation; I say, if a law which constitutes these things crimes, and which gives to the accused a trial by jury, and gives him the privilege of giving in evidence the proofs of the matter contained in the libel; if such a law cannot, in the opinion of those who oppose it, produce inconvenience to honest men, I cannot believe that gentlemen are very much in earnest who so warmly deprecate its renewal—the renewal of a law under which no man can suffer who is not convicted, by a jury, of the intention to disturb the public repose. The member from Kentucky had again introduced his favorite figure, and told us the sun of Federalism would shortly go down; he had added that quite a new order of things would be introduced, and said, triumphantly, everything will be burnt up, and we will begin again anew. Sir, the sun of Federalism will not decline; in spite of the whimsies of reforms, our Federal fabric shall endure; although its structure may seem rude and Gothic to theoretical and experimental gentlemen, the great body of our citizens will cherish and support it. In stormy and tempestuous times it has sheltered their property and protected their independence, and they will suffer no rude hands to violate it. Our Federal fabric will not be dissolved, sir; and I trust we shall tenant it with a practical gentleman who will have judgment, taste, and genius enough to appreciate its integrity. Of the threatened conflagration and new order of things, I am not afraid. During the rage in this country of the Gallic mania, the friends of the Government had much cause for apprehension; but, thank God, sir, the season has passed away, and the people of America will profit by the awful and mournful lessons they read in the modern history of Europe; they will firmly resist the adoption here of theories, the practice of which in other countries, under the imposing names of reform and improvement, have produced subversion and ruin.

Respecting the constitutionality of this law, I will only observe that our Judiciary (and they are the only appropriate judges of its constitutionality) have decided, and repeatedly decided, that it was Constitutional. An honorable gentleman from Virginia has told us that a more high and respectable tribunal—the people—had declared it unconstitutional. Sir, I am not so good a Democrat, nor so diffident of myself, as to have recourse to the people on the passage of every law to inquire of them if it be Constitutional. As a legislator, it is sufficient for me that, with the best understanding I can obtain of the Constitution, I take care not to violate it, and to know that, if, through error of judgment, I travel beyond the sphere of the Constitution, my errors will immediately be checked by a mound and barrier which cannot be overleaped. If any proceeding of the Legislature be unconstitutional, I have the consolation of knowing the Judiciary will declare it so; and to the decisions of our venerable and profoundly learned Judges I look up for information whenever the constitutionality of a law is questioned, and not to the resolutions of popular and tumultuous meetings. If, upon every Constitutional doubt, we are to have recourse to the people, there is an end to representative Government.

We have been told that this law was odious to the people, and that they had declared their execration of it. Sir, the truth of this position seems to me more than problematical. I will never estimate the sentiments of the American people by the opinions expressed in some sections of the people; as a representative of the whole, I am not to be governed by the will of a part; and the discontent displayed in Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky, cannot convince me that the people throughout the United States were discontented with this law. The truth is, sir, that in those sections of our country where clamors have been raised against this law, everything is disliked and everything is abused which emanates from the Federal Government.

But, respecting this law, we have evidence of its not being disliked by the people generally. I refer to the calls made by the Legislatures of Virginia and Kentucky on those of all the States respectively, for reprobation of this law, and to all of them having refused or neglected to do so. I regret that this law is odious to the people of Virginia. I would wish that every act of the Government was approved by every citizen of the country, if such a thing were possible; but I know this to be impossible in a free Government. I am too well acquainted, sir, with the character of man, to expect unity of sentiment among the people of this country respecting the conduct of a Government under which every man has the privilege of expressing unreservedly whatever he thinks on political subjects. As reasonably may we expect the same capacity of intellect from every man in the community, as that all men in it should think alike on any one political subject. A diversity of sentiments among men is incidental to our nature, and expressing this difference of opinion is an illustration of our political freedom. If any honorable member of this House supposes the people are contented in those countries where no popular murmurings are heard, he deceives himself; theirs is the silence of the grave, and they are silent because they have not the power of complaining.

We have been told by the gentleman before me, from Maryland, that a virtuous Administration had nothing to fear from slander and falsehood; that if things said are not true, the saying of them cannot injure. Can this, sir, be his deliberate opinion? Is he justifiable, with his knowledge of the world, in making this assertion? Does he not know that virtue does not form an impenetrable shield against the arrows of slander? He must know that calumny is too subtle to be warded off by the mantle of innocence. He must know that continued defamation will at length sully the fairest reputation, and throw suspicion on the purest conduct. I say, the gentleman must know these things; he knows it from the experience of the world; he knows it also from his own experience, as a member of the learned profession; he knows that actions for slander are brought and sustained in our State courts at every term. Would he say to a client who had been robbed of the fairest heritage of man—his good name; whose head had been pillowed with thorns, and whom foul calumny had stretched on the bed of torture—would he say to him, if you are innocent of these charges they will not be believed—the innocence of a mind conscious of its own rectitude will blunt and render harmless the arrows of slander; will make them recoil on the calumniator? No, sir, this would not be his language nor his conduct, but he would make high demands of indemnification for the injury done to his constituent, in attempting to deprive him of his good name, the loss of which makes man poor indeed. I know that such would be his course of conduct; for the high value he places on the high reputation he very deservedly sustains, would make him pursue this course. His veneration for the liberty of the press would not make him tolerate its licentiousness. He knows this demands a correction wherever they have presses, but more than anywhere else under a Government so peculiarly constructed as ours is, and where, if calumnies are unrestrained, they will produce convulsions which will not only be injurious to its prosperity, but destructive of its existence.

In answer to what has been repeatedly said about the discontents of the people, I again say, that for myself I am not displeased by the ebullitions of discontent which are occasionally displayed in some sections of our country; for I regard them as high evidence of the freedom of my country, where any man who is dissatisfied with any of the acts of the Government may unreservedly express his disapprobation, knowing there is none to make him afraid, if he employs the language of truth, or publishes what he believes to be truth.

Mr. NICHOLSON explained—He trusted no gentleman would suppose the history of Adams, the printer, to be intentionally misstated by him. That his relation of it might not be erroneous, he did not say. The gentleman himself it appeared was under the very some mistake—he acknowledged to have seen the circumstance in the newspapers as related, and to have believed it, until by a more intimate inquiry, when the opportunity offered to him, he was undeceived. He therefore could not blame those who had not had the opportunity of seeing it contradicted. Besides this misinformation, the gentleman thought the man was dead, until informed otherwise by a gentleman by his side.

As to the case of Mr. Cooper, the gentleman from South Carolina corroborated the observation, Mr. NICHOLSON said, made by him. He agreed that the testimony of the President was refused, but did not draw the same inferences. He thought it right but I conceive it otherwise. Mr. Cooper was charged with having declared that the President in his answers to addresses had said such and such things. He was told that he must not rely on this as testimony. [Mr. HARPER denied the truth of this.] Mr. NICHOLSON said it certainly was refused in the first instance, though afterwards it might have been permitted to be read to the jury, but not as due testimony. Upon this he thought it proper to call for the testimony of the President himself, which was refused, upon the ground of impropriety.

Mr. HARPER said: As a great part, Mr. Chairman, of what I have to offer to the Committee on this question is connected with the statement of abuses, which gentlemen who oppose the continuation of this law tell us have been committed in the course of its execution, I have chosen to offer it at this stage of the debate, in order that the correction of the errors with which those statements abound, may go forth with the errors themselves.

The objections of gentlemen, sir, to the continuation of this law, have been directed, as usual, against its constitutionality and its expediency. Those against its expediency are reducible, so far as I have been able to understand them, to some instances of oppression, which gentlemen say have taken place under the law. In what did this oppression consist? If I understand gentlemen aright, they stated it to consist in the denial to persons who had been indicted under the law, of the proper time means and opportunity of making their defence. The objections have been variously and very indistinctly expressed, but, as far as I was able to understand them, this was their full amount.

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

JANUARY, 1801.

Let us, then, Mr. Chairman, examine the cases which have been adduced as instances of this oppression. Let us inquire whether they afford any foundation for the imputations which have been made on the conduct of the courts?

The first case is that which occurred in Philadelphia last year.* In this case, we are told, the party was denied the means of making his defence; was prevented from adducing the testimony by which the truth of the publication for which he was indicted, might have been proved. Fortunately, sir, there are many now present, many honorable members of this House, who were present at the trial, and can bear testimony to the manner in which it was conducted. They can testify that the party was allowed all the indulgence that he asked for, was permitted to carry before the jury all the evidence he chose to adduce.

In the first place he summoned several members of Congress to attend as witnesses in his behalf. I myself was summoned. An honorable member from Pennsylvania who sits near me, (Mr. GALLATIN,) was also summoned; and I see several other honorable members in their places who were included in the summons. It happened that we were prevented from going into court as soon as we had intended, but we did so; and when we entered the court, we found the party preparing an affidavit, or prepared with one, and holding it in his hand, in which our testimony was stated to be material in his defence; and, as our absence was alleged as a ground for postponing the trial went on. Why were we summoned, sir? Nobody present was ignorant of the purpose. It was a mere trick to postpone the trial, and so universally understood. We were summoned in the expectation and belief that we would not attend. In that case our absence would have been alleged as a cause of postponement, and there was no difficulty about swearing that our testimony was material. If the trial had been postponed on this ground, the point would have been gained, and justice eluded; and if the court had refused to postpone it, the opportunity which had been sought, of abusing the court, and raising an outcry about the denial of justice, would have been afforded. Will anybody deny this statement? No, sir, nobody will presume to deny it. The truth flashed on all who were within the verge of the court. None were so blind as not to see the artifice; none were so shameless as not to blush at it. Even the spirit of party was reduced to silence and the most hardened votaries of faction hung down their heads, and were confounded at the detection. How, sir, did the detection take place? How was the design rendered thus apparent? The witnesses thus summoned with parade, thus called from their seats in the National Legislature to give evidence of the trial; the witnesses whose absence, when it was hoped and believed that they had declined attending, was about to be made the ground of an application on oath for a postponement of the case, whose testimony was about to be stated on oath to be material to the defence; these witnesses, when they did come, were not examined. They remained in court during the whole of the trial. The party was informed of their being present, and when he had gone through all his other testimony, was expressly asked by the court if he wished to examine them, and he said, no. They were not examined. Lest it should be said that through fatigue arising from the length of the trial, he had become unable to examine them, the court informed him that if he wished for time to refresh himself, there should be an adjournment of an hour or two for that purpose, but this indulgence he rejected, and still declined to examine these witnesses. Thus the purpose for which they had been summoned was disclosed, and it became manifest to all, even those most unwilling to see, that their being called on was a mere trick, which their unexpected appearance had defeated.

But we are told, sir, that this person was refused the opportunity of producing other testimony. What testimony? That of the President of the United States. And do gentlemen seriously contend that the President of the United States is liable to be called from the seat of Government, where his high and important functions always require him to be, in order to travel up and down the United States as a witness on trials? If he may be summoned to attend one, he may be summoned to attend another; if he must go as witness into the courts of Pennsylvania, he must, on the same principle, go as a witness into those of New Hampshire or Georgia. Can gentlemen be serious in contending for such a principle? No, sir, they are not serious; they cannot be serious; and I am firmly persuaded that the honorable gentleman from Maryland (Mr. NICHOLSON,) who has expressly contended for it, would, mutatis mutandis, be one of the first to discern and expose its absurdity.

The President, moreover, was called on in this case to criminate himself—which the best-established rules of law protect every person from being compelled to do. The party was indicted for a false, scandalous, and malicious libel on the President, whom he had accused of many atrocious acts. He pleaded the truth of the matter in justification, and wished to bring the President as a witness to criminate himself by proving their result. This is forbidden by the positive rule of law, revived and admitted in every day's practice. What would be the consequence of admitting it with respect to the President? A profligate fellow would have nothing to do but to accuse him in print of a crime, and when indicted for it, harass his person and degrade his office and character, by examining him in a court of justice, as to the commission of that crime, and thus compelling him to give an account of his whole private conduct and public administration. This is the principle for which gentlemen contend.

But there was other testimony, we are told by

*The case of Cooper.

Sedition Act.

H. OF R.

gentlemen, which this person was denied permission to adduce? What other testimony? Certain publications extracted from newspapers, and purporting to be answers of the President to various addresses. Was he prevented from adducing them? No. He was, on the contrary, permitted to adduce them, and did in fact adduce them. He was, indeed, told by the court, and most truly told, that these extracts from newspapers were not legal evidence; but that, under the particular accusations of the case, he should be allowed to give them in evidence. He was told that he might read in evidence whatever he thought proper. He availed himself of this permission in its full extent. He read those extracts in evidence. Indeed, the greater part of his defence, which lasted for nearly three hours, consisted in reading and commenting on the President's answers to addresses.

Will any one deny this fact, sir? No; it will not be denied. It cannot be denied. It took place in the presence of many witnesses—of many who now hear me—and proves incontestably, that greater latitude of indulgence could not possibly be given in making a defence, than was given to this person. And yet, sir, this is one of the instances adduced of oppression, of denial of justice, under the Sedition act.

The next instance is brought from Boston. We are told a melancholy story, decorated with all the graces of the pathetic, about a poor innocent printer in Boston, who was indicted under this law for a libel on the Federal Government, convicted, imprisoned, and at length sunk under the cold and dreary dampness of a dungeon, and yielded up his life a victim to the tyranny of the Sedition act. This dismal tale, sir, thus piteously told, is found to be completely destitute of truth in all its parts. This poor wretch, whose life fell a sacrifice to the rigors of imprisonment under the Sedition act, turns out to be still alive and in health. He is found to have been indicted in a State court, under a State law, and for a libel on the State government. By a most singular infelicity of exactness, the fact appears, in every point, to be precisely the reverse of the story.

The last instance is brought from Richmond. There, too, according to gentlemen, a person indicted under this act, was denied the opportunity of producing evidence in support of his justification. Let it be recollected, Mr. Chairman, that this person was indicted for a libel† so atrocious, that no person, except its author, has yet been found profligate enough to defend or even to quote it. A libel, not on the administration merely of this Government, or on the Government itself, but on the nation, the Constitution, our independence, the war of our Revolution, the patriots who conducted it, the character of our people and country, and on the American name. A libel on every person and thing that is American, except one individual, whom alone it dishonors by its praise; whom it disgraces as far as disgrace can be inflicted by the commendation of the wicked; whom it places alone on that bad eminence, where not even a generous enemy could wish to see him stand. A libel, sir, which has made its supporters blush; which they have sedulously endeavored to suppress, lest it should dishonor the cause which it was intended to defend; which they have made to shun the light, and passed secretly from hand to hand, lest it should produce repulsion in the minds of those whom it was their wish to seduce. This, sir, was the libel for which the person in question was indicted, and which he had the effrontery to say that he wished to prove, by the testimony of honorable men. He wished to call men of character into court, and insult them by asking them on their oaths, whether "The Prospect before us" was true. Is there one man on earth, sir, profligate and hardened enough to say that he believes it? Would the gentlemen whom he pretended that it was his wish to summon, have appeared in court, and said they believed what the book contained? No, sir. One of them was in Richmond, and was summoned. He, sir, is a man of honorable feelings, of a manly character, whose political prejudices and party animosities, strong as they are, never betrayed him into a mean, a little paltry action. He was summoned, and what did he answer? "Let the scoundrel run away, and I will pay his recognisance; but as to appearing for him in court, that would be too much." This is said to have been his answer; and, whether he gave it or not, certain it is he did not attend. The other persons proposed to be summoned were within reach, and might have been had. What did the court say? "You shall have a continuance till next term, if you entitle yourself to it according to the rules of law, by disclosing to the court, on affidavit, the matter which you expect to prove by these witnesses, and showing that it is material. Even without complying with these terms, you will have a postponement from day to day, in order to procure your witnesses, as long as the time allowed for the sitting of the court will admit." But of this indulgence no use was made. No effort was made to procure the witnesses during the sitting of the court. That was not the object. The object was to postpone the trial till the next court, under the pretence of the absence of witnesses; and the court recollecting the Philadelphia case, where an attempt was made to practice a similar trick, were on their guard, and very properly resolved to defeat it. They resolved to bring on the trial, unless proper and legal grounds for a continuance should be shown. As this could not be done, the trial was brought on, and the party convicted by an honest, responsible, and independent jury.

So much, Mr. Chairman, for the oppressions exercised under this law, and for the objections to its expediency.

As to the question of constitutionality, it has been waived by gentlemen, very properly in my opinion; and I certainly shall not enter into it.

The constitutionality of the law has been, on many former occasions, triumphantly established by arguments to which not even the semblance of an answer has been given. Indeed, sir, I have never so lowly appreciated the understandings of those who have clamored about the unconstitutionality of this act, as to suppose that they themselves believed in their objections. I have ever considered those objections merely as instruments for working on the public mind, as party expedients for exciting discontent against those in power and paving the way for their dismissal. I have ever considered the constitutionality of the Sedition act as a mere stalking-horse, behind which to fight the Administration. I believe that it has always been so considered by those who have used it; by those who have most gladly grasped, and most industriously wielded, a weapon whereby they hoped to demolish the power of their political adversaries, and open the way for their own. Hence, sir, and hence alone, the odious epithets which have been heaped upon it, and the tales fabricated about oppressions exercised in the course of its execution. Hence the charge that Congress had no power to make a provision, which rests on the same principle whereon are founded nearly one third of the laws in our code; and which cannot be distinguished, and has never been attempted to be distinguished, from the first section of the same act—the section against seditious meetings—about the constitutionality of which a doubt has never been raised.

† The Prospect Before Us.

Sedition Act.

We are told, sir, that the people have condemned this act; that the people, as one gentleman has eloquently expressed it, “have declared their disapprobation in a voice of thunder.” Sir, gentlemen deceived themselves. They have indeed thought this reason a good one, and have proved that they thought so by the industry wherewith they have used it. But they greatly overrate its effects, which they measure by the erring standard of their own zeal. Let it be remembered, that this act was passed in the Spring of 1798; and in the Summer and Autumn of that year, and the Spring of the next, when the clamor against this law was fresh and high, the American nation was called upon to express, by a general election, its sense of the conduct of its Representatives. Let it be remembered, that the persons who were instrumental in passing this law, never received higher or more general proofs of the approbation and confidence of their country, than in this election. A change, gentlemen say, has since happened. If this change be anything more than apparent, or at most a temporary fluctuation in popular sentiment, it is owing to far other causes than the Sedition act; causes which need not now be discussed. Suffice it to say, that this act has received the highest and most repeated proofs of approbation on the part of the American nation; and that industriously as the clamor against it has been excited and kept up, that clamor has not been extended beyond certain parts of the country.

We are called on, sir, for the reasons why this act should now be continued. I will give my reasons most freely. Whether they be the same with those which actuate the conduct of other gentlemen, I know not; but in my mind they deserve all consideration. I wish to revive this law, sir, as a shield for the liberty of the press and the freedom of opinion; as a protection to myself and those with whom I have the happiness and the honor to think on public affairs, should we at any future time be forced, by the imbecility or the mistakes of any future Administration in this country, to commence an opposition against it; not a factious, profligate, and unprincipled opposition, founded on falsehood and misrepresentation, and catching at the passions and the prejudices of the moment; but a manly, dignified, candid and patriotic opposition, addressed to the good sense and virtue of the nation, and resting on the basis of argument and truth. Should that time ever arrive, as it may arrive, though I earnestly pray that it may not, I wish to have this law which allows the truth to be given in evidence on indictments for libels, I wish to have this law as a shield. When indicted myself, for calmly and candidly exposing the errors of Government and the incapacity of those who govern, I wish to be enabled, by this law, to go before a jury of my country, and say that what I have written is true. I wish to interpose this law between the freedom of discussion and the overbearing sway of that tyrannical spirit, by which a certain political party in this country is actuated; that spirit which, arrogating to itself to speak in the name of the people, like fanaticism arrogating to itself to speak in the name of God, knows neither moderation, mercy, nor justice; regards neither feeling, principle nor right; and sweeps down, with relentless fury, all that dares to detect its follies, oppose its progress, or resist its domination. It is my knowledge of this spirit, sir, of its frantic excesses, its unfeeling tyranny, and its intolerable revenge, that makes me anxious to raise this one mound between its fury and public liberty; to put into the hands of free discussion, one shield against its darts. This shield, I have little doubt, will at length, and perhaps very soon, be torn away; for the spirit of which I speak, goaded by conscious inferiority, stimulated to madness by the envy of superior talents, reputation, and virtue, knows to brook, no check upon its rise, no censure upon its excess. But I will not sanction my own death by my own voice. I will not yield one barrier to freedom and the right to opinion, while I can defend it. I regard this law as such a barrier, feeble perhaps, indeed, and ineffectual to check the progress of that tyrannical spirit which even now can scarce restrain its rage; but though feeble, yet dear to freedom, and never to be abandoned by freedom's friends. And in order to keep up this barrier to the last, I shall now, while I may, vote for the continuance of that law, which mitigates the rigor of the common law in this respect, and protects the liberty of the press and of opinion, by enacting that the truth may be given in evidence on indictment for libels against the Government.

to another, and to and from the Territories of the United States; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill, or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. RUTLEDGE, Mr. MACON, Mr. CRAIK, and Mr. PARKER, be appointed a committee pursuant to the said resolution.

Mr. HENRY LEE, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to provide for the better establishment of the post roads of the United States.

On motion, it was Resolved, That Mr. RUTLEDGE, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. MACON, and Mr. BAYARD, be appointed a committee on the part of this House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President, and of notifying the persons who shall be elected of their election; and to regulate the time, place, and manner of administering the oath of office to the President.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the committee to whom was referred, on the twenty-first of November last, a motion for amending the Constitution of the United States, made a report; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next. The report is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, (two-thirds of both Houses concurring,) That the following articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, as amendments to the Constitution of the United States:

"1. That, after the third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and one, the choice of electors of President and Vice President shall be made by dividing each State into a number of districts, equal to the number of electors to be chosen in such State, and by the persons in each of those districts, who shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature of such State, choosing one elector in the manner which the Legislature thereof shall prescribe.

"2. That the election of Representative to Congress, who are to serve after the third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and three, shall be by dividing each State into a number of districts, equal to the number of Representatives to which such State shall be entitled, and by the people within each of those districts who shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature of such State choosing one Representative in the manner which the Legislature thereof shall prescribe."

The committee, to whom were referred the foregoing resolutions, have had the same under their consideration, and, as the result of that consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

It is conceived that it may be assumed as one of the most indisputable maxims of American policy, that no change in the Constitution of the United States be admitted without a well-grounded assurance of the attainment of some greater good under the proposed change than under the existing provisions of the Constitution.

In relation to the object of the first of the aforesaid resolutions, the existing provisions of the Constitution of the United States are expressed in the following terms:

"Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

"The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote, by ballot, for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; and they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each; which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such a majority, and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose, by ballot, one of them for President; and if no person have a majority, then, from the five highest on the list, the said House shall, in like manner, choose the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them, by ballot, the Vice President.

"The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States."

Under the latitude of expression used in the foregoing provisions, considerable variety of practice has been found to prevail, not only in the different States, but at different periods in the same States. The modes adopted may be considered as capable of designation under two general descriptions: the one an appointment of electors by popular vote; the other, an appointment of electors by legislative choice.

In each mode considerable varieties have prevailed. Under the first general mode, the States have been sometimes divided into districts, in proportion to the number of electors to be appointed in each State respectively; and the inhabitants of each district, having the right of suffrage, have appointed, by vote, the elector for such district, respectively, nearly in the manner proposed by the first resolution referred to your committee. In other instances, the whole people of a State, having the right of suffrage, have appointed, by general vote, such number of electors as the State was respectively entitled to. The electors appointed under the latter modification have been sometimes taken from the body of the people at large, in other instances, they have been selected from certain districts or divisions of the State, in conformity with certain previous legislative requisitions. In cases of death, absence, or other disability of electors appointed by popular vote, provisions have been made by law, in the same States, to supply the vacancies which might be occasioned by such accidents, by means of a legislative choice.

Under the other general mode of appointment, the electors in some States have been appointed by a joint ballot of both Houses of the Legislature. In some instances, the electors appointed by legislative choice have been taken from the body of the people at large without previous limitation; in other instances, from a restricted list, nominated in certain proportions by each House of the Legislature, respectively.

In the same States one general mode of appointment has prevailed at one time, and another general mode at another time; the changes having been made as well from one general mode as from the other.

Such are the existing provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and such has been the practice under these provisions. The modes thus used are presumed to have been within the legitimate construction of the Constitution, since the votes of electors appointed under almost every variety of these modes have been admitted in former elections of President and Vice President of the United States. The latitude of expression used in those provisions, and the variety of modes practically adopted under them, seem to have been considered in the first of the resolutions referred to your committee as inconveniences which ought to be remedied.

Your committee are persuaded that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States can, in no instance, be reasonably considered as mere pleonasm or inadvertencies; and, therefore, that the particular phraseology used on the above subject, was not adopted without due consideration. Your committee are equally persuaded that the varieties which have practically taken place under the terms used, are not beyond the contemplation of those who framed the Constitution. These varieties, it is reasonable to suppose, were foreseen, and, being foreseen, were viewed not without favor, as the best means of enabling the people of the United States to combine the advantages of experience with the speculations of theory in relation to this acknowledgedly the most difficult part of their Government in the adjustment, so that they may ultimately settle down into one uniform mode within Constitutional limits, not from Constitutional restriction, but from the convictions of reason founded on experience.

The mode proposed to be exclusively established being clearly within the expressions of the Constitution, if upon experience and comparison with other modes, equally within those expressions, it shall be found to possess superior advantages, or, possessing equal advantages, to be liable to fewer or less considerable inconveniences, your committee will not distrust the good sense of the people of the United States, in ultimately selecting this mode without Constitutional restraint, as their uniform mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

Your committee hold it foreign to their duty to enter into a comparative view of the merits and demerits of the various modes which have been or may be adopted under the existing provisions of the Constitution of the United States; they hold it sufficient to authorize the rejection of any proposition for the exclusive establishment of any particular mode, if such mode shall, upon candid examination, be found liable to serious abuses of most dangerous consequence to the public peace; against which abuses, under such mode, no practicable means have been, or probably can be found, for prevention or remedy.

The liability of the mode proposed to such abuses cannot be made more manifest than by a brief review of the essential details of that mode.

To carry into effect the mode proposed to be exclusively established, every State must necessarily be divided into a number of districts in proportion to the number of electors to be appointed in each State, respectively. These districts must, of necessity, be again sub-divided, for the convenient reception of the votes of the people. Authority must be delegated to one or more officers in every sub-division of every electoral district throughout the United States for the purpose of receiving those votes.

Amidst so great a variety of officers thus to be intrusted, it would be against the calculations of all experience to suppose there would not be found some who might be reasonably suspected of a liability to the deviations of error, if not to those of a worse nature. No government upon earth has, or can have, competent knowledge of so great a variety of individuals, as to insure, through the cautiousness of appointment, against such deviations in all instances. Absolute prevention, then, is not to be expected.

The votes of some, possessing the right of suffrage, may be rejected; the votes of others, not possessing the right of suffrage, may be admitted; whether such rejection or admission proceed from error of judgment, or from design, it will equally lay the foundation of a contested or disputed election between the candidates for the electorship.

When the votes of the several sub-divisions of an electoral district have been taken, the polls, or lists of those votes, must be brought together for an addition and comparison; and a return must be made of the person appointed an elector. Whether that return be made by the officers (authorized originally to receive the votes) in a collective body, or whether it be made by some other authority, to which those officers may be directed to transmit the polls or lists of the votes taken by them, there may (amidst the conflict of passions, too likely to prevail on such occasions) too probably be found means of suppressing the polls, or lists of votes of some of the sub-divisions of a district, or of preventing or delaying the transmission thereof; so that one man might be returned in apparent conformity with law, the elector of a district, when, in reality, another may have been appointed by the people of that district.

The common experience of elective governments evinces that cases, such as those above suggested, are by no means out of the course of probable occurrence. Instances of disputed elections, contested upon similar grounds, frequently occur in ordinary legislative bodies, notwithstanding the knowledge that a remedy exists within the scope of the power of those bodies. The protracted periods of their sessions give time for investigating and deciding upon the merits of such contested elections. The knowledge of the practicability of such remedy probably tends to discourage the greater frequency of such occurrences.

But the bodies of electors in each State, respectively, from the necessarily restricted periods of their sessions, are incapacitated to collect the necessary evidence, and to pursue such other steps as are essential to the investigation of and decision upon the merits of a contested election of one of their members, were they otherwise competent thereto. Those, therefore, who may be returned electors, whether duly and really appointed or not, will, in practice, exercise the important functions of electors of the President and Vice President of the United States. No practicable remedy against such abuses appears to exist in the present stage of the proposed system; a knowledge of the defect of such remedy, moreover, it is to be feared, might act as an additional temptation to the frequency of abuse.

JANUARY, 1801.

Sedition Act.

H. OF R.

The votes of the electors in the several States are next to be rendered by ballot, and, when so rendered, they are to be transmitted in the form of certificates, giving the result of the ballot to certain officers of the Government of the United States. When the period arrives for opening those certificates, and counting the votes in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, if error or abuse shall have taken place, no means exist (in case the ballot be in favor of more than two persons as President and Vice President) for discriminating between the votes of those who shall have been duly appointed and returned, and those who shall have been defectively appointed and unduly returned as electors. To set aside votes given by persons not duly appointed, and consequently wanting the competent authority of electors, no course presents itself in such case, save that of vacating the whole ballot, of which the defective vote or votes may be a component part. Thus, to deprive a State of all participation in the election of the President and Vice President of the United States, on account of the defective appointment of one or a few of its electors, would be a serious and painful duty. To vacate such ballot, and thereby to deprive those candidates for whom the sound votes of such ballot may have been given, of the aid of that ballot, in order at the same time to destroy the effect of the unsound votes, might result in giving to others a priority, to which, if effect could be given to the really sound votes, those others might not be entitled. This also presents an embarrassing consideration.

The vacation of a ballot, composed of sound and defective votes, ought to be the result of uniform principle; it ought to take place on all occasions where a discrimination cannot be made, or on none. Not to vacate such ballot, but to permit the election of a Chief Magistrate to be carried, on any occasion, by the aid of one or more defective votes, would be to hazard, in a most eminent degree, the peace of the Union. It is of the last importance to the happiness of the people of the United States, that a complete conviction should prevail at all times that the person who may be elected Chief Magistrate of the Union has been really elected by electors duly and really appointed by those having competent authority for that purpose. It were painful to anticipate the consequences which would too probably attend a disputed election to the Presidency; those consequences might be more calamitous than can be foreseen.

A mode of electing the President and Vice President of the United States, which might at once combine the expression of the public sentiments of the people of the respective States, with a perfect assurance of the due appointment of the electors for that important purpose, is a discovery greatly to be desired; that such mode may be found, under the present provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and will be discovered by the good sense of the American people, when aided by further experience, is confidently hoped. Under such circumstances, to adopt exclusively the mode proposed by the first resolution referred to your committee, might not only preclude the advantages of further experience, and the adoption of a more eligible mode, but might tend to perpetuate, as well as to render more frequent the occurrence of those exceptionable incidents which have been before suggested, and for which it is difficult, if not impracticable, to find adequate and convenient means of prevention or remedy.

These considerations induce your committee to prefer the existing provisions of the Constitution of the United States to the change proposed by the first of the resolutions referred to them.

In relation to the second resolution referred to your committee, they report, that the objects directly contemplated therein are already within the limits of the Legislative authority of the Government of the United States. To convert a Constitutional provision for the exercise of Legislative authority, to which recurrence may be had at all times, and under which such modifications may be introduced, from time to time, as the public good or convenience may require, in the ordinary forms of legislation, into a specific Constitutional prescription, seems to be both superfluous and inconvenient.

The adoption of the change proposed in the second resolution would also, in the opinion of your committee, indirectly tend to withdraw from the Government of the United States its existing control over the appointment of one of its most essential branches, and to vest that authority exclusively in the State Governments. Such arrangement might produce consequences not contemplated, and too unpleasant to be anticipated. Your committee, therefore, conceive it to be inexpedient to adopt the proposed change on this subject, and submit the following resolutions to the consideration of the House:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to change the Constitution of the United States, in the manner proposed by the first of the aforesaid resolutions, in relation to the election of the President and Vice President of the United States.

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to change the Constitution of the United States, in the manner proposed by the second of the aforesaid resolutions, in relation to the election of members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

SEDITION ACT.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the unfinished business of yesterday, which was a resolution reported by the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, for continuing in force an act commonly called the Sedition law.

Mr. BAYARD said that after what had fallen from gentlemen who opposed the revival of the Sedition law, it became necessary for its former friends to support it in their own justification.

He thought, from a consideration of the nature of the law and the crimes it was intended to punish, viz: false, scandalous, and malicious libels, it was surprising it should meet with any opposition. Is it, he said, no crime falsely and maliciously to asperse the Government of the country? From the enormity of the offence, and the extent of the injury, it was necessary to make examples of such offenders in order to deter others. Were he in a despotic country, he would feel but little anxiety about this subject; but in this country we stand on different ground. Our Government depends much upon the opinion of the people. To mislead or corrupt public opinion, is to sap the pillars which support the Government, and produce its ruin.

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

Gentlemen say, and pretend to think, there is no necessity for a law of this kind; that the good sense of the people will prevent the evils apprehended from false publications. It is, however, found that the most intelligent are deceived in this way. When falsehoods are stated in newspapers as facts, and remain uncontradicted, what chance is there for their not being believed? The gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. NICHOLSON,) was himself so far deceived and deluded that he ventured to state to the Committee one of these assertions as a fact. This is adduced to show in a strong point of light the necessity for such a law. Mr. B. had as much confidence as other gentlemen in the good sense, integrity, and patriotism of the people, when not misinformed. To prevent this is the object of the law; that newspapers may thus be made the channels of truth, punishment is only to be inflicted when known falsehood is maliciously published. Can this be called no crime? Can any one say a man may falsely, wickedly, and maliciously publish things with a view to destroy the Government, and yet not be amenable to justice?

It is allowed that Government has power to punish insurrections, and even combinations to prevent the execution of the laws. If this may be done, should not the instruments of insurrection and illegal combinations also be punished? May we not strike at the root of the evil? May not false publications produce insurrections? In his opinion, there would have been no insurrection in this country, had it not been for the publication of false, scandalous, and malicious libels. Unless provided against, the time may come when the country will be deluged with evils occasioned by such falsehoods.

The gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. NICHOLAS,) opposed the law as essentially wrong both in theory and practice. Mr. B. then entered on a review of the cases in which it had been carried into practice. Respecting Callendar's trial he knew but little. The doctrine advanced by the court was a very alarming one in the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia. The jury had a right to decide upon the law and fact, but not upon the constitutionality of the law; the judge was therefore authorized in prohibiting any argument on that point.

He then took a view of the case, in which, it was said, an honorable gentleman of that House had been fined in a large sum, and confined in a loathsome dungeon. What, he inquired, was the object in mentioning that case? A libel was published against the Government; a jury of the country declared it to be false, scandalous, and malicious, and yet the punishment is complained of as a hardship! As well might we be told of hardship when a felon suffers for his crime; or that it was hardship when a vote was taken for expelling the honorable gentleman from this House.

Will you say that the judge and jury were corrupt? The House by a vote sanctioned their decision. He was convicted by a fair trial, and if the court did wrong, so did this House. If the court, acting under oath, entered so far into party prejudice as to neglect their duty, why not impeach the judges? It is improper to cite these authorities when the judges cannot justify themselves. This is a case of real hardship. Why do not gentlemen come forward and impeach the judges if they have done wrong? They are not above the justice of the country. It would be administered even against them. They are said to be under party prejudices. Mr. B. believed they could be trusted. He never suspected them of doing wrong; full evidence should be adduced of it prior to its being believed. Will gentlemen say there is no chance for impeachment, because a majority in both Houses are biased by the same party prejudices? What is the amount of this argument? Those who think with me are impartial; those who differ from me are under party prejudice. Mr. B. believed the gentlemen opposed to him sincere in their intentions. He also believed the judges were sincere; that they had been correct in their principles. He was warranted in what he said by the charges made against them being groundless.

The charges delivered by the judges have been complained of. The object of the charges has been to inculcate a love of order and good government. This might be party prejudice in the opinion of some gentlemen; if so, he must still applaud the judges.

It is said, the law is unconstitutional. He thought a sound mind might be intuitively convinced of the contrary. If such a law is necessary to preserve and continue the Constitution, it is Constitutional. It is necessary to defend the Government from the attempts of assassins. If you allow the Government to be brought into contempt, the Constitution will become a baseless fabric, and in time will vanish away. The right to make such a law he thought was clearly and expressly given in the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution, which says, "Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." In his opinion, the law is so essentially necessary, that without it the Government would be paralyzed and stripped of all defence. He thought it unnecessary to trouble the House with further argument, as those offered were sufficient in his opinion; he knew of no stronger ones.

Mr. B. was of opinion, that if this law is permitted to expire, the common law will be in force, by which fine and imprisonment are unlimited, and truth is not allowed to be given in justification. By some it is denied to be the law of the land. It ought to be remembered that the common law is the parent not only of the liberty of this country, but of England and all Europe. How differently, he said, we feel from what our ancestors did who were ready to spill the last drop of their blood in its defence! To the common law we owe the trial by jury, and many other rights; yet it is reprobated. Is it not the boast even of Virginia? Was it not objected to the Constitution in the Virginia Convention, that it did not recognise the common law? The Constitutions of all the States are predicated on the common law, which is made up of the rules of right reason, founded on the experience of ages. If courts are not bound by the common law, they must be governed by their own arbitrary will. If the common law is not binding, there is no law, and gentlemen surely cannot dream of liberty without law. If we are governed without law, it is despotism, whether government is by the will of one or many. Were we left to the will of courts we should be in a state of uncertainty; we should be liable to suffer from caprice, vice, folly, and every weakness. The existence of the common law is of immense importance; without it, the Constitution would be a mere skeleton, devoid of sinews and nerves, and incapable of motion.

Gentlemen seem to suppose they have started an insuperable difficulty by asking what period you will fix on for taking the common law, and with or without the modifications of different statutes.

He would take it as taken by the States, with no more difficulties than our ancestors took it. It was no difficult matter to draw the line. He would take it at the adoption of the Constitution, as modified by the statutes of the States. What objection could be made to this? Was there more cause of alarm at its being adopted by the United States courts than in the courts of the different States, where they love the common law? They cannot surely object to it as it is dispensed in all the courts.

To paralyze the General Government, and confide all power to the State courts, is a system invariably pursued by some gentlemen on this floor. He was not, therefore, surprised that they should wish it not to be the law of the courts of the United States. We must, however, have one of the two alternatives; take the common law or have no law. The courts must be either despotic, or bound by the common law.

If a government were given to this Territory, and a Judiciary established, it would be under the common law. Whenever a constitution is formed, it is bottomed on the idea of the common law being in existence. The ancient opinion was that the common law was the law of the United States. Now, judges are called despots for deciding by it. This is the novel opinion which should be scouted from the floor of the House.

Mr. B. referred gentlemen to the 11th article of the amendments to the Constitution, which says, "No fact, tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." Here the existence of the common law is recognised, unless the article is without meaning.

Suppose a man convicted of treason, and a motion made for a new trial, must not the determination be by the rules of common law?

In the third section of the tenth article of the Constitution, after defining the extent of judgment, it is said, "But the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law." It could be only the common law here referred to.

In cases of impeachment, how would Senators form their opinion? The Constitution has given no direction as to the manner of conducting them. The common law only could direct.

Persons can be impeached only for offences against the United States. After conviction, they may be punished by law; certainly the common law, and that part of it which relates to criminal cases.

Again, in the same article, felony and breach of the peace are spoken of; how are these to be defined? Only by the common law. In defining a breach of the peace there are many nice distinctions.

Mr. B. said he could cite many other cases, but they were not necessary. He would, however, refer gentlemen to the opinions given in the course of legislation, which was a fair mode of construction.

Those who first had the Government of the United States in their hands proceeded upon the opinion that the common law was the law of the land. In one place they recognise the right of common-law remedy. In the act establishing the Judiciary they say, "The circuit courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction in all suits at common law."

Mr. B. concluded by saying: If I am correct in my position that the common law is the law of the land, the Sedition law ought to be continued, because it limits and softens the penalties in cases of libels, which are very harsh according to the common law. The gentleman from Virginia has rightly appreciated my motives in wishing to renew this law, when a different administration is to take charge of the public welfare.

Mr. GALLATIN said it had been his intention not to rise again on this subject, but as the gentleman from Delaware had said, that if this law is not continued in force, the common law will be the law of the land, he would make a few observations. As to the constitutionality of the law, it is alleged to be necessary for carrying into operation certain defined powers of the Constitution. Surely this law cannot be necessary to carry into effect these defined powers, if the common law will remain in existence according to the gentleman's opinion. He rests much upon the necessity of it to protect the Government from slander. Mr. G. supposed the evils arising from this source were not so much to be dreaded as those which would result from the attempt to punish slander. He wished to know what a false, scandalous, and malicious libel is. If punishment could be confined to those only who published as facts what was unsupported by truth, he would not think the law improper. It could not, however, be denied that recourse must be had merely to the opinion of the judges respecting things of very difficult definition.

The gentleman from Delaware had entered largely into the discussion of what had never been denied, that the common law is in some measure the law of the land. But after he had paid every encomium to the common law he allowed it to be harsh in respect to libels.

The Sedition act says truth shall be given in evidence, the gentleman supposed that without that provision the judges would be bound to decide by the common law. He thinks, too, that it has gone further, by allowing the jury to determine the law and the fact, as in other cases. This supposes they had not this right before. Then as to libels the common law is contradictory to its usual allowance.

In a cause of this kind in England, a judge gave it in charge to the jury that they were only to inquire whether a certain paper was printed and published by the accused. As well might he in a case of murder tell them they were only to inquire whether the accused had killed the man, without any attention to the criminality of his intention.

Mr. G. did not think the courts of the United States would at once assume jurisdiction over libels, according to the common law, in case this act was not revived.

The gentleman from Delaware had mentioned the case of a member of this House who had been punished under the Sedition law, and considered the vote given for his expulsion as a sanction of the decision of the judge and jury. In such instances the Constitution declared that two-thirds were necessary for a decision. This was provided on the principle that such might be the prevalence of party spirit, that a majority would agree to expel without well-grounded reasons. The vote was, therefore, a nullity, as two-thirds did not agree to it. Mr. G. considered laws of this kind as the means of introducing party views into courts of justice; and that it was only in such cases that any danger of partiality was to be apprehended; here it is to be apprehended, unless you can suppose judges become different men merely by being placed on the bench. It is also certain that the jury must be composed of one or the other party, and is, therefore, incompetent to decide upon opinions. He did not suppose them intentionally doing wrong. He asked if any gentleman in the House would be willing to be tried for a libel by a jury chosen from the members of it who are of different political opinions? He confessed he would not.

The gentleman from South Carolina had said, that in a certain trial the judge had permitted a book or newspaper to be read, although it was not legal evidence. This shows that the accused was at the mercy of the judge, since he could not claim it as a right.

The same gentleman had spoken of the impropriety of the President being summoned as a witness. Suppose a person is accused of having written and published a false and malicious libel, in which he states that the President has expressed certain opinions; on the trial he says, I will prove the truth of my assertions; how is it to be done? By printed declarations? No; that is not legal evidence. He cannot summon the President. Thus, though truth be on his side, he cannot give it in evidence. This shows how difficult it is to carry such laws into effect without oppression. Thus the provision that truth may be given in evidence is rendered useless.

Finally it is said that as it is upon public opinion our Government depends, the public opinion should be guarded from corruption. What, he asked, is meant by saying the Government depends upon public opinion? Surely it is not intended to mean whether there shall be a Government or not. It can only relate to the persons who administer the Government. It depends wholly on the public opinion, who shall administer the Government, but not whether there shall or shall not be a Government.

Mr. G. contended that the common law is modified by different Governments. To suppose that truth should not be given in evidence was inconsistent with the nature of our Government; and if this law did not exist, the common law would be thus modified in this country.

If the existence of this law had been found to correct public opinion it would be well to continue it. In this country, he said, opinions were divided between two sets of men, and the people will vote for those who they conceive will best answer their views. Mr. G. could not see how this law would correct or render pure the channels of information, if only certain kinds of libels were punished. How, he asked, has it been executed? Only by punishing persons of politics different from those of the administration. It has not prevented the corruption of public opinion, according to the explanation which the gentlemen in favor of the law have themselves given of those words. If the Sedition law was adopted only as a part of defensive measures, it is no longer necessary.

Mr. OTIS said, that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. GALLATIN,) who had last risen, contended that the law which the resolution intended to revive, provided for the punishment of opinions, as well as of actions, he spoke a language quite unintelligible to him. This sentiment had been often repeated, and he would test its soundness by an appeal to the gentleman himself. Would that gentleman, however unfavorable his opinions may be of the Administration of this country, consent to adopt any of the methods described in the act to express his censure? Would not he, or any other gentleman of his party, blush and be ashamed to publish a writing, false, scandalous, and malicious? He presumed the answer must be affirmative. Yet that gentleman would not and did not hesitate to declare opinions injurious to the Government; he was not afraid to express any sentiments which he entertained upon this subject, without an idea of incurring the penalties of this act. This, then, Mr. O. contended, was a fair standard to try the meaning and extent of the provisions in this act, and to show that they did not apply to matters of opinion. Cases indeed might possibly arise in which the mere forms of expressing opinions might be adopted as the disguise of an intended libel. A man might choose to think everything that is infamous and atrocious, and to publish his thoughts without a fact to justify them. In other words, positive assertions might be conveyed under the assumed form of opinions to evade the law. In these cases his cunning ought not to serve for his protection, but still the law did not restrain free investigation, nor even the most acrimonious censures of the measures of Government, unless they are falsehoods direct, scandalous, and malicious.

Mr. O. professed his admiration at the dexterity with which the opponents of the resolution had contrived to shift the burden of proof from their own shoulders to those of its friends, by leading them insensibly into a discussion of the original merits of the measure. He understood it to be an agreed point in the first stage of the debate, to waive all argument in relation to the constitutionality of the act, and simply to consider its expediency. But this ground is changed by degrees, and principles and arguments which have been frequently canvassed to the bottom, are once more brought into view. He did not, however, feel it incumbent on him to follow gentlemen upon this ground. He would not, at this time of day, permit himself to be seduced into a new argument upon the constitutionality of the measure. It was sufficient for him, that, on former occasions, he had not shrunk from this discussion. It was sufficient for him, that a glance at the Constitution demonstrated its powers to extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under the Constitution, and that this word, law, intends the common law, without which whole phrases, as well as many technical terms contained in that instrument, must remain destitute of interpretation. But above all it was a sufficient answer on this occasion, that the wisdom of a former Legislature, composed of a majority of the present members, after great deliberation, had adopted this law, as a safeguard against the rapid progress of an unparalleled licentiousness, which threatened the subversion of the Constitution. When it is considered, further, that this House has, in two instances, affirmed the constitutionality of this most salutary law; once by rejecting a resolution to repeal it, and once by sanctioning the judgment of a court in the case of the member from Vermont; was it reasonable to expect that a majority would be formed ready to abandon a doctrine to which they had, with such solemnity, subscribed their assent? For these reasons, said Mr. O., we are acquitted from all obligation to justify the act upon the principles which gave it birth, and in my turn I call on gentlemen to prove the mischiefs and grievances which have sprung from it. Let them show that it has been used as an instrument of oppression, and the scourge of innocence. Let them demonstrate its inexpediency from the practice that has arisen under it, and if they succeed in this attempt, then, indeed, with a good countenance, they may call on us to rescind it.

What then, said Mr. O., are the mischievous consequences that have resulted from this act? What are the abuses which are incident to its operation? Two arguments are principally relied on by the gentlemen from Virginia and Pennsylvania. They contend that there exists a moral incompetency in our Federal courts to decide causes of this description with impartiality; and again they say, with the gentleman from Maryland, that the law has been executed with rigor. But why are the Judges of the Federal Courts disqualified to decide upon cases of this nature? It is answered that they owe their appointments to the President, and are naturally inclined to support the side that may be supposed most congenial with his feelings and interests. In vain we reply to this suggestion, that although the President appoints the Judge, yet the tenure of his office is perfectly independent, and his salary permanent. This is true, say gentlemen, but he may be a candidate for the office of Chief Justice, or for a foreign mission. Now, it happens unfortunately for this argument, that not one of the judges who has yet presided at a trial for a libel has been either promoted to the office of a Chief Justice, or sent upon a foreign mission. This species of reward must therefore be allowed to be a very precarious compensation for a violation of oaths and an abandonment of duty. Sir, arguments like these are a satire upon the nature of man, and his capacity to frame a Constitution; when you have selected men of talents and tried integrity for judicial stations, and rendered them independent by ample salaries, you have done all that human prudence can devise, and you have done enough.

With equal justice, said Mr. O., might it be pretended in the present case that our courts are not competent to try an action of debt where the President is interested, or an assault and battery upon his person, or a riot, or combination, to obstruct him in the discharge of his official duties. In these cases your judges would be equally liable to the influence of an unjust partiality, if such partiality could be presumed. But the objection of incompetency extends not merely to the judges. The jurors are also disqualified for an impartial discharge of their duty. They are returned by the marshals, who are appointed by the President. I repeat, sir, that this argument is unfortunate in the quarter whence it proceeds. It is in those parts of the Union only where this law is obnoxious that the marshals have this power of returning jurors; a power derived from their State laws, which they may change at pleasure, and which the laws of the Union do not affect.

Let us then advert, Mr. Chairman, to the cases which have been noticed as instances of the rigorous operation of this law. In the case alluded to by the gentleman from Virginia, it is said that the people of that State were astonished at the extraordinary proceedings of the presiding Judge. But where the cause of the astonishment consisted, the gentleman does not explain. The question, however, is not whether that Judge was singular, or even mistaken, in some of his opinions or rules of proceeding, but whether substantial justice was done on the trial. Will the gentleman tell us the people of that State consider the sentence unjust or the punishment severe? Do they accredit the charges contained in the book of that most infamous culprit? Will they countenance the atrocious falsehoods for which he was punished? I think too well of the people of Virginia to believe this to be possible. The case from Pennsylvania has been thoroughly sifted and explained by my friend from South Carolina, who was present at the trial. In regard to the other case of a member from Vermont, I forbear to make any remarks, the circumstances of it being recent and familiar to the recollection of the House. It was not my wish to allude to it. If that member enjoys the serenity of an approving conscience, it shall not be disturbed by me; but if, on the other hand, past scenes are with him a source of pain and regret, I will not plant with my finger an additional thorn in his bosom.

We come now, Mr. Chairman, to the case of the Boston printer—to the poor, unhappy man, who died a martyr, and is now alive. Two persons of the same name were concerned in publishing the Boston Chronicle, one of them the ostensible owner and editor of the paper; the other, the superintendent of the business. A very gross libel appeared in that paper, for which the editor was perhaps recognised to answer, but was never brought to trial. He was in the last stage of a consumption, and was finally arrested, not by the Marshal of the district, but by that grim messenger whose mandate strikes terror to the heart of the false and malicious libeller. He died in his own house, and peace to his ashes. The other party, who conducted the business of the office, was at length arraigned for the offence. But, sir, not upon the Sedition law, not in a court of the United States, but upon that good old wholesome common law, to which the people of our country cling as the charter of their most precious right; a law, sir, by which we yet hope to preserve our religion, our morals, and our ancient habits. He was convicted, not by a jury returned by a marshal, but by the verdict of twelve honest men, chosen by lot from the whole town in which he dwells, and he was sentenced to imprisonment for a short period, I believe not more than two months, certainly not exceeding four. This, Mr. Chairman, is the case selected as an instance of the most cruel oppression of this law. This is the man who, until within a few hours, was thought, not only by the gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. Nicholson,) but by a great majority of this House, to have perished in a prison under circumstances of aggravated wretchedness; and while many a patriotic heart beat high with indignation at this treatment, and many a pious, sympathizing friend, sang requiems to his departed spirit, this dead man had escaped from prison, was at his old trade again, and the groans of his press, under the new weight of new libels, echoed responses to the lamentations of his friends.

Sir, said Mr. O., I dwell upon this case, not with a view to triumph in the misstatement of the gentleman from Maryland, but to draw from it a strong and conclusive inference in favor of the act. What plainer evidence can you have to prove that these outrageous falsehoods do not merely waste their force upon the desert air? They sink deep into the minds of men in high stations, and bear directly upon the measures of this House and Government. Can that gentleman, can any other honorable member of this House, distinguish what portion of the ingredients that form the combination of prejudices, which he may have conceived against the Government, consists of such materials? And, sir, when men in important public stations—men qualified for them by their talents—when minds to which all the avenues of intelligence are open, are exposed to all these delusions, what can you expect from the gaping and promiscuous crowd who delight to swallow calumny? What from the sons of riot, and intemperance, and idleness, who cluster in the alleys and dram-shops of your cities? What from the more innocent but equally deluded yeomanry, among whose sequestered retreats these poisons are scattered by officious missionaries who prowl through the country, disturbing the silence of the woods and tranquillity of the cottage? Can it be a subject of wonder that ordinary minds are agitated with a mighty ferment when these tales are woven with such art, circulated with such industry, and repeated with such effrontery as to produce belief in men generally well informed? Under these circumstances do you wonder, sir, that the fear of future danger should absorb the consciousness of actual security, and that men should be roused into active opposition to the best and mildest system of government? Sir, these consequences are natural in course, and accordingly you this day are a witness to them. The men who framed and who, for twelve years have nurtured the Constitution; the men under whose administration our affairs have prospered, and our agriculture and commerce flourished beyond all former experience, are now driven from the helm and are succeeded by whom? By those who, I hope, will do equal justice to the confidence of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I pity the blindness of that man who does not perceive that the press is the engine which is probably destined to overturn the Government of this country. It has been instrumental, indeed, of the greatest benefits to mankind, by the destruction of systems founded in civil and religious tyranny, but it may be rendered not less formidable to governments which have the freedom and happiness of man for their basis. In no country was a more systematical and inveterate design to destroy a government by means of the press manifested than it is in ours. There is nothing sacred in virtue, nor fair in character, nor endeared by services, which does not fall a prey to the insatiate fury of certain printers and their abettors. The immortal WASHINGTON has been charged with murder, and with speculating in the funds with the public money; the President of the United States has been accused of designs to change the Constitution, to establish monarchy, and to maintain himself in place by an army; the late Secretary of State has been represented as a speculator; the late Secretary of the Treasury, a man who is an ornament to his country, has been stigmatized as the felonious burner of public offices and records. No mercy has been observed in the violation of truth and decency; no character has escaped, unless protected by its own congenial infamy and baseness. Yet, sir, these are offences which we have no power to punish! These are merely the feverish symptoms of liberty, which truth alone is sufficient to allay!

But, we are told, Mr. Chairman, that under the new order of things, no use will be ever made of this law, and it is therefore superfluous to re-enact it; that the new Administration will disdain to avail itself of its protection; and that such measures will be pursued for the preservation of harmony, as will secure us from the penal consequences of the common law, by depriving us of all cause of complaint. Sir, to this argument I reply, that if the law is to fall into disuse, no harm can result from its revival, and the anxiety of gentlemen is the more extraordinary. But when gentlemen promise us that this law will remain a dead letter, they can speak only for themselves as individuals. Hitherto, much greater rigor and keenness in prosecutions for libels have been displayed by the party opposed to this law than by its advocates. Look at the prosecutions, and menaces of prosecution, in Pennsylvania. Reflect on the amount of Republican damages. The enormous sum of two thousand dollars was lately awarded for a libel, against a young printer, at the suit of a Democratic Republican. A judgment which I will venture to say will prove more oppressive than any adjudication under the sedition act. I learn from good authority that other prosecutions are pending, and others still threatened from the same quarter, so that no great reliance can be had upon the forbearance of gentlemen in this respect. I confess, sir, however, it is with great pleasure I hear it announced by the gentleman from Virginia, that great union of sentiment, and general harmony, will prevail under the new administration. I wish, however, he had condescended to be more explicit. Is the system adopted for the support of our public credit to be maintained? Without this there can be no harmony. Will an adherence be observed to the principles of a fair and impartial neutrality in the European contest? For, without these things, there will be no safety, and, of consequence, no harmony; but if the gentleman will give us satisfactory assurances upon these topics, and a few others that might be mentioned; if, in a word, the credit and the honor of the country shall be preserved by the energy of Government, we may yet hope for this desirable harmony.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, said Mr. O., has reported the intimation that no advantage has resulted either to the Administration or its friends from this law. But, sir, if this were true, it would furnish no argument against the law itself. If it has not been enforced, the makers of it are not culpable for the omission. I believe, sir, that very material benefits would have flown from it had ten prosecutions been instituted where one has been; had three or four venal presses, set up with foreign money, and conducted by incendiary emigrants, been crushed and silenced. But although these have been tolerated by an abused and insulted people, and are still suffered to disgorge their impurities, yet has the law been productive of important advantages. It has enabled us to rescue the Constitution from misconstruction; it has established a high and binding precedent; it has developed principles essential to the security of all government; which opposition itself, in a season of returning moderation and reflection, will be compelled to acknowledge and adopt.

Sir, the gentleman from Pennsylvania contends that the prosecutions under this act, have been confined to men of one political sect, and mentions a pamphlet printed in New York, as a libel which has been permitted to pass unnoticed by the magistrate. But there is a singular infelicity in the choice of this example; without giving any opinion upon the pamphlet alluded to, I will remind that gentleman, that whatever might have been the designs of Government, they were anticipated by the eagerness of democratic zeal. A certain Northumbrian apostle of liberty rode post to New York to snatch the Sedition law from the hands of his friends, and to apply it with his own hands. To have interrupted him, in this promising pursuit, would have furnished real cause for complaint: no other instance is quoted by the gentleman, but his proposition may be nearly correct. It is for libels upon Government and its officers, alone, that Congress is authorized to provide a punishment. The State laws are competent to redress the injuries of individuals, and in Pennsylvania at least, no charge can be made of an indisposition to afford this redress.

Mr. Chairman, I will not enlarge at this late hour upon the cases furnished by that gentleman's imagination, in which a failure of justice might happen through want of evidence or other means. In these, as in all other cases where the best evidence is of necessity precluded, that which is next in the nature of things and in the power of the party, is permitted. I see nothing in the Constitution or the law, or in the practice under the law, that should induce those who once supported it, to desert it at this moment. The prospect of a war with France is more remote, but the temper of the times is not changed, nor the licentiousness of the press controlled. We may want this law as a coat of armor to defend us from persecution, and we should be willing to give to the new Administration the means of protection that have been provided for their predecessors. For these reasons my vote will be given in favor of the resolution.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 23.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented a bill making appropriations for the Navy of the United States for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; which was read twice and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

On motion it was Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of obliging the respective officers intrusted with the collection of the revenue, to enter into such bonds as will more effectually secure the payment of moneys received by them for the use of the United States; and that they report by bill, or otherwise.

Mr. RUTLEDGE, from the committee to whom was referred, on the twentieth instant, the letter from the Commissioners of the City of Washington, relative to the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Capitol, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That leave be given to the Commissioners of the City of Washington to use one of the rooms on the first floor of the Capitol for holding the present session of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill presented yesterday to provide for the better establishment of the post roads of the United States was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Wednesday next.

Mr. HENRY LEE, from the committee appointed, presented a bill for the government of the District of Columbia; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Wednesday next.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The following resolutions were laid on the table by Mr HARPER, and directed to be printed.

Resolved, That, for completing the public buildings, already commenced at the City of Washington, the sum of — dollars, to be paid in annual instalments of one hundred thousand dollars each, ought to be advanced by the United States by way of loan; and that the public property in the said city, after discharging the incumbrances incurred for former advances for the said city and buildings, ought to be pledged and applied, under the direction of Congress, as a fund for the reimbursement of the said loan.

Resolved, That the said sum, and all other sums applicable to the same objects, and hereafter to be received, or now on hand, ought to be applied, under the direction of the Secretaries of the State, Treasury, Navy, and War Departments, with the approbation of the President of the United States; and that the said Secretaries, or any three of them, ought to be empowered to employ a proper clerk or clerks for keeping the accounts for the said expenditures, and all suitable architects, agents and workmen, for carrying on and completing said buildings.

Resolved, That a suitable apartment or apartments, in that part of the Capitol already finished, ought to be fitted up for the temporary accommodation of the Courts of the United States, appointed, or hereafter to be appointed, to be held in the said city, and of such courts as may hereafter be appointed to be held therein for the Territory of Columbia; and that, in completing the Capitol, permanent accommodations for the said courts ought to be provided therein.

Resolved, That the sum of — dollars, annually, ought to be appropriated towards the establishment of a National Library, to be applied under the direction of the Secretary of State, and that a suitable apartment, in that part of the Capitol which is now finished, ought to be fitted up for the reception of the said Library; and that, when the Capitol shall be completed, suitable apartments for the reception and use of the said Library ought to be provided therein.

Resolved, That the sum of — dollars ought to be appropriated for the suitable furnishing of the President's House, to be applied under the direction of the Secretaries of State, Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, with the approbation of the President of the United States; and that the said Secretaries, or any three of them, ought to be empowered to employ a suitable agent for that purpose.

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners for the City of Washington ought to be discontinued, and the public property in the said city to be placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, with authority to appoint such clerk or clerks, for the particular management thereof, as he may judge necessary; and that all powers, rights, duties, and trusts, now vested in, or belonging to said board, ought to be transferred to the said Secretary.

SEDITION LAW.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the unfinished business of yesterday, which was a resolution reported by the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, for continuing in force the act commonly called the Sedition law.

Mr. H. LEE rose to express his great pleasure at the very fair and candid manner in which his colleague (Mr. NICHOLAS) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GALLATIN) had conducted themselves towards the State he represented; but he could not wholly approve of the sentiments expressed by them.

With respect to the constitutionality of this law, after what had been so ably advanced by his friends in its behalf, he would only observe that even with the suspension of those sentiments, or without any other support, the decision of the sub-court ought to be with every gentleman, and effectually was with him, sufficient to remove every possible doubt. From the moment of that decision every doubt ought to have ceased, and the question never again to have agitated the Congress of the United States. Those who had been taught to obey the Constitution, must approve of its decisions, and nothing could be more evident than that the reference to the Judiciary of our Government was the precisely accurate mode of ascertaining the veracity of a Legislative measure.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania had told the House that this law was the offspring, and had become a part of a defensive system, adopted when the aggression of a foreign foe raised into action every measure of repulsion within the power of the country, and that it was so considered at a succeeding session of the House. Not having the honor of a seat in the House at the time, Mr. L. said he did not know; but, whether that was the reason of its adoption, or whether not, he could not agree with that gentleman that the occasion for this law was at an end. He would not hesitate for a moment to say that this law ought to be perpetual. It was from this impression that he should vote for the report, and with pleasure would go farther and make it a perpetual law.

In order to examine the propriety of this opinion, it would be necessary to examine the law. What were its provisions, and what its object? Its object is to support your Government—not by suppressing the truth—not by suppressing information proper to be known to your people—not by violating the rights of even the humblest of your citizens—but by giving the truth, and the truth only, its dominion. The gentlemen must pardon him in contradicting them when they said that it operated to the injury of our citizens. He must deny the assertion that the honest well-intentioned citizen could possibly receive the least inconvenience from this law. He owed it to himself and to his friends with whom he usually voted, to declare that it was their most sincere desire to give every truth and every act to the community. He would contend that this law went to adopt, as far as a law could do, measures for the express protection of truth. After a provision against unlawful and forcible combination, the law provided a protection to the Government, by guarding it from the consequences of false and malicious defamation.

He would ask gentlemen to consider candidly whether, if the establishment of an oligarchy, of a monarchy, or of an aristocracy, was desired in this country, how the object could be more easily attained than by beginning with undermining the Government; and how could the Government be undermined but by removing, by every possible manœuvre, the public confidence from that Government? Would not prudence dictate to such characters to bring the Government into contempt? This was too plain to be answered negatively; it must be answered affirmatively. If these efforts then might produce such a result, or if such measures could lead to it, would it not be highly unbecoming those whose duty it was to watch and repel every avenue and attempt that could possibly tend to such an event, not to support the authorities of the country by using every effort to the destruction of such measures? Most undoubtedly so. He contended that it was a most important duty, without the performance of which the House of Representatives would be traitors to that people whose good ought to rest upon the heart of every man, and whose interest could never be more faithfully effectuated than in the perpetuating of a law which would effectually go to protect the Government of their choice.

He was surprised at his colleague's objection, and that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when it was made so evidently to appear by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. DENNIS) that such a protection was afforded by their own State constitution and law! This truth was too strong to be resisted. He believed it to be the case in almost every State. And if so in the individual States, why should not so valuable a remedy be afforded to the Government of the Union? This was the charter of our venerable sires, and what principle should withhold this disposition from their enlightened and experienced sons? Why should that be denied to the supreme Government which every member of the House, and which every individual in the Union, enjoyed? Why should gentlemen deny that to the Federal Government which was granted to the separate Governments?

There was, however, Mr. L. said, a point of view which this subject assumed to him of a very important nature, and which he had not heard from any gentleman. Unless this deluge of falsehood and defamation was impeded in its course, or prevented by wholesome and timely provisions, the confidence of the people is removed, and even beyond possibility of relief; that fatal blow once given to the confidence of the people, all efforts to re-establish that confidence is in vain.

But gentlemen say that unless this law is suffered to fall, you resist the voice of the people. How do they estimate this fact? In whatever way the voice of the people has been heard on that subject, it is in favor of the law; for expression of the public approbation has been experienced in the re-election of men whose principles are in perfect accordance with those who first enacted it. Added to this, has not Virginia, after expressing her pointed disapprobation of this measure, submitted her arguments and her definitive vote to all her sister States; and out of them how many were there found to approve of her measures? Very few, indeed. He believed out of the sixteen, not more than two or three!

Mr. L. could not but admire the soothing manner in which his colleague consoled the House on the change of politics that was about to take place. For the first time since he had the honor of a seat in the House, had he heard such harmonious and highly grateful accents drop from the lips of that gentleman. As this measure would, most undoubtedly, tend to increase and establish the happiness and security of the Government, and all its well disposed citizens, he hoped that gentleman's harmonious disposition would let us be so for life, and retain to the Government their wonted protection, notwithstanding the change of men and politics. Whosoever of the two great characters should direct the helm of our State vessel—whether he be taken from the South, or whether from the fertile fields of the Hudson—he would be willing to give him all the opportunity of tranquillity, so sweetly promised by his honorable colleague.

But how short lived were these pleasing accents! How soon did we hear from the associates of that gentleman the most poignant anathemas against the Judiciary of our country? Such as could scarcely be thought possible to escape their lips against men who have no opportunity of vindicating themselves! Where are vanished those pleasing forebodings of political happiness? Is it the way to make the people happy to depict the supreme Judiciary of our country—men who hold their offices, not for a day, not during Executive pleasure, but for life—to depict those men in colors so unworthy their high characters! But certain he was that the gentlemen were incorrect in their opinions. Was he not well assured that they were in an error, and believed with them that the Judiciary were partial and corrupt, his duty would excite him to join them; not perhaps in attacking men who were not able to answer in the House, but in taking measures whereby a full and fair examination should be had. This he knew to be the mode which true candor would point out.

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

True it was that a great change had been made in the direction of our affairs; he did hope (though he did not believe) this change would be productive of much good to the people. Believing that this law would be a protection to the Administration in the ways of truth and virtue—wishing to do unto others as he desired they should do unto him—how could gentlemen on the other side suppose that they would violate their principles of honor and integrity so much as to depart from a system they had raised for themselves? What better attachment could be displayed than to afford the future Administration the same aid which was afforded to one more peculiarly approved of by a majority of the present House?

Mr. L. concluded by expressing a most sincere hope that the success under the operation of this law, and a full satisfaction of its being strictly Constitutional, in the opinion of the judges, which our Government stamped with its authority, might operate to continue to the Government every necessary protection, and evince to the world that the political setting of the Federal side of the House was as bright as its rising, and their last acts devoted to the public good.

Mr. MACON said, no member of the House was more willing than himself that the question should have been taken without debate; but, since gentlemen who differed with him in opinion had chosen to discuss it, he should not shrink from it; especially as, he firmly believed, he had both the Constitution and truth on his side.

It was a little curious to observe the manner in which those who approved the law, changed the ground on which they defended it at different times. It originated in the days of alarm, and was then supported as a part of a system of defence against France; at that time this common law of the United States, of which we now hear so much, was not talked of. The second time it was before the House, it was brought up by many petitions from the people in different States, praying for its repeal; then, too, it was considered as a part of the system of defence, and, as the dispute with France was not settled, it was said to be improper to repeal it. At the last session, when a motion was made to repeal the second section of the act, the law was then supported on this reason, to prevent the operation of the common law, and to afford the gentlemen themselves the liberty of expressing their sentiments, if founded in truth, and expressed with decency; and so it is that the friends of order and good government now want the Sedition law to protect themselves.

If the common law is actually in force, it is rather extraordinary that gentlemen will not make the law uniform, so as to comprehend all the cases of libels which it is pretended would be cognizable in the Federal courts under that law, if this was not in force. A libel upon the President of the United States, the Senate, or this House, is not to be actionable at common law; but suppose a person to libel the Supreme Court of the United States, he is not to be punished under this act, but at common law. A court can as easily be libelled as any department of the Government; where, then, is the necessity or reason for inflicting the punishments for the same crime, under two laws, so different, if the common law is really in force in the United States?

It has been said, by publishing calumny and falsehood, Government may be destroyed. This Mr. MACON did not believe, nor did he believe that ever a Government was destroyed or a revolution brought about by such means. Falsehood cannot make a good administration bad, or a bad administration good. No administration need ever fear false publications, it can always destroy their effects whenever it pleases by publishing the truth, and truth alone can destroy Governments; nor need any administration fear anything but the truth. Was our Revolution brought about by the publication of a falsehood? No, sir, it was not; it was by publishing and proclaiming the truth. As to the execution of the law, it would be needless to state the facts which have been stated by others; he would only say that, in his opinion, it was worse than the law itself, which he had always believed to be unconstitutional; and there was no doubt but the execution was as unpopular as the law.

It has been said, owing to the prevalence of crimes, which this law is intended to punish, that men grown grey in the service of their country, had been turned out of office. Mr. M. knew of no man that had been turned out of office, except it was done according to the Constitution, or a law made in conformity to it. What, sir, was this law made and is it now wished to be continued in force, to prevent the freedom of elections! If this is not the plain result of the idea, I am at a loss to know what it does mean. Are not our elections to be free? Have we not a right to investigate the characters of those who are candidates for our suffrages? Are not these our Constitutional rights as freemen? Why then do gentlemen wish to continue this law in force to deprive the people of their dearest rights? Surely if men are not approved, after they have been tried, they ought to be turned out of office; the end of elections is choice. But we have been told, to induce us to continue this law, that the illustrious WASHINGTON had been called a speculator and a murderer. Mr. M. never heard of the first charge before this day, nor of the second till within a few days past, and that, too, was in this House. He had no doubt but the gentlemen had heard what they asserted, nor had he any doubt but the person who first pronounced the report knew it was not true; and its circulation must have been very confined indeed, and so it will be with all such reports.

Mr. M. said he saw no necessity for this law; a good character does not want its support, and a bad character does not deserve help. He believed the Senate would not agree to renew this law for themselves; no future President, he expected, would wish it for himself; what, then, do we want it for ourselves? No gentleman will say that he wished a sedition law to stop the people's mouth about him, or anything he should do in this House. The gentlemen who support this act, have always told us that their actions were founded on such principles, that they should never be ashamed of them anywhere. Let us be free to act for the good of the people, and let the people be equally free to examine our conduct in any manner they may think proper. Gentlemen do not mean to do any act which should make this law necessary; why then continue it in force? We have been told by a gentleman that he heretofore voted for this law, and that therefore he should vote for it again. Surely there cannot be a worse reason for a vote than this; it goes on the principle of never changing, and if a law be once passed, it must remain a law forever. The same gentleman once voted for an army, yet we found him ready, on a fit occasion, to vote for the discharge of that army, and that army too was considered a part of the system of defence; if the army could be spared from the general system formerly adopted, there certainly could be no necessity for this law, at this time, unless indeed it is now wanted for some other purpose than formerly. The same reason ought to have continued the army; but as the army was disbanded, when the necessity ceased for which it was raised, and the system of defence broken, why then should the law be continued as a part of that system, when there was no occasion for it?

It has been said, that a part of this House are always crying out against the unconstitutionality of every act they do not approve. The answer to this is very easy. There is another part of the House that never questions the constitutionality of anything; and if one part questions the constitutionality of everything, the other does not of anything; one side believes it has limits, the other believes it has no limits.

Mr. M. observed, as to what had been said on the subject of juries, he would only say, that no Federal jury had ever been got in the State in which he lived, in the same manner that jurors were obtained for the State courts; perhaps it was impossible, under present circumstances, because all the jurors for both superior and inferior courts were appointed by the county courts and then summoned by the sheriff of the county. The Federal court, he believed, in that State, generally determined from which counties the jurors should be summoned, and left it to the discretion of the marshal to summon whom he pleased. The marshal is appointed by the President; in States where he summons whom he pleases for jurors, it is most probable they will all be of one party.

Another reason had been urged for continuing this law in force, which is this, that it was believed there were newspapers in this country under the influence of a foreign Power. Whether this was a fact or not, he did not know; but he well recollected that not long since there was a press in the United States, which was pretty much caressed, the editor of which was a foreigner, who gloried in being the subject of a foreign Prince; the contents of his paper are not yet forgotten, and, strange to tell, he never heard that this law had been put in operation against that person.

It is not pretended that the next President, let him be who he may, will want this law. No action for a libel has ever been brought at common law in the Federal courts; the reason was obvious, the States as united have no such law, whatever they may have in their individual character. Without this act, or the operation of the common law, we had flourished for many years. The law would hereafter be useless, it was unpopular and believed to be unconstitutional. It would increase rather than lessen party spirit, and it ought to be the object of all to harmonize as much as possible. He therefore trusted that the law would be suffered to expire, never again to be renewed.

Mr. DENNIS.—Like the gentleman from North Carolina, who has this moment resumed his seat, I was one of those who were satisfied to have taken a silent vote on the question before us; and on yesterday voted against the rising of the Committee, in order that a definitive decision might have taken place; but since the gentlemen opposed to the continuance of the law have determined to protract the debate, and since it is probable this day will be consumed in the discussion, I shall claim the indulgence of the Committee, whilst I submit some sentiments on the occasion. During this discussion, I have remarked that observations on the constitutionality of the law have generally been avoided, yet that some objections have been interspersed of that nature among the arguments against its expediency; while, therefore, I do not intend an analytical review of all the opinions which have hitherto been advanced, either in favor of or against its constitutionality, the remarks which I shall make will occasionally apply as well to the one as to the other. Those gentlemen who have distinguished themselves by their opposition to this law, have laid down the following standard by which to test the extent of Congressional power relative to this subject: First. That Congress can exercise no powers but such as are specifically delegated by the Constitution, or such as are incidental and necessary to the execution of those specific powers. Secondly. Admitting Congress to have originally possessed the power of passing laws similar to the present, they have been restricted therefrom by the prohibitory amendment of the Constitution, which, among other things, declares that Congress shall pass no law abridging the liberty of the press. In relation to the first branch of the subject, even the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. GALLATIN,) does not insist that there exists in us no such thing as incidental power, nor does he contend that we can exercise no power but such as we can find expressly mentioned in the Constitution; but while he admits the existence of incidental authority, he requires that we shall demonstrate the impossibility of preserving the Government, or giving efficacy to those duties which it is enjoined upon us to perform, without exercising the power in the present instance. And how will this gentlemen expect this to be proved? Are we to prove it by actual experiment? Are we to sit still and suffer the Government to be subverted, in order that we may experimentally prove the powers we may exercise, in order to preserve it? Doctrines similar to these were inculcated with considerable gravity during the first insurrection in Pennsylvania. It was then contended that the President could not call out the militia to suppress the insurrection, until it should be fully proved by actual experiment that the ordinary powers of the Judiciary were incompetent to suppress it. That is, that although it was evident, from the number and the preparations for resistance by the insurgents, they could not be subjected to the ordinary powers of the Judiciary, yet the militia could not be drawn out until the marshal and his posse comitatus had been first murdered or imprisoned. This sophistry, however, did not then pass for argument, and I hope will not in the case before us. To candid minds it would seem sufficient to show, that the publication of false, scandalous, and malicious matter against the Government, in its immediate consequences, tends to produce insurrection and a total disrespect for its authority; and that, without the power of preventing these, no Government can exist. And will it, sir, be contended that such publications have not this effect? Let me suppose Congress to have passed some important law, which should peculiarly interest the people and meet the disapprobation of certain sections of the Union; and let me suppose a printer, in order to increase their discontents, to publish a very circumstantial, but false and malicious account of his having evidence that such law was passed by the bribery and corruption of a certain foreign Minister, mentioning the sum which each member had received; would not the law, in case these reports were credited, be resisted in its execution? Yes, a high-minded Republican people would and ought to resist it, while under such impressions. Sir, there is no crime which will not be sanctioned by this new doctrine of the liberty of the press: Treason itself may be committed with impunity, if such principles be established. According to the construction which by some is affixed to the amendment to the Constitution, Congress can make no law in any manner affecting the press, because they say every such law must amount to an abridgment thereof. Let me suppose our country at war, and a hostile fleet upon our coast, and that a number of hand-bills be printed and circulated in this fleet, giving particular information of the most vulnerable part of our territory, and of the deposits of our military stores; this, if done by letter, or verbally, would amount to treason, yet if the press be inviolable to the extent contended for, no punishment could reach the crime. It has been frequently remarked, that there exist in a statutory code a number of crimes, the power of creating which rests upon precisely the same basis as the law which is the subject of discussion; and yet no objections have ever been made to their constitutionality. Such are the crimes of perjury, bribery, falsifying the public records, and misprision of treason; for creating these crimes no express provision is made in the Constitution; and if we were, agreeably to the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, obliged to show, in the manner he contends for, that without such laws our Government could not be preserved, we should be obliged to yield the point of their unconstitutionality.

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

I shall now proceed to examine this law, as it is supposed to be prohibited by the 3d amendment to the Constitution, which stipulates against abridging the freedom of the press; and believing it to have grown into a maxim with many gentlemen of this Committee, that the State of Virginia can do no wrong, and that the seal of infallibility is stamped upon her Legislative acts, I shall bring into view a clause in her Declaration of Rights on the subject of the press, and certain Legislative acts, and then compare both with the 3d amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the law now under consideration; and if it shall be found that the Declaration of Rights of Virginia has provided as strongly for the liberty of the press as the amendment to the Federal Constitution, and that certain Legislative acts of that State have gone as far to punish its licentiousness, as the law now proposed to be continued, it will then be proper to inquire, what are the exclusive prerogatives which have absolved their Legislature from the obligation to which they have so strenuously contended, the Legislature of the Union are bound to yield obedience? And in answer to their representations, we may say, take the beam out of your own eyes, before you undertake to pluck the mote out of ours. By the 12th article of the Declaration of Rights of Virginia, it is provided: "That the liberty of the press is one of the great bulwarks of liberty, and can never be restrained but by despotic Governments." It is believed that this expression does not substantially vary from the amendment of the Constitution, which says, among other things, "that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." By an act of Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia, passed in 1775, it is provided as follows:

"SEC. 1. Whereas, at the present time of danger, the safety of the people more especially requires that all persons who are so wicked as to devise the destruction of good government, or to obstruct the operations of the laws, should suffer punishments suitable to their crimes;

"Be it therefore enacted, &c., That if any person residing or being within the Commonwealth, shall, from and after the publication hereof, by any word, open deed, or act, advisedly and willingly maintain and defend the authority, jurisdiction, or power of the King and Parliament of Great Britain, heretofore claimed or exercised within this Colony, or shall attribute any such authority, jurisdiction, or power, to the King or Parliament of Great Britain, the person so offending being legally convicted thereof, shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, to be ascertained by a jury, so that the fine exceed not the sum of twenty thousand pounds, nor the imprisonment the term of five years.

"SEC. 2. And be it enacted, &c., That any person who shall maliciously, or advisedly, endeavor to excite

JANUARY, 1801.

Sedition Act.

H. OF R.

the people to resist the government of this Commonwealth, as by law is established, or to persuade them to return to a dependence upon the Crown of Great Britain, or who shall maliciously or advisedly terrify and discourage the people from enlisting in the service of the Commonwealth, or dispose them to favor the enemy, every person so offending, and being legally convicted thereof, shall be punished with fine and imprisonment as aforesaid."

It is not my intention to comment at large on this law, but have stated it as a fact upon which each member of the Committee will indulge his own sentiments and opinions. I will, however, state that this act goes further than the act of Congress; since it not only punishes libellous publications, but also inflicts a punishment far exceeding that contained in the Sedition act, for verbal communications, and touches not only the liberty of the press, but the liberty of speech likewise. If the high sentiments of liberty, which animated the people of Virginia, during our Revolution, did not induce them to believe that when their Legislature had provided for the punishment of slanderous, libellous, and malicious publications against their Government, their liberties were thereby destroyed, I flatter myself that these same people, with their fellow-citizens of the United States, will not now be duped into the opinion that an act of Congress, which punishes such false, scandalous, and malicious publications against their Government, with an intent to vilify, degrade, and subvert its authority, is tyrannical and oppressive.

By another act of the Assembly of Virginia, originally passed 1661, and re-enacted in 1792, entitled "An act against divulgers of false news," it is provided as follows:

"Whereas many idle and busy-headed people do forge and divulge false rumors and reports:

"Be it therefore enacted, &c., That what person or persons soever, shall forge or divulge false rumors or reports, tending to the trouble of the country, he shall be, by the next justice of the peace, sent for and bound over to the next county court, where, if he produce not his author, he shall be fined two thousand pounds of tobacco, (or less, if the court think proper to lessen it,) and besides give bond for his behaviour, if it appear to the court that he did maliciously publish or invent it."

By another act of the same State, passed in 1785, entitled "An act punishing certain offences and vesting the Governor with certain powers," in the third section, it is enacted, "that every person who shall attempt to establish such Government, (meaning a division of Virginia, and the establishment of another State therein,) by any other means than with the assent of the Legislature of this Commonwealth, and in pursuance of such attempts, shall join with another person or persons in any overt act for promoting such attempts, or who shall, by writing or advisedly speaking, endeavor to instigate the people of this Commonwealth to erect or establish such Government, without such assent as aforesaid, shall be adjudged guilty of a high crime or misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be subject to such pains and penalties, not extending to life or member, as

'the court before whom the conviction shall be, shall adjudge."

Such, sir, are the Legislative acts, and such the Bill of Rights of the State of Virginia. Perhaps the gentlemen in the opposition may yield to these high authorities, when reason and argument have ceased to operate. There is no man who will contend, that if the Sedition act be a violation of the amendment of the Constitution, these several acts of the Virginia Assembly are not equally infractions of their Bill of Rights. But it is my opinion that, in the formation of these laws, neither the one nor the other have transcended the limits of their respective charters. But these acts of Virginia prove, as far as any Legislative interpretation can prove, that, by the term liberty of the press, is not to be understood an entire exemption from all responsibility for slanderous and libellous publications, and perfectly confirm the idea annexed to it by the friends to the act in question. If, however, it may be found that these authorities have no influence on our opponents, let me resort to the opinions of certain great and prominent characters, who concentrate, perhaps, more than any others, the confidence and attachment of the citizens of Virginia, and to whose political opinions, on all other occasions, these gentlemen have yielded a ready obedience. Soon after the Declaration of Independence, the State of Virginia, finding it necessary to change her laws so as to adapt them to the new political situation which she had assumed, appointed a committee with plenary powers to that effect; among these gentlemen were the present Chancellor of the State, (Mr. Whyte,) the President of the Court of Appeals, (Mr. Pendleton,) and the now Vice President of the United States, who entered upon the duties assigned them; and among a great variety of bills which they presented, was one entitled an act regulating proceedings in the courts of common law, in which is contained the following clause:

"In an indictment or information for a libel, the defendant may plead a justification, and if the jury find the fact contained in the libel to be true, he shall be acquitted."

In the draught of a Constitution, which was prepared by Mr. Jefferson, to be submitted to a Convention intended to be called by the State of Virginia, in 1783, are the following expressions:

"Printing presses shall be subject to no other restraints than to liahleness for false facts printed and published."

It will be recollected that, at the time of the ratification of the Federal Constitution, Mr. Jefferson was our Minister in France; on being informed of its ratification, in a letter to his correspondent here, dated Paris, July 31, 1788, after expressing his satisfaction at the event, he proceeds to give his opinion in favor of adding to the Constitution a Bill of Rights, and, among others, of stipulating for the freedom of the press. In this letter are contained these expressions:

"A declaration that the Federal Government will never restrain the presses from printing what they please, will not take away the liability of printers for false facts printed. The declaration that religious faith shall be unpunished does not give impunity to criminal acts, dictated by religious error."

H. OF R.

Sedition Act.

JANUARY, 1801.

After the third amendment before mentioned, in relation to the press, was proposed to be added to the Constitution, and sent by his correspondent to Mr. Jefferson, in a letter dated Paris, August 28, 1789, Mr. Jefferson says:

"I like it as far as it goes, but I should be for going further; for instance, the following alterations and additions would have pleased me: Article 4. 'The people shall not be deprived of the right to speak, to write, or otherwise publish anything but false facts, affecting injuriously the life, liberty, property, or reputation of others, or affecting the peace of the Confederacy with foreign nations.'"

[Here Mr. NICHOLAS interrupted Mr. DENNIS, by asking him the title of the book from which he read the above extracts.]

Mr. DENNIS replied that the book which he held in his hand was a collection of the publications on the Alien and Sedition law, and that the above extracts were taken from one of the pamphlets composing the collection, published at Richmond, in 1798. That, with respect to the authenticity of the extracts, he (Mr. D.) had compared them with the publication of Mr. Jefferson's letters, which appeared in Freneau's Gazette, in 1791, and which were then published by Mr. Jefferson's friend, in order to vindicate him against charges of hostility to the Federal Government, and he knew them to be correct.

Mr. D. then proceeded: Such, Mr. Chairman, are the opinions of these learned jurists, of these enlightened expositors of political law. Very different, indeed, from this new doctrine, that it is impossible to restrain the licentiousness, without destroying the liberty of the press. These gentlemen have everywhere discriminated between them, and Mr. Jefferson's letters admit all that is contended for by us. They clearly admit that, before the amendment was superadded to the Constitution, Congress had the power of legislating relative to the press, and that after the amendment was adopted, although they were very properly deprived of the power of imposing previous restrictions thereon, they have a right to punish the authors of false and malicious publications. These documents prove to me, too, that the opposition to this law has not been so much the result of a sense of its unconstitutionality or inexpediency, as of the conviction, that it would be a powerful weapon in the hands of a party whereby to combat their political opponents.

Having said thus much relative to Virginia, forasmuch as the most general opposition to this act has proceeded from thence and the State of Pennsylvania, I shall now claim the attention of the Committee to the 7th section of the 9th article of the constitution of the latter State, which is in these words:

"That the printing presses shall be free to every person, who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the Legislature, or any branch of Government; and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man; and every citizen may freely speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. In prosecutions for the publication of papers, investigating the official conduct of officers, or men in public capacity, or where the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence. And in all indictments for libels, the jury shall have a right to determine the law and the facts under the direction of the courts in other cases."

Does this article comport with the arguments so much insisted on, in the course of this discussion, that it is in vain that we attempt to distinguish between the liberty and licentiousness of the press? It was not from a representative of Pennsylvania, (Mr. GALLATIN) that I expected such declarations; because, in making them, he sets his own wisdom above the wisdom of the constitution of his State. That constitution emphatically declares the liberty of the press to be among the palladia of the most important rights of its citizens, but at the same time explains itself by declaring, that it does not mean to tolerate every species of licentious abuse and defamation, either of a private citizen, or of a man in his official station. There is one more topic in relation to the State of Pennsylvania, upon which I wish to revive the recollection of the Committee; and this is upon the charge delivered by the then Chief Justice of that State, to the Grand Jury, relative to a supposed libel, by William Cobbett, on the memory of Doctor Franklin and His Spanish Majesty's Minister. In this charge there was a very able and elaborate dissertation on the liberty of the press, which, he informed the jury, by no means implied an exemption from punishment for the propagating of falsehood; and he concurred with Justice Blackstone and other elementary writers, that to punish the licentiousness was essential to the liberty of the press. He therein most pathetically deplored the unbounded licentiousness of the American press, which far exceeded that of any other nation; that neither the innocence of youth nor the well-earned reputation of a life devoted to virtue and public service, nor the peace of families, were unassailed by the unprincipled and slanderous publications issuing daily from the press. Now, this same gentleman has since been promoted to the chief executive magistracy of the State, by those very characters who have been so clamorous against this law. Hence I infer, either they have not duly attended to its contents, or that since the exhibition of their petitions against it there has been a revolution in their opinions, and therefore shall deny the fact which has been assumed, that there is a majority of them, or of the people of the United States, opposed to the act. After all, Mr. Chairman, I must believe that this right, claimed so loudly on behalf of the people, is intended only for the security of a few renegades, who have gotten our presses into their hands, and who only expect to make the impressions which they wish for through the medium of falsehood and malignity. I never can believe that the people of the United States can connive at such publications, against a Government which has been.

erected by their own hands and with which they are themselves perfectly assimilated in interests, and which cannot be aspersed without participating of such aspersion themselves. Nor can I believe that the people of Pennsylvania will think it a high crime to libel the memory of Dr. Franklin or the Minister of a foreign Potentate, and no crime to vilify and degrade the Government of the United States. Whilst every other man, however exalted his rank or station may be, is amenable to the law, shall the printers and authors of false and malicious publications alone be irresponsible? These characters are the authors of insurrections; the President may call out the militia to suppress them, and the deluded victims are to be brought to punishment, whilst the authors of slanderous publications, who have caused the mischief, rest in perfect security, surrounded by the inviolability of the press. I will, Mr. Chairman, no longer trespass on the patience of the Committee; my principal object was to bring into view the different documents to which I have referred, with the hope that they might have some influence upon some gentlemen of the Committee, or at least render them less positive in their opposition than they heretofore have been.

Mr. LYON.—In the course of the debate on the present motion my condemnation and imprisonment have been introduced by a gentleman whom I highly respect, but without many of the agitations which belonged to that very extraordinary case. A number of gentlemen have told the Committee that they would avoid the discussion of my case in compliment to my feelings—every one of whom, except the gentleman from South Carolina, have done their utmost to wound those feelings. But I can tell those gentlemen it is now too late; I do not thank them for their pretended tenderness; they have heretofore lacerated those feelings by their irritating and abusive language, until I have become perfectly callous to anything that can come from that quarter. I do not think by any means that they should go round my case out of delicacy to me—rather let them defend the indicting me under the Sedition law, for writing and publishing a letter, dated the 20th June, and sent about that time by me to the post office of Philadelphia, which carried the post marks of Philadelphia, July 7th, seven days before the law passed! Let them defend the Judge who refused me a challenge of the jurors, and falsely told me that in a similar case I should not be entitled to a challenge on the jury in the courts of the State where I then lived. This, I say, was false, because there is in Vermont, among the criminal code, a law against defaming courts, &c., which allows the defendant to challenge six of the jury-list without showing any cause! Let them defend the Judge in charging the jury to find me guilty of malicious intentions, on the ground of my known political principles; my opposition in Congress to the Executive, where there was no proof whatever against me of such principles. Here permit me to observe that those who are opposed to the new Administration, have more faith than I have in the Judges, with respect to their attachment to the party they belong to: for my part, after the change in the Administration, in case the law is continued, I have no doubt but Judges may be found who would charge the jury, as in my case, to look to the political principles and conduct of the defendant, and so turn the tables upon them. Had I, therefore, a wish for revenge, I would vote for the bill. I fear no danger from it; I have faith in the new Administration; I shall have no desire to write concerning them, and I now reside in a country where there is no danger of political persecution.*

I must now beg leave to refer to the charge for which I suffered. It consisted of three counts; the first, for having maliciously &c., with intent, &c., written at Philadelphia a letter dated the 20th of June, and published the same at Windsor, in the newspaper called the Vermont Journal, containing the words following: "As to the Executive, when I shall see the efforts of that power bent on the promotion of the comfort, the happiness, and the accommodation of the people, that Executive shall have my zealous and uniform support; but whenever I shall, on the part of the Executive, see every consideration of the public welfare swallowed up in a continual grasp for power, in an unbounded thirst for ridiculous pomp, foolish adulation and selfish avarice; when I shall behold men of real merit daily turned out of office, for no other cause but independency of sentiment; when I shall see men of firmness, years, merit, abilities, and experience, discarded in their applications for office, for fear they possess that independence, and men of meanness preferred, for the ease with which they take up and advocate opinions, the consequence of which they know but little of; when I see the sacred name of religion employed as a State engine, to make mankind hate and persecute each other, I shall not be their humble advocate."

The second count consisted of my having maliciously, &c., with intent, &c., published a letter, said to be a letter from a diplomatic character in France, containing two paragraphs in the words following: "The misunderstanding between the two Governments (France and America) has become extremely alarming; confidence is completely destroyed; mistrust, jealousy, and a disposition to wrong attribution of motives, are so apparent as to require the utmost caution in every word and action that are to come from your Executive; I mean if your object is to avoid hostilities. Had this truth been understood with you before the recall of Monroe; before the coming and second coming of Pinckney; had it guided the pens that wrought the bullying speech of your President, and stupid answer of your Senate, at the opening of Congress in November last, I should probably have had no occasion to address you this letter."

"But when we found him borrowing the language of Edmund Burke, and telling the world, that although he should succeed in treating with the French, there was no dependence to be placed in any of their engagements; that their religion and morality were at an end; that they had turned pirates and plunderers, and it would be necessary to be perpetually armed against them, though you were at peace, we wondered that the answer of both Houses had not been an order to send him to a mad-house. Instead of this the Senate have echoed the speech with more servility than ever George the Third experienced from either House of Parliament."

The third count was for aiding and abetting, &c., in publishing the same.

Again. Let those gentlemen justify the Judge in sending a man from the jury, because a creature of a party swore that, at a previous time, he had heard that juror say something like this: that it was his belief that Mr. L. would not be found guilty. This was a man who was summoned through mistake, and without a thorough knowledge of his political principles, and it was necessary to get rid of him some way or other. Let them defend the conduct of the Judge who, in his charge, in order to exasperate the jury against me, descended to degrade his office so much as to tell them I was guilty of forging the writing called "Barlow's letter." "Let," said the Judge, "men of letters read that letter and compare it with Barlow's writings, and they will pronounce it to be none of his!" Let those gentlemen defend the marshal in carrying me, in the most contumelious and degrading manner, upwards of forty miles from the door of the jail of the county where I lived, which is a jail of the United States. Let them defend that marshal for throwing me into a stinking cell of about ten feet by sixteen, the common receptacle of thieves, murderers, and runaway negroes, without anything to keep the cold out where the light came in, and keeping me there four months, nearly one month of which without fire, not having the liberty to procure myself a stove, although in a cold inclement season, whilst the house contained comfortable rooms in plenty, which I could have hired had I been allowed to do it; but he refused notwithstanding my application to him, and the entreaties of several of my friends, offering a security of $100,000 bail for my continuance in the appointed room during the time of my confinement.

Unless gentlemen can defend these things let them speak no more of the superiority of this law over the common law, nor vindicate it upon the limits of its punishment being assigned, the contrary of which I think my experience abundantly proved.

When Mr. LYON had concluded, the question was taken on agreeing to the resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative by the casting vote of the Chairman, the Committee being equally divided. The Committee rose, and reported the resolution as agreed to. The House then took up the resolution as reported, and on the question will the House agree to the same, it was determined in the affirmative by the vote of the Speaker, there being 48 for it and 48 against it, as follows:

MONDAY, January 26.

Several other members, to wit: from Kentucky, JOHN FOWLER; from Virginia, SAMUEL J. CABELL; and from New York, EDWARD LIVINGSTON; appeared and took their seats in the House.

A memorial of sundry freeholders and inhabitants of the town of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, was presented to the House and read, praying that Congress may establish a system of legislation and government for the said District.

Ordered, That the said memorial be referred to the Committee of the whole House to whom is committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia.

A memorial of sundry mechanics and manufacturers of the city of New York was presented to the House and read, praying that the attention of Congress may be directed to the encouragement and support of the manufacturing and mechanic arts within the United States.

Ordered, That the said memorial be referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. NOTT, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to cede to the State of South Carolina certain lands therein mentioned; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, amendments are necessary to be made in the acts for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, and that the said committee have leave to report thereon by bill, or otherwise.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia; and made several amendments thereto: which were agreed to by the House, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

On motion it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire whether it be necessary to ascertain the northwardly boundary line of the tract of land in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, reserved by the State of Virginia for satisfying the bounty rights of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on the Continental establishment, and that the said committee be empowered to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. BIRD, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. VARNUM, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

The House went into a Committee of the whole House on the bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment; and no amendment being made thereto, the bill was ordered to be read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, to whom it was referred to examine and report what laws have expired, or are near expiring, and require to be revived or further continued, made a report, in part; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing the act, entitled "An act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof," passed the twenty-seventh day of February, one thousand eight hundred; and that the said committee be authorized to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Claims, to whom was recommended, on the fifteenth instant, the report of the said committee on the petition of James Clark; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported a resolution thereupon; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petition of the said James Clark cannot be granted.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to allow the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, to and from Philadelphia and Baltimore, by the way of Appoquinimink and Sassafras; and, no amendment being made thereto, it was ordered that the bill be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

TUESDAY, January 27.

An engrossed bill to allow the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, to and from Philadelphia and Baltimore, by the way of Appoqui-nimink and Sassafras, was read the third time, and passed.

An engrossed bill regulating the grants of land appropriated for the refugees from the British provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia was read the third time and passed.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of money made by the Commissioners of the City of Washington; the disposition of public property made by them; and, generally, into all the transactions of the Commissioners which relate to the execution of the trust confided to them by the President of the United States; and that the committee report thereon to the House.

Ordered, That Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. WALN, Mr. SHEAFE, Mr. NOTT, and Mr. HENDERSON, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

On motion of Mr. GREGG, that it be

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act, entitled "An act, supplementary to, and to amend the act, entitled an act to establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and to repeal the law heretofore passed on that subject, so as to admit aliens who were resident within the limits, and under the jurisdiction of the United States, prior to the 29th day of January, 1795, and who have continued to reside as aforesaid, to become citizens of the United States:"

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the resolution reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, that it would be inexpedient to repeal the act, entitled, "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves. This resolution produced a lengthy debate, rather of a desultory nature, in which Messrs. GRISWOLD, BAYARD, DANA, CHAMPLIN, COOPER, NICHOLSON, HARPER, VARNUM, and GALLATIN, took part.

The Committee rose without coming to a decision on this resolution, and were then refused liberty to sit again. A resolution having the repeal of that law for its object was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means with instructions to report a bill for that purpose.

SAMUEL LEWIS.

An engrossed bill to discharge Samuel Lewis, senior, from his imprisonment, was read the third time; and on the question that the same do pass it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 67, nays 13, as follows:

WEDNESDAY, January 28.

Mr. HARPER, from the committee appointed, presented, a bill to amend and to continue in force the act, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States;" which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Friday next.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to consider whether any, and what, alterations are expedient in the rates of estimating foreign coins and currencies; with leave to report by bill, or otherwise.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio; and after considering the same the Committee rose, without coming to a decision, and had leave to sit again.

EXAMINATION OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. OTIS, from the committee to whom was referred, on the 25th of November last, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, announcing his resignation; which committee was instructed, on the second ultimo, to examine into the state of the Department of the Treasury; into the mode of conducting the business thereof; and into the expenditure of public money; and to report to this House such facts and statements as may conduce to a full understanding of the transactions of the Treasury, since the same has been under the superintendence of the officers now at the head of that Department, made a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the letter from the late Secretary of the Treasury, of the 22d of November last, report:

First: In relation to the general state of the Department, and the mode of directing the business thereof:

On the 22d day of May in the year 1794, a report was made to the House of Representatives, by a committee appointed to examine the state of the Treasury; in which the manner of conducting the business of the Department was detailed with great accuracy, the duties of the various officers and their mutual checks upon each other, explained; and the rules and proceedings observed in the collection, keeping, and disbursement of the public moneys, and in accounting for the same, described with minute precision. It does not appear that any objection has ever been made to the forms of doing business specified in that report, or that the committee, after a most ample and elaborate investigation of the regulations adopted in the Department, entertained doubts of the judicious and competent nature of the arrangement and distribution of the powers and duties of the officers. The attention of the present committee was, in the first instance, occupied in comparing the present forms of proceeding at the Treasury, with those heretofore exhibited; and, upon a careful examination, they are satisfied that, while the principles of that system have been maintained and matured, a close adherence to established usage has been observed; and that the Department itself is so organized by law, and the mode of doing the business is so devised, as to afford the most perfect security to the nation, from the misapplication of the public moneys.

These moneys do not, in any instance, pass through the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury; he merely authorizes the receipts and disbursements, by warrants in favor of and upon the Treasurer. These warrants are all signed by the Secretary, countersigned by the Comptroller, and registered by the Register. The Treasurer is the medium of the receipts and disbursements of the public moneys. Those who collect these moneys can only discharge themselves by warrants in favor of the Treasurer. The Treasurer can only obtain credit for payments from the Treasury by warrants on himself. All moneys received by the Treasurer are deposited by him in the Bank of the United States, and other banks; and the actual amount of moneys in the custody of the Treasurer, may be at any time ascertained, independently of his own returns, by the statements which are constantly made and transmitted to the Secretary, by those who collect and receive public moneys into their custody, in the different parts of the Union. His accounts must be rendered quarterly, and oftener if required, to the Comptroller, and annually to Congress.

Secondly: In relation to receipts and expenditures:

It is the uniform course of business at the Treasury, immediately after the close of each session of Congress, to enter in a book kept for that purpose in the office of the Secretary, the various objects for which appropriations of money have been made by law, and to credit each head with the whole amount of the sums appropriated to it. The same proceeding is observed in the offices of the Comptroller and Register. No disbursements are made by the Treasury, but in pursuance of laws authorizing the expense; and all warrants for the disbursement of moneys are forthwith entered to the debit of their respective heads of appropriation. These books are open to the daily inspection and revision of the officers of the Department; and, by means thereof, the expenditures may be promptly compared with the appropriations. In no instance does it appear to the committee that the expenditures have exceeded the legal appropriations. They have not, however, presumed it to be within the meaning of their instructions, that they should exhibit a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures at the Treasury. For these they refer to the annual and other periodical statements, which are enjoined by law, and which have been regularly submitted to Congress; and, especially, to a report of the committee of the House of Representatives, of the 8th of May last; in which the sum total of the receipts and expenditures of the present Government, from its commencement to the end of the year 1799, is exhibited at one view.

By the constitution of the Treasury Department, the

H. OF R.

Secretary superintends the collection of the revenue, and grants all warrants for moneys issued from the Treasury, in pursuance of appropriations made by law; but he is not responsible for the application of moneys issued from the Treasury for the use of the other Departments. When, for example, appropriations are made for the Departments of State, of War, or of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, as also the Comptroller, are bound to prevent the advances from exceeding the appropriations. The disbursements and application of the moneys so advanced, to the various objects of public service, are necessarily made under the immediate superintendence of the other Departments, subject to a revision and final settlement by the Comptroller of the Treasury. But, from the nature of the public business, it becomes indispensably necessary, in most cases, that advances should precede the services for which the moneys are destined—as these services are of great magnitude, branched out into a variety of details, and performed by numerous agents. It results that while voluminous accounts are in a train of settlement, sums to a great amount must at all times appear debited to individuals, to be accounted for in course, although they are known to have applied the same according to law, and although in many instances they may have exhibited sufficient vouchers for their discharge.

The foregoing inquiries embrace the principal duties of the Secretary of the Treasury; in the discharge of which the Department is regulated by positive laws and established forms. In certain cases, a limited discretion is either given or implied in the nature of transactions performed under his agency. This happened chiefly in three instances: First, in contracts for the loan of money for the public service. Secondly, in providing and remitting to Europe funds for the discharge of the foreign debt. Thirdly, in measures adopted to enforce punctuality on the part of public agents and officers, in the payments of moneys into the Treasury.

First, in regard to loans of money:

On the first of February, 1795, being the day when the late Secretary of the Treasury was commissioned, the temporary loans to the United States by the Bank of the United States and the Bank of New York, exclusive of five hundred thousand dollars in stock, purchased on credit as hereinafter mentioned, amounted to four million nine hundred thousand dollars; at the same time the United States, however, were possessed of five thousand shares of the capital stock of the Bank of the United States, purchased with part of the proceeds of the said loans.

The following loans have been negotiated by the late Secretary:

1. Under the act, entitled "An act for the reimbursement of a loan authorized by the last session of Congress," passed on the 21st day of February, 1795, the sum of eight hundred thousand dollars.

The above loan was obtained of the Bank of the United States, at 6 per cent. interest, and was declared to be repayable by instalments of two hundred thousand dollars each, on the last days of December, in the years 1796, 1797, 1798, and 1799.

2. Under the act, entitled "An act making further appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, and for the support of Government," passed on the third of March, 1795, the sum of five hundred thousand dollars.

3. And under the same act, the further sum of five hundred thousand dollars.

The two last-mentioned loans were obtained of the Bank of the United States, at 6 per cent. interest; on the first, from April 1, 1795, and on the second, from October 1st, 1795, repayable in one year from the dates of the respective advances.

4. Under the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," the sum of five hundred thousand dollars.

The above loan was obtained of the Bank of the United States, at 6 per cent. interest, from January 1, 1796, repayable on or before the 1st of January, 1797.

5. Under the act, entitled "An act making provision for the payment of certain debts of the United States," passed on the 31st of May, 1796, there was obtained on the Bank of New York, at 6 per cent. interest, the sum of three hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

6. Under the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," there was obtained from the Bank of the United States, on the last day of December, 1798, at 6 per cent. interest, repayable on or before the first day of January, 1803, the sum of two hundred thousand dollars.

The six loans above mentioned amount to two millions eight hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

The first loan of eight hundred thousand dollars was negotiated for the purpose of effecting a treaty of peace with Algiers. On the 4th of February, 1795, the subject was submitted to the consideration of Congress, in a Message from the President. This Message was referred to a committee of the House of Representatives, consisting of Mr. Sedgwick, Mr. Madison, Mr. Baldwin, Mr. William Smith, and Mr. Gilcs. The Secretary of the Treasury was desired by the committee to ascertain in what manner the proposed loan could be obtained; and it is stated by him that the specific terms on which the contract was afterwards concluded, were presented to the committee; who, after being informed of causes which rendered any other mode of remitting so considerable a sum to Europe, at that time, either impracticable or highly inexpedient, approved of the proposal of receiving the amount of the desired loan in 6 per cent. stock, and of remitting the same to London to be sold on account of the United States. Being fully apprized of the manner in which the law would be executed, the committee reported certain resolutions on the 9th, which were adopted in a bill by the House of Representatives on the 11th and 12th of February, without opposition.

The House of Messrs. Baring & Co., of London, were, on the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, designated by the then Secretary of State, to negotiate sales of the stock, and hold the proceeds subject to the disposal of the Minister of the United States at Lisbon. The Secretary of the Treasury is considered in no manner responsible for the subsequent disposition of the fund; though, by this remark, the committee do not intend to suggest that the management had been improper; which they have no reason to suspect.

The necessity of negotiating the second and fourth loans, of five hundred thousand dollars each, was evinced by an examination of the state of the Treasury, on the first of April, 1795, and first of January, 1796. The third loan of five hundred thousand dollars, negotiated on the first of October, 1795, appears to have been in like manner justifiable, with this additional circumstance in favor of the transaction, that an equal sum was applied on the same day to the payment of the six per cent. stock purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, and remitted to Amsterdam, under circumstances hereinafter detailed.

Of the loan of three hundred and twenty thousand dollars, obtained of the Bank of New York, the sum of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars was immediately applied to satisfy part of a loan obtained of the Bank of the United States, in the year 1792; the remaining two hundred thousand dollars operated merely as a prolongation of the loan made by the Bank of New York, in the year 1794. The same observation is applicable to the sixth loan of two hundred thousand dollars obtained of the Bank of the United States.

The different capitals of the temporary loans made of the Bank of the United States, were, at the close of the year 1800, reduced to three millions four hundred and forty thousand dollars; at which time the United States remained possessed of two thousand two hundred and twenty shares of the capital stock of the said Bank. The total amount of Dutch debt extinguished since the first day of January, is four millions nine hundred and twenty thousand dollars; and no new foreign debt has been contracted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

In consequence of the failure of the attempt to negotiate sales of six per cent. stock, on terms advantageous to the public, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, with the consent of the President, which was duly obtained, to negotiate sales of a part of the shares of the Bank of the United States, belonging to the United States. In pursuance of which authorities, two thousand seven hundred and eighty shares were sold for one million three hundred and eighty-four thousand two hundred and sixty dollars; which sum was applied towards satisfying the demands of the Banks, and the proceedings duly reported to Congress, according to law.

The foregoing representation contains a detail of all the loans which were negotiated by the late Secretary of the Treasury, prior to the year 1799: the causes of which, so far as they produced an increase of debt, existed in the unexpected and pressing expenses of the year 1794, of which the insurrection in Pennsylvania may be considered as the principal; and in the necessity which existed early in the year 1795, of providing a fund for defraying the expenses of effecting a treaty of peace with Algiers; for neither of which objects adequate revenues had been or could be provided.

The only loans negotiated by the present Secretary of the Treasury, which have not been before enumerated, are, a sum of five millions of dollars obtained in 1799, in pursuance of an act passed on the 16th day of July, 1798, entitled "An act to enable the President of the United States to borrow money for the public service," for an equal amount of stock bearing interest at eight per centum per annum, until the last day of December, 1808, and thereafter at like interest, during the pleasure of Congress, until the said stock shall be redeemed: also, a further sum of one million five hundred and sixty-five thousand two hundred and twenty-nine dollars and twenty-four cents, obtained in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the 7th of May, in the year 1800, by the sale of one million four hundred and eighty-one thousand seven hundred dollars of stock, bearing a like interest, and subject to the same terms of reimbursement. The necessity of these loans is well known to have been occasioned by the military and naval preparations lately directed.

tiated have been considered by the committees, and must be familiar to the House. The situation of the country was new and embarrassing; the prospect of a war was threatening; a reliance on public credit was necessary; the aids which could be afforded by the banks were limited, and could only be considered as resources which might be rendered auxiliary to more extensive and permanent negotiations. No loan had been previously negotiated by the Government, of individuals in the United States. A reliance upon loans in foreign countries appeared to be improvident and dangerous, from its tendency to diminish the confidence of the country in its internal resources. The market rate of interest in the United States was known to be at least eight per centum per annum, and it was certain, moreover, that the demand for money, which would be occasioned by a considerable loan, would tend to increase the then common rate of interest.

The first loan of five millions was obtained by subscription, and without attempting to dispose of the stock above par. Under the second contract, the loan may be extended to three millions and an half of dollars, if the Government should have occasion to raise that sum. No more than one million five hundred and sixty-five thousand two hundred and twenty-nine dollars and twenty-four cents, have yet been borrowed; for which the sum of one million four hundred and eighty-one thousand seven hundred dollars in stock, has been issued. No sales have been made for less than five per cent. advance in money, upon the nominal amount of the stock, being the mean value in the market at the time the contract was published. In every instance the most favorable terms for the public were preferred. The highest price offered was eight per cent. advance in money, at which rate only a small amount in stock was issued; and the committee see no reason to doubt that these loans were negotiated upon the best terms that could be procured, and with a laudable view to the public interest.

Secondly: In regard to remittances:

Remittances to the bankers of the United States in Amsterdam, for the purpose of providing for the payment of the principal and interest of the foreign debt, have been effected in the three following modes:

1. By purchasing six per cent. funded stock, and authorizing the banker to sell the same in Europe, on account of the United States.
2. By bills of exchange on Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Hamburg, and London.
3. By contracts with merchants in the United States, for cargoes consisting principally of West India produce, the proceeds of which were directed to be placed to the credit of the United States in Amsterdam.

In relation to the first object, it is observed that the first Secretary of the Treasury, in January, 1795, purchased of the Bank of the United States five hundred thousand dollars of six per cent. stock at par, payable by instalments. The late Secretary of the Treasury purchased in April, 1795, an additional sum of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars of like stock, for which immediate payment was made in money to the Bank of the United States.

In respect to the terms at which the stock was purchased, they were conformable to the current prices of stock at the periods when the purchases were made.

A necessity of purchasing the first-mentioned sum of five hundred thousand dollars on credit, was created by the heavy and unexpected expenses already alluded to. These had greatly exhausted the Treasury and incapacited the Bank from increasing its loans to the Government.

It appears from the correspondence of the Treasury with the bankers in Holland, which the committee have carefully examined, that an expectation was entertained that the stock would be sold at par, including interest; or that the instalment of principal due in Holland, for the payment of which the stock was intended to provide, would be continued on loan by a new contract. Although both of these expectations were disappointed, in consequence of the unfortunate situation of Holland at that time, yet it clearly appears to the committee that every measure within the power of the Secretary was adopted to render the remittance as productive as possible.

The second mode of remittance, in bills of exchange, is that which has most usually been resorted to. The rates of exchange at which bills were purchased, have, it is believed, been the most favorable which circumstances would permit; at no time exceeding forty-two cents per guilder, and frequently for very considerable sums as low as thirty-six cents per guilder. No loss has been sustained by the public except in one instance, of a bill for one hundred and twenty thousand guilders, drawn by Pragers & Co., of Philadelphia, endorsed by Peter Blight, which was purchased by the cashier of the Bank of the United States, at the request of the Secretary, at thirty-six cents per guilder, and remitted in October, 1799. The drawers and endorser of the bill, at the time of the purchase, were in high credit; it is, moreover, stated by the Secretary, as his opinion, that a part of the debt arising from the protest will be eventually secured to the public.

The third mode of remittance, by purchasing the proceeds of cargoes, has been found effectual, and has, in no instance, occasioned any loss to the public. By the terms of the contracts, the public have been secured for all advances, by assignments of the policies of insurance, and by the bonds of the shippers. No commercial risks have ever been assumed by the Government, who have had no concern with the market, paying only for the nett amount passed to their credit. In other words, these shipments have been merely a collateral security for the replacing in foreign countries the advances made by the Treasury.

Thirdly: In regard to provisions made for enforcing punctuality on the part of public agents and receivers:

It is the immediate duty of the Comptroller to superintend the adjustment of the public accounts, and to direct prosecutions for all delinquencies of officers of the revenue, and for debts due to the United States. Though the Secretary, in virtue of his authority as superintendent of the collection of the revenue, would be also responsible for the permission of any negligence or abuse of trust in the officers of the revenue, or receivers of public money, after the same should come to his knowledge. In the collection of an immense revenue, through an extensive country, losses by the fraud, negligence, and insolvency of individuals, are unavoidable.

When the Secretary has obtained and presented to the President the best information in respect to characters recommended by him for appointment to office; when he has established those official forms and checks which are best calculated to convey a true state of the accounts of the public agents, and the money in their hands; when, on just grounds for suspicion of improper management, the Secretary has preferred to the President of the United States his complaints against those who are disqualified for office, and the Comptroller has directed prosecutions for delinquencies, it is conceived that these officers have respectively discharged their duty in this particular. Instances, therefore, might naturally be expected of public defaulters to a very considerable amount, while no blame could attach to these officers of the Treasury. But, on the contrary, if the number of persons of this description, and the amount due from them are found to be comparatively inconsiderable, the inference is fair and plain that due caution has been observed in the appointments and diligence in the superintendence of the subordinate officers.

Upon this subject the committee have been solicitous to acquire such information as might be satisfactory to the House, and having examined the particular cases of delinquency which appear on the books of the Treasury, and the proceedings adopted by the Secretary and Comptroller, respectively, are convinced that the utmost loss arising from the delinquency of those concerned in the collection of the revenue, from duties on imports and tonnage, for six years, will not exceed one hundred thousand dollars; being somewhat less than one-seventh of one per cent. on the whole amount collected and secured.

The loss sustained in the management of the internal revenue, will exceed this ratio; for reasons of which, some are incident to the nature of the duties and mode of collection; and others, which happened at an early period, attributable to the novelty of the system. This loss, by officers commissioned by the President, is estimated at fifteen thousand dollars.

The committee have also examined, with attention, the statements of moneys advanced to individuals on account of current services. This amount is always apparently considerable, and the details are too voluminous to be annexed to this report. No inference can be drawn from them of the balances actually due from the public agents, as the sums advanced always appear to their debit, while the accounts of their expenditures, and their vouchers, which may absorb the whole amount, are either not rendered, or are in a train of settlement in the public offices. It does not appear to the committee that there is any foundation to conjecture that those persons who have been principally entrusted with considerable sums of money, will be found in arrear. The accounts of the late Secretary of State, Secretary of War, and Purveyor of Public Supplies, have been duly exhibited, and are in their course of settlement in the office. These accounts have been so far examined as to satisfy the accounting officers of the Treasury that no balance will be found due from them. On the whole, after such an examination as they have been enabled to make, the committee beg leave to express their opinion that the business of the Treasury Department has been conducted with regularity, fidelity, and a regard to economy. That the disbursements of money have been always made pursuant to law; that every attention consistent with the magnitude and nature of the business has been bestowed in removing delinquents from office; in compelling them to account; in securing moneys due from them, and in preventing an improper and unreasonable accumulation of moneys in the hands of public agents; that the loans effected on account of Government, have been procured on the most advantageous terms for the public; that the most eligible modes of remittance to Europe have been devised; and, generally, that the financial concerns of the country have been left by the late Secretary in a state of good order and prosperity.

THURSDAY, JANUARY, 29.

A resolution in the following words, proposed by Mr. HARPER, was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the act entitled an act to augment the salaries of certain officers therein mentioned, ought to be continued in force."

A petition from sundry merchants of Rhode Island was presented to the House, and, on motion, referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

The following resolution, proposed by Mr. RUTLEDGE, was presented to the House, which, being read, was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report such rules as, in their opinion, are proper to be adopted by this House, to be observed in the election of a President of the United States, whose term is to commence on the fourth day of March next, provided the Electors appointed under the authority of the States have not elected a President for that term."

MINE AND METAL COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to incorporate the persons therein named, and their associates, as a Mine and Metal Company.

A motion was made to strike out the first section of the bill, on the principle that Congress was not authorized by the Constitution of the United States, to grant charters of incorporation. This motion was supported by Messrs. LIVINGSTON and BIRD, and opposed by Messrs. S. SMITH, RUTLEDGE, J. BROWN, and BAYARD. On the question being taken it was determined in the negative.

Sundry amendments were made, which were reported by the Committee, taken up and adopted by the House. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

[During the session of this day, while the House was in Committee of the Whole, a noise was made, by a person in the gallery expressing, in a very loud voice, his approbation of what had been just said by one of the members. By the direction of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gallery was cleared, and the person who had committed the offence was taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Before the House adjourned, a motion was made and carried that the person should be discharged from confinement.]

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30.

A memorial of sundry clerks employed in the different Departments was presented to the House and read, stating the insufficiency of the salaries at present allowed them by law, and praying that the same may be increased, and rendered more adequate to their services.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That, in the event of its appearing upon the counting and ascertaining of the votes given for President and Vice President, according to the mode prescribed by the Constitution, that an equal number of votes have been given for two persons, that as soon as the same shall have been duly declared and entered on the journals of this House, that the Speaker, accompanied by the members of the House, shall return to this Chamber, and shall immediately proceed to choose one of the two candidates for President; and in case, upon the first ballot, there shall not appear to be a majority of the States in favor of one of the candidates, in such case the House shall continue to ballot for President, without interruption by other business, until it shall appear that a President is duly chosen; and, if no such choice should be made upon the first day, the House shall continue to ballot from day to day, till a choice shall be duly made.

Ordered, That the consideration of the said motion be postponed until Monday next.

A petition of Lawrence Erb, late Collector of the Revenue of the United States, within the county of Northampton, in the State of Pennsylvania, was presented to the House and read, praying to be relieved from the confinement to which he is subjected, in consequence of his having converted to his own use moneys which he received as collector as aforesaid, and is unable to refund.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to Mr. ROBERT BROWN, Mr. THATCHER, and Mr. KITCHELL, with instruction to report thereon by bill, or otherwise.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill making the port of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, and the port of New Bedford, in Massachusetts, ports of entry for ships or vessels arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and from places beyond the same.

The bill was reported to the House with amendments, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time on Monday next.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to cede to the State of South Carolina certain lands therein mentioned.

The Committee reported several amendments; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House, and the further consideration of the said bill was postponed until Monday next.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire and report, by bill or otherwise, whether it is expedient so to amend the several acts concerning the naturalization of foreigners in the United States, as to admit to the benefits of the act on that subject, passed January the twenty-ninth, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, all persons whose situation would have enabled them, before the passing of the act of June the eighteenth, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, on the same subject, to make declaration, pursuant to the said act of January the twenty-ninth, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, of their intention to become citizens of the United States, but who omitted to do so, and have constantly been residents of the United States; or to consider and report on the expediency of repealing the said act of June the eighteenth, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight.

Ordered, That Mr. HARPER, Mr. GREGG, Mr.

LIVINGSTON, Mr. DANA, and Mr. EVANS, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

On a motion made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act, passed the eighteenth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend the act, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and to repeal the act heretofore passed on that subject,'" so as to admit aliens who were residents within the State, and under the jurisdiction of the United States, before the twenty-ninth day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, and who have continued to reside as aforesaid, to become citizens of the United States:

Ordered, That the said motion be referred to the committee last appointed.

MINE AND METAL COMPANY.

An engrossed bill to incorporate the persons therein named, and their associates, as a Mine and Metal Company, was read the third time.

Ordered, That the fifth section of the said bill be recommitted to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House, accordingly, resolved itself into the said Committee; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the Committee had had the said fifth section under consideration, and made one amendment thereto; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said amendment to the fifth section be presently engrossed, and read the third time.

The said fifth section, as amended, being then brought in, engrossed, and read the third time, the question was then taken that the House do agree to the said bill as amended, and resolved in the affirmative—yeas 50, nays 44, as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress, for their consideration, a letter from William Thornton, Alexander White, and William Cranch, Esquires, Commissioners of the City of Washington, with a representation of the affairs of the city, made by them to the President of the United States, dated twenty-eighth of January, one thousand eight hundred and one, accompanied with a series of documents marked from A to H, inclusively.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Jan. 30, 1801.

The said Message and papers accompanying the same were read, and ordered to be referred to the committee appointed, on the twenty-seventh instant, to inquire into the expenditure of money made by the Commissioners of the City of Washington; the disposition of public property made by them; and, generally, into all the transactions of the Commissioners which relate to the execution of the trust confided to them by the President of the United States. [See Appendix.]

MONDAY, February 2.

A new member to wit: EBENEZER MATTOON returned to serve as a member of this House for the State of Massachusetts, in the room of Samuel Lyman, who has resigned his seat, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

An engrossed bill making the port of Biddeford and Pepperelborough, and the port of New Bedford, in Massachusetts, ports of entry for ships or vessels arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, and from places beyond the same, was read the third time and passed.

A motion being made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report such rules, as, in their opinion, are proper to be adopted by this House, to be observed in the choice of a President of the United States, whose term is to commence on the fourth day of March next, if, when the votes which have been given by the Electors appointed under the authority of the States shall have been counted, as prescribed by the Constitution, it shall appear that no person for whom the Electors shall have voted, has a majority, or that more than one person, having such majority, have an equal number of votes:

Ordered, That Mr. RUTLEDGE, Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. MACON, Mr. BAYARD, Mr. TALIAFERRO, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. CLAIBORNE, Mr. OTIS, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. MORRIS, Mr. CHAMPLIN, Mr. BAER, Mr. COOPER, Mr. LINN, and Mr. WOODS, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

Ordered, That the motion made on Friday last relative to the mode of commencing and continuing the ballot for the choice of a President of the United States, be referred to the committee last appointed.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented a bill to amend an act, entitled "An act to retain a further sum on drawbacks, for the expenses incident to the allowance and payment thereof, and in lieu of stamp duties on debentures;" which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the last mentioned committee, presented, a bill to amend an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage;" which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREGG observed that a report had gone abroad, which he believed to be true, that a number of very valuable and important books and papers belonging to the Departments of War and of the Treasury had lately been destroyed by a fire, which unfortunately had quite ruined one of the houses, and greatly injured the other, in which these offices were kept. It appeared to him highly necessary and proper, that Congress should know, as far as it could be ascertained, the extent of that destruction; and how the settlement of public accounts would be affected thereby. He believed the best method of obtaining this information, would be to call on the Heads of these Departments for an official statement of the knowledge they have, or may be able to acquire on the subject. For this purpose he would move a resolution in the following words:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of War and of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House such information as may be in their power, in relation to the destruction of official books and papers, in their respective departments, by fire; designating particularly what description of books and papers were lost, and what the probable effect of such loss will be, in the adjustment of the unsettled accounts of the United States.

The motion was carried.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the government of the District of Columbia. While the question was being taken for the House to resolve itself into a Committee, Mr. SMILIE rose and moved the postponement of this order till the third day of March next. He made this motion, he said, in order to try the sense of the House, whether they were determined to assume the jurisdiction or not. He hoped it would not, and was proceeding to show his reasons, when

The SPEAKER reminded him of the order of the House. He could not be permitted to discuss the merits of the bill under this motion.

Mr. SMILIE conceived the question to affect the bill generally, and simply to be, whether the House would agree to disfranchise some thousands of persons of their political rights, which they now enjoyed. If this was not considered an object of importance enough to command attention, he must confess other gentlemen saw it in a very different light from that in which he viewed it. By the passage of this bill, the people of the District would be reduced to the state of subjects, and deprived of their political rights, and he very much doubted whether not of their civil rights also. If, indeed, there was such an imperious necessity of assuming the jurisdiction, of which he was by no means convinced, then it must be done; but, if that great and immediate necessity did not exist, why should this privation of rights take place? If it was necessary to reduce the City of Washington to a state of local government by an incorporation, he contended that act could be done by the State Legislature; as he did not conceive the local demands of the people called for it, as they could want no such assumption as the bill contemplated, and as he could perceive no advantage to be derived to the General Government thereby, and as the assumption would eventually injure the people, he trusted it would be postponed, at least.

Mr. RUTLEDGE said, he had always uniformly opposed any motion for postponing a bill the consideration of which the House had not gone into. Although it might be in order, it could not be perfectly fair, from various considerations; if, however, it were only from its tendency to preclude the investigation of the bill, it were sufficient. The gentleman had stated it not to be necessary. Who are to judge? Most assuredly the people belonging to the Territory. And what have they said? Why, sir, they have prayed the House to assume the jurisdiction. From this petition the subject was referred to a committee, and this committee have reported a bill, and a bill well discussed and well matured in its detail. To refuse this bill, from a diversity of sentiment, would be to insult the committee and to insult the people of the Territory. If the gentleman wishes to please the people, why does he not suffer the consideration of the bill to proceed, and afford his aid in making it what he supposes their desires would concur in? Perhaps the gentleman had not read the bill. Mr. R. said, if he had not, how was he to know whether it was good or bad? Something must be done. He wished to get at that something, but was precluded by the motion. It certainly became the gentleman to show how this bill would operate injuriously upon the people, as a reason for his motion. Disfranchisement, to be sure, had been mentioned as the result of this bill; but how was the House to know that would be its tendency, except by going into its investigation?

Mr. CRAIK, also, considered this order of the House as the most unfair one among the rules of the House. However, it must be permitted while the order continued. The gentleman had said the people were in a state of vassalage; how was this declaration to be refuted, if the order of the House forbade the investigation into the application of this bill to the liberties of the people? The gentleman further said, that the people did not desire this assumption of jurisdiction. Were he, Mr. C. said, to give an opinion upon the subject, it would be drawn from the same source with that expressed by the gentleman, but of a very different import. He should say, as far as his knowledge of their sentiments extended, and he professed to be pretty well acquainted with their ideas upon this subject, that their feelings, their interests, and their desires, conspired to encourage the assumption, and to prevent the postponement of the subject. As the immediate representative of a large proportion of them, he could say that much uncertainty and disquiet convulsed the minds of many good and wise men among them; that their present uncertainty was truly deplorable; that serious doubts existed with judicious men how far the grants and acceptance of lands, or of their papers, afforded them security for value received; doubts existed, in all their acts of negotiation, whether their respective State laws held any government over them? And this state of insecurity as to their property, could not fail to have an injurious effect. They doubted whether all other jurisdiction did not immediately cease, upon the removal of Congress to the District; and should Congress break up without assuming the jurisdiction, and taking other suitable measures to fix the government, it would not fail to paralyze every exertion and effort toward a successful establishment. No man at present can assure himself of the right by which he holds his property, or remove his apprehensions. They now called loudly upon the National Government to remove from them this state of doubt and uncertainty; this is the object of the bill before the House; by this bill, a variety of inconveniences are removed, and the Government use their effort to make their situation at least more certain; and, he had no doubt, more safe and desirable. This it was incumbent on the Government to do; and this, he trusted, a majority of the House would be disposed to do soon. If the objects or provisions of the bill did not meet that gentleman's desires, he wished an opportunity to hear the objections, to enable him, as far as in his power, to remove them.

Mr. SMILIE was proceeding to show that, at any rate, such a bill as the present ought not to pass, when

The SPEAKER interrupted him, saying that any arguments that went to show that the third day of March was a more proper time than the present for this bill to pass would only be in order.

Mr. SMILIE continued to show the impropriety of the bill, and the inevitable injuries that must be sustained by it, when he was again reminded of the question of order.

Mr. S. proceeded: that it might be the wish of some of the people, he would not say; but he denied that such a wish had been expressed, and therefore it ought not to be considered as correct. As to the question of doubt on the minds of the people, whether or not they held their property secure, not being certain of the existence of their former State laws, he referred to the acts of cession, passed by the States of Maryland and Virginia respectively, the words of which were, that the laws remained in force "until Congress shall by law otherwise provide." Under this express provision, the cession was made by the two States; and by this provision the Government of the United States accepted the grant of the ten miles square. And, therefore, until Congress by law should accept of the jurisdiction and nullify the laws of those States over the District, there could be no doubt but they remained in full force, and property was held as secure under those laws as ever. As he had before observed, he contended that an act of incorporation could be obtained for the City of Washington without this bill. From all these grounds, he believed the bill to be at present unnecessary.

Mr. H. LEE did not wonder at this opposition, considering the quarter from whence it came; perhaps, he said, if he had come from Pennsylvania, the idea of losing the General Government, might instigate him to wish to give the stabbing blow to every act which should go to the establishing of that Government in another place. But, he trusted, as these local reasons could not influence gentlemen from other States, they would not concur in his arguments. He trusted other gentlemen would lay to their hands and join to make this District a settled Government, and go into the examination of the principles proposed to accomplish that measure. He hoped not merely words of kindness escaping from the lips of gentlemen, would be deemed by them sufficient, but that their efforts would be used to produce a well-digested and valuable Government for the security of their civil and political rights.

With respect to the act of cession, he contended that the solemn injunctions of the Constitution were detailed in words upon which the most critical could not find wherewith to hang a doubt. There the Congress of the United States were enjoined to "exercise exclusive jurisdiction." When was this jurisdiction to commence but at the period when the General Government should occupy it? Was not, then, this spot become the permanent seat of the Government of the Union? Were not the different departments, Executive, Legislative, and Judicial, assembled, according to the Constitution, in this District? How, then, could the respective States of Virginia and Maryland a moment longer possess the jurisdiction? It was completely done away, and nothing was now wanting to remove the miserable state of suspense the people now felt, but the declaration of the Government that this was the case; that moment would all their fears be appeased. As a friend to those people, then, as much as that gentleman could be, he hoped an opportunity would be given to examine the bill, not doubting but it would be made to meet the wishes, as he was assured it would be the interest of the people to be governed by it.

Mr. MACON said the motion was perfectly in order, and explained some of the cases for which it was established, as a rule of the House. As to the jurisdiction being assumed by the removal of Congress here, as the gentleman last up had said, were that the case, not only by this bill would it be assumed, but the acts of the two States must have ceased from the day Congress first sat here; a deduction by no means supported. The only evidence the House had of the desire of the people to come specially under the National Government, was a petition from Alexandria, except that the gentleman from the District had learned so among his friends. But did that express the will or wishes of the inhabitants of the surrounding country?

As he believed the laws of the States to be in full force; as he believed they would remain so until otherwise enacted by Congress, and as postponing the bill till the third of March would afford the people a large time to reflect on the subject, and express their will more generally, he hoped the postponement would take place. He would remind the House that this measure, once taken, could not be undone; and, therefore, prudence would dictate that time should be taken to do it well. The act could not be repealed without amending the Constitution. If the gentleman only calculated upon an opposition from Pennsylvania, he was mistaken. Mr. M. presumed that he could not be supposed to have local attachments, residing very far from the former, or the present seat of Government; he was, notwithstanding, opposed to taking up this subject at present, and even during the present session. The delay of acceptance could not displease the inhabitants, if they were satisfied as to the present jurisdiction, which did not, in his opinion, admit of a doubt. It was impossible that the postponement could be attended with any inconvenience; they had been in the same situation for ten years, and wherein could be the inconvenience of their remaining so? Nay, there must be advantages in their usages and customs being continued to them. He wished this matter to be postponed till another session.

Mr. BIRD never could suppose that the members of the Legislature would be satisfied with their removal from a place of accommodation to a wilderness, and with subjecting themselves to the inconveniences of this place, without exercising all the powers entrusted to them, and taking the jurisdiction to the Government, the members and subordinates of which were to subject themselves to the code of laws under which they should place themselves. A motion, therefore, to continue the jurisdiction out of the hands of the Government, much surprised him. All the arguments used by the gentleman in favor of a postponement, would operate fully to the entire abandonment of the subject; and did he suppose that all the expense attending the removal of the whole Government, all the inconvenience experienced would be, or ought to be, borne without the enjoyment of that Constitutional right, nay, injunction, of "exclusive legislation?" What could have been the reason why Congress was to assume this exclusive legislation? Did not the members of the Convention know that a great quantity of public treasure would be drawn together into this place? Did they not suppose it of importance to secure the privileges and rights of foreign Ministers, who would necessarily be brought to reside in this District? Did they not consider the number of persons attached to the Government worthy of the special regard of the National Legislature? Could any gentleman conceive that these were not too great powers to be entrusted to any State whatever? Else why was the provision for exclusive jurisdiction made? To avoid putting those powers into execution, he firmly believed, would be omitting a great and important duty. But, were it not for the words of the Constitution, the words of the acts of cession made by the States were as ample upon the subject as one sovereign Power in the act of granting, and another sovereign Power in the act of receiving a cession, could make. This was precisely the case; the two States made a full and complete cession of the jurisdiction to the General Government, upon the terms of the Constitution, which were to "exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatever, over such District," which had, by the cession of those particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States. How, he would ask gentlemen, could this be granted, and yet retained? It was absurd to suppose a man could grant a piece of land, and by the same instrument retain it.

But suppose this was a doubtful subject, whether or not the laws of the two States were in force in the District; would the gentleman still wish to leave it in doubt? Surely no new laws could be made by those States to affect this District, actually made the seat of Government, and he contended that none of the laws whatever did exist here, and that the power of the civil officers actually had ceased; it therefore required no painting to show that the state of the place was truly deplorable. Would the gentleman yet wish to leave the District without laws, and merely lest it should take away their suffrage? That the people could not be represented in the General Government, Mr. B. admitted. But where was the blame, if any could attach? Certainly not to the men who made the act of cession; not to those who accepted it. It was to the men who framed the Constitutional provision, who peculiarly set apart this as a District under the national safeguard and Government. But, he contended, there was no injury sustained. What less compensation than the particular legislation of this District could be required for the removal of the Government, whereby in these almost uninhabited woods the beginnings of a rich and prosperous city was commenced, and made the capital of the United States?

The motion for postponement was withdrawn without a question being taken, and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill. Mr. SMILIE moved to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. SMILIE said he would willingly give the reasons which prompted him to make the motion, and he hoped the gentleman would as freely make his reply. If it could be proved to him that the rights of these people could be reserved by the passage of the bill, it would give him pleasure, but, believing it to be impossible, he wished to destroy the bill. It could not be denied but that the people of this District were precisely in the same situation at present which they always had been, and subject to the same laws, but would it be so when the Government once accepted the cession? It would not. Not a man in the District would be represented in the Government, whereas every man who contributed to the support of a Government ought to be represented in it, otherwise his natural rights were subverted, and he left, not a citizen, but a subject. This was one right the bill deprived these people of, and he had always been taught to believe it was a very serious and important one. It was a right which this country, when under subjection to Great Britain, thought worth making a resolute struggle for, and evinced a determination to perish rather than not enjoy.

Another, and an important right, of which those people were about to be deprived, was, that their Judges and their Governor were not to be the choice of themselves, but of the President. The privilege of a local Legislature might be given to the people, but of what avail could they be if the Governor appointed by the President could deprive them of every act they might make by his negative? Where was their security if the acts of these Representatives of the people could be to-morrow revoked by a power deriving authority from elsewhere? Much as gentlemen might talk about dignity of government, nothing, he thought, would more comport with true dignity than liberty, and without it dignity of government was not worth a name. It surely must be disagreeable for the Government to be in the midst of a people who are deprived of their rights, and what insecurity there ever had been, or ever would be, to the Government, from its residence under the laws of the States, he could not conceive. He had never known of any. If he could be convinced that the people would not be deprived of these rights, among others, he would agree to some such bill as this.

Mr. DENNIS acknowledged that had he the same impressions as the member who had just sat down, he would not hesitate for a moment to believe that liberty had been forced to yield to a reign of absolute slavery. But from a consideration of the interests of the people, of the dignity of the Government, and of the seat of the Congress, together with the reflections of the gentleman who had just resumed his seat, he felt himself called upon to make some observations by way of an answer.

As to the interests of the people, could it for a moment be doubted that a local government, a judiciary, and a legislature, would be highly advantageous? Could any man doubt but it would be more convenient and advantageous for the inhabitants to attend the courts in this place than to be taken away to Richmond or to Annapolis? It had been always an approved privilege that justice should be brought home to every man's door, and where could it be more so than by the establishment of a judiciary, especially for this District? Nor were the advantages less, he contended, in the legislative department. If a ready communication with their representatives was desirable to the people, by the residence and sitting of the representatives of this District being within itself, the communication was easy, and the rights of the people in their local concerns more attainable, surely, than though they had to go to Richmond or to Annapolis. But, taking a more comprehensive view of the subject, Mr. D. asked if the general interests of the District would not be more secured by persons immediately acquainted and concerned, than by persons of different States, and at a distance from the place? One or two representatives to each legislature would be the utmost that the District could send, and these placed among men of different interests, what could be expected compared to a body such as is prescribed by this bill, drawn from among the people themselves? In these legislatures, the numerous local circumstances which must call for attention in a newly planted and rapidly growing capital, never can receive due attention. Every person must know that a great proportion of business must arise from a commercial city. From observation he could say that about one-third of the business of the Legislature of Maryland usually arose from Baltimore alone. As this city, therefore, grew in population and in trade, the demand for legislative attention would increase, and either its interests must be neglected, or the sitting of the State legislatures must be protracted too far. Besides this, experience must have taught gentlemen that numerous bodies could not so well attend to the minute advantages of a place like this as small bodies, and particularly such as well knew its situation and circumstances.

It had been said that these people were happy. Mr. D. admitted it, but a change of circumstances made an inevitable difference, and required a different mode of legislating. This District of the General Government, being a part of two States, must require an alteration from its former government. Surely the organization of a local body must be more advantageous than any modifications which could be made by those two Legislatures. So far from a rule of despotism then being over these people, he thought the passing of this bill would much increase their prosperity. It was said that, by the assumption of the jurisdiction, these people would ask how much they were heretofore represented in the two Legislatures to which they sent delegates. They were so in name, but very little in essence, from the comparatively small number they could send to the Legislatures. But the arguments went as much against the assumption at any future time as at present. That it would be some time taken up there could be no doubt. It ought therefore to be recollected, that if it would ever be proper, a period more unfavorable to the interests of the people might be selected than the present, and therefore the present moment ought to be accepted, and especially so, as he believed the people were desirous of it, and were satisfied with the features of the bill. From their contiguity to, and residence among the members of the General Government, they knew, that though they might not be represented in the national body, their voice would be heard. But if it should be necessary, the Constitution might be so altered as to give them a delegate to the General Legislature when their numbers should become sufficient. Upon the whole, he could see no measures which would more immediately promote the interests of the people of this District, and give stability to their minds, and to their concerns with each other, than the present bill; and, therefore, he hoped the section would remain.

Mr. MACON said, he could see no such immediate necessity for this law. A gentleman had told the Committee it was necessary because the States did not pay regard to it. Mr. M. supposed the same attention was paid to this District as usual, and the same as was paid to any other particular part. He believed their political and local rights were as perfectly secure without this bill as any other part of those States, and if the object of gentlemen was to make it better or worse, he should be opposed to it. Before the least change from their former situation, some inconveniences ought to be mentioned under which they labored, and this had not been done, more than mere conjecture and surmises had engendered. Most assuredly there ought to be some good ground for this assumption, because it was not merely a common act of the Legislature, which could be repealed or amended as soon as passed. It was an act of a nature that could not be essentially altered without an alteration in the Constitution, because if the assumption was once accepted, it could not be parted with.

It would be so far from advantageous to the city of Washington, Mr. M. said, that it must essentially injure it. On one side of the water was Alexandria, a populous town; on the other side was Georgetown. Would not these two give to the legislature a majority? And if so, a more palpable evil could not be put upon the city than by putting it in with more numerous towns whose interests would ever be opposed to the growth of the city. There would inevitably be an Alexandria interest, a Georgetown interest, and a city interest, and those struggling with each other.

It was said to be inconvenient to be represented at a distance, from the want of an easy communication. How could this be? What was more easy than for letters and instructions to be sent by post? The communication was easy from all parts of the United States to Congress, and could be equally so to any place where the post goes. There could be no doubt but the States would pay as much attention to the interests of this District, if it continued under their jurisdiction, as ever had been done, and more: by not suffering it to endure any injury which it could prevent, Congress should immediately take the jurisdiction. The language and meaning of gentlemen could be well understood. Gentlemen were called to support the measure with energy, while they had strength. No doubt this was the principal ground of their endeavors to push the measure, although the Legislature had but just met here, and there had been scarce time to know what would be the proper regulations to adopt. But he wished to remind them, that, although the law might be passed, the time would not be far off when his friends would be in the minority, and some considerable alterations might be made in it.

Mr. M. then proceeded to the details of the bill. He disliked the establishment of a government, the executive and judiciary of which were in the appointment of the President of the United States, the former for three years and the latter during good behaviour: and these, both governor and judges of the superior and inferior courts, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Could it be the wish of the gentleman, he asked, to establish in the very heart of the United States, and immediately under the eye of the Government, such a principle as that these rulers should be independent and entirely above the control of the people? He declared that if he should be in Congress again, and as long as he ever should be in the House, he should constantly make it his duty to exert himself for the repeal of so bad a principle, and leave the governor, the judges, and the legislature, immediately amenable to the people. Another thing he should also be ever opposed to, was the manner of this House of Representatives and Senate being chosen, and the time of their continuance. Why should they be elected here for two years, when in all the State Legislatures, he believed they were chosen annually, except two, in one of which they were elected every six months, and in the other, every two years. A greater absurdity still was evinced in the time for which, and the manner how the Senators were chosen—six years, and by electors. Although in these things there was a similarity to the choice of the General Government, he would ask what similarity there could be in the two Governments? In the one there is a vast extent of country and a numerous population; in the other, a small population, a small tract of country, and an almost general knowledge by every one of every individual in it. He doubted whether the Legislature of the Union could at all delegate powers to this local government; but whether or not, he could see no kind of necessity during the present session to assume them. The Government would go on as well as before, and he had no doubt the city would continue in that rapid state of prosperity gentlemen had witnessed since they arrived here.

The Committee rose without taking a question, and had leave to sit again.

TUESDAY, February 3.

A new member, to wit: JOHN STEWART, returned to serve as a member of this House for the State of Pennsylvania, in the room of Thomas Hartley, deceased, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified and took his seat in the House.

A petition of Theodosius Fowler was presented to the House and read, stating that a contract had been formed by the petitioner, with the Secretary of the Treasury, some time in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, or one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, for supplying rations to certain troops in the service of the United States; which contract he entered into at the request of William Duer, deceased, but in which he, the petitioner, had no concern or interest whatever; that a large balance due upon the said contract, to the United States, is now claimed from the petitioner, and that a suit has been instituted against him for the recovery thereof; and praying that the said suit may be discontinued, or such other relief afforded to the petitioner, as to the wisdom and justice of Congress may seem meet.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to Mr. BIRD, Mr. MORRIS, and Mr. HENRY LEE; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

On motion it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill supplementary to the act, entitled "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments."

Ordered, That Mr. OTIS, Mr. GALLATIN, and Mr. McMILLAN, be appointed a committee pursuant to the said resolution.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the committee to whom was recommended, on the twenty-ninth ultimo, the bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleaves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, reported an amendatory bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleaves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio; which was read twice and engrossed, and ordered to be read the third time on Thursday next.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report; which was read and considered; Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means do prepare and report a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to employ Clerks for completing the abstracts of the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, agreeably to the provisions of the act, entitled "An act supplementary to the act, entitled 'An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States,' in those States where clerks cannot be procured by the Commissioners for the compensation allowed by law to clerks employed in that business.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the last mentioned committee, presented a bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States, and to repeal the act, entitled 'An act to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors of the Revenue; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the government of the District of Columbia, when the question was taken on the motion made yesterday, for striking out the first section, and negatived, ten members only rising for it.

Mr. GREGG then proposed an amendment to the first section, the object of which was to make the election of representatives annual, instead of biennial as contemplated by the bill. This motion brought on a lengthy discussion, being supported by Messrs. J. SMITH, CLAIBORNE, NICHOLAS, GALLATIN, and MACON; and opposed by Messrs. CRAIK, HARPER, BAYARD, H. LEE, THOMAS, and DENNIS. On the question for agreeing to the motion, it was determined in the negative—48 voting for it and 50 against it.

A motion was then made by Mr. CLAIBORNE, so to amend the first section as to extend the privilege of voting to persons who are not freeholders; that privilege being confined by the bill to freeholders exclusively. This motion brought on a short debate, in which Messrs. KITCHELL, NICHOLSON, SMITH, MACON, TAZEWELL, and NICHOLAS supported the motion, and Messrs. HARPER, CRAIK, DENNIS, and GALLATIN, opposed it. On the question that the House do agree to the motion, it was determined in the negative, there being 48 votes for and 50 against it.

WEDNESDAY, February 4.

A petition of sundry freeholders and inhabitants of the City of Washington, whose names are thereunto subscribed, was presented to the House, and read, praying that Congress may assume the jurisdiction of the Territory of Columbia, and frame such a code of laws for the government thereof as in their wisdom may seem meet.

Ordered, That the said petition be committed to the Committee of the whole House, to whom is committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. R. BROWN, from the committee appointed, presented a bill authorizing the discharge of Lawrence Erb from his present confinement; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented a bill to add to the district of Massac, on the Ohio, and to discontinue the districts of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, and Palmyra, in the State of Tennessee, and therein to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage;" which was twice read, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time tomorrow.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the government of the District of Columbia.

A motion was made by Mr. GALLATIN to amend the first section of the bill, so as to extend the privilege of voting for representatives to persons other than freeholders, who are possessed of property in the District to the value of eighty dollars.

Mr. HARPER proposed an amendment to the foregoing amendment, that a citizen, not being a freeholder, in order to qualify him as an elector, must be a housekeeper, and possessed of property of the value of one hundred dollars, to be ascertained by the record of the last assessment next preceding the period of offering his vote.

Mr. GALLATIN's amendment was withdrawn, and Mr. HARPER's, which, though offered as an amendment, was a complete substitute for it, was adopted.

Mr. CLAIBORNE proposed as an amendment to this same section, to reduce the term of a Senator continuing in office from six to three years.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. TAZEWELL moved to strike out the Senate altogether, on the ground that Congress, having the revision of all laws that may be passed for the Territory, and the power of rejecting such as they did not approve, would be a sufficient check on the Representatives without a Senate.

This motion was negatived.

Mr. MACON moved as an amendment, that the Senators should be elected immediately by the people, and not by electors, as proposed by the bill.

This motion was also lost.

A motion was made by Mr. NICHOLSON, that the electors should not be permitted to choose themselves as Senators.

This motion was adopted.

The Committee rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate had passed the bill for erecting a mausoleum for GEORGE WASHINGTON, with amendments. The amendments were committed to a Committee of the whole House, and ordered to be printed.

THURSDAY, February 5.

An engrossed bill giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, was read the third time, and passed.

An engrossed bill to add to the district of Massac, on the Ohio, and to discontinue the districts of Louisville in the State of Kentucky, and Palmyra, in the State of Tennessee, and therein to amend the act, entitled, "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," was read the third time, and passed.

A memorial of sundry inhabitants of Alexandria, signed by Amos Alexander, their chairman, was presented to the House, and read, expressing their disapprobation of several of the provisions contained in the bill now depending in the House, for the government of the District of Columbia.

Ordered, That the said memorial be committed to the Committee of the whole House, to whom is committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the claims of the United States for certain balances, which, by the commissioners appointed to settle the accounts between the United States and the several States, were reported to be due from several of the States to the United States; and that the said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

Ordered, That Messrs. HILL, WALN, HARPER, OTIS, and C. GOODRICH, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the government of the District of Columbia. Several amendments were made to the bill, and it was reported to the House.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the act, entitled, "An act to augment the salaries of the officers therein mentioned," ought to be continued in force and made perpetual.

Ordered, That Messrs. HARPER, DENT, and EDMOND, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled, "An act concerning the District of Columbia," to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said bill was twice read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

TRADE WITH THE INDIANS.

Mr. CLAIBORNE, from the committee appointed, on the second of December last, to inquire into the expediency of carrying on any further trade with the Indians, on a capital furnished by the United States, made a report; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

The report is as follows:

The committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of carrying on any further trade with the Indians, on a capital furnished by the United States, report:

That in pursuance of the laws heretofore passed by Congress on that subject, two trading-houses, or factories, have been established; one in the State of Tennessee and another in the State of Georgia; and, of the sums appropriated by Congress, the sum of ninety thousand one hundred and fifteen dollars and ninety cents has been drawn from the Treasury, for the purpose of forming those establishments and purchasing and conveying goods suitable for trade with the Indians of the Cherokee and Creek nations. That the laws aforesaid expired on the ———, and no law was passed at the last session of Congress to continue the establishment and trade aforesaid; although the committee to whom the subject was then referred, reported, that it was expedient to continue the trade.

The committee further report,

That from the accounts in the Treasury Department, rendered by the persons who superintend those establishments or factories, the present state of this trade cannot be ascertained; and although this trade may have produced some advantages in attaching the Indians to the Government of the United States, by affording them necessities, and avoiding the animosities which might be produced by the abuses of private traders, yet those have not been of such magnitude as to justify, in the opinion of the committee, any extension or increase of the capital stock, however proper it may be to continue the trade, on the stock now vested, for some time longer.

The committee, unwilling to abandon institutions of public utility, and convinced that the establishment of Indian houses, with proper management, would contribute to the attainment of important advantages; and not having ascertained, with any precision, how far the present establishment may be maintained without loss to the United States, therefore recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide by law for the continuance of the trade and trading-houses heretofore by law established, on the capital already drawn from the Treasury, for one year, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress; and that provision should be made in such law, for the better regulation of said trading-houses, and prescribing the duties of the agents employed therein.

Ordered, That this report be committed to a Committee of the Whole on Monday.

FRIDAY, February 6.

A new member, to wit: LEVI LINCOLN, returned to serve in this House as a member from Massachusetts, in the room of Dwight Foster, elected a Senator of the United States, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. BIRD, from the committee appointed, presented a bill for the purpose of ascertaining the northwardly boundary line of a tract of land between the Little Miami and the Scioto rivers, reserved by the State of Virginia to satisfy the troops of the line of the said State, who in the Revolutionary war served on the Continental establishment; which was read twice, and committed a Committee of the whole House on Tuesday next.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments reported yesterday from the Committee of the whole House to whom was committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia: Whereupon,

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be recommitted to the Committee of the whole House to whom is committed the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia."

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, to whom it was referred to examine what laws have expired, or are near expiring, and require to be revived or further continued, made a further report, in part; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision to secure the property of prints to inventors and engravers.

RULES FOR ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

Mr. RUTLEDGE, from the committee appointed, on the second instant, to prepare and report such rules as, in their opinion, are proper to be adopted by this House to be observed in the choice of a President of the United States, made a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee appointed the second instant, report, in part, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following rules be observed in the choice by the House of Representatives of the President of the United States, whose term is to commence on the fourth day of March next.

1st. In the event of its appearing, upon the counting and ascertaining of the votes given for President and Vice President, according to the mode prescribed by the Constitution, that no person has a Constitutional majority, and the same shall have been duly declared and entered on the journals of this House, the Speaker, accompanied by the members of this House, shall return to their Chamber.

2d. Seats shall be provided in this House for the President and members of the Senate; and notification of the same shall be made to the Senate.

3d. The House, on their return from the Senate Chamber, it being ascertained that the Constitutional number of States are present, shall immediately proceed to choose one of the persons from whom the choice is to be made for President; and in case upon the first ballot there shall not appear to be a majority of the States in favor of one of them, in such case the House shall continue to ballot for a President, without interruption by other business, until it shall appear that a President is duly chosen.

4th. After commencing the balloting for President, the House shall not adjourn until a choice be made.

5th. The doors of the House shall be closed during the balloting, except against the officers of the House.

6th. In balloting, the following mode shall be observed, to wit: The representatives of the respective States shall be so seated that the delegation of each State shall be together. The representatives of each State shall, in the first instance, ballot among themselves, in order to ascertain the vote of that State; and it shall be allowed, where deemed necessary by the delegation, to name one or more persons of the representation, to be tellers of the ballots. After the vote of each State is ascertained, duplicates thereof shall be made; and in case the vote of the State be for one person, then the name of that person shall be written on each of the duplicates; and in case the ballots of the State be equally divided, then the word "divided" shall be written on each duplicate, and the said duplicates shall be deposited in manner hereafter prescribed, in boxes to be provided. That, for the conveniently taking the ballots of the several representative of the respective States, there be sixteen ballot boxes provided for the purpose of receiving the votes of the State; that after the delegation of each State shall have ascertained the vote of the States the Sergeant-at-Arms shall carry to the respective delegations the two ballot boxes, and the delegation of each State, in the presence and subject to the examination of the members of the delegation, shall deposit a duplicate of the vote of the State in each ballot box; and where there is more than one representative of a State the duplicates shall not both be deposited by the same person. When the votes of the States are all thus taken in, the Sergeant-at-Arms shall carry one of the general ballot boxes to one table, and the other to a second and separate table. Sixteen members shall then be appointed as tellers of the ballots; one of whom shall be taken from each State and be nominated by the delegation of the State from which he was taken. The said tellers shall be divided into two equal sets, according to such agreement as shall be made among themselves; and one of the said sets of tellers shall proceed to count the votes in one of the said boxes, and the other set the votes in the other box; and in the event of no appointment of teller by any delegation, the Speaker shall in such case appoint. When the votes of the States are counted by the respective sets of tellers, the result shall be reported to the House; and if the reports agree, the same shall be accepted as the true votes of the States; but if the reports disagree, the States shall immediately proceed to a new ballot, in manner aforesaid.

7th. If either of the persons voted for shall have a majority of the votes of all the States, the Speaker shall declare the same; and official notice thereof shall be immediately given to the President of the United States and to the Senate.

8th. All questions which shall arise after the balloting commences, and which shall require the decision of the House, shall be decided without debate.

Resolved, That this House will consider the said report on Monday next.

Mr. HARPER, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to continue in force the act entitled "An act to augment the salaries of the officers therein mentioned;" which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. OTIS from the committee appointed, presented a bill supplementary to an act, entitled, "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, into two separate governments;" which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

Mr. HARPER, from the committee appointed, presented, a bill to extend to aliens who arrived and became residents in the United States, before a certain period, the benefits of the act of one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, on the subject of naturalization; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the Whole on Monday next.

The House, went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States, and to repeal the act, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors of the Revenue;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

MONDAY, February 9.

Ordered, That the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred, on the thirtieth ultimo, the memorial of sundry clerks employed in the different departments, be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business.

Mr. RUTLEDGE, from the Committee appointed on the part of this House, jointly, with the Committee on the part of the Senate, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes given for President and Vice President of the United States; of notifying the persons elected of their election, and the time, place, and manner of administering the oath of office to the President, reported that the Committee had taken the subject referred to them under consideration, but had come to no agreement thereupon.

A message from the Senate, informed the House that the Senate would be ready to receive the House in the Senate Chamber, on Wednesday next, at twelve o'clock, for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting of the votes for President of the United States; and that the Senate have appointed a teller on their part, to make a list of the votes for President of the United States as they shall be declared.

RULES FOR ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

The House proceeded to consider the report made on Friday last, from the committee appointed to prepare and report rules proper to be observed in the choice of a President of the United States: Whereupon,

Ordered, That the said report be committed to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House, accordingly, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the said report; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the committee had had the said report under consideration, and directed him to report to the House their agreement to the same, with an amendment; which he delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read. The House then proceeded to consider the report: Whereupon, the amendment reported from the Committee of the whole House to the said report, was, on the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

A motion was then made and seconded that the House do disagree with the Committee of the whole House in their agreement to the fourth rule contained in the said report, in the words following, to wit:

"4th. After commencing the balloting for President, the House shall not adjourn until a choice is made:"

And, the question being taken thereupon, it passed in the negative—yeas 47, nays 53, as follows:

Resolved, That this House doth agree with the Committee of the whole House in their agreement to the said report, as amended, in the words following, to wit:

"That the following rules be observed in the choice by the House of Representatives of a President of the United States, whose term is to commence on the fourth day of March next.

"1st. In the event of its appearing, upon the counting and ascertaining of the votes given for President and Vice President, according to the mode prescribed by the Constitution, that no person has a Constitutional majority, and the same shall have been duly declared and entered on the Journals of this House, the Speaker, accompanied by the members of the House, shall return to their Chamber.

"2d. Seats shall be provided in this House for the President and members of the Senate; and notification of the same shall be made to the Senate.

"3d. The House, on their return from the Senate Chamber, it being ascertained that the Constitutional number of States were present, shall immediately proceed to choose one of the persons from whom the choice is to be made for President; and in case upon the first ballot there shall not appear to be a majority of the States in favor of one of them, in such case the House shall continue to ballot for a President, without interruption by other business, until it shall appear that a President is duly chosen.

"4th. After commencing the balloting for President, the House shall not adjourn until a choice be made.

"5th. The doors of the House shall be closed during the balloting, except against the officers of the House.

"6th. In balloting, the following mode shall be observed, to wit: The representatives of the respective States shall be so seated that the delegation of each State shall be together. The representatives of each State, shall, in the first instance, ballot among themselves, in order to ascertain the votes of the State; and it shall be allowed, where deemed necessary by the delegation, to name one or more persons of the representation, to be tellers of the ballots. After the vote of each State is ascertained, duplicates thereof shall be made; and in case the vote of the State be for one person, then the name of that person shall be written on each of the duplicates; and in case the ballots of the State be equally divided, then the word "divided" shall be written on each duplicate, and the said duplicates shall be deposited in manner hereafter prescribed, in boxes to be provided. That, for the conveniently taking the ballots of the several representatives of the respective States, there be sixteen ballot boxes provided; and that there be, additionally, two boxes provided for the purpose of receiving the votes of the States; that after the delegation of each State shall have ascertained the vote of the State, the Sergeant-at-Arms shall carry to the respective delegations the two ballot boxes, and the delegation of each State, in the presence and subject to the examination of all the members of the delegation, shall deposit a duplicate of the vote of the State in each ballot box; and where there is more than one representative of a State, the duplicates shall not both be deposited by the same person. When the votes of the States are all thus taken in, the Sergeant-at-Arms shall carry one of the general ballot boxes to one table, and the other to a second and separate table. Sixteen members shall then be appointed as tellers of the ballots; one of whom shall be taken from each State, and be nominated by the delegation of the State from which he was taken. The said tellers shall be divided into two equal sets, according to such agreement as shall be made among themselves; and one of the said sets of tellers shall proceed to count the votes in one of the said boxes, and the other set the votes in the other box; and in the event of no appointment of teller by any delegation, the Speaker shall in such case appoint. When the votes of the States are counted by the respective sets of tellers, the result shall be reported to the House; and if the reports agree, the same shall be accepted as the true votes of the States; but if the reports disagree, the States shall immediately proceed to a new ballot, in manner aforesaid.

"7th. If either of the persons voted for, shall have a majority of the votes of all the States, the Speaker shall declare the same; and official notice thereof shall be immediately given to the President of the United States, and to the Senate.

"8th. All questions which shall arise after the balloting commences, and which shall be decided by the House voting per capita to be incidental to the power of choosing the President, and which shall require the decision of the House, shall be decided by States, and without debate; and in case of an equal division of the votes of States, the question shall be lost."

TUESDAY, February, 10.

INTERCOURSE WITH FRANCE.

Mr. S. SMITH, Chairman of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, reported, according to order, "A bill to continue in force an act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France and the dependencies thereof.

The existing act is limited to continue in force till the 3d of March next, the bill now reported, re-enacts it to continue till the 3d day of March, 1802. It was once read, and on the question whether it should be read a second time,

Mr. DAVIS hoped it would not have a second reading. Every step which was taken with a law so obnoxious, must not only wound our recent accommodation with France, but also our merchants and planters engaged in trade with that nation, and afford means of speculation. He moved that the bill be rejected.

Mr. S. SMITH hoped it would be rejected. Conformable to his duty as chairman of the committee he had reported the bill, but had by no means assented to that measure. He saw no use whatever in it; he saw much evil in it, and in every step which was advanced towards re-establishing it. He observed with pleasure a proclamation issued by the Government of Guadaloupe to deliver up captured property conformable to the fourth and seventeenth articles of the mutual convention; that proclamation also completely arrested all future captures by their privateers. In the present posture of affairs, what possible reason could be adduced in favor of this bill? In the committee he said he was alone in his aversion to this law; he wished to postpone it for some time at least. He hoped gentlemen would consider their strength, and, if they were not able to carry the bill through, would suffer its immediate destruction, otherwise the inevitable effect of loss must rest on the tobacco planter.

Mr. LIVINGSTON presumed, as this bill had been reported, there were some gentlemen in favor of it, and he supposed if any were in favor of it, they could give the reasons of their conduct. He most sincerely wished to hear them, for really he could conceive none. He declared himself to be astonished at finding the House engaged in the re-enaction of this law when he entered it this morning: he was astonished because the very face of the law carried its own destiny. It declared that whenever the President should be convinced that commerce could be safely renewed with France, he should have power to renew it.

There had been several instances wherein our vessels had been treated upon neutral grounds, and there appeared to be a general disposition that it should be so. Can any gentleman in this House doubt that that state of things actually exists which this bill predicates? If there are any such, let them answer, and give their reasons. If they do not, they are bound to join in the rejection of the bill.

It was not a very common course, he said, to stop a law on its first reading, but if ever there was a state of things which demanded it, this was it. All the American commercial men engaged in its support when it first passed; it passed from the extreme necessity of the case, and in assenting to it all our commercial men sustained a vast sacrifice—a sacrifice which only the occasion could justify. But now the state of things is altogether changed; the necessity and the danger have entirely ceased: a convention of amity has been formed with that nation. What answers, then, this ill-advised spirit of acrimony? Where is the necessity now of the measure? What answer can they give to the planters in Virginia, whose produce must remain on their hands, when they ought to have a market, and a good price for it? What, he would ask those gentlemen, had been acquired by this two years' suspension of the intercourse with France? At that time, said Mr. L., we submitted, when they so pressingly supported the bill, but it is out of their power longer to make us, or to make the country believe, that there is necessity for the measure, so wounding to our own country. Nothing can prevent us receiving with pleasure the accommodation now proposed, or make us again open the wounds of our separation. Nothing remains respecting that convention but an acquiescence in the part of France to an article which was inserted at the instance of our negotiators, and consequently its expulsion will be received with pleasure by the nation. Will, then, not one solitary advocate for this bill arise, and give his reasons why the prohibition should be renewed? It really appears to me a measure of the most extraordinary nature: it is bordering on insanity. No man dares vindicate it! No man advocates what he assisted in promoting! If it is to be carried into effect, I hope it will not be carried into effect with a sullen silence, tending to insult the understanding of the nation.

Mr. RUTLEDGE did not know that the reasons would be very agreeable to the gentleman who had ascribed them to "insanity," but he might be assured there were reasons for the measure, and such as its advocates would not be ashamed to acknowledge. Not being a member of the Committee of Commerce he could not give their reasons, but though the gentleman thought there was not one solitary reason to be advanced he would give his reasons. He wished to let France know that the productions of our country were useful to her, and that we would rather let them rot in our own country, than expose such weakness to her as to make her believe we must at all events bring them to market. Sir, said Mr. R., we are about to open a new negotiation with France, and yet before sending our Envoys we will be so extremely weak as to send our produce to her, and thus expose our extreme cupidity and desire at all events to get money. The object of France in negotiating with our country is to trade with us, but by this measure we shall give them our trade without the conclusion of negotiation! What injury can it be? Has not the President power to renew the trade whenever, in his opinion circumstances will warrant it? What then can gentlemen have to fear, when the gentleman to fill that office is of their own choosing? Do they not suppose that the gentleman whom they have made President will suspend the law as soon as it is unnecessary? They tell us that France has called in her cruisers. How is this known? by newspaper testimony! Our property is liberated, they say. How are we to know this? It is not the fact; no merchant will rise and tell us so. I acknowledge, sir, that many of our vessels have been released; but why was it? By large and valuable douceurs! This the Chairman of the Committee of Commerce well knows, and every merchant is acquainted with it. Sir, we have lately seen a ship belonging to a member of this House released; but why was it done? It was because the American Consul actually paid a large sum as a douceur. It is known that the New Jersey was not obtained till near $200,000 was paid down, and yet we are told that our ships are liberated! Sir, we have taken our ground; we have determined upon defence and sacrifice, to preserve our national honor; and, except the most unequivocal proofs are given of the removal of the causes, we will not depart from those measures which have proved so salutary.

The gentleman supposed that the treaty is concluded, because the project of the article he says came from our Envoys. How does he know this? How does he know that the French Government do not regard this article? If France should not be disposed to adopt this treaty so modified; if she should wish to carry on her old practices, we wish to tell her that we are not afraid of her, nor have we been willing to hearken to the uncertain accents which merely sounded peace in our ears. These, Mr. R. said, were his reasons for wishing not to be too hasty in renewing the intercourse, and in these he believed his friend would coincide.

Mr. EGGLESTON said he had often heard this kind of argument from the gentleman who had just sat down. He appeared to be very fond of indulging his visionary ideas at other people's expense, and with very great levity to talk upon a subject which was of the most important nature to the country he (Mr. EGGLESTON) represented, [Virginia.] He wished to remind the House that a very important part of the community had suffered exceedingly under this law for two years past, not only the growers of tobacco, but the merchants. He trusted no greater impositions would be put upon that particular part of the community. The gentleman knew very well that rice, the staple commodity of his country, (South Carolina,) was in great demand everywhere, and would bring a good price; but it was not so with tobacco, an article principally consumed in that country with which we had been prohibited to trade. He hoped no other gentleman would be of the same principles, and that his constituents would have the same chance for their produce, (tobacco,) as was enjoyed by other parts of the Union for their produce.

Mr. RUTLEDGE said the gentleman was mistaken; he represents a tobacco country as a country which produces rice; but I will tell him that rice brings twice as much in France as in England, and, therefore, on the score of benefit, I am individually interested. But, to views of pecuniary advantage, I prefer the great question of national policy. I am disposed to yield all for my country's benefits; I believe the gentleman's principles are the same, but I think he is mistaken in his efforts to procure the good of the whole.

Mr. DENNIS moved a postponement till Monday.

Mr. S. SMITH moved to postpone till the third of March. He wished to show the American people that the law was not to be re-enacted, and not to keep them in suspense for even a day. Some indistinct idea having dropped from Mr. RUTLEDGE that Mr. S. knew of no douceurs having been taken for the delivery up of vessels which had been captured, which he was unwilling to own—Mr. S. said he knew of no vessel whatever which had been bought out since the convention was sent from France. Whatever had occurred before that period was not to the purpose. He was proceeding to state some cases, when Mr. HARPER asked whether it would be in order to answer. The SPEAKER observed that it would not, because the gentleman was not in order—the question being on postponement.

Mr. NICHOLAS hoped it would not be postponed, because, although the time mentioned should be the third of March, the price of tobacco would be exceedingly depressed by it.

Mr. SMITH withdrew his motion, and Mr. FOWLER renewed it.

Mr. RANDOLPH spoke against both motions; he wished to settle the public mind; for, he observed, ever since the negotiation had been in agitation, the price of tobacco had fluctuated like the stocks. The uncertainty of the fate of this law would produce a species of gaming (speculation) which must be very injurious to the honest dealers. He hoped both merchants and planters would immediately know what was the certain fate of the bill, and that this nefarious gambling system would be cut short, and an instant decision be had upon a question so interesting to a respectable portion of the people.

The motion to postpone to the third of March was again withdrawn.

A motion was made to postpone the further discussion of the bill till Monday.

Mr. H. LEE said, if the circumstances were as they were last year, he should contend for the continuance of this act, but our relations with that country were changed. He asked, what would the world say if, while the President and Senate of the United States had actually agreed to a convention of amity and commerce with France, the Legislature should pass this act to continue our non-intercourse? It certainly would look like an act of the most degrading duplicity. He hoped the bill would be rejected.

Mr. MACON.—If the House postpone this bill till Monday, it cannot fail of having an evil effect upon the trade in the article of tobacco, for the persons concerned are now making arrangements to sell and to ship it: the only object of this bill is to make the thing as uncertain as before. So fluctuating is the price of the article upon the event of the day, that when our Ministers came from France with the treaty, tobacco rose 50 per cent. upon the prospect of a peace with that country. If the majority of the House should think fit to continue the law, the sooner the merchants know it the better, as it would bring the trade to a more settled state, and enable them to make their arrangements conformably thereto.

Mr. J. C. THOMAS said he seconded the motion to postpone, because it was a subject of very considerable importance, upon which he had not sufficiently turned his attention. As to the fear of speculation, a rejection of the bill, in his opinion, afforded the most ample means to carry on that scheme. If the postponement should take place, how could any man say what would be the event of the bill? The moment it was known that the bill was lost, speculations would fly in every quarter. But why should the House legislate under any impressions of the kind? They were called to decide upon a great and important political question, and should they withhold going in the right path, whatever it might be, through fear of speculation? He hoped not. For this cause he advocated the motion.

Mr. LIVINGSTON said when he first rose he expressed his desire that some reason for the introduction of the bill should be given. Two reasons were assigned to show that we must continue our attitude towards France: one was, that we must preserve the dignity of our character; the other, that we must keep the old means until the conclusion of the negotiation. This dignity of character he would be as unwilling to sacrifice as any gentleman in the House, but he did not conceive it to consist in the high-sounding words used by some gentlemen. What, he asked, was dignity of character? Does it consist in impoverishing ourselves? This, to be sure, must be a very dignified effect. Some gentlemen might sit with their hands to their sides, and brave all the world, not thinking of the situation of those who lose three-fourths of the result of their labor. All that these gentlemen boastingly sacrifice is felt in another quarter; what is dignity of attitude to them, is distress to other parts of the Union. From the most accurate accounts, then, this dignity of character is nothing. What effect will it have on our negotiation, now again renewed? To examine this it will be necessary to inquire what does France want, or what did she want at the time this bill first passed. Gentlemen at that time thought that without food from us, their West India colonies could not subsist, or have means to carry on their aggressions upon our commerce. The experiment was made, but was it found to answer the effect? Did she not attack our commerce with equal violence? Tobacco is allowed to be the principal article exported from us to France, except our flour to the West Indies, without which she has subsisted, and carried on her warfare. What is the article of tobacco? It is an article we shall ever be willing to get rid of, rather than prohibit our merchants from selling. How, then, can we coerce France by it? Are we to remain in this situation till their treaty returns to this country? They tell us, to be sure, that the President has it in his power to put an end to the force of this bill, but from the common course of things, it is certain that the President never will put an end to the bill, till the treaty is completed. And who are injured by it? Not France, for gentlemen confess that they can procure this article without our aid. It must be ourselves.

But, say gentlemen, France will open her ports; she will receive our produce, and then she will add these additional millions to what she has before seized from us, and disregard our treaty. If there was any foundation on which to hang such a suspicion, Mr. L. said he would not merely vote for the suspension for one year, but forever. But where was the foundation for such distrust? He could see none, and believed there was none. The gentleman from Massachusetts presented this dilemma: either the House must believe the treaty would not go into operation, or it was a very uncertain event. Now, between these two, Mr. L. thought there might be a mean supposed, that is, that it was a probable event that it would be carried into execution; this was the middle way he chose to take as a foundation. He thought the possibility bordering upon certainty: he thought the probability so great as to justify any measures being founded thereupon. But, gentlemen say, we must take nothing upon probability, because, as soon as it is certain, the President can act conformable to circumstances, which he must be most acquainted with. Upon this point, Mr. L. was perfectly satisfied; he did believe France to be sincere, and he further believed that condition with which we had ratified the treaty, would be no hindrance to its final passage. He was well satisfied that the second article, which was erased, was inserted at the instance and even the desire of our Commissioners. Believing this, he could not conceive they would make excuses to evade its ratification. This brought him to another reason for objection which was urged. Could any gentleman believe France would act so perfidiously as to desire and promote this treaty, on purpose to induce us to send our produce to that country, which she would seize? Did he suppose that nation so base, he would never agree to open the communication at all, without other assurances. If gentlemen thought this, they ought not to rest here; their duty requires them to put a perpetual end to commercial intercourse with a nation whose faith was so bad. But it was no such thing—he believed there was good faith in that nation, and that we had received as good assurances of it as could be expected. He hoped a majority of the House believed so, and that no delay would take place in promoting an accommodation in which ourselves would be gainers. He believed the interests of the country called upon the House for immediate action, and therefore hoped that an end would be put to any doubt on the subject.

FEBRUARY, 1801.

Intercourse with France.

H. OF R.

Mr. WALN thought gentlemen were mistaken in supposing that the non-intercourse with that nation was only felt by the Southern States; he believed it was as severely felt by every commercial town in the Union, whether southward of the Delaware or eastward. Every gentleman knew that the spirit of adventure in the Eastern States, would excite them to carry their commerce as extensively as possible, and that, though not the growers of that species of produce, they were the carriers of it, and were interested in its increasing exportation. But for his part he wished not to be so confined in his ideas to the interest of this or of that State, but to the United States. He did believe that the result of the measures now taking to produce accommodation, was yet uncertain. As a ground of argument, the article of tobacco had been mentioned, and its rise and fall called forth to prove the fluctuating state of political appearances. But for his part he believed that changeableness arose from the amounts of the crops. He would appeal to gentlemen who were, from their local knowledge, acquainted with the price of that article, whether in times of plentiful crops, it was not as low as at the present moment. And, upon this, whether the last crop of tobacco was not very great? He believed it was so, and if so, why should that be considered as proper data for a national concern of such moment? He believed that this, as well as many other prohibited articles, found its way to France, and that this small increase in the price but very little lessened its consumption. He would appeal to the understandings of gentlemen, whether there could be a more inauspicious moment to open the communication than at present? It was the desire of the Committee to wait a few days to know the result of the treaty before the Senate: if that had been signed unconstitutionally, the law would not have been reported, but as it was not, the possibility of evil alone was a sufficient warrant for the continuance of the law for such time as circumstances might continue the same. He could not believe the policy of the country would warrant the immediate opening of intercourse, and, therefore, should vote for the bill.

Mr. GALLATIN said, as he last session voted for this bill, it was proper for him to state the reasons why he now voted against it. The measure was originally adopted as a defensive measure: circumstances being little different last session, and a treaty being on the tapis, he thought it would be wrong policy then to change it; but now the state of things was altogether changed. As he conceived, a safe intercourse with every foreign nation could not fail to produce general advantages, he should now, upon the idea of safety, vote that the suspension be taken off. The House were told that the same negotiation was pending, and therefore the measures ought to be the same. He thought very differently: last session there was only the appearance of a treaty; it was a question of uncertainty whether it would be concluded. But at present we know the precise state of things, and no gentleman in the House can doubt as to the acquiescence of France in the modification we have made. It is true that France may make this an excuse to refuse the treaty, and that they may possibly seize our produce sent there under the impressions of their good faith. But if such was her disposition, was it not to be supposed that she would have treated with us before now, on purpose to draw our commerce into her clutches for seizure? He thought the prospect was as favorable, and the moment as safe as ever it would be, and to leave it to the President was at least to suspend it till the final ratification. It was properly a legislative question, and as it originated in Congress, in the same branch it should expire, and not be confided to Executive pleasure. Anything confided to the Executive, is so upon the supposition of a change of circumstances during the recess of the Legislature. Why should the House leave to the President to do what it was not only alone competent to, but what every consideration of amity declared ought to be done without fail? It is impossible to say what circumstances may take place after the third of March, or how our relations with any nation may stand, but we must go upon present circumstances; we must only view the present state of things.

Mr. S. SMITH replied to Mr. WALN, in his declaration that every commercial part of the Union felt as much as Virginia the want of this trade. It was not so; the tonnage of the United States was now fully employed; if they could not go to France direct, they could and they would go to England, and she received the benefit which the planters lost. He appealed to the gentleman's commercial knowledge, whether there ever was such an immensity of tonnage employed as at present, and whether ever freight was so high. There never was a time in which our shipping was more used. He further answered the gentleman in his assertion that the great crops made the difference of price. How could that be? The last crop was very great. From a comparison of the former period to the present, when the quantity of that crop must be felt, there was a difference of two dollars a hundred. It was now advanced from $3 50 to $5 50, or $6; which advance he believed beyond a doubt arose from the appearances of accommodation with France. An argument advanced by an officer of the Government the other day, he believed to be very just: That now she had called in her privateers and altered her system towards us, if we refused her our trade, she would not think we were honest in our professions of friendship. What course would they take? Why, most probably send them out again, and force from us what our diffidence in their friendship prevented us selling them.

Mr. C. GOODRICH was not willing to trust our trade in the present uncertain situation. He believed from the best information, that every step taken towards negotiation by our Envoys was taken with difficulty; and that every possible care was taken by France not to lose an article. He wished as much as any gentleman to see the trade opened with safety, but till it could be done with safety, he was not willing to take a step towards it. He would leave it with the President, whose information must at any time be adequate to take the proper steps.

Mr. CHAMPLIN renewed the motion to postpone till Monday.

The yeas and nays were taken on this motion, which was carried in the negative—yeas 40, nays 59, as follows:

TREASURY AND WAR OFFICES.

Mr. HARPER said that he wished to call the attention of the House to a subject which had become interesting to its own honor and the honor of the nation. It was the subject of the calumnies so industriously propagated respecting the fires in the Treasury and War Departments, especially the former. Had those calumnies, sir, said Mr. H. continued to be confined to certain gazettes in this country, whose daily occupation everybody knows it is to invent and promulgate slanders at once the most absurd and the most atrocious against the Government, and all who are attached to it or concerned in its administration, I for one should certainly have continued to regard them with the profoundest contempt; for I well know that filth thus thrown, cannot tarnish the reputation of men of honor and character, much less of the Government itself. But, Mr. Speaker, these calumnies have assumed a far more imposing and dangerous form. They are uttered, sir, by men in this place, (it will not certainly be supposed that I allude to any honorable member of this House.) They are uttered, sir, by men in this place, whose stations give weight to their testimony, and must be considered, in distant parts of the country especially, as entitling their assertions to belief. Yes, sir, there are found men in this place, men, too, let me repeat it, whose stations gave weight to their testimony, and who are profligate enough, far enough lost to all sense of honor, truth, and decency, to state in private letters, as a fact fully established and admitted, that the War and Treasury offices, especially the latter, were set on fire by the chief officers themselves, in order to destroy the evidences of their own peculation. This abominable calumny, sir, one of the foulest and most malicious that party spirit has yet fabricated, is asserted as a well known fact by letters from this place, written by men of station and name. I know the fact, sir; I state it on the authority of competent and sufficient testimony. Those letters are handed about, and their contents are industriously circulated in other letters, which disseminate them though all parts of the country. Since this calumny has assumed such a shape;

since it is thus propagated and supported, it is necessary to crush it by an authentic inquiry. It becomes necessary to investigate the subject, that the truth may be displayed to the eyes of the nation thus attempted to be abused and misguided. For this purpose I move the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of the late fires in the War and Treasury Departments, and to report their opinion thereon to the House, with such facts and documents as may, in their opinion, be necessary for explaining the subject fully. And that the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records."

The resolution was adopted, and a committee of seven appointed. The following members were named on the committee.

MESSRS. NICHOLAS, MACON, LIVINGSTON, GAL-LATIN, VARNUM, HARPER, and WALN.

CREDENTIALS OF MEMBERS.

Mr. DENT, from the Standing Committee of Elections, made a report; which he delivered in at the Clerk's table, where the same was read, and is as follows:

"The Committee of Elections, having examined the credentials of several members claiming seats in this House, report:

"That, by two certificates of the Governor of Massachusetts under seal of the State, and dated the ninth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and one, it appears by one of the said certificates that Ebenezer Mattoon is duly elected to serve as a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, in the place of Samuel Lyman, stated therein to have resigned; and, by the other certificate, that Levi Lincoln is duly elected as aforesaid, in the place of Dwight Foster, appointed a Senator of the United States.

"It appears, also, by a letter under the signature of the Governor of Pennsylvania, dated the twenty-first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and one, and addressed to the Speaker, accompanied by authenticated documents, that John Stewart is duly chosen, in the place of Thomas Hartley, deceased.

"The committee are of opinion that Ebenezer Mattoon is entitled to a seat, in the place of Samuel Lyman, resigned; Levi Lincoln, in the place of Dwight Foster, appointed a Senator of the United States; and John Stewart, in the place of Thomas Hartley, deceased."

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

Mr. BAYARD moved an additional rule in relation to the Presidential election, viz: that five hundred tickets should be printed, on which should be the name of Thomas Jefferson, and five hundred on which should be the name of Aaron Burr, and that the members in balloting should be confined exclusively to these.

The SPEAKER requested Mr. BAYARD to modify his motion, so that six hundred tickets should be printed, and that after Thomas Jefferson, should be printed "of Virginia," and after Aaron Burr, "of New York," as he (the Speaker) had given directions to this effect; to which Mr. BAYARD agreed.

The question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and it passed in the negative—yeas 36, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, John Brown, William Cooper, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Abiel Foster, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, Wm. THE PRESIDENT of the Senate, in pursuance of the duty enjoined upon him, announced the state of the votes to both Houses, and declared that THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia, and AARON BURR, of New York, having the greatest number, and a majority of the votes of all the Electors appointed, and, being equal, it remained for the House of Representatives to determine the choice.

The two Houses then separated; and the House of Representatives, being returned to their Chamber, proceeded, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, to the choice of a President of the United States, and the following members were appointed tellers of the respective States, to examine ballots of each State, pursuant to the sixth rule adopted by the House on the ninth instant, to wit:

For the State of New Hampshire, Abiel Foster; Massachusetts, Harrison G. Otis; Rhode Island, Christopher G. Champlin; Connecticut, Roger Griswold; Vermont, Lewis R. Morris; New York, Theodorus Bailey; New Jersey, James Linn; Pennsylvania, Albert Gallatin; Delaware, James A. Bayard; Maryland, George Dent; Virginia, Littleton W. Tazewell; North Carolina, Nathaniel Macon; South Carolina, Thomas Pinckney; Georgia, Benjamin Taliaferro; Kentucky, John Fowler; Tennessee, William Charles Cole Claiborne.

The members of the respective States then proceeded to ballot, in the manner prescribed by the rule aforesaid, and the tellers appointed by the States, respectively, having put duplicates of their votes into the general ballot boxes prepared for the purpose, the votes contained therein were taken out and counted, and the result being reported to the SPEAKER, he declared to the House that the votes of eight States had been given for THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia; the votes of six States for AARON BURR, of New York; and that the votes of two States were divided.*

The Constitution of the United States requiring that the votes of nine States should be necessary to constitute a choice of President of the United States, a motion was made and seconded, that the ballot for the President be repeated in one hour; and, the question being taken by States, it passed in the negative.

The States then proceeded in the manner aforesaid, to a second ballot; and, upon examination of the ballot boxes, it appeared that the votes of eight States had been given for THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia; and the votes of six States for AARON BURR, of New York; and that the votes of two States were divided.

The States then proceeded in like manner to a third ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

The States then proceeded in like manner to a fourth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

The States then proceeded in like manner to a fifth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

The States then proceeded in like manner to a sixth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

The States then proceeded in like manner to a seventh ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

A motion was then made and seconded, that the States proceed again to ballot in one hour; and, the question being taken thereupon, it was resolved in the affirmative—the votes of the States being ayes 12, noes 4.

The time agreed upon by the last-mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded, in manner aforesaid, to the eighth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same, to wit:

The votes of eight States for THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia; the votes of six States for AARON BURR, of New York; and the votes of two States were divided.

The States then proceeded to a ninth, tenth,

* During the time the States were employed in balloting, sundry messages from the President of the United States, from the Senate, and communications from Departments, were received, and reports from committees made; but, it being contrary to the rules established on the 9th instant for the House to take them into consideration at that time, they were taken up and acted upon after the balloting had been completed, and the final result declared. Among which documents was a Message from the President of the United States, concerning the disposition of the property of the United States now in his possession.

eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth ballots; and, upon examination of the ballots, respectively, the result was declared to be the same.

A motion was then made and seconded, that the States proceed again to ballot at ten o'clock; and the question being taken thereupon, it passed in the negative—the votes of the States being ayes 7, noes 9.

Ordered, That the next ballot be repeated at nine o'clock, and not before.

The time agreed upon by the last-mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded in manner aforesaid to the sixteenth ballot; and upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

Ordered, That the ballot be repeated in one hour.

The time agreed upon by the last-mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded in manner aforesaid to the seventeenth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

Ordered, That the ballot be repeated at eleven o'clock.

The time agreed upon by the last-mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded in manner aforesaid to the eighteenth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

A motion was then made and seconded, that the ballot be repeated to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and not before.

The question being taken thereupon, it passed in the negative.

Ordered, That the ballot be repeated at twelve o'clock.

The time agreed upon by the last-mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded in manner aforesaid to the nineteenth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, the result was declared to be the same.

Ordered, That the ballot be repeated in one hour.

The time agreed upon by the last mentioned vote being expired, the States proceeded in manner aforesaid to the thirty-sixth ballot; and, upon examination thereof, and the result being reported by the tellers to the SPEAKER, the SPEAKER declared to the House that the votes of ten States had been given for THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia; the votes of four States for AARON BURR, of New York; and that the votes of two States had been given in blank; and that, consequently, THOMAS JEFFERSON, of Virginia, had been, agreeably to the Constitution, elected PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES. for the term of four years, commencing on the fourth day of March next.*

* The following account of the balloting and incidents connected therewith in the House, is taken from the National Intelligencer, of February 13, 16, and 18, 1801.

"The votes having been entered on the Journals of the House of Representatives, the House returned to its own Chamber, and with closed doors proceeded to the ballot, as follows:

The individual votes on the succeeding ballots occasionally fluctuated without changing the general result.

The House proceeded immediately to the second ballot, the result of which was the same, as well as that of the succeeding ballots, including the 8th, which being declared about 4 P. M., the House determined to suspend taking the next ballot for one hour; on which the members separated.

The reader will observe that this postponement of the ballot was a virtual adjournment of the House, and that it was pursued in preference to adjournment, to avoid violating the rule previously adopted not to adjourn until a President should be elected.

About 5 P. M. the 9th ballot was entered upon, and the same result with the former produced.

After going through a number of other ballots, terminating in the same issue, it was agreed to take each ballot at the interval of an hour. In this manner the ballots were repeated until about 9 o'clock A. M., on Thursday—no separation of the members having taken place during the whole night.

The same invariable result followed each ballot, including the 27th, when, at 9 o'clock A. M., it was agreed to postpone the next ballot till 12 o'clock at noon; when the members separated.

At 12 o'clock the 28th ballot was taken—the result of which corresponded with the preceding ballots. After which further balloting was postponed till Friday at 11 o'clock.

On Thursday morning the Speaker stated that persons were in waiting to deliver messages from the President and the Senate, and he wished a decision of the House whether they could be received. On the suggestion of a member it was agreed, without formally putting the question, to receive the messages.

On Wednesday, Mr. Nicholson, who had been for several days very ill, appeared on the floor, and had a place assigned him in an anti-chamber adjacent to the room in which the House assembled, to which room, to enable him to vote, the ballot box was carried by the tellers of Maryland. He rapidly progresses in recovery. His vote for Mr. Jefferson was important as it divided Maryland, and would, with the accession to Mr. Jefferson of one Federal vote from that State, have made him President.

At 12 o'clock on Friday (this day) the 29th ballot was taken, which produced the same result.

At 1 o'clock the 30th ballot was taken, the result the same.

It was then determined that the next ballot should be taken to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

[From the National Intelligencer, of Feb. 16.]

On Saturday, the 14th instant, at 12 o'clock at noon, the House of Representatives went into the thirty-first balloting, the result of which was the same with the preceding ballots.

It was then determined that the next ballot should be at one o'clock.

On going into the thirty-second ballot, General Dickson, from North Carolina, declared, that it was high time to come to a final vote, and that he would henceforward vote for Mr. Jefferson.

The result of this ballot presented the same issue.

At two o'clock, the thirty-third ballot was taken; the result still the same.

It was then determined that the next ballot should be taken on Monday at 12 o'clock.

On Friday, during one of the intervals of balloting, the Speaker informed the House that he had received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which he would, with the permission of the House, read.

A member expressed his opinion that to read the letter would be an infraction of the rule established by the House.

The Speaker declared that, in his opinion, the rule would not be violated, as the reading of the letter would be gone through before the hour assigned for the next ballot arrived.

It was replied that, though it had been agreed to postpone taking the next ballot for an hour, yet it was clearly understood that, in the interval, the Representatives of the several States were consulting on the votes to be given.

The reading of the letter was overruled.

After the thirtieth ballot, on Friday, a motion was made and seconded by individual members, to postpone the next ballot to the 3d of March; the motion was rejected by the unanimous votes of all the States.

The Speaker then informed the House that, unless otherwise instructed, he should in future not consider a question before the House, unless moved by one State, and seconded by another.

The decision of the Chair was, on all hands, acquiesced in.

On Monday, the 16th instant, the thirty-fourth ballot was taken, the result the same as before.

The next ballot was postponed till to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Election of President.

FEBRUARY, 1801.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; and after some time spent therein, the Committee rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

concur in establishing the conviction that the present is among the most solemn eras which have existed in the annals of our country.

That confidence, which has hitherto reposed in tranquil security, on the wisdom and patriotism of Congress, stands appalled at dangers which threaten the peace of society, and the existence of the Constitution.

Placed in the midst of such circumstances, with the solitudes of millions centering on the deliberations of their Representatives, it becomes the sacred duty of the press to make that people, whose rights are involved, the depository of the earliest and most correct information.

For four days, the Republican and Federal parties have remained immovable in their original vote for President.

The Republicans possess eight States, with half the delegation of two other States.

The Federalists possess six States with half the delegation of two States.

The Federal party apparently, for some time, entertained hopes of gaining over some Republican votes. But they are now convinced that the hope is abortive. What will be the result?

The answer to this interesting question will be made with the utmost coolness and integrity. Though it will in a degree involve opinions as to future measures, yet it is confidently believed that these opinions are entitled to the most unlimited confidence.

1. The Representatives of the eight States that vote for Mr. Jefferson will remain immutable in their adherence to the public will.

2. It is said that the six States that vote for Mr. Burr will not yield.

But it is believed that they will yield. The unanimous and firm decision of the people throughout the United States in favor of Mr. Jefferson will be irresistible. In Maryland, there is scarcely a dissenting voice, and among the first who have avowed a preference for Mr. Jefferson, are Federalists of the largest wealth and most respectable talents.

3. Some of the Representatives of those States that vote for Mr. Burr have declared a determination, in case neither he nor Mr. Jefferson shall be elected, to make by law a President pro tempore.

The determination was avowed; but it is believed that it is not now seriously entertained. So hostile would the voice of America appear to be to this measure, that it is doubtful whether any man would propose it, and more doubtful whether any man would accept the station, if offered to him.

During that period of deep suspense which may be yet to come, it behoves the people of the United States to manifest that spirit of dignified and commanding fortitude, that, while it stands prepared for any crisis, is resolved not to commit the cause in which it is embarked, by any act of indiscretion. It is right that public opinion should express itself. Let it then be expressed with respectful firmness from one end of the Union to the other. Let the Representatives of the people know the will of the people, and they will obey it.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House cause to be printed one thousand copies of the act passed this session, entitled "An act to provide for the more convenient organization of the Courts of the United States," for the use of the members of both Houses of Congress.

That the people may know how the votes of their Representatives have been given, we present a statement:

New Hampshire—4 for Burr, viz: Mr. Foster, Mr. Sheafe, Mr. Tenney, and Mr. Freeman.

Massachusetts—11 for Burr, viz: Mr. S. Lee, Mr. Otis, Mr. N. Read, Mr. Shepard, Mr. Thatcher, Mr. Wadsworth, Mr. L. Williams, Mr. Bartlett, Mr. Mattoon, Mr. J. Reed, Mr. Sedgwick.

Three for Jefferson, viz: Mr. Bishop, Mr. Varnum, Mr. Lincoln.

Rhode Island—2 for Burr, viz: Mr. Champlin, and Mr. J. Brown.

Connecticut—7 for Burr, viz: Mr. C. Goodrich, Mr. E. Goodrich, Mr. Griswold, Mr. Dana, Mr. J. Davenport, Mr. Edmond, Mr. J. C. Smith.

Vermont—1 for Jefferson, viz: Mr. Lyon.

One for Burr, viz: Mr. Morris.

New York—6 for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Bailey, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Livingston, Mr. Elmendorf, Mr. Van Cortlandt, Mr. J. Smith.

Four for Mr. Burr, viz: Mr. Bird, Mr. Glen, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Platt.

New Jersey—3 for Jefferson, viz: Mr. Kitchell, Mr. Condit, Mr. Lynn.

Two for Burr, viz: Mr. F. Davenport, Mr. Imlay.

Pennsylvania—9 for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Gallatin, Mr. Gregg, Mr. Hanna, Mr. Leib, Mr. Smilie, Mr. Muhlenberg, Mr. Heister, Mr. Stewart, Mr. R. Brown.

Four for Burr, viz: Mr. Wain, Mr. Kittera, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Woods.

Delaware—1 for Mr. Burr, viz: Mr. Bayard.

Maryland—4 for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Dent, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Christie.

Four for Mr. Burr, viz: Mr. J. C. Thomas, Mr. Craik, Mr. Dennis, and Mr. Baer.

Virginia—14 invariably for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Nicholas, Mr. Clay, Mr. Cabell, Mr. Dawson, Mr. Eggleston, Mr. Goode, Mr. Gray, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Jackson, Mr. New, Mr. Randolph, Mr. A. Trigg, Mr. J. Trigg, Mr. Tazewell.

Five for Mr. Burr on same ballots, (two of whom on the first ballot voted for Mr. Jefferson,) viz: Mr. Evans, Mr. H. Lee, Mr. Page, Mr. Parker, Mr. Powell.

North Carolina—6 invariably for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Alston, Mr. Macon, Mr. Stanford, Mr. Stone, Mr. R. Williams, Mr. Spaight.

Four for Burr on some ballots, (3 of whom on the first ballot voted for Mr. Jefferson,) viz: Mr. Henderson, Mr. Hill, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Grove.

South Carolina—Mr. Sumter being sick has not attended, but will attend, at every hazard, the moment his vote can be of any avail. The individual votes of the Representatives of this State are not accurately known, but it is generally believed that Mr. Huger votes for Mr. Jefferson; and Mr. Rutledge, Mr. Pinckney, and Mr. Harper, vote for Mr. Burr. Mr. Nott's vote is doubtful. He has gone home.

Georgia—1 for Jefferson, viz: Mr. Taliaferro—Mr. Jones, who is dead, would have voted the same way.

Kentucky—2 for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Davis and Mr. Fowler

FEBRUARY, 1801.

Election of President.

H. OF R.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory, enclosing a petition from sundry inhabitants of the said Territory, praying that Congress will suspend the operation of so much of the act, entitled "An act supplemental to the act, entitled 'An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory,'" which establishes a second grade of territorial government in the said Territory; and that a law may be passed extending the same privileges to the said inhabitants as have been granted to the inhabitants of the Indiana Territory.

Ordered, That the said petition do lie on the table.

On motion it was

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause the proper officer to lay before this House a particular detail of the expenditure of the moneys appropriated by the acts of the fourth of May and sixth of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, and of the tenth of May, one thousand eight hundred, for the purpose of purchasing cannon and arms, or fabricating the same, and the purchasing, leasing, and establishing, of foundries and armories; showing the quantity of cannon and arms purchased or manufactured; the foundries and armories established, and what lands have been purchased for the purpose of erecting foundries, together with their respective quantities and situations; also, a list of the warrants drawn on those appropriations, specifying in whose favor each warrant was drawn, and for what purpose.

Tennessee—1 for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Mr. Claiborne.

On Saturday last a memorial was presented to John Chew Thomas, representative in Congress for this District, from a respectable number of his constituents, recommending him to vote for Thomas Jefferson, and declaring that at least two-thirds of his constituents were in favor of the election of Mr. Jefferson.

The memorial was signed by the most respectable Federal gentlemen of the City of Washington.

[From the National Intelligencer, of Feb. 18.]

On Tuesday at 12 o'clock the 35th ballot was taken; the result the same with that of the preceding ballots.

At 1 o'clock the 36th ballot was taken which issued in the election of Thomas Jefferson.

On this ballot there were,

Ten States for Mr. Jefferson, viz: Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

Four States for Mr. Burr, viz: Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Massachusetts.

Two States voted by blank ballots, viz: Delaware and South Carolina.

In the instance of Vermont, Mr. Morris withdrew.

In that of South Carolina, Mr. Huger, who is understood previously uniformly to have voted for Mr. Jefferson, also withdrew, from a spirit of accommodation, which enabled South Carolina, to give a blank vote.

And in the instance of Maryland, four votes were for Jefferson and four blank.

Mr. OTIS, from the committee appointed, presented a bill extending the privilege of franking to JOHN ADAMS, now President of the United States; which was twice read, and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from SAMUEL DEXTER, acting as Secretary of War, enclosing a report made in pursuance of a resolution of the House of the second instant; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, February 18.

An engrossed bill for extending the privilege of franking to John Adams, now President of the United States, was read the third time and passed.

A petition of sundry inhabitants of the States of Delaware and Maryland was presented to the House and read, praying that more efficient measures may be adopted by Congress, for the recovery of slaves escaping from their masters, and taking refuge in any of the neighboring States.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to the committee appointed, on the twenty-second ultimo, to inquire into the expediency of making further provision to prevent the concealing or harboring of slaves escaping from one State to another, and to and from the Territories of the United States.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the committee, presented a bill for erecting light-houses on New Point Comfort, and on Smith's Point, in the State of Virginia, and on Faulkner's Island, on Long Island Sound, in the State of Connecticut; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. PARKER, from the committee appointed on so much of the President's Speech as respects seasonable and systematic arrangements, proportioned to our national resources, for a Navy adapted to defensive purposes, presented a bill providing for a Naval Peace Establishment, and other purposes; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. PARKER, from the same committee, presented a bill respecting navy yards, and timber for naval purposes; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act to establish the district of Bristol, and to annex the towns of Kittery and Berwick to the district of Portsmouth;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House. The said bill was read twice and referred to the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. THATCHER, from the committee appointed, on the twenty-sixth of November last, to inquire whether any, and what, amendments are necessary to be made in the acts establishing a post office and post roads within the United States, presented a bill further to alter and establish certain post roads; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Friday next.

H. OF R.

Samuel Harrison Smith.

FEBRUARY, 1801.

Ordered, That Mr. SAMUEL SMITH be appointed on the committee to whom was referred so much of the President's Speech as respects seasonable and systematic arrangements proportioned to our national resources, for a Navy adapted to defensive purposes, in the room of Mr. NOTT, who has obtained leave of absence.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Nathaniel Holmes; which was reported to the House without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time to-morrow.

The House, then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose, reported progress and had leave to sit again.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have resolved that a committee be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to consider whether any, and, if any, what, measures ought to be adopted for the further accommodation of the President of the United States, for the term commencing the fourth day of March next, to report by bill, bills, or otherwise; and that Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. TRACY, and Mr. BALDWIN, be this committee.

The House proceeded to consider the said message of the Senate: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House do concur in the same.

Ordered, That Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. GALLATIN, Mr. VARNUM, Mr. KITCHELL, and Mr. MACON, be the committee on the part of this House, for the purpose expressed in the message of the Senate.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; and, after some time spent therein, the committee reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States," and to repeal the act, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors, of the Revenue;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment.

SAMUEL HARRISON SMITH.

Mr. DAVIS—Mr. Speaker, I have risen with an intention of bringing before the House a subject on which I think it is our duty to act; and as the subject, to a certain extent, relates to the Speaker, I shall endeavor to conduct myself towards him in such a manner as to injure his feelings as little as the nature of the case will admit, in doing justice to the rights of a citizen. But, while I profess a respect for you as the Speaker of this House, a fear of wounding your feelings shall not prevent me from doing what I conceive to be my duty as a public servant. I think it important and necessary, that the power of a Speaker of this House over a citizen of America should be precisely known and understood. That the Speaker should know how far he ought to go, and the citizen know where he ought to stop.

Believing, therefore, as I do, that the Speaker of this House, in a very recent instance, has exceeded his power, and in so doing has deprived a citizen of the United States of his Constitutional right, by denying him the liberty of hearing the debates of this House, upon questions of great national concern, I have determined to bring the subject before the House with a view of obtaining the opinions of others on it. But, as almost all questions that come before this House assume the shape of party, I do not expect this question to be exempt from party feelings and party prejudices; but this shall not deter me from trying it. If gentlemen are not ready or willing to abandon their party feelings by a fair examination of a citizen's right, it is their own fault. The subject I allude to is contained in the following resolution, to wit.

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House, in directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to order and expel from the gallery of this House Samuel Harrison Smith, a citizen of the United States, usurped a power not given him by the rules of this House, and deprived the said Samuel Harrison Smith of his Constitutional right, as a citizen of the United States.

THURSDAY, February 19.

An engrossed bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one, was read the third time and passed.

An engrossed bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one, was read the third time and passed.

An engrossed bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States," and to repeal the act, entitled, "An act to enlarge the powers of the surveyors of the revenue," was read the third time and passed.

An engrossed bill for the relief of Nathaniel Holmes was read the third time and passed.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act for extending the privilege of franking to John Adams, now President of the United States," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the said amendment to the last mentioned bill; Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

Ordered, That the committee appointed, on the seventeenth instant, to wait on the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES and notify him that THOMAS JEFFERSON is elected President of the United States, for the term commencing on the fourth day of March next, be instructed to notify the President elect thereof.

On motion it was

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of altering the times of holding the Courts of the United States, and to report by bill, or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. SILAS LEE, Mr. HILL, and Mr. ELIZUR GOODRICH, be appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported two amendments thereto.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the bill and amendments be postponed until to-morrow.

MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY.

Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, from the committee appointed, on the twenty-second of December last, to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory, made a report; which was read as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the representation of the House of Representatives of the Mississippi Territory, report:

That the first object mentioned in this representation respects the failure of an election for a member of the House of Representatives for the county of Washington, in that Territory.

On account of the Governor's order not being received in season, the election was there held on the 15th and 16th days of August, whereas by law it was directed to have been held on the 15th day of July. In all other respects the election is represented to have been fair, and the member chosen, correct. The power of the Governor to issue a writ of election is doubted, and the interference of Congress solicited.

As the members of the House of Representatives of the Territory serve for two years, and unless special provision be made, the inhabitants of Washington county will have no member in the House of Representatives the first session of the General Assembly, it appears to your committee expedient to authorize the Governor to order an election to be held in that county, for the choice of a representative.

The second object of this representation respects the time of holding the first session of the General Assembly of the district.

By law the General Assembly is to meet annually on the first Monday of December, unless by law they appoint a different day. The Governor has power, on extraordinary occasions, to convene the General Assembly.

It was found impracticable to make the appointments of the Legislative Council seasonably for holding the first session of the General Assembly on the first Monday of December last; and it is represented that if an earlier time be not fixed than the first day of December next, as now established by law, the appointment of a delegate in Congress from the Territory cannot be made seasonably for the next Congress, and it is stated that the Governor will be indisposed to convene the General Assembly at an earlier day.

The powers of the Governor being competent to the object in view, in the opinion of the committee, it would be inexpedient for Congress to interfere on the grounds suggested, of a presumption that those powers will not be fairly and discreetly exercised in this instance.

The Committee therefore respectfully submit to the consideration of the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Governor of the Mississippi Territory, be authorized to cause an election to be held in the county of Washington in that Territory, for the choice of a representative in the first General Assembly of the Territory.

Ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, from the same committee, to whom was referred, on the twenty-second of December last, the representation of the Legislature of the Mississippi Territory, made a report; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

SEDITION ACT.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, presented, according to order, a bill to repeal part of the act, entitled "An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States,'" and to continue in force the residue of the same; which was read the first time.

A motion was then made and seconded, and the question thereupon being taken, to wit:

"Shall this bill be rejected?" it passed in the negative—yeas 50, nays 49.—The SPEAKER declaring himself with the nays.

bald Henderson, William H. Hill, James H. Inlay, John Wilkes Kittera, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, Lewis R. Morris, Ebenezer Mattoon, Harrison G. Otis, Robert Page, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, Nathan Reed, John Rutledge, William Shepard, John C. Smith, James Sheafe, Samuel Tenney, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Wain, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

The said bill was read the second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Saturday next.

STATE BALANCES.

Mr. HILL, from the committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the claims of the United States for certain balances which, by the Commissioners appointed to settle the accounts between the United States and the several States, were reported to be due from several of the States to the United States, made a report, accompanied by a bill, to extinguish the claims of the United States, for certain balances reported to be due from several of the States to the United States; which was read, and the consideration of the said report and bill postponed until the third day of March next.

The report is as follows:

The committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the claims of the United States for certain balances which, by the Commissioners appointed to settle the accounts between the United States and the several States, were reported to be due from several of the States to the United States, report—

That the Commissioners aforesaid, on the liquidation of the accounts, reported that there were due from several of the States certain balances, that is to say:

New York	- - -	$2,074,846
Pennsylvania	- - -	76,709
Delaware	- - -	612,428
Maryland	- - -	151,430
Virginia	- - -	100,879
North Carolina	- - -	501,082

That Congress, by an act passed the 15th February, 1799, engaged that any State so reported against might discharge itself from the claim, by an engagement in the form of a Legislative act, to be passed before the first of April, 1800, to pay at the Treasury of the United States, within five years, the amount of the sum assumed by the United States in the debt of such State; or by expending moneys to the like amount within the time aforesaid in the erection of fortifications. And the said act of Congress provides further, that any payment or expenditure aforesaid shall be credited at the Treasury to the amount of stock which said payment or expenditure is equal to the purchase of at the market prices of stock. That the State of New York passed, within the time limited, the Legislative act required by the act of Congress aforesaid, and has already received credit at the Treasury for the sum of $222,810 06, for having previously expended in fortifications the sum of $136,533 82. That no other State has acceded to the terms offered by the said act of Congress.

The committee further report, that, by the immediate operation of the said act of Congress, and of the Legislature of the State of New York, that State was exonerated and released from a very considerable part of the balance reported, to wit, the sum of $891,129 31; the balance reported against the State being to that amount more than the sum subscribed on the assumption of the United States in the debt of that State, the sum so subscribed amounts to $1,183,716 69; that the sum of $891,129 31, exceeds the whole amount of the balance reported to be due from any one of the States, and the aggregate amount of the whole of the balances, with the exception of the balance reported to be due from the State of Delaware.

The committee, without entering into a discussion of the principles whereon the settlement of the accounts by the Commissioners was founded, remark, that as none of the States but the State of New York has manifested any disposition to pay the balances reported against them, whether the terms offered by the said act of Congress operate favorably or not, and none of them have assented to the justice or equity of the claim of the United States, and no means exist of exacting payment, it seems unwise to keep alive a claim which cannot be enforced, and may have the effect of producing irritation and exciting discontent; and as the act of Congress has already released the State of New York from so large an amount, and enabled that State, with ease and advantage, to discharge the residue of the balance reported to be due from that State, the committee are of opinion that a release of the balances due from the other States is expedient, and for this purpose report a bill, which is submitted.

FRIDAY, February 20.

A petition of sundry persons residing on lands belonging to the United States, and lying between the waters of the Muskingum and Scioto rivers, in the Northwestern Territory, was presented to the House and read, praying to be allowed a preemption right to the lands on which the petitioners are settled, on terms more favorable than those heretofore granted to them by law.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to Mr. DENNIS, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. CHRISTIE, with instructions to examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereon, to the House.

Mr. MACON, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred, on the twenty-third of December last, the petition of Charles Tomkins, in behalf of Arnold Henry Dohrman and others, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be authorized to issue a patent for the thirteenth township in the seventh range, to Arnold Henry Dohrman, or his legal representatives, agreeably to a resolution of Congress of the first day of October, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that the Committee of Claims do prepare and bring in the same.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill to revive and continue "An act declaring the consent of Congress to an act of the State of Maryland, passed the twenty-eighth of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, for the appointment of a health officer."

FEBRUARY, 1801.

Samuel Harrison Smith.

H. OF R.

Ordered, That the said motion be referred to the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, and that they do prepare and bring in a bill or bills pursuant thereto.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the committee appointed, on the seventeenth instant, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that Thomas Jefferson is elected President of the United States, for the term commencing on the fourth of March next, reported that the committee had performed that service.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments reported yesterday, from the Committee of the whole House, to whom was committed the bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," and the same being read, were, on the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

The said bill was then further amended at the Clerk's table, and, together with the amendments, ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee of Claims, made the twenty-sixth ultimo, on the several petitions of Alexander Roxburgh, Emory Sudler, and Elizabeth his wife, Benjamin Bird, Griffith Jones, David Jones, Philip Bush; and a bill which passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, for the relief of the representatives of Samuel Lapsley, deceased; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported their disagreement to the same.

SAMUEL HARRISON SMITH.

A motion being made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House, in directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to order and expel from the gallery of this House, Samuel Harrison Smith, a citizen of the United States, has assumed a power not given him by the rules of this House, and deprived the said Samuel Harrison of a right which can only be forfeited by disorderly behaviour.

Resolved, unanimously, That the Speaker be excused from deciding whether the said motion is in order or not.

Mr. DAVIS.—Mr. Speaker, my intention is to call for the resolution laid on the table by me the other day, which relates to the conduct of the Speaker towards Mr. Smith. But before I call up the resolution I will remark that I have not introduced it with a view to afford myself an opportunity of venting invectives or personalities against the Speaker. The due respect to this House forbids a conduct of that sort. The number of days the Speaker has seen, compared with my own, forbids it. I contend for principle; and those who differ from me on this point, in opinion, may meet me on this ground, and, by a fair and dispassionate argument, discuss the subject. If they choose to do so I shall be satisfied; it will be the most agreeable method to me. But if gentlemen are disposed to introduce asperity into the debate, I am ready to repel it.

The question was then taken, to wit: "Is this motion in order?"

And it passed in the negative—yeas 49, nays 54, as follows:

NAYS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, William Craik, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thomas Evans, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Samuel Goode, Chauncey Goodrich, Elizur Goodrich, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, Archibald Henderson, William H. Smith, James Sheafe, Samuel Tenney, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, Robert Wain, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

And so the said motion was decided not to be in order.

Mr. GALLATIN moved the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the power of the Speaker, or Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, shall not be construed to extend (unless by consent of the House, previously obtained, or in case of disorderly behaviour) to the expulsion of any person, either from the lobby, when introduced by any member of the House, or from the gallery, when the same is generally opened.

The previous question was called for by five members, to wit: "Shall the main question to agree to the said motion be now put?"

Whereupon, the said question being under consideration, Mr. LIVINGSTON having addressed the Speaker, did, in the opinion of the Speaker, proceed to debate the main question, and being thereupon called to order by the Speaker, the said member did not immediately sit down, pursuant to the rule of the House, and was thereupon again called to order by the Speaker: Whereupon,

An appeal was made to the House from the decision of the Speaker,

And, on the question of concurring with the Speaker in his said station, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 60, nays 42, as follows:

THE MINT.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

*Gentlemen of the Senate, and
Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:*

I transmit to Congress a report received this morning from Elias Boudinot, Esq., Director of the Mint, dated February the thirteenth, one thousand eight hundred and one, which will require the attention and decision of Congress, before the close of the session.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Feb. 20, 1801.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 13, 1801.

The Director considers it his duty to inform the President, that Monday last was the day, directed by law, on which the assays of the reserved pieces of coin should be made, in the presence of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Chief Justice, and Attorney General; but none of those officers have attended, nor could indeed have been expected; and the Director has not been informed of any other provision, yet made by law, to accomplish the same purpose. By this means not only the check established by law on the coin of the United States is frustrated, but the reserved pieces are still locked up, and the depositors complain of being thus deprived of the use of their property. The design of bringing this subject before the President, is, that the Director may be instructed what steps to take on this occasion.

It is also necessary to inform the President, that, by the act of Congress of the 16th July, 1790, all offices attached to the seat of Government shall be removed to the district accepted for the seat of Government of the United States by the said act, by their respective holders, on the first Monday of December, 1800, and shall, after the said day, cease to be executed elsewhere; but, by an act of the last session of Congress, the Mint is to remain at Philadelphia till the fourth day of March next, anything in the said act to the contrary notwithstanding. This act expires on the fourth of March next, and unless some other provision is made by law before that day, it will be difficult to ascertain the duty of the Director, except to prevent any further operation of the Mint at Philadelphia. He wishes, therefore, for instructions from the President, as to his conduct with regard to the Mint, in case further provision, by law, should not be made; at all events, the public property here should be attended to.

All which is respectfully submitted to the President.

The Message and report accompanying the same were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

SATURDAY, February 21.

An engrossed bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," was read the third time, and passed.

A petition of sundry inhabitants of the States

Adjutant and Inspector General.

H. OF R.

of Delaware and Maryland was presented to the House and read, praying that more efficient measures may be adopted by Congress for the recovery of slaves escaping from their masters and taking refuge in any of the neighboring States.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to the committee appointed, on the twenty-second ultimo, to inquire into the expediency of making further provision to prevent the concealing or harboring of slaves escaping from one State to another, and to and from the Territories of the United States.

Ordered, That the Message from the President of the United States respecting the Mint, presented yesterday, be referred to the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, to whom was this day referred the Message of the President of the United States made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That it is expedient that the Mint remain in the city of Philadelphia until the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and three, and that, during the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia, it is expedient that the duties now enjoined on the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, the Secretary for the Department of State, and the Attorney General of the United States, by the eighteenth section of the act, entitled "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States," passed the second day of April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, be performed by ———.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution: and that the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business do prepare and bring in the same.

Mr. PLATT, from the same committee, presented a bill concerning the Mint; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

Mr. P., from the same committee, presented a bill declaring the consent of Congress to an act of the State of Maryland, passed the twenty-eighth of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, for the appointment of a health officer; which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

Ordered, That the committee to whom was referred the Message from the President of the United States, relative to the disposition of the public property in his possession, be discharged from the consideration thereof, and that the same be referred to the Joint Committee appointed, on the eighteenth instant, to inquire what further measures ought to be taken for the accommodation of the President of the United States.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of the whole House, to whom was yesterday referred the report of the Committee of Claims on the several petitions of Alexander Roxburgh and others: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth disagree with the Committee of the whole House in their disagreement to the said report, and doth agree to the report of the Committee of Claims. And thereupon, Resolved, That the several petitions of Alexander Roxburgh, Emory Sudler, junior, and wife, Benjamin Bird, Griffith Jones, David Jones, Philip Bush, Tobias Rudolph, Samuel Gibbs, and Benjamin Kendrick, ought not to be granted.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business, made the sixth instant, and which lay on the table, relative to an augmentation of the salaries of certain District Judges; Whereupon,

Ordered, That the said report be committed to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House, accordingly, resolved itself into the said committee; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again,

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia; to which Committee of the Whole was also committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

Mr. BAYARD moved the following resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill to amend the Common Law, so as to define and limit the punishment upon prosecutions for libels; and to enable a defendant, upon such prosecution, to give the truth of the matter charged as a libel, in evidence, in his defence.

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

The enclosed report to me, made by the acting Secretary of War, on the fourteenth of this month, appears to be so well founded in all respects, that I recommend it to the consideration of Congress.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Feb. 20, 1801.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, Feb. 14, 1801.

SIR: Great inconveniences being experienced in the Army, from the want of a competent general staff, I conceive it to be my duty to submit the matter to your consideration. Though the Army is at present a small one, the duties of Adjutant and Inspector General must be performed; and, from the nature of our service, in small detachments, these duties become more laborious than in an Army acting in one compact body. At present an officer in the line of the Army resides at the seat of Government for these purposes, but there is no law allowing him any compensation for these extra services. As he is obliged to keep an office and be constantly employed himself, and also constantly to employ a clerk, it cannot be expected that he can continue to do the duties without compensation beyond his pay in the line. Perhaps a sufficient power rests in the Secretary of War to allow him an adequate sum for his extra labor and expenses. But, if this be true, it is a loose discretion, which, I conceive, ought to be directed by law. It is my opinion, that a law authorizing the appointing of a field officer in the line, to perform the duties, and giving him additional compensation for his services, and also giving him an assistant from among the subaltern officers, would promote regularity in the Department, discipline in the Army, and public economy.

H. OF R.

FEBRUARY, 1801.

I have the honor to be, with profound respect, sir, your obedient and faithful servant,

SAMUEL DEXTER.

The President of the United States.

The said Message, and report accompanying the same, were read, and ordered to be referred to Mr. RUTLEDGE, Mr. OTIS, and Mr. TENNEY.

PRESIDENT ELECT.

MR. PINCKNEY, from the committee instructed on the eighteenth instant to wait on the PRESIDENT elect, to notify him of his election, reported that the committee had performed that service, and addressed the PRESIDENT elect in the following words, to wit:

"The committee beg leave to express their wishes for the prosperity of your Administration; and their sincere desire that it may promote your own happiness and the welfare of our country."

To which the PRESIDENT elect was pleased to make the following reply:

"I receive, gentlemen, with profound thankfulness, this testimony of confidence from the great Representative Council of our nation: It fills up the measure of that grateful satisfaction which had already been derived from the suffrages of my fellow-citizens themselves, designating me as one of those to whom they were willing to commit this charge, the most important of all others to them. In deciding between the candidates, whom their equal vote presented to your choice, I am sensible that age has been respected rather than more active and useful qualifications.

"I know the difficulties of the station to which I am called, and feel, and acknowledge, my incompetence to them: But, whatsoever of understanding, whatsoever of diligence, whatsoever of justice, or of affectionate concern for the happiness of man, it has pleased Providence to place within the compass of my faculties, shall be called forth for the discharge of the duties confided to me, and for procuring to my fellow-citizens all the benefits which our Constitution has placed under the guardianship of the General Government.

"Guided by the wisdom and patriotism of those to whom it belongs to express the Legislative will of the nation, I will give to that will a faithful execution.

"I pray you, gentlemen, to convey to the honorable body from which you are deputed, the homage of my humble acknowledgments, and the sentiments of zeal and fidelity by which I shall endeavor to merit these proofs of confidence from the nation, and its representatives; and accept, yourselves, my particular thanks for the obliging terms in which you have been pleased to communicate their will.

"THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"FEBRUARY 20, 1801."

SEDITION ACT.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill to repeal part of an act, entitled "An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States,' and to continue in force the residue of the same."

On the question that the said bill be engrossed for a third reading—

MR. DAWSON said, when the law which this bill is intended to continue was first passed, I gave to it my dissent; I did it from a conviction on my mind that it does violate that Constitution which I have sworn to support, and from a persuasion that the then state of things did not require it; that while it begat an unjust suspicion of the American character, it was a stain on our code of legislation.

If these were my impressions at that time, some reflection since, aided by the productions of men whose names and talents will be long remembered, and a knowledge of the sentiments of the State from which I come, and of the people whom I represent, have confirmed those impressions, and have resolved me to vote against that bill in every shape and in every stage, and I hope that it will not be suffered to be engrossed. Sir, it is well remembered by me, nor can it be forgotten by any gentleman, on what grounds this law was advocated and first passed; it was then supported and pressed upon us as a necessary link in a chain of measures which a majority of the two Houses of Congress thought proper to adopt to meet a particular crisis—to guard against the supposed intrigues of a foreign nation—to give respectability and energy to our Executive—to prevent its falling into disrepute with the people, and to punish factious individuals. The history of the last two years has, I am persuaded, convinced gentlemen how mistaken were their opinions of the American character. With me they must now believe that whatever difference there may be in our political principles, when the safety, freedom, or honor of our country are threatened by a foreign nation, like a band of brothers we will rally round our Government, and support it by means which the Constitution of our country authorizes, and which the energy of the case may require. How far this law has given respectability or energy to our Administration I will not pretend to say; the events of the present day is an ample comment on that point; but, after the experience which we have had, since some of the objects for which it was formed do not exist, and others have not been answered, I did hope that no attempt would have been made to continue it, and that it would have been suffered to expire like its twin-brother, the Alien law. In this hope, however, I have been disappointed; gentlemen have come forward and supported it with a zeal, not uncommon to them on other occasions, and unexpected in the present, when we were taught to believe that they were at least indifferent about it, and new reasons have been assigned for its continuance—formerly it was thought necessary to protect the Administration against the people; and now, sir, it is wanted to guard individuals against an Administration which may be weak or wicked. Experience has, I am persuaded, convinced gentlemen that it has not answered the first purpose, and I hope they will find it unnecessary for the latter. Into whatever hands the Administration of our country may fall, its acts ought to be examined with that freedom which becomes freemen, and with that decency which becomes gentlemen; so long as they are guided by justice and wisdom, they will be supported with decision and firmness by the friends to the Administration; whenever they shall descend from these great principles, the voice of the people will again sweep the actors from the political theatre.

FEBRUARY, 1801.

Sedition Act.

H. OF R.

This law, sir, has been advocated, because it is said to ameliorate the common law of England, and on this argument much dependence has been placed; however, admitting it to be true, on a moment's reflection it will not be found to merit any consideration; for, sir, let it be remembered that the opponents to this law are also the opponents to the adoption of that law as the law of the United States, and do not think it authorized by the Constitution; this is the doctrine which they have uniformly contended for, and which, pardon me if I say, has been established as fully as one point possibly can be; it is not therefore probable, nay, I think it impossible, that they ever should appeal to it to shield them. No, sir, supported by the justice and policy of their measures, I trust they will need the aid of neither the Alien, Sedition, nor Common law.

Sir, it will be unnecessary for me to touch on the unconstitutionality of this law; it has been proven over and over again in this House, and in every part of the continent, and if what has been said and written has not convinced gentlemen, no effect would be produced by anything which I could say. But, sir, as some of the objects for which the law was first enacted have passed by, and others have not been answered—as the friends to the approaching Administration do not wish it for their protection, and the opponents will not need it for theirs, I do hope that those gentlemen who doubt about the constitutionality will vote with us, and that the bill will not be permitted to be engrossed.

The question was then taken, and the engrossment refused, 49 to 53, as follows:

MONDAY, February 23.

An engrossed bill declaring the consent of Congress to an act of the State of Maryland, passed the twenty-eighth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, for the appointment of a health officer, was read the third time and passed.

A petition of Notley Young and others, of the City of Washington, was presented to the House and read, praying that the consent of Congress may be given to an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, for erecting a bridge over the Eastern branch of the Potomac river.

Ordered, That the said petition be referred to Mr. JOHN CHEW THOMAS, Mr. CRAIK, and Mr. DENNIS.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred, on the eighteenth instant, the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act to establish the district of Bristol, and to annex the towns of Kittery and Berwick to the district of Portsmouth," reported that, in the opinion of the committee, it would be proper for the House to agree to the said bill without amendment.

Ordered, That the said bill be now read the third time.

The said bill was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MACON, from the Committee of Claims, presented a bill for the relief of Arnold Henry Dohrman, or his legal representatives; which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred the petition of sundry merchants of the town of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, made the following report:

That the petitioners deposited, under the care of the officers of the customs, in the manner prescribed by law, a quantity of teas imported by them from China. That, on the twenty-first of January last, the said goods were destroyed by fire, and the petitioners pray that they may not be compelled to pay the duties accruing on the same.

Your committee are of opinion, that, as the goods were under the care of the officers of the customs, at the time they were consumed by fire, and not subject to the control of the owners, and that, as granting relief in this case, cannot establish a precedent dangerous to the revenue, the prayer of the petition ought to be granted.

They, therefore, submit the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to report a bill to exonerate the petitioners from the payment of duties on such goods as were deposited, under the care of the officers of the customs, at the time they were consumed by fire.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, relative to an augmentation of salaries of certain District Judges; and, after some time spent therein the Committee rose and reported a resolution thereupon; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That it is expedient to augment the salaries of the District Judges for the districts of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, respectively.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business do prepare and bring in the same.

Mr. PLATT, from the last mentioned committee, presented a bill to augment the salaries of the District Judges of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, respectively; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

On motion it was

Resolved, That the committee appointed to inquire what alterations ought to be made in the times of holding the Courts of the United States, be directed to inquire into the expediency of changing the place of holding a court from Baird's town to Frankfort; and report their opinion thereupon by bill, or otherwise.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill making appropriations for the Navy of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

Ordered, That the Committee of Ways and Means be authorized to report a bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to establish a General Stamp Office."

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the last mentioned committee, presented a bill to amend the act, entitled, "An act to establish a General Stamp Office;" which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill sent from the Senate, entitled, "An act concerning the District of Columbia," to which Committee of the whole House was also committed the bill for the government of the District of Columbia; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported their agreement to the bill from the Senate, with several amendments; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the amendments be engrossed, and, together with the said bill, be read the third time to-morrow.

TUESDAY, February 24.

An engrossed bill making appropriations for the Navy of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one, was read the third time and passed.

An engrossed bill for the relief of Arnold Henry Dohrman, or his legal representative, was read the third time and passed.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia," together with the amendments agreed to yesterday, was read the third time; and, on the question that the same do pass, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 57, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—Willis Alston, George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Bird, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William Cooper, William Craik, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, George Dent, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Abiel Foster, Jonathan Freeman, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, Archibald Henderson, David Holmes, Benjamin Huger, James H. of the United States be requested to direct to be laid before this House an account of the depredations committed on the commerce of the United States by vessels of Great Britain, of which complaint has been made to the Government.

Ordered, That Mr. BAYARD and Mr. RUTLEDGE be appointed a committee to wait on the President of the United States with the foregoing resolution.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, presented a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ Clerks for completing the abstracts of the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

On motion, it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the propriety of amending the act, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio and above the mouth of Kentucky river,'" so far as relates to the compensation of the Receivers of Public Moneys; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Ordered, That Mr. GALLATIN, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. JOHN BROWN, be appointed a committee pursuant to the said resolution.

On motion, it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to direct such an arrangement of the chamber of this House as will be best adapted to the preservation of order.

Ordered, That Mr. NICHOLAS, Mr. MATTOON, Mr. TALIAFERRO, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. MORRIS, Mr. JOHN C. SMITH, Mr. CLAIBORNE, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. HARPER, Mr. BAER, Mr. WOODS, Mr. IMLAY, Mr. CHAMPLIN, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. BAYARD, be appointed a committee pursuant to the said resolution.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill further to alter and to establish certain post roads; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the committee to whom was referred, on the thirty-first of December last, the memorial of Pleasant Henderson and others, inhabitants of the State of North Carolina, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That it is unnecessary for this House to adopt any further measures at this time on the subject of the memorial of Pleasant Henderson and others.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House on the bill supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments;" and after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment.

Ordered, That the said bill be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures on the petition of sundry merchants of the town of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, made the twenty-third instant; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported a resolution, which was twice read and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to report a bill to exonerate the petitioners from the payment of duties on such goods as were deposited under the care of the officers of the customs at the time they were consumed by fire.

WEDNESDAY, February 25.

An engrossed bill further to alter and to establish certain post roads was read the third time, and passed.

An engrossed bill supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments," was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented, according to order, a bill to amend the act altering the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point; which was read twice and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. DENNIS, from the committee to whom was referred, on the twentieth instant, the petition of sundry inhabitants in the Northwestern Territory, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the prayer of the said petition cannot be granted.

Ordered, That the committee appointed, yesterday, to inquire into the propriety of amending the act, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river,'" so far as relates to the compensation of the Receivers of Public Moneys, be also instructed to inquire into the propriety of amending the same law, so far as relates to the rule according to which discounts shall be calculated in case of prompt payment, and that they report by bill, or otherwise.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to amend the act, entitled, "An act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters;" which was twice read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee of Revision and Unfinished Business, made a further report, in part; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BIRD, from the committee to whom was referred, on the third instant, the petition of Theodosius Fowler, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury cause a revision of the accounts of Theodosius

Fowler, under the contract of the twenty-eighth of October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, to be made and stated, and that, in said account, where there is no certain and absolute proof, such presumptive proof as the case affords be introduced: and that a report of the same, together with the Secretary's opinion thereon, be exhibited to Congress at the next session; and that, in the mean time, the suit in the Circuit Court of the State of New York against said Fowler be stayed.

Ordered, That a bill or bills, or resolution, be brought in, pursuant to the said resolution; and that Messrs. BIRD, MORRIS, and H. LEE, do prepare and bring in the same.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States,' and to repeal the act, entitled 'An act to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors of the Revenue,'" with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House. The Senate have also passed the bill, entitled "An act giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio," with several amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The amendments proposed by the Senate to the last mentioned bill were read and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RUTLEDGE, from the committee to whom was referred, on the twenty-first instant, the Message from the President of the United States, enclosing a report from the acting Secretary of War, made a report; which was read, and is as follows:

"The committee to whom were referred the Message of the President of the United States, of the twentieth instant, with a report from the Secretary of War to the President, of the fourteenth instant, report the following resolutions:

Resolved, That provision be made by law for the appointment of an Inspector and Adjutant General of the Army of the United States, and for an assistant to the Adjutant General.

Resolved, That provision be made by law for the compensation of the persons who have done the duties of Inspector and Adjutant General, from the first of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine."

And, on the question that the House do agree to the said resolutions contained in the said report, it passed in the negative.

The House proceeded to consider the amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States,' and to repeal the act, entitled 'An act to enlarge the powers of the Surveyors of the Revenue.'" Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill providing for a Naval Peace Establishment, and for other purposes; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were read, but, an adjournment being called for, the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 26.

An engrossed bill to amend the act altering the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLATIN, from the committee appointed, presented a bill fixing the compensation of Receivers of Public Moneys for lands of the United States, and regulating the mode of calculating discounts in case of prompt payment for the said lands; which was twice read, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. BIRD, from the committee appointed, presented a resolution on the case of Theodosius Fowler; which was read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury cause a revision of the accounts of Theodosius Fowler, under the contract of the twenty-eighth of October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, to be made and stated; and that, in said accounts, where there is no certain and absolute proof, such presumptive proof as the case affords be introduced; and that a report of the same, together with the Secretary's opinion thereon, be exhibited to Congress at the next session; and that, in the mean time, the suit in the Circuit Court of the State of New York against said Fowler, be stayed.

The question was taken thereupon, and resolved in the affirmative.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to retain a further sum on drawbacks for the expenses incident to the allowance and payment thereof, and in lieu of stamp duties on debentures; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. S. SMITH, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, presented a bill authorizing the remission of duties on certain teas destroyed by fire, while under the care of officers of the customs in Providence, Rhode Island; which was read twice and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

NAVAL PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments reported, yesterday, from the Committee of the whole House to whom was committed the bill providing for a Naval Peace Establishment, and for other purposes: Whereupon,

The amendments reported from the Committee of the whole House were, on the question sever-

Otis, Josiah Parker, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, John Rutledge, James Sheafe, Richard Thomas, Peleg Wadsworth, and Henry Woods.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to amend and continue in force the act, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported two amendments thereto; which were read.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be postponed until to-morrow.

FRIDAY, February 27.

An engrossed bill to amend the act, entitled "An act to retain a further sum on drawbacks, for the expenses incident to the allowance and payment thereof, and in lieu of stamp duties on debentures," was read the third time, and passed.

A memorial of Thomas Claxton, James Mathers, and Thomas Dunn, Doorkeepers to Congress, was presented to the House and read, praying that they may be permitted to retain the possession of three small tenements, the property of the public, on such terms as may be thought reasonable.

Ordered, That the said memorial be referred to Mr. GREGG, Mr. FREEMAN, and Mr. GLEN; that they do report thereon by bill or otherwise.

A Message was received from the President of the United States transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, with sundry documents, relative to the subject of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the twenty-fourth instant. Laid on the table.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee appointed to inquire into the expenditure of money made by the Commissioners of the City of Washington; the disposition of public property made by them; and, generally, into all the transactions of the Commissioners which relate to the execution of the trust confided to them by the President of the United States, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to abolish the Board of Commissioners of the City of Washington, and to direct that the business of that Board be transferred to the Department of the Treasury.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President of the United States, to prepare a plan of the city of Washington, delineating the streets, squares, and public grounds therein; and to report the same to Congress in December next.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to authorize the sale of lands in the District of Columbia, under proper regulations, to raise the moneys which may at any time be due and unpaid on contracts for the sale of such lands.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in pursuant to the said resolutions; and that Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. SHEAFE, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. CRAIK, and Mr. TENNEY, do prepare and bring in the same.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives .

I transmit to you, in conformity with your request of the seventeenth instant, two reports; one from the acting Secretary of War, the other from the Secretary of the Treasury, of the twenty-sixth, with details of the expenditure of the moneys appropriated by the acts of the twentieth May, and sixth of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, and of the tenth of May, one thousand eight hundred,

JOHN ADAMS.

And, on the question that the House do agree with the Committee of the whole House in their said disagreement, it was resolved in the affirmative.

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, and that the title be "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.'"

REMONSTRANCE OF GEORGIA.

Mr. DANA, from the committee to whom was referred, on the seventh ultimo, the memorial and remonstrance of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, made a report; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

The report is as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the Address and Remonstrance of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, submit the following Report:

The remonstrance complains of two acts of Congress respecting the Mississippi Territory; one passed in April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety eight, the other in May, one thousand eight hundred; and prays for their repeal.

The tract of country called the Mississippi Territory, is bounded on the West by the river Mississippi, on the East by the river Appalachicola, or Chatahoochee, on the South by the southern boundary of the United States, and on the North by a line drawn from the confluence of the river Yazoo with the Mississippi, due East to the before mentioned river Chatahoochee.

For a view of the claim of the United States to the territory in question, the committee, in the present instance, deem it sufficient to refer to a report of the Attorney General, made to the Senate, at the first session of the fourth Congress, and to the report of a committee of the House of Representatives, made at the first session of the sixth Congress. The last mentioned report also contains a summary statement of a variety of individual claims to land within the territory.

The claim of Georgia is particularly stated in the remonstrance referred to your committee.

The two acts of Congress, of which the remonstrance complains, have provided for an adjustment of those claims, through the agency of Commissioners; and also for the establishment of a government over the Mississippi Territory, similar to that established by the ordinance of Congress, of July one thousand seven hundred and eighty seven, for the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio; saving and reserving to the State of Georgia all her right or claim to the said territory.

Commissioners have accordingly been appointed on the part of the United States, and also on the part of Georgia, for negotiating an adjustment of their respective claims. No report has yet been laid before Congress from the Commissioners of the United States; but the business of their commission is understood to be yet pending.

Considering this state of things, the committee deem it proper for them to abstain from any particular discussion of the several claims to the Mississippi Territory, while a hope is cherished that an amicable adjustment may be ultimately effected. Nor do they think it expedient to adopt any measure which may be prejudicial to an object so desirable.

The committee therefore submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it would not be proper at this time for the House to take any further order on the Address and Remonstrance of the Legislature of the State of Georgia.

MONDAY, March 2.

An engrossed bill supplementary to the act, entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia," was read the third time, and passed.

President's House.

MARCH, 1801.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES elect, which was read, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1801.

SIR: I beg leave through you to inform the Honorable the House of Representatives of the United States, that I shall take the oath which the Constitution prescribes to the President of the United States before he enters on the execution of his office, on Wednesday, the fourth instant, at twelve o'clock, in the Senate Chamber.

I have the honor to be, with the greatest respect, sir, your most obedient, and most humble servant,

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

HON. THEODORE SEDGWICK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Ordered, That said letter do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Governor of Maryland, which was read, and is as follows:

IN COUNCIL, ANNAPOLIS,

February 26, 1801.

SIR: We have the honor to forward to you, for the use of the honorable body over which you preside, a set of the laws of this State, pursuant to a resolution of the Legislature.

We have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servants,

BEN. OGLE.

THE HON. THEODORE SEDGWICK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Ordered, That the said letter do lie on the table.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House on the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose, and reported their agreement to the same, with several amendments.

And, on the question that the House do agree with the Committee of the Whole in their agreement to the said amendments, with amendments, it was resolved in the affirmative.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio:" Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendments.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill further to amend the act, entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States;" and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported two amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill for erecting light-houses on New Point Comfort, and on Smith's Point, in the State of Virginia, and on Faulkner's Island, in Long Island Sound, in the State of Connecticut; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported several amendments thereto; which were severally twice read, and agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy of the United States for the year one thousand eight hundred and one." The Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act further to alter and to establish certain post roads," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House. The Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to amend the act altering the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act directing the mode of estimating certain foreign coins and currencies, and of making out invoices in certain cases:" Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendments.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to amend the act altering the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point:" Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendments.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act further to alter and to establish certain post roads:" Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendments.

MR. MACON, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the several petitions of Jacob Barnitz, Philip Sloan, Thomas Parker, Peter Charles L'Enfant, Mile Riley, Charles Hyde, Margaret Culbertson, Mary Hay, James Denniston, Mathias Shroyer, Philip Lightfoot, William Ray, John Followell, John Hall, Leonard Jarvis, William Milton and others, and the bill for the relief of William Nichols, made a report; which was read and considered: Whereupon,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be discharged therefrom, and that the further consideration of the said petitions and bill be postponed until the next session of Congress.

PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for the further accommodation of the President of the United States.

The object of this bill was to apply six thousand dollars, remaining of the appropriation of $15,000, during the last session, for furnishing the President's house—together with the proceeds of such furniture as, being unfit for use, might be sold, to procure such additional furniture as might be necessary.

Mr. HARPER contended that the sum was too small for so large and elegant a house as was provided for that officer. Though the house was neither too large nor too elegant, yet the furniture was by no means sufficient to furnish it in that style it demanded. Perhaps, he said, the furniture might produce five thousand dollars, which added to the six thousand dollars, and to that added ten thousand dollars, he would now move as an amendment to the bill. This amounted to twenty thousand dollars, for furniture, which he believed was as small a quantity as would be any way adequate to that place.

Mr. NICHOLAS said the committee (of which he was one) had endeavored to procure the best possible information of the state of the furniture now in the house; they were well satisfied that the sum in hand which the bill proposed to expend, with the proceeds of sale from such as might be unfit, would be perfectly competent to that decency of style which the manner of living of that officer could require. But, he said, he should despair of forming an agreement of opinions as to the sum requisite, without the style could be ascertained in which it was desirable to support the President of the United States.

Mr. S. SMITH hoped the motion would not prevail. He could see no necessity whatever for more to be appropriated than the unexpended six thousand dollars proposed. In twelve years, he said, there had been thirty thousand dollars used for this object. The present furniture, with what this money and the proceeds of the sale would procure, would make a very handsome quantity, and be fully adequate to the wants of the House. From his observation in such parts of the house as were occupied, he could perceive no want of furniture nor elegance.

Mr. CRAIK differed in opinion with his colleague (Mr. SMITH) that the style of the rooms now furnished was such as was desirable. What then could be said, when it was considered that the largest and most elegant rooms were not yet furnished? But furniture must be procured for these apartments before the next session of Congress, and it would certainly require much more money than was proposed to be used upon it. If it was considered that the whole sum was appropriated every four years, he hoped gentlemen would cease their objections to the ten thousand dollars proposed.

Mr. MACON believed the sum already appropriated to be adequate to all the style and elegance that officer would require. For his part he could see no more occasion for furnishing a house for the President than for the Heads of Departments. If he chose to live in style, twenty-five thousand dollars a year was quite sufficient to enable him to do it, and if he could not live upon that sum, he could not live upon any. Forty-five thousand dollars had been appropriated for President's furniture, thirty-six thousand or more of which had been expended; but now, in addition to the six thousand on hand, a gentleman wanted to give ten thousand more! For what, he would ask? If that sum was not enough, no sum whatever would be enough. He believed this sum would be sufficient for fifty years service, and he hoped the House would not appropriate a farther sum. If the style of the furniture was raised so very high, he should not be surprised soon if there was to be a proposition to make the salary a little more adequate to the style of the furniture, and raise that too, to bring him up to the style of his furniture.

Mr. BAYARD wished not to extend it so far as the gentleman from South Carolina. As heretofore fourteen thousand dollars had been appropriated, he would propose to this six thousand dollars, supposing the proceeds of sales to amount to three thousand dollars, to add fourteen thousand, a medium which he considered sufficient.

Mr. HARPER observed that the proceeds of the sales had been usually granted in addition to the money appropriated. He wished the sum of ten thousand dollars, as proposed, to be appropriated; however, as objections were made, he was willing to modify it, and make it eight thousand dollars, which, with the six thousand remaining, would make the usual sum of fourteen thousand dollars; to which sum he hoped no gentleman would object.

Mr. VARNUM reminded the Committee, that the fourteen thousand dollars first given, were to furnish an empty house; the furniture then purchased remained during the eight years of General WASHINGTON's administration, and he believed no complaints of inadequacy were heard. At the close of his period of office, and before Mr. ADAMS came into office, fourteen thousand dollars more were appropriated, together with the proceeds of the sale of such as was unfashionable or decayed. He did not know that the amount of the sales was ascertained, but it was added in the additional purchase. To this had been added the appropriation of last year to furnish the present house, all of which had not been expended. He always had supposed that the whole of these sums were intended solely for the providing of household furniture. It appeared, however, that this law had received a different construction by the President, than he had heard given to it by any gentleman on the floor; for in the inventory of furniture remaining on hand, which had been supplied to the house, he saw an item of seven horses and a carriage, and even a market wagon, together with harness, &c. This plainly evinced that the House had appropriated fifteen thousand dollars for household furniture—the President had thought himself authorized to purchase carriages, horses, and perhaps other things which convenience might suggest.

Mr. MACON said, the arguments of the gentleman from Delaware, who had proposed a sum much more to his liking, because it was less, went to prove that fourteen thousand dollars must be appropriated every four years; but upon this principle there would be a great amount of furniture in a few years, by the sums being heaped on each other. Now, for his part, he was not willing to take away anything of the thirty thousand dollars which had been laid out, but he would even add to it the remaining sum in hand, and surely this must be sufficient, though in his opinion there would be no necessity for it.

Mr. S. SMITH thought gentlemen were completely acquainted with the quantity or the kind of furniture which had been provided for that house. The articles which had been mentioned were certainly improper items in household furniture. He much disapproved of the manner in which the money had been laid out, and believed no gentleman could approve of it, as a compliance with the law. However, he had no idea of going into the subject at this time, lest it should lead him further than he would wish to go.

Mr. HARPER said, the very argument used by the gentleman last up carried the evidence of its own impotence; for, if of this sum much had been expended upon other objects, not household furniture, it proved that there was the more occasion for money to be appropriated for the purpose to which that ought to be applied. He knew of no object to which the gentleman's observations were applied, otherwise than to evince his disposition to trample, very unworthily indeed, upon those who are already fallen. He hoped, however, that this disposition would not excite the gentleman to withhold such measures as were necessary to carry into execution what was already begun.

Mr. SMITH could not conceive how he had endeavored unworthily to trample upon the fallen. He reflected upon no individual, nor did he know the gentleman's meaning. To such persons as had been engaged in making this very improper selection of furniture, he did, however, refer. He meant to say, that if this money had been laid out upon furniture the house would have had a better appearance than at present, though at present he could see no deficiency.

The question on Mr. HARPER's motion, foreight thousand dollars, was taken and negatived.

Mr. BAYARD's, for five thousand, shared the same fate. Mr. HARPER moved four thousand, which was carried in the same way; on which Mr. H. withdrew the amendment altogether. The bill was engrossed, and passed its third reading during the day.

MAUSOLEUM TO WASHINGTON.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to erect a mausoleum for GEORGE WASHINGTON." Whereupon,

A motion was made and seconded to amend the amendment of the Senate to the first section of the said bill, by striking out, from the tenth line thereof, the word "fifty," for the purpose of inserting, in lieu thereof, the word "one hundred."

And the question being taken thereupon, it passed in the negative—yeas 34, nays 49, as follows:

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the committee appointed, on the twenty-third ultimo, to direct such an arrangement of the Chamber of this House as will be best adapted to the preservation of order, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to augment the salaries of the District Judges in the districts of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, respectively," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House. The Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act in addition to an act, entitled 'An act making provision for the further accommodation of the household of the President of the United States,'" with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act in addition to an act, entitled 'An act in addition to an act, entitled 'An act making provision for the further accommodation of the household of the President of the United States: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendment.

On motion, Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be authorized and directed to pay, out of the moneys appropriated to defray the contingent expenses of the House to the principal and engrossing clerks in the office of the Clerk of the House, respectively, two hundred dollars each, for their extra services during the present session.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act to prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from being concerned in trade, or commerce, or navigation;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from being concerned in trade, or commerce, or navigation," was read the first and second time.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, &c.

On a motion made and seconded that the House do come to the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be authorized and directed to pay to the Sergeant-at-Arms, out of the money appropriated to defray the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, the sum of ——— dollars for extra services:

Ordered, That the said motion be committed to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

The House, accordingly, resolved itself into the said committee; and, after sometimespent therein, the Committee rose and reported one amendment thereto; which was twice read, and agreed to by the House.

The said resolution was then further amended at the Clerk's table, and being again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be authorized and directed to pay to the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Doorkeeper and Assistant Doorkeeper, out of the money appropriated to defray the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, the sum of two hundred dollars, each, for extra services:

The question was taken that the House do agree to the same, and resolved in the affirmative, yeas 39, nays 20, as follows:

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate insist on their amendment, disagreed to by this House, to the bill, entitled "An act fixing the compensation of Receivers of Public Moneys for lands of the United States, and regulating the mode of calculating discounts in case of prompt payment for the said lands."

A motion was then made and seconded that the further consideration of the said bill and amendment be postponed until the next session of Congress.

And, the question being taken thereupon, it was resolved in the affirmative.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act fixing the compensation of Receivers of Public Moneys for lands of the United States, and regulating the mode of calculating discounts in case of prompt payment for the said lands," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the last mentioned bill: Whereupon,

Resolved, That this House doth agree to the said amendments, except the amendment for striking out the second section, to which this House doth disagree.

On motion, it was Resolved, That there be allowed to the Clerk of this House, to compensate for his extraordinary expenses during the present session of Congress, the sum of three hundred dollars, to be paid to him out of the moneys appropriated for defraying the contingent expenses of the House.

On motion, it was Resolved, That the Clerk of this House do pay to the Chaplain of this House the sum of one hundred dollars, out of the moneys appropriated for the contingent expenses of the House, in addition to the compension allowed him by law.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act to prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from being concerned in trade, or commerce, or navigation," was read the third time.

MR. S. SMITH said the evident tendency of the bill was to prevent the Executive selecting mercantile men to fill these offices. [Mr. LIVINGSTON had moved to add the Secretaries of State and of War.] He wished to know what occurrence had transpired to make such a prohibition necessary? None had been mentioned, none he believed had existed. In the particular instance of prohibiting the Secretary of the Treasury from engaging in trade, &c., there was more reason, from his having in his possession much public money, and because it would be exceedingly improper to open the means for him to trade or speculate with it; but there could not be the same occasion for prohibiting the other officers. If the prohibition were now to take place, it would be supposed by the world, that the gentlemen who had filled these offices had actually traded with the money which passed through their hands belonging to the public. One of the gentlemen, who was Secretary at War, was at the time he was chosen to office, a commercial man; but was it ever said, or even thought, that he acted dishonestly, or used public money to promote his private interest? He believed not. He thought there was no doubt of his integrity. Why, then, should the House prevent the President of the United States from choosing men for office out of what class of citizens his judgment might suggest? What, he would ask, had commercial men done to merit this peculiar mark of the distrust of the gentleman from New York? He wished gentlemen to look at the revenue laws and the duties. Were they not paid by commercial men? The amount of their actual payments at the custom-house and their general conduct, he thought, fully evinced the honor and the honesty of that class of men, and proved them worthy to be entrusted, as well as other citizens, with offices of trust. But did the gentleman suppose his proposition would effect this end? If so, he was mistaken; for if a man entrusted with public property, choose to use it speculation or in commerce, what was to prevent him, whether merchant or not? Other means could be found than those which every one could discover. He hoped the amendment and the law itself would be negatived.

Mr. CHRISTIE moved to postpone it till fifty minutes past 11 o'clock; which was not carried.

Mr. LIVINGSTON said he had attended in vain to hear any distinction drawn between the Secretary of the Navy and those of the State and War Departments. To that difference only the arguments ought to have gone, for no further did his motion go; but gentlemen had argued against the whole principle of the bill. The argument of the motion implying distrust might have had some weight as the bill stood before, but to include the heads of all the departments was a sufficient answer. It was not upon grounds of distrust that he made his motion; it was upon the wide, incontrovertible principle, that when a man is taken to fill either of those great departments, the country has a right to his whole time and his whole attention, that the motion was made. What, he would ask the gentleman last up, could have induced him to suppose that the merchant alone was pointed out as an object of distrust? Mr. L. declared he distrusted no particular set of men, but what figure would a merchant or a tradesman make at the head of either of these departments? The principle was incontrovertible, that nothing ought to interfere to divert attention from the public concerns of a high office. This was not a paltry question between the merchant and the lawyer. No more should a Judge of the United States be drawn from his studies or his bench by any other avocation he might wish to possess for lucre than should a Secretary from his office.

Mr. L. would further observe, that it was not from any misconduct of this kind which he had observed in those who had filled public offices. He rather wondered that it had not long ere now been introduced as a just principle in the management of public concerns. It was from this view he wished to introduce it; and how the reasons for the bill, without the amendment, could be supported, he could not conceive.

Mr. H. LEE contended that the President of the United States was to take his Cabinet from among the people of the United States, and ought not to be prohibited from selecting such men as he thought fit to fill the offices with credit to themselves and to the nation. Sir, when I see the President made the agent of these two Houses, and restricted by them, I see that high officer prostrate at your feet, and the liberties of the people gone! If gentlemen tell me that the President has yet his selection because the gentlemen may quit their business, I deny it. I say that a man, once become a merchant and continuing in that occupation for ten years, is a merchant for life; for let him leave off pursuits at any period, there must of necessity remain very much unfinished business, which, if he studies his own interest, must be attended to. Sir, trammel not your President in his choice; let him have the liberty of choosing men of honor and integrity, and you need not fear a derogation from those principles more than from men of independence. This new principle in legislation I am not for adopting. I never can deviate from those principles under which our happy Government has so long flourished. I am advocating principles, and giving to the President of the United States the same power, the same freedom of selection, I would have given four years ago, although the gentleman who fills that high office is not the same. Commercial men, sir, are the most competent for the office of Secretary of the Navy, because most acquainted with the foreign relations and concerns of our country. Preclude commercial men from being selected, and you preclude those the most qualified.

Mr. LIVINGSTON explained the motives of his conduct. He wished to preserve that system of conduct which he always had advocated; he wished to give to the Executive that direction and limitation he had always desired to do. It was always his opinion, and continued to be so, that if all men were honest there would be no occasion for laws; if all men were honest there would be no occasion for that House to sit to make them, and therefore they might go home and never return. But this was not the case; while there were men, there must be laws, and strict laws, to keep men to their duty.

Mr. H. LEE having obtained leave to speak again, further contended against the principle of the bill and amendments, and hoped the House would not place the President in such a subaltern situation as this measure would place him in, and snatch from him a prerogative his situation demanded.

Mr. CHAMPLIN was surprised that the gentleman from New York, a representative of a commercial city, should advocate such principles. He conceived it to be a question of confidence in the President of the United States, and perhaps would be of some weight, if that officer had not the power of removing the Secretaries of the different departments whenever he should think them unworthy of public confidence; or whenever they should use the public money to private purposes; or whenever they should neglect their business. This was certainly a very different case from that of a Judge, who could not be removed except upon misconduct, which could only be known by impeachment. He opposed the bill and the amendment, because it was an intrusion upon Executive privilege; because it must go to wound the officers who had been and are now employed; because it must go to prevent that selection of men whose talents and integrity may be most calculated for the general interest of the Union; and most of all, because it went to wound the Navy of the United States, whose well government and regulation depended very much upon the talents of the character who was placed at the head of that department; it was not because it affected this or that merchant or tradesman. He wished to see a man of property; a man of commercial knowledge; a man of experience; and a man who was attached to the Navy, at the head of that department. By this bill a man in that situation must be prohibited from placing his money in the public funds; from dealing in public lands; from putting it in commerce, or from using it in trade of any kind. Now, what was a man of large property to do with his money? It could not be supposed that men of large capital, or men of business, or men of experience, would accept an appointment under the limitations to which they must subject themselves.

Mr. MACON hoped the amendment would be agreed to, and the bill pass. He supposed the bill must have originated in the Senate, either from past experience, or from the intrinsic necessity of such a preventive to what might produce a public fraud, by public money being used to speculate for private advantage. Man is man wherever he is placed, and to guard against his frailties is wise legislation. He wished to confide the money of the people to no man further than was necessary.

Mr. S. SMITH answered, that it would be impossible, by any measure of this kind, to make a dishonest man act with integrity. It must be to the honor and honesty of the man the public property must be confided. He produced an instance of speculation in a public officer, who was entrusted with the good of the community; but it was not the act of a merchant, he said; and not from merchants, nor from any particular description of men, but men devoid of principle, evils were to be expected. On the contrary, integrity and honesty alone could insure the right use of a public confidence.

On the question, the amendment was lost.

The bill was also refused a third reading and lost.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. PAGE moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the House be presented to Theodore Sedgwick for his conduct while in the Chair of this House.

The question was taken whether this motion was in order. It was decided to be in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHRISTIE said he should not point out the improprieties in the conduct of the Speaker while in the Chair, otherwise than by his vote, though he possessed the right to call up to the recollection of the House the many inconsistencies his presidency had been marked with. In doing that, Mr. Speaker, I shall behave better to you than you have ever done to me.

The cry of "order!" "order!" prevented any more being said, and Mr. C. sat down.

The yeas and nays were then taken, and resulted—yeas 40, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—George Baer, Bailey Bartlett, James A. Bayard, John Brown, Christopher G. Champlin, William

Craik, Samuel W. Dana, John Davenport, Franklin Davenport, John Dennis, Joseph Dickson, William Edmond, Thos. Evans, Abiel Foster, Henry Glen, Chauncey Goodrich, Roger Griswold, William Barry Grove, Robert Goodloe Harper, Archibald Henderson, Benjamin Huger, James H. Inlay, John Wilkes Kittera, Henry Lee, Silas Lee, Lewis R. Morris, Robert Page, Thomas Pinckney, Jonas Platt, Leven Powell, John Reed, Nathan Read, William Shepard, John C. Smith, James Sheafe, Samuel Tenney, George Thatcher, John Chew Thomas, Lemuel Williams, and Henry Woods.

NAYS—Willis Alston, Theodorus Bailey, Robert Brown, Samuel J. Cabell, Gabriel Christie, William Charles Cole Claiborne, Thomas T. Davis, John Dawson, George Dent, Joseph Eggleston, John Fowler, Albert Gallatin, Andrew Gregg, John A. Hanna, Joseph Heister, David Holmes, Michael Leib, Matthew Lyon, James Lynn, Edward Livingston, Nathaniel Macon, Peter Muhlenberg, Anthony New, John Nicholas, John Randolph, John Smilie, John Smith, Samuel Smith, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Richard Stanford, David Stone, Thomas Sumter, Abram Trigg, John Trigg, and Joseph B. Varnum.

Whereupon, Mr. SPEAKER made his acknowledgments to the House in the manner following:

Accept, gentlemen, my thanks, I pray you, for the respectful terms in which you have been pleased to express the opinion you entertain of the manner in which I have discharged the arduous duties of the station to which I was raised by your kind regard.

Although I am conscious of having intended faithfully to execute the trust confided to this Chair, yet I am sensible that, whatever success may have attended my endeavors, is justly attributable to the candid, honorable, and firm support which you have constantly afforded. I cannot lay the least claim to merit for any thing that I have done; because the generous confidence which you had reposed in me, demanded that I should devote all my feeble talents to your service.

Being now about to retire from this House, and, as I hope, from the public councils forever, permit me, gentlemen, to bid you, collectively and individually, an affectionate farewell. It is true that I have long wished to indulge repose in the shade of private life; but the moment of separation inflicts an anguish inexpressible by language. It is a separation from men of dignity of character, of honorable sentiments, and of disinterested patriotism; an association with whom has been my pride and solace amidst all the fatigue and vexation of public life. Of the friendship of such men, long uninterrupted and cordial as it has been, I shall always cherish a grateful remembrance. May you receive the reward most grateful to generous spirits, the reward of witnessing, as the effects of your labors, the increasing prosperity, and happiness, and glory, of your country.

As the last words which I shall utter, as a public man, allow me to declare, that those with whom I have had the honor, here, to act and think, whose confidence I have enjoyed, whose bosoms have been opened to my inspection, in my cool and reflected opinion, deserve all of esteem, affection, and gratitude, which their countrymen can bestow. On this occasion I deem myself authorized, from the present circumstances, to make this declaration; and I do it in the most solemn manner, in the presence of the assembled Representatives of America; and not only so, but in the awful presence of that heart-searching Being to whom I feel myself responsible for all my conduct. May the Almighty keep you in his holy protection. Farewell.

MARCH, 1801.

Adjournment.

H. OF R.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have appointed a committee on their part, jointly, with such committee as may be appointed on the part of this House, to wait on the President of the United States, and to inform him that Congress is ready to adjourn without day, unless he may have any further communications to make to them.

The House proceeded to consider the foregoing resolution of the Senate, agreed to the same, and appointed Mr. PINCKNEY and Mr. GROVE the committee on the part of this House.

Mr. PINCKNEY, from the joint committee of the two Houses, appointed to notify the President of the United States of the proposed recess of Congress, reported that the committee had, according to order, performed that service, and that the President signified to them that he had no further communication to make, but the expression of his wishes for the health and happiness of the members, and a pleasant journey on their return to their homes and families.

Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that this House, having completed the business before them, are now ready to adjourn without day; and that the Clerk of this House do go with the said message.

The Clerk accordingly went with the said message; and being returned, Mr. SPEAKER adjourned the House, sine die.

APPENDIX

TO THE HISTORY OF THE SIXTH CONGRESS.

COMPRISING THE MOST IMPORTANT DOCUMENTS ORIGINATING DURING THAT CONGRESS, AND THE PUBLIC ACTS PASSED BY IT.

FRANCE.

[Communicated to Congress, December 5, 1799.]

*Gentlemen of the Senate, and
Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:*

I transmit to Congress certain documents which have relation to the communications made on Tuesday, on the subject of the renewal of commerce with St. Domingo, and the mission to the French Republic.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Dec. 5, 1799.

Renewal of Commerce with St. Domingo.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by an act of the Congress of the United States, passed the 9th day of February last, entitled "An act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof," it is provided, That, at any time after the passing of this act, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, if he shall deem it expedient and consistent with the interests of the United States, by his order, to remit and discontinue for the time being, the restraints and prohibitions by the said act imposed, either with respect to the French Republic, or to any island, port, or place, belonging to the said Republic, with which a commercial intercourse may safely be renewed; and also to revoke such order whenever, in his opinion, the interests of the United States shall require; and he is authorized to make proclamation there-of accordingly:

And, whereas, the arrangements which have been made at St. Domingo, for the safety of the commerce of the United States, and for the admission of American vessels into certain ports of that island, do, in my opinion, render it expedient, and for the interest of the United States, to renew a commercial intercourse with such ports:

Therefore, I, JOHN ADAMS, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers vested in me by the above-recited act, do hereby remit and discontinue the restraints and prohibitions therein contained, within the limits and under the regulations here following, to wit:

1. It shall be lawful for vessels which have departed or may depart from the United States, to enter the ports of Cape François and Port Republicain, formerly called Port-au-Prince, in the said island of St. Domingo, on and after the 1st day of August next.

2. No vessel shall be cleared for any other port in St. Domingo than Cape François and Port Republicain.

3. It shall be lawful for vessels, which shall enter the said ports of Cape François and Port Republicain, after the thirty-first day of July next, to depart from thence to any port in said island between Monte Christi, on the north, and Petit Goave, on the west, provided it be done with the consent of the Government of St. Domingo, and pursuant to certificates or passports expressing such consent, signed by the Consul General of the United States, or Consul residing at the port of departure.

4. All vessels sailing in contravention of these regulations will be out of the protection of the United States, and be, moreover, liable to capture, seizure, and confiscation.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States, at Philadelphia, the twenty-sixth day of June, in the year of our Lord 1799, and of the independence of said States the twenty-third.

JOHN ADAMS.

By the President:

TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

Mission to France.

Letter from Patrick Henry, Esq., to the Secretary of State.

CHARLOTTE COUNTY, (Va.)

April 16, 1799.

SIR: Your favor of the 25th ultimo did not reach me till two days ago. I have been confined for several weeks by a severe indisposition, and am still so sick as to be scarcely able to write this.

My advanced age and increasing debility compel me to abandon every idea of serving my country, where the scene of operation is far distant, and her interests call for incessant and long-continued exertion. Conscious as I am of my inability to discharge the duties of Envoy, &c.

Relations with France.

to France, to which, by the commission you send me, I am called, I herewith return it.

I cannot, however, forbear expressing on this occasion, the high sense I entertain of the honor done me by the President and Senate in the appointment; and I beg of you, sir, to present me to them in terms of the most dutiful regard, assuring them that this mark of their confidence in me, at a crisis so eventful, is a very agreeable and flattering proof of their consideration towards me, and that nothing short of absolute necessity could induce me to withhold my little aid from an Administration whose abilities, patriotism, and virtue, deserve the gratitude and reverence of all their fellow-citizens.

With sentiments of very high regard, and unfeigned esteem, I am, sir, &c.

P. HENRY.

Copy of a letter from Mr. Talleyrand, as Minister of Exterior Relations, to Mr. Pichon, Secretary of Legation, Hague, dated (August 28, 1798,) 6th year.

PARIS, 11th Fructidor,

I see with pleasure, citizen, that the intercourse of society has procured you some political conversations with Mr. Murray. I entertain an esteem for that Minister. Like all the men at the head of the affairs of the United States, he has received the impressions which the British Cabinet has known how to give against us. He thinks the measures of his Government just, and supports them; but he possesses reason, understanding, and a true attachment to his country: he is neither French nor English: he is ingeniously an American. I am not at all surprised that he has appeared to you to wish sincerely for the reconciliation of the two Republics. I will, therefore, cheerfully answer the questions you put to me on different points, which appeared to you not to be well established in his mind.

I do not see between France and the United States any clashing of interests, any cause of jealousy. The Americans wish to be fishermen, sailors, manufacturers, and especially husbandmen. In all these points of view, their success is more at the expense of England than us. Why should we be uneasy about them? They aspire to the consolidation of their national existence, and it is to our purpose that they should succeed. In fact, we should have decided upon very superficial views to sustain their independence, if the matter was to separate them from England merely to leave them finally insulated among themselves, on an extensive seacoast, weak, rivalling, and impoverished by each other, and torn by foreign intrigues. We know that Great Britain would soon have to put together, piece by piece, those scattered shreds, and we should have done nothing useful for ourselves, if so miserable a chance of it were not daily rendered more remote.

What, therefore, is the cause of the misunderstanding, which, if France did not manifest herself more wise, would henceforth induce a violent rupture between the two Republics? Neither incompatible interests, nor projects of aggrandizement, divide them. After all, distrust alone has done the whole. The Government of the United States has thought that France wanted to revolutionize it. France has thought that the Government of the United States wanted to throw itself into the arms of England. It does not require much skill to divine which is the Cabinet interested in the two events producing each other, and which invisibly puts in motion all the expedients calculated to make them take effect. Let us open our eyes on both sides. I am disposed to admit that the conduct of the Government of the United States may be explained by other causes than those heretofore presumed. But let it on its part understand that the French Government, wounded as it may be, is too wise to entertain the views of disturbance which the other supposes. It concerns a Republic, founded on the system of representation, to support and not to weaken similar establishments. The stability of this system abroad is a necessary example at home. France, in fine, has a double motive, as a nation and as a Republic, not to expose to any hazard the present existence of the United States. Therefore, it never thought of making war against them, nor exciting civil commotions among them; and every contrary supposition is an insult to common sense.

These fundamental principles being established, it is natural to ask by what fatality a good understanding was not long since restored. It was because irritation being mingled with distrust, neither party yielded to real conciliatory inclinations. In the United States it was supposed that the French Government was temporizing, in order to strike the blow with greater certainty; whence resulted a crowd of measures more and more aggravating. In France it was supposed that the Government of the United States wished only the appearances of a negotiation, whence resulted a certain demand for pledges of good faith.

Let us substitute calmness for passion, confidence for suspicions, and we shall soon agree. I used my endeavors to enter upon a negotiation in this spirit with Mr. Gerry. My correspondence with him, until the day of his departure, is a curious monument of advances on my part, and of evasions on his. It is wrong to think that I confined myself to vague protestations. Among that series of official letters, which will doubtless be published at Philadelphia, I select one, of the 30th Prairial, wherein you will see that I make very positive propositions, without any mixture of preliminary conditions. This letter was followed by three notes upon the articles to be discussed, and I intended to complete the others in this manner if Mr. Gerry had not refused to answer thereto.

When it became necessary to abandon the idea of treating with that Envoy, who thought it important only to know how a negotiation might thereafter be resumed, I gave him the most solemn assurances concerning the reception that a new Plenipotentiary would receive. It was far from my thoughts to insinuate that the President should send one from the United States, instead of investing with his powers some one who was in Europe; far less that the Envoy should land directly in France, instead of announcing it in a neighboring country. I wished merely to say, that the Executive Directory was so decided for a reconciliation, that all tampering would be superfluous, that an act of confidence in it would excite its own. I should be very badly understood, if there should be found in my expressions a restriction on the nature of the choice which the President might make. I wished to encourage Mr. Gerry, by testimonies of regard, that his good intentions merited; although I could not dissemble that he wanted decision, at a moment when he might have easily adjusted every thing. It does not thence follow that I designated him. I will even avow that I think him too irresolute to be fit to hasten the conclusion of an affair of this kind. The advantages which I prized in him are common to all Americans who have not manifested a predilection for England. Can it be believed that a man who should profess a hatred or contempt of the French Republic, or should manifest himself the advocate of royalty, can inspire the Directory with a favorable opinion of the dispositions of the Government of the United States? I should have disguised the truth, if I had left this matter ambiguous. It is not to wound the independence of that Government, to point out a sincere friend of peace the shoals he ought to avoid.

As to the mediation of the Batavian Republic, and of Spain, I do not know that there is any serious question about it, and it appears to me absolutely useless. The United States might hesitate in the present state of things, to refer themselves to their impartiality, and besides, I perceive no subject which may not be arranged directly.

I know that the distance which separates France and the United States opens a vast field for incidents, and there have been but too many of them. But the Executive Directory is unshaken in the conduct which may best obviate them. The excess even of provocations has deadened their effect. The Government of the United States surrounds itself with precautions against an imaginary attack. To stretch the hand to deluded friends, is what one Republic owes to another, and I cannot doubt that the dignity of that attitude will convince the President of our pacific intentions.

The two Governments ought, above all, to be attentive to indirect attempts to alienate them still more. Their prudence will secure this object, and I shall cite but one example of it. You have told Mr. Murray the truth respecting Dr. Logan. But I perceive, that on all hands it is attempted to produce a belief in America, that we are negotiating with him. On the 7th of this month, a very insidious paragraph was inserted in the Bien Informé. It is therein intimated that, guided by the citizen Thomas Paine, Dr. Logan has made application to the Executive Directory, in the character of a secret agent. The doctor has complained bitterly of it to me. He has no need of justifying himself concerning the matter, the falsity of which I know better than anybody; but he assured me, that having once only met Thomas Paine, at the house of a third person, he found him so prejudiced against the United States, and so opinionative, with respect to an influence he neither possesses among them nor us, that he abstained from conversing any more with him. Moreover, to cut short all misunderstanding, I engaged Dr. Logan to postpone, till another time, the experiment he proposes to make on agriculture, and to return home. As to Mr. Hitchborn, of Massachusetts, I was even ignorant till now that he was in Europe. A single word will suffice for the rest.

We want nothing but justice on the part of the United States; we ask it; we offer it to their Government: it may depend upon the candor of the Executive Directory.

You will not doubt, citizen, that I approve of the communications which your zeal has caused you to seek with Mr. M., since I enabled you to resume them with official elucidations, &c.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

[This letter was received from Mr. Murray, without the French original.]

The Minister of Exterior Relations to Citizen Pichon, Secretary of Legation of the French Republic, near the Batavian Republic.

PARIS, the 7th Vendemiaire,
(Sept. 28, 1798,) 7th year of the French Republic, one and indivisible.

I have received successively, citizen, your letters of the 22d and 27th Fructidor, (8th and 13th of September.) They give me more and more cause to be pleased with the measures you have adopted to detail to me your conversations with Mr. Murray; those conversations, at first merely friendly, have acquired a consistency, by my sanction, transmitted to you on the 11th Fructidor, (28th of August.) I do not regret that you have trusted to Mr. Murray's honor a copy of my letter. It was intended only for you; and it contains nothing but what is conformable to the Government's intention. I am fully convinced that should explanations once take place with confidence between the two Cabinets, irritation would cease, a number of misunderstandings would disappear, and the ties of friendship would be more strongly united, as both parties would be made sensible what hand had attempted to disunite them. But I do not conceal from you that your letter of the 2d and 3d Vendemiaire, (23d and 24th of September,) this moment arrived, surprises me much. What Mr. Murray is still doubtful of has been very explicitly declared, before even the President's Message to Congress, of the 3d Messidor, (21st of June,) was known in France. I had written it to Mr. Gerry, namely, on the 26th Messidor, (12th of July,) and 4th Thermidor, (July 22d.) I repeated it to him before he set off. A whole paragraph of my letter to you, of the 11th Fructidor, (28th of August,) of which Mr. Murray has a copy, is devoted to develop still more the fixed determination of the French Government. According to these bases, you were right to assert that whatever Plenipotentiary the Government of the United States might send to France, in order to terminate the existing differences between the two countries, he would be undoubtedly received with the respect due to the representative of a free, independent, and powerful nation.

I cannot persuade myself, citizen, that the American Government need any further declaration from us to take the resolution, in order to renew the negotiations; to adopt such measures, as would suggest their wish to bring the differences to a peaceable end. If misunderstandings on both sides have prevented former explanations reaching that end, it is presumable that these misunderstandings being done away, nothing henceforth will raise any obstacle to the reciprocal dispositions. The President's instructions to his Envoys at Paris, which I have only been acquainted with, by the copy given to you by Mr. Murray, and by me received the 21st Messidor, (9th of July,) announce, if they contain the whole of the American Government's intentions, dispositions which can only add to those the Directory has always entertained; and notwithstanding the posterior acts of that Government, notwithstanding the irritating and almost hostile measures which they have adopted, the Directory has shown that it persisted in the dispositions consigned as well in my correspondence with Mr. Gerry, as in my letter to you of the 11th Fructidor, and which I have hereinbefore repeated in the most explicit manner. Carry, therefore, citizen, to Mr. Murray these positive expressions; to convince him of our sincerity, and request him to transmit them to his Government.

I presume, citizen, this letter will find you at the Hague; if not, I ask it may be sent back to you at Paris.

Salute and fraternity.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

No. 22.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Philadelphia, March 6, 1799.

SIR: I enclose a commission constituting you, in conjunction with the Chief Justice Ellsworth and Patrick Henry, Esq., of Virginia, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary to the French Republic. By the President's direction I enclose, for your information, copies of his Messages to the Senate of the 18th and 25th of March, by the latter of which you will see the motives inducing the nomination of a commission for the purpose of negotiating with France, instead of resting the business wholly with you. This will doubtless be agreeable, by relieving you from the weight of a sole responsibility in an affair of such magnitude.

It is the President's desire that you, by letter to the French Minister of Foreign Relations, inform him "that Oliver Ellsworth, Chief Justice of the United States, Patrick Henry, late Governor of Virginia, and yourself, are appointed Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, with full powers to discuss and settle by treaty all controversies between the United States and France." But, "that the two former will not embark for Europe until they have received, from the Executive Directory, direct and unequivocal assurances, signified by their Secretary of Foreign Relations, that the Envoys shall be received in character to an audience of the Directory, and that they shall enjoy all the prerogatives attached to that character by the law of nations, and that a Minister or Ministers of equal powers shall be appointed and commissioned to treat with them."

The answer you shall receive to your letter you will be pleased to transmit to this office.

You will also be pleased to understand it to be the President's opinion, that no more indirect and inofficial communications, written or verbal, should be held with any persons whatever, agents on behalf of France, on the subjects of difference between the United States and the French Republic. If the French Government really desire a settlement of the existing differences, it must take the course above pointed out, unless the Executive Directory should prefer sending a Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

WILLIAM VANS MURRAY, Esq.,
Minister United States, at the Hague.

THE HAGUE, May 5, 1799.

CITIZEN MINISTER: It is with the greatest pleasure that I hasten to fulfil the instructions, which I have just had the honor to receive from the Government of the United States of America, by informing you that the President has appointed Oliver Ellsworth, Chief Justice of the United States, Patrick Henry, late Governor of Virginia, and William Vans Murray, Minister Resident of the United States at the Hague, to be Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, with full powers to discuss and settle, by a treaty, all controversies between the United States and France; but that the two former (Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Henry) will not embark for Europe until they shall have received from the Executive Directory direct and unequivocal assurances, signified by their Minister of Foreign Relations, that the Envoys shall be received in character to an audience of the Directory, and that they shall enjoy all the prerogatives attached to that character by the law of nations, and that a Minister or Ministers of equal powers shall be appointed and commissioned to treat with them.

I request you, Citizen Minister, to lay this subject before your Government, and, as the distance is so great and the obstacles so numerous in an Atlantic voyage, that you will favor me, as speedily as possible, with the answer which is to lead to such happy and important consequences.

Accept, Citizen Minister, the assurances of my perfect and high esteem.

WM. V. MURRAY.

Citizen TALLEYRAND, Minister, &c., Paris.

Relations with France.

THE HAGUE, May 7, 1799.

DEAR SIR: On the 4th instant, late in the evening, I had the honor to receive your No. 22, containing the commission of Envoys.

On the fifth, I addressed, precisely agreeably to your instructions, as I conceived, the enclosed letter to Mr. Talleyrand, the Minister of Exterior Relations. You will perceive, sir, that I did not think myself at liberty to go, not only not out of the commas, but beyond them; in one word alone I deviated, in the word "Minister" instead of "Secretary" of Foreign Relations. No direct nor indirect and inofficial communications written or verbal will be held by me with the French agents on American affairs.

I accept the appointment which it has pleased the President to clothe me with, under a grateful sense of the high honor conferred upon me, so unexpectedly, by this mark of his confidence. I may be allowed to say, that though I was deeply sensible of the honor conferred by the first nomination, and shall always, I hope, retain a most grateful recollection of it; yet, sir, the new modification of that nomination gave me great pleasure. Always conceiving, as I thought I did, that any negotiation with France would be full of anxieties and political perils to the Envoys that should be employed by our Government, I had no wishes to be engaged in it, and no expectation that I should be: to have a share in it was by me unsought. You will excuse this declaration, because I was instrumental in certain preliminary steps relative to the advances of France, which produced the basis of the appointment.

I sent the original of the enclosed to Mr. Talleyrand by post, another (a copy) to Major Mountflorencia, to be handed to him, a third to a Mr. Griffith for Major M. in case the other failed, to be opened by Mr. G. if Major M. should have been out of Paris, and directed Mr. G. to follow the instructions which he would find in the letter to Major M. which were to deliver the enclosed to Mr. Talleyrand and take his letter, answer for me, and to send it to me

As soon as I have the answer of the Directory, I shall have the honor of transmitting copies to you, sir, by different ways.

I am, with the greatest respect, &c.,

WM. V. MURRAY.

HON. TIMOTHY PICKERING, Esq.,
Secretary of State, United States.

The Minister of Exterior Relations to Mr. William Vans Murray, Minister Resident of the United States at the Hague.

PARIS, 23d Floreal, (May 12, 1799.)
*7th year of the French Republic,
one and indivisible.*

I augur too well, sir, from the eagerness you display in fulfilling the instructions of your Government, not to hasten to answer the letter I received from you dated the 15th of this month.

The Executive Directory being informed of the nomination of Mr. Oliver Ellsworth, of Mr. Patrick Henry, and of yourself, as Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, to discuss and terminate all differences which subsist between the two countries, sees, with pleasure, that its perseverance in pacific sentiments has kept open the way to an approaching reconciliation. It has a long time ago manifested its intentions with respect to this subject. Be pleased to transmit to your colleagues, and accept for yourself, the frank and explicit assurance that it will receive the Envoys in the official character with which they are invested; that they shall enjoy all the prerogatives which are attached to it by the law of nations, and that one or more Ministers shall be duly authorized to treat with them.

It was certainly unnecessary to suffer so many months to elapse for the mere confirmation of what I have already declared to Mr. Gerry, and which after his departure I declared to you at the Hague. I sincerely regret that your two colleagues await this answer at such a great distance. As to you, sir, whom it will reach in a few days, and who understand so well the value of time, when the restoration of harmony between the two Republics, which everything invites to friendship, is in question, be assured, that as soon as you can take in hand the object of your mission, I shall have the honor immediately to send you passports. Accept, sir, the assurances of my very sincere consideration,

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

[Reported to the House of Reps., Feb. 14, 1800.]

The Committee of Commerce and Manufactures beg leave to report, on the subject of the suspension of the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, that the laws which have been enacted for that purpose have been, as far as appears to the committee, faithfully executed in all respects depending on the care of the officers of the United States. It is but too probable, however, that individuals, engaged in pursuit of private commercial advantages, and regardless of the public welfare, have evaded, in many instances, the provisions of those laws. Some observations from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to these practices, and a detail of the cases, which, under the sixth section of the last act of Congress, prohibiting commercial intercourse with France, have been transmitted to that department, are herewith submitted. The committee, being of opinion that it is expedient further to suspend all commercial intercourse between the United States and France, have prepared a bill for that purpose, which is also submitted, and, in the opinion of the committee, ought to be enacted without delay.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Jan. 23, 1800.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a statement of all the cases which have been transmitted to this department for decision, pursuant to the act of Congress passed on the 9th of February, 1799, entitled "An act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States, and France and the dependencies thereof."

Relations with France.

Although this statement contains the substance of the information desired by the committee, and particularly in what manner the power granted by the sixth section of the act has been exercised, yet it may be useful to observe, that the law of Congress passed on the 13th of June, 1798, which imposed the first restrictions on commercial intercourse with France, was, by this department, understood to declare the following principles, by which the conduct of the collectors of the customs has accordingly been governed.

1st. That all exports to France or her dependencies were prohibited after the 1st day of July, 1798, except the goods and effects of Frenchmen residing in the United States, and about to depart in vessels with permits from the President of the United States.

2d. That the entry of vessels bona fide the property of citizens of the United States, or employed by them, and having on board property of such citizens only, was lawful until the 1st day of December, 1798, and no longer.

Although the true interpretation of the law cannot be considered as finally settled by judicial decisions, yet, as diversities of opinion are known to exist, it is desirable that the sense of the Legislature may be ascertained upon the following points, in case the restrictions upon commerce with France shall be continued after the 3d day of March ensuing.

1st. Whether the restrictions shall extend to any except French and American vessels?

2d. Whether trade through a neutral country, by means of a mutual agent of persons residing in the dominions of France and the United States, shall be lawful?

3d. Whether cartel vessels, with passports of the President of the United States, authorizing the departure of French citizens and their effects, shall be exempted from the restrictions imposed on other vessels?

4th. Whether vessels which may be captured or driven by distress into French ports, the cargoes of which may be seized or detained by the French Government, shall be allowed to receive merchandise or produce in exchange, or compensation for the cargoes so seized or detained.

The following practices have been discovered, and may be expected to increase, in case the law shall not provide a competent remedy.

1st. American citizens have proceeded to the island of St. Thomas, and have there obtained certificates of naturalization for themselves and their vessels; with such vessels a direct trade between the United States and French ports has been attempted to be prosecuted in the same manner as before the law was passed.

2d. Agents for commercial houses have been established in the island of St. Thomas, and other neutral places, to whom the productions of the United States have been consigned; these productions have been shipped from thence in other American vessels for French ports. The vessels employed between the neutral French ports have been generally covered as Danish property.

3d. Although vessels which have been employed in transporting French citizens and their property from the United States have been carefully restricted by instructions, and by the custom-house inspection, from transporting merchandise on account of persons resident in the United States, yet there is reason to suspect that the intentions of the Government have in some instances been evaded. In case it shall be deemed reasonable to continue the provision for removing French citizens and their property, precise regulations for preventing the vessels from being employed in commerce will be highly necessary.

4th. Vessels have been carried to the vicinity of French ports, where, as is believed, they have been captured by French privateers, in consequence of preconceived arrangements: other vessels have entered French ports, on pretence of distress. Although the vessels have in many instances been liberated, yet the cargoes have been detained by order of Government. In some cases the masters or owners have been permitted to purchase return cargoes; latterly, to strengthen the plea for being admitted to entry in the United States, it has been represented that the masters have been compelled to receive cargoes on board their vessels.

The cases of vessels which have been reported as having been captured by privateers, or driven into French ports in distress, have been attended with particular difficulty. In some instances the representations have, doubtless, been fair and correct; but in others they have unquestionably been collusive and fraudulent. The protests and other papers usually produced by masters of vessels could not, however, furnish the means of a just discrimination.

No effectual remedy is perceived against an abuse which must continue to increase, but by declaring importations from French ports to be unlawful in all cases whatever, without excepting those of vessels really captured or driven into French ports in distress. The capture or arrival in distress may be involuntary, and, therefore, not illegal; but the purchase of a new cargo, or any purchase whatever, except of necessities to enable the captured persons to return to their own country, ought, as is believed, to be declared unlawful.

It may be said that such a regulation would be odious and severe; that it would be cruel to oblige men to suffer unnecessary losses, or to abandon their property to great risks when an equivalent was offered. Admitting these objections to have some force, yet it may be observed, with equal truth, that the act prohibiting commercial intercourse ought to be considered, in connexion with other measures, as constituting a part of the system of resistance adopted by the United States; that, prior to the adoption of this system, our vessels were captured and condemned indiscriminately; that the suspension of commerce is a measure which, if well executed, must powerfully influence the conduct of the French colonies; that no system of resistance can be executed without exposing our citizens to some losses; that it is impossible to distinguish cases of real capture or distress from those which are fictitious; that many of our citizens will not make reasonable efforts to avoid being captured or entering French ports, if they find themselves exempted from every loss and inconvenience; that the plea of forcible exchange cannot be admitted without permitting the French Government virtually to repeal our laws by means of their own internal regulations; and that, if the United States refuse to submit to an insidious policy, and some of our citizens suffer losses, it is against the French and not the American Government that their complaints ought to be directed.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

[Communicated to the Senate, December 15, 1800.]

UNITED STATES, Dec. 15, 1800.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I transmit to the Senate, for their consideration and decision, a convention both in English and French, between the United States of America and the French Republic, signed at Paris on the 13th day of September last, by the respective Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers. I also transmit to the Senate three manuscript volumes containing the journal of our Envoys.

JOHN ADAMS.

[The following Messages, with the accompanying documents, relating to the same subject, were also transmitted to the Senate.]

UNITED STATES, Dec. 22, 1800.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

In conformity with your request, in your resolution of the 19th of this month, I transmit you the instructions given to our late Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary to the French Republic.

It is my request to the Senate, that these instructions may be considered in strict confidence, and returned to me as soon as the Senate shall have made all the use of them they may judge necessary.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Jan. 21, 1801.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

In compliance with your request, signified in your resolution of the 20th day of this month, I transmit you a report, made to me by the Secretary of State on the same day; a letter of our late Envoys to him of the 4th of October last; an extract of a letter from our Minister Plenipotentiary in London to him of the 22d of November last; and an extract of another letter from the Minister to the Secretary of the 31st of October last.

The reasoning in the letter of our late Envoys to France is so fully supported by the writers on the law of nations, particularly by Vattel, as well as by his great masters, Grotius and Puffendorf, that nothing is left to be desired to settle the point that, if there be a collision between two treaties, made with two different Powers, the more ancient has the advantage; for no engagement contrary to it can be entered into in the treaty afterwards made, and, if this last be found, in any case, incompatible with the more ancient one, its execution is considered as impossible, because the person promising had not the power of acting contrary to his antecedent engagement. Although our right is very clear to negotiate treaties according to our own ideas of right and justice, honor and good faith, yet it must always be a satisfaction to know, that the judgments of other nations, with whom we have connexion, coincide with ours, and that we have no reason to apprehend that any disagreeable questions and discussions are likely to arise. The letters from Mr. King will, therefore, be read by the Senate with particular satisfaction.

The inconveniences to public officers, and the mischiefs to the public, arising from the publication of the despatches of Ministers abroad are so numerous, and so obvious, that I request of the Senate that these papers, especially the letters from Mr. King, be considered in close confidence.

JOHN ADAMS.

Convention between the French Republic and the United States.

The Premier Consul of the French Republic, in the name of the people of France, and the President of the United States of America, equally desirous to terminate the differences which have arisen between the two States, have respectively appointed their Plenipotentiaries, and given them full powers to treat upon those differences and to terminate the same, that is to say: the Premier Consul of the French Republic, in the name of the people of France, has appointed for the Plenipotentiary of the said Republic, the citizens Joseph Bonaparte, ex-ambassador at Rome and Counsellor of State; Charles Pierre Claret Fleuriu, member of the National Institute, and of the Board of Longitude of France, and Counsellor of State, President of the Section of the Marine; and Pierre Louis Røderer, member of the National Institute of France, and Counsellor of State, President of the Section of the Interior. And the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the said States, has appointed for their Plenipotentiaries, Oliver Ellsworth, Chief Justice of the United States, William Richardson Davie, late Governor of the State of North Carolina, and William Vans Murray, Minister Resident of the United States at the Hague; who, after having exchanged their full powers, and after full and mature discussion of the respective interests, have agreed on the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a firm, inviolable,

and universal peace, and a true and sincere friendship between the French Republic and the United States of America, and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and people, without exception of persons or places.

ART. 2. The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the two parties not being able to agree, at present, respecting the Treaty of Alliance of 6th February, 1778, the Treaty of Amity and Commerce of the same date, and the convention of the 14th of November, 1788, nor upon the indemnities mutually due or claimed; the parties will negotiate further on these subjects at a convenient time; and, until they may have agreed on these points, the said treaties and conventions shall have no operation, and the relations of the two countries shall be regulated as follows:

ART. 3. The public ships which have been taken on one part and the other, or which may be taken before the exchange of ratifications, shall be restored.

ART. 4. Property captured, and not yet definitively condemned, or which may be captured before the exchange of ratifications, (contraband goods destined to an enemy's port excepted,) shall be mutually restored, on the following proofs of ownership, viz: The proof on both sides with respect to merchant ships, whether armed or unarmed, shall be a passport in the form following: "To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

"It is hereby made known that leave and permission has been given to —, master and commander of the ship called —, of the town of —, burden — tons, or thereabouts, lying at present in the port and haven of —, and bound for —, and laden with —, after that his ship has been visited, and before the sailing, he shall make oath before the officers who have the jurisdiction of maritime affairs, that the said ship belongs to one or more of the subjects of —, the act whereof shall be put to the end of these presents, as likewise that he will keep, and cause to be kept by his crew on board, the marine ordinances and regulations, and enter in the proper office a list, signed and witnessed, containing the names and surnames, the places of birth, and abode of the crew of his ship, and of all who shall embark on board her, whom he shall not take on board without the knowledge and permission of the officers of the marine; and in every port or haven where he shall enter with his ship, he shall show this present leave to the officers and judges of the marine, and shall give a faithful account to them of what passed and was done during his voyage; and he shall carry the colors, arms, and ensigns of the French Republic, or the United States, during his voyage. In witness whereof, we have signed these presents, and put the seal of our arms thereunto, and caused the same to be countersigned — at —, the — day of —, anno Domini —."

And this passport will be sufficient without any other paper, any ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding; which passport shall not be deemed requisite to have been renewed or recalled, whatever number of voyages the said ship may have made, unless she shall have returned home within the space of a year. Proof with respect to the cargo shall be certificates, containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place whence the ship sailed, and whither she is bound; so that the forbidden and contraband goods may be distinguished by the certificates, which certificates shall have been made out by the officers of the place whence the ship set sail, in the accustomed form of the country. And if such passport or certificates, or both, shall have been destroyed by accident, or taken away by force, their deficiency may be supplied by such other proofs of ownership as are admissible by the general usage of nations. Proof, with respect to other than merchant ships, shall be the commission they bear.

This article shall take effect from the date of the signature of the present convention. And if, from the date of the said signature, any property shall be condemned, contrary to the intent of the said convention, before the knowledge of this stipulation shall be obtained, the property so condemned shall, without delay, be restored or paid for.

ART. 5. The debts contracted by one of the two nations with individuals of the other, or by the individuals of one with the individuals of the other, shall be paid, or the payment may be prosecuted in the same manner as if there had been no misunderstanding between the two States. But this clause shall not extend to indemnities claimed on account of captures or confiscations.

ART. 6. Commerce between the parties shall be free. The vessels of the two nations, and their privateers, as well as their prizes, shall be treated in the respective ports as those of the nation the most favored; and, in general, the two parties shall enjoy in the ports of each other, in regard to commerce and navigation, the privileges of the most favored nation.

ART. 7. The citizens and inhabitants of the United States shall be at liberty to dispose, by testament, donation, or otherwise, of their goods, moveable and immoveable, holden in the territory of the French Republic in Europe, and the citizens of the French Republic shall have the same liberty with regard to goods, moveable and immoveable, holden in the territory of the United States, in favor of such persons as they shall think proper. The citizens and inhabitants of either of the two countries, who shall be heirs of goods, moveable or immoveable, in the other, shall be able to succeed ab intestato, without being obliged to obtain letters of naturalization, and without having the effect of this provision contested or impeded, under any pretext whatever; and the said heirs, whether such by particular title, or ab intestato, shall be exempt from every duty whatever, in both countries. It is agreed that this article shall in no manner derogate from the laws which either State may now have in force, or hereafter may enact, to prevent emigration; and, also, that, in case the laws of either of the two States should restrain strangers from the exercise of the rights of property with respect to real estate, such real estate may be sold, or otherwise disposed of, to citizens or inhabitants of the country where it may be, and the other nation shall be at liberty to enact similar laws.

ART. 8. To favor commerce on both sides, it is agreed that, in case war should break out between the two nations, (which God forbid,) the term of six months after the declaration of war shall be allowed to the merchants, and other citizens and inhabitants, respectively, on one side and the other, during which time they shall be at liberty to withdraw themselves, with their effects and moveables, which they shall be at liberty to carry, send away, or sell, as they please, without the least obstruction; nor shall their effects, much less their persons, be seized during such term of six months; on the contrary, passports, which shall be valid for a time necessary for their return, shall be given to them for their vessels and the effects which they shall be willing to send away or carry with them; and such passports shall be a safe conduct against all insults and prizes which privateers may attempt against their persons and effects. And if anything be taken from them, or any injury done to them, or their effects, by one of the parties, their citizens, or inhabitants, within the term above prescribed, full satisfaction shall be made to them on that account.

ART. 9. Neither the debts due from the individuals of the one nation to the individuals of the other, nor shares, nor moneys which they may have in public funds, or the public or private banks, shall ever, in any event of war or national difference, be sequestered or confiscated.

ART. 10. It shall be free for the two contracting parties to appoint commercial agents for the protection of trade, to reside in France and the United States. Either party may except such place as may be thought proper from the residence of these agents. Before any agent shall exercise his functions, he shall be accepted in the usual forms by the party to whom he is sent; and when he shall have been accepted and furnished with his exequatur, he shall enjoy the rights and prerogatives of the similar agents of the most favored nations.

ART. 11. The citizens of the French Republic shall pay in the ports, havens, roads, countries, islands, cities, and towns of the United States, no other, or greater duties or imposts, of what nature soever they may be, or by what name soever called, than those which the nations most favored are, or shall be obliged to pay, and they shall enjoy all the rights, liberties, privileges, immunities, and exemptions in trade, navigation, and commerce, whether in passing from one port in the said States to another, or in going to and from the same from and to any part of the world, which the said nations do, or shall enjoy. And the citizens of the United States shall reciprocally enjoy in the territories of the French Republic in Europe, the same privileges and immunities, as well for their property and persons, and for what concerns trade, navigation, and commerce.

ART. 12. It shall be lawful for the citizens of either country to sail with their ships and merchandise (contraband goods always excepted) from any port whatever to any port of the enemy of the other, and to sail and trade with their ships and merchandise, with perfect security and liberty, from the countries, ports, and places of those who are enemies of both, or of either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever, and to pass not only directly from the places and ports of the enemy aforementioned, to neutral ports and places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy, to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same Power, or under several; unless such ports or places shall be actually blockaded, besieged, or invested.

And whereas it frequently happens that vessels sail for a port or place belonging to an enemy, without knowing that the same is either besieged, blockaded, or invested, it is agreed that every vessel so circumstanced, may be turned away from such port or place, but she shall not be detained, nor any part of her cargo, if not contraband, be confiscated, unless, after notice of such blockade or investment, she shall again attempt to enter; but she shall be permitted to go to any other port or place she shall think proper. Nor shall any vessel of either, that may have entered into such port or place before the same was actually besieged, blockaded, or invested by the other, be restrained from quitting such place with her cargo, nor if found therein after the reduction and surrender of such place, shall such vessel or her cargo be liable to confiscation, but they shall be restored to the owners thereof.

ART. 13. In order to regulate what shall be deemed contraband of war, there shall be comprised, under that denomination, gunpowder, saltpetre, petards, match, ball, bombs, grenades, carcasses, pikes, halberds, swords, belts, pistols, holsters, cavalry saddles and furniture, cannon, mortars, their carriages and beds, and generally all kinds of arms, ammunition of war, and instruments fit for the use of troops; all the above articles, whenever they are destined to the port of an enemy, are hereby declared to be contraband, and are just objects of confiscation; but the vessel in which they are laden, and the residue of the cargo, shall be considered free, and not in any manner infected by the prohibited goods, whether belonging to the same, or a different owner.

ART. 14. It is hereby stipulated that free ships shall give a freedom to goods, and that everything shall be deemed to be free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belonging to the citizens of either of the contracting parties, although the whole lading, or any part thereof, should appertain to the enemies of either, contraband goods being always excepted. It is also agreed, in like manner, that the same liberty be extended to persons who are on board a free ship, with this effect: that, although they be enemies to either party, they are not to be taken out of that free ship, unless they are soldiers and in actual service of the enemy.

ART. 15. On the contrary, it is agreed that whatever shall be found to be laden by the citizens of either party on any ship belonging to the enemies of the other, or their citizens, shall be confiscated without distinction of goods, contraband or not contraband, in the same manner as if it belonged to the enemy, except such goods and merchandises as were put on board such ship before the declaration of war, or even after such declaration, if so be it were done without knowledge of such declaration; so that the goods of the citizens of either party, whether they be of the nature of such as are prohibited or otherwise, which, as is aforesaid, were put on board any ship belonging to an enemy before the war, or after the declaration of the same, without the knowledge of it, shall no ways be liable to confiscation, but shall well and truly be restored without delay to the proprietors demanding the same: but so as that if the said merchandises be contraband, it shall not be in any way lawful to carry them afterwards to any ports belonging to the enemy.

The two contracting parties agree, that the term of two months being passed after the declaration of war, their respective citizens, from whatever part of the world they come, shall not plead the ignorance mentioned in this article.

ART. 16. The merchant ships belonging to the citizens of either of the contracting parties, which shall be bound to a port of the enemy of one of the parties, and concerning whose voyage, and articles of their cargo, there shall be just grounds of suspicion, shall be obliged to exhibit, as well upon the high seas as in the ports or roads, not only their passports, but likewise their certificates, showing that their goods are not of the quality of those which are specified to be contraband in the thirteenth article of the present convention.

ART. 17. And that captures on light suspicions may be avoided, and injuries thence arising prevented, it is agreed, that if one party shall be engaged in war, and the other party be neuter, the ships of the neutral party shall be furnished with passports similar to that described in the fourth article, that it may appear thereby that the ships really belong to the citizens of the neutral party; that they shall be valid for any number of voyages, but shall be renewed every year, that is, if the ship happens to return home in the space of a year. If the ships are laden, they shall be provided, not only with the passports above mentioned, but also with certificates similar to those described in the same article; so that it may be known whether they carry any contraband goods. No other paper shall be required, any usage or ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding. And if it shall not appear from the said certificates that there are contraband goods on board, the ships shall be permitted to proceed on their voyage. If it shall appear from the certificates that there are contraband goods on board any such ship, and the commander of the same shall offer to deliver them up, the offer shall be accepted, and the ship shall be at liberty to pursue its voyage, unless the quantity of contraband goods be greater than can conveniently be received on board the ship of war or privateer; in which case the ship may be carried into port for the delivery of the same.

If any ship shall not be furnished with such passport or certificates as above required for the same, such case may be examined by a proper judge or tribunal; and if it shall appear, from other documents or proofs admissible by the usage of nations, that the ship belongs to the citizens of the neutral party, it shall not be confiscated, but shall be released with her cargo, (contraband goods excepted,) and be permitted to proceed on her voyage.

If the master of a ship named in the passport should happen to die, or be removed by any other cause, and another put in his place, the ship and cargo shall, nevertheless, be equally secure, and the passport remain in full force.

ART. 18. If the ships of the citizens of either of the parties shall be met with, either sailing along the coasts or on the high seas, by any ship of war or privateer of the other; for the avoiding of any disorder, the said ships of war or privateers shall remain out of cannon shot, and may send their boats on board the merchant ship which they shall so meet with, and may enter her to the number of two or three men only, to whom the master or commander of such ship shall exhibit his passport concerning the property of the ship, made out according to the form prescribed in the fourth article. And it is expressly agreed that the neutral party shall in no case be required to go on board the examining vessel for the purpose of exhibiting his papers, or for any other examination whatever.

ART. 19. It is expressly agreed by the contracting parties, that the stipulations above mentioned, relative to the conduct to be observed on the sea by the cruisers of the belligerent party towards the ships of the neutral party, shall be applied only to ships sailing without convoy; and, when the said ships shall be convoyed, it being the intention of the parties to observe all the regard due to the protection of the flag displayed by public ships, it shall not be lawful to visit them: but the verbal declaration of the commander of the convoy, that the ships he convoys belong to the nation whose flag he carries, and that they have no contraband goods on board, shall be considered by the respective cruisers as fully sufficient: the two parties reciprocally engaging not to admit, under the protection of their convoys, ships which shall carry contraband goods destined to an enemy.

ART. 20. In all cases where vessels shall be captured or detained under pretence of carrying to the enemy contraband goods, the captor shall give a receipt for such of the papers of the vessel as he shall retain, which receipt shall be annexed to a descriptive list of the said papers: and it shall be unlawful to break up or open the hatches, chests, trunks, casks, bales, or vessels found on board, or remove the smallest part of the goods, unless the lading be brought on shore in presence of the competent officers, and an inventory be made by them of the said goods. Nor shall it be lawful to sell, exchange, or alienate the same in any manner, unless there shall have been lawful process, and the competent judge or judges shall have pronounced against such goods sentence of confiscation, saving always the ship and the other goods which it contains.

Relations with France.

ART. 21. And, that proper care may be taken of the vessel and cargo, and embezzlement prevented, it is agreed, that it shall not be lawful to remove the master, commander, or supercargo of any captured ship, from on board thereof; either during the time the ship may be at sea after her capture, or pending the proceedings against her, or her cargo, or anything relative thereto. And, in all cases where a vessel of the citizens of either party shall be captured or seized, and held for adjudication, her officers, passengers, and crew, shall be hospitably treated. They shall not be imprisoned or deprived of any part of their wearing apparel, nor of the possession and use of their money, not exceeding for the captain, supercargo, and mate, five hundred dollars each, and for the sailors and passengers, one hundred dollars each.

ART. 22. It is further agreed, that in all cases the established courts for prize causes, in the country to which the prizes may be conducted, shall alone take cognizance of them. And whenever such tribunal of either of the parties shall pronounce judgment against any vessel or goods or property claimed by the citizens of the other party, the sentence or decree shall mention the reasons or motives on which the same shall have been founded, and an authenticated copy of the sentence or decree, and of all the proceedings in the case, shall, if demanded, be delivered to the commander or agent of the said vessel, without any delay, he paying the legal fees for the same.

ART. 23. And that more abundant care may be taken for the security of the respective citizens of the contracting parties, and to prevent their suffering injuries by the men of war, or privateers of either party, all commanders of ships of war and privateers, and all others the said citizens, shall forbear doing any damage to those of the other party, or committing any outrage against them; and if they act to the contrary, they shall be punished, and shall also be bound in their persons and estates to make satisfaction and reparation for all damages, and the interest thereof, of whatever nature the said damages may be.

For this cause, all commanders of privateers, before they receive their commissions, shall hereafter be obliged to give, before a competent judge, sufficient security by at least two responsible sureties, who have no interest in the said privateer, each of whom, together with the said commander, shall be jointly and severally bound in the sum of seven thousand dollars, or thirty-six thousand eight hundred and twenty francs; or, if such ships be provided with above one hundred and fifty seamen or soldiers, in the sum of fourteen thousand dollars, or seventy-three thousand six hundred and forty francs; to satisfy all damages and injuries which the said privateer, or her officers or men, or any of them, may do or commit during their cruise, contrary to the tenor of this convention, or to the laws and instructions for regulating their conduct; and further, that in all cases of aggressions, the said commissions shall be revoked and annulled.

ART. 24. When the ships of war of the two contracting parties, or those belonging to their citizens which are armed in war, shall be admitted to enter with their prizes, the ports of either of the two parties, the said public or private ships, as well as their prizes, shall not be obliged to pay any duty either to the officers of the place, the judges, or any others; nor shall such prizes, when they come to and enter the ports of either party, be arrested or seized: nor shall the officers of the place make examination concerning the lawfulness of such prizes; but they may hoist sail at any time, and depart, and carry their prizes to the places expressed in their commissions, which the commanders of such ships of war shall be obliged to show. It is always understood that the stipulations of this article shall not extend beyond the privileges of the most favored nation.

ART. 25. It shall not be lawful for any foreign privateers who have commissions from any Prince or State in enmity with either nation, to fit their ships in the ports of either nation, to sell their prizes, or in any manner to exchange them; neither shall they be allowed to purchase provisions, except such as shall be necessary for their going to the next port of that Prince or State, from which they have received their commissions.

ART. 26. It is further agreed, that both the said contracting parties shall not only refuse to receive any pirates into any of their ports, havens, or towns, or permit any of their inhabitants to receive, protect, harbor, conceal, or assist them in any manner, but will bring to condign punishment all such inhabitants as shall be guilty of such acts or offences. And all their ships, with the goods or merchandises taken by them and brought into the port of either of the said parties, shall be seized, as far as they can be discovered, and shall be restored to the owners, or their factors, or agents, duly authorized by them, (proper evidence being first given before competent judges for proving the property;) even in case such effects should have passed into other hands by sale, if it be proved that the buyers knew, or had good reason to believe or suspect that they had been piratically taken.

ART. 27. Neither party will intermeddle in the fisheries of the other on its coasts, nor disturb the other in the exercise of the rights which it now holds, or may acquire on the coast of Newfoundland, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or elsewhere on the American coast, northward of the United States. But the whale and seal fisheries shall be free to both in every quarter of the world.

This Convention shall be ratified on both sides in due form, and the ratifications exchanged in the space of six months, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the above articles both in the French and English languages, and they have thereto affixed their seals; declaring, nevertheless, that the signing in the two languages shall not be brought into precedent nor in any way operate to the prejudice of either party.

OCTOBER 16.

The following letter from the Secretary of State, with its enclosure, was delivered to Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie, at Trenton.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Trenton, Oct. 16, 1799.

SIR: To fulfil the President's orders, and to convey correctly to you and — his sentiments towards you, and his determination respecting your mission as Envoys Extraordinary to the French Republic, I enclose a copy of his letter to me of this date; and have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

TRENTON, Oct. 16, 1799.

SIR: I request you to order fair copies of the instructions, as corrected last evening, to be prepared and delivered to Judge Ellsworth and Governor Davie, with another for Mr. Murray, without loss of time; and to write a letter to those gentlemen as Envoys Extraordinary to the French Republic, expressing, with the affectionate respects of the President, his desire that they would take their passage for France, on board the frigate United States, Captain Barry, now lying at Rhode Island, by the 1st of November, or sooner, if consistent with their conveniences. Captain Barry will have orders to land them in any port of France which they may prefer, and to touch at any other ports which they may desire. The President's best wishes for their health and happiness, as well as for an honorable termination of their mission, will attend them. As their visit to France is one of the most critical, important, and interesting moments that ever has occurred, it cannot fail to be highly entertaining and instructive to them, and useful to their country, whether it terminate in peace and reconciliation or not. The President sincerely prays God to have them in his holy keeping.

I am, sir, with great respect and esteem, your faithful humble servant,

JOHN ADAMS.

T. PICKERING, Esq., Secretary of State.

The following are the instructions above referred to.

Instructions to Oliver Ellsworth, William Richardson Davie, and William Vans Murray, Esquires, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the French Republic.

GENTLEMEN: You have been witnesses of the enduring patience of the United States, under the unexampled aggressions, depredations, and hostilities, authorized and sanctioned by the French Republic against the commerce and citizens of the United States; and you are well informed of the measures adopted by our Government to put a stop to these evils, to obtain redress for the injured, and real peace and security to our country. And you know that, instead of relief, instead of justice for past wrongs, our very moderate demands have been immediately followed by new aggressions and more extended depredations; while our Ministers, seeking redress and reconciliation, have been refused a reception, treated with indignities, and finally driven from its territories.

This conduct of the French Republic would well have justified an immediate declaration of war on the part of the United States; but desirous of maintaining peace, and willing to leave open the door of reconciliation with France, the United States contented themselves with preparations for defence, and measures calculated to protect their commerce.

The treatment experienced by the former Envoys of the United States to the French Republic, having determined the President not to send thither other Ministers, without direct and unequivocal assurances previously signified by its Minister of Foreign Relations, that they would be received in character to an audience of the Directory, and that they should enjoy all the prerogatives attached to that character by the law of nations, and that a Minister or Ministers of equal powers should be appointed and commissioned to treat with them: the French Government, by Mr. Talleyrand, its Minister of Foreign Relations, has declared, "that it will receive the Envoys of the United States in the official character with which they are invested; and that they shall enjoy all the prerogatives attached to it by the law of nations; and that one or more Ministers shall be duly authorized to treat with them." This the President deems to be substantially the assurance which he required as the previous condition of the Envoys entering on their mission. It now belongs to you, gentlemen, to see that this assurance be verified. Your country will not submit to any new indignity or neglect. It is expected, when you shall have assembled at Paris, and have given official notice of it to the Minister of Foreign Relations, that you will be received to an audience of the Executive Directory; that a Minister or Ministers, with powers equal to your own, will be appointed to treat with you; and that within twenty days at furthest, after your arrival at Paris, your negotiation will be commenced. If, however, your passports to Paris should be unreasonably withheld; if an audience of the Directory should be denied or procrastinated; if the appointment of a Minister or Ministers, with equal powers, to treat with you, should be delayed; or, if, when appointed, they postpone the intended negotiation; you are to relinquish your mission, demand your passports, and leave France; and, having once resolved to terminate the mission, you are not to resume it, whatever fresh overtures or assurances may be tendered to you by the French Government.

One more limitation: The subjects of difference between the United States and France have often been discussed and are well understood; and, therefore, admit of a speedy decision. The negotiation is expected to be concluded in such time that you may certainly embark for the United States by the 1st of next April. This is highly important, in order that on your return Congress may be found in session, to take those measures which the result of your mission shall require. If it can be earlier concluded it will be still better.

If any of the periods above mentioned should be prolonged with your assent, it is expected that the circumstances will be stated for your justification.

I. At the opening of the negotiation you will inform the French Ministers, that the United States expect from France, as an indispensable condition of the treaty, a stipulation to make to the citizens of the United States full compensation for all losses and damages which they shall have sustained, by reason of irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of their vessels and other property, under color of authority or commissions from the French Republic or its agents. And all captures and condemnations are deemed irregular or illegal, when contrary to the law of nations generally received and acknowledged in Europe, and to the stipulations in the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, of the 6th of February, 1778, fairly and ingeniously interpreted, while that treaty remained in force; especially when made and pronounced.

1. Because the vessels' lading, or any part thereof, consisted of provisions or merchandise coming from England or her possessions.

2. Because the vessels were not provided with the rôles d'équipage prescribed by the laws of France; and which, it has been pretended, were also required by treaty.

3. Because sea letters or other papers were wanting, or said to be wanting when the property shall have been, or shall be, admitted or proved to be American. Such defect of papers, though it might justify the captors and exempt them from damages, for bringing in such vessels for examination, could not, with reason, be a ground of condemnation.

4. When the owners, masters, or supercargoes shall have been refused a hearing, or placed in situations rendering their presence at the trial impracticable.

5. When the vessels or other property captured shall have been sold, or otherwise disposed of, without a regular trial and condemnation.

Captures and condemnations for such causes, and under such circumstances, are manifestly irregular or illegal.

The French Government, if it has any serious wish to accommodate existing differences, can make no difficulty in admitting the general proposition, that, for injuries arising from violated laws and engagements, reparation shall be made. In every claim under this general stipulation, the question will occur, Has the treaty, or the law of nations, been violated?

But such a general stipulation will not be sufficient. The five specific propositions just stated are obviously proper rules of adjudication; but the previous admission of the first and second is vastly important, to remove from hazard the most interesting claims of our citizens.

To capture neutral property, because it was produced or manufactured in the country of an enemy to France, is so palpably unjust, that it seems improbable that even the men who originated the law, were they still in power, would persist in it as of right; and it is scarcely possible for their successors to hesitate on this point. To hesitate would be to doubt whether a man has a right to occupy his own house, or to wear his own clothes, unless he had built the first, or manufactured the last, with his own hands.

The second proposition respecting the rôle d'équipage, as well as the first, should be insisted on. Until the decree of the Directory of March 2, 1797, was passed, and we had felt its fatal effects, we had no idea of the meaning which the French applied to the phrase rôle d'équipage. In the Consular Convention between the United States and France, article ninth, which relates to deserters from vessels, the document is described in the French by the words "des registres du bâtiment ou rôle d'équipage," and in the English part of the Convention by the words "the registers of the vessel or ship's rolls." And this paper was to be produced to the proper judge, to prove a deserter to belong to the vessel in question. The law or usage of each nation was incontestably to direct what was proper for its own vessels in this respect. If an American master claimed from a judge in France his warrant to arrest a deserter, he must have produced his "ship's roll," or what in the United States is called his shipping paper, which is a contract signed by all the persons composing a vessel's crew. The propriety and necessity of a ship's roll was, in the year 1790, sanctioned and enforced by an act of Congress; and, without such a written contract, the master, besides being subjected to other disadvantages, could not claim his men when they deserted. This ship's roll every American master, bound on a foreign voyage, takes on board his vessel; and, unquestionably every American vessel, captured and condemned by the French for the want of a rôle d'équipage, has, nevertheless, been possessed of the ship's roll, just described; and it is the only list of the ship's crew, which could ever have been contemplated by the United States, as necessary for American vessels. There never was, indeed, any intimation on the part of France, from 1778, when the Treaty of Amity and Commerce was made, until the passing of the decree of the Directory, in March, 1797, that a rôle d'équipage, other than the ship's roll, or shipping paper, would be required. It was then suddenly demanded; and the decree (like the law of January, 1798, respecting articles of the produce or manufacture of Great Britain,) was instantly enforced, and became a snare to the multitudes of American vessels, which, for want of previous notice, would not have on board the document in question, if their Government should permit them to receive a document which they were under no obligation to produce. For it cannot, with any semblance of justice, be pretended that the vessels of one nation are bound to furnish themselves with papers in forms prescribed by the laws of another. And if we resort to the treaty of 1778, or to the sea-letter or passport annexed to it, on which letter the Directory pretended to found their decree concerning the rôle d'équipage, we shall see that these words are not to be found in either; and, although the passport mentions "a list signed and witnessed, containing the names, surnames, the places of birth, and abode of the crew of his [the neutral master's] ship, and of all who shall embark on board her, whom he shall not take on board without the knowledge and permission of the officers of the marine;" yet, instead of being obliged "to have the list on board," the passport declares, that "he shall enter it in the proper office;" and all that the treaty requires him to exhibit at sea is the sea-letter, or passport. In a word, whatever is said about the rôle d'équipage, in the French application of the phrase, has relation to the laws and usages of France. It was to be exhibited to the officers of the marine; but the United States have not, nor ever had, like France, any such description of officers, employed in the examination and clearing of vessels and their crews, prior to their going to sea; and the Directory, if they had wanted pretences for despoiling our commerce, might as well have made the omission of appointing marine officers in our ports, to whom, according to the letter of the passport, the rôle d'équipage was to be exhibited, a cause of capture and condemnation, as the omitting to furnish them with rôles d'équipage in the French form. In preparing, in 1793, the sea-letter for American vessels, the Secretary of State, Mr. Jefferson, changed, in divers places, the letter of the passport, substituting other words applicable to us; and for "officers of the marine," "officers and judges of the marine," which words were descriptive of French institutions, using only the phrase "proper officers," in conformity with our own. In the same manner, the "ship's roll," or shipping paper of the United States, if at all required, should have been respected by France, as her rôle d'équipage would have been respected by the United States. And, after all, what was the real object of the sea-letter, (in which alone there is any reference to a list of the crew,) and what was it substantially to express? The twenty-fifth article of the treaty of 1778 informs us, "in case either of the parties should be engaged in war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or people of the other ally, must be furnished with sea-letters or passports, expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, as also the name and habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, "that it may appear thereby that the ship really and truly belongs to the subjects of one of the parties;" and with this further view, "that all manner of dissensions and quarrels might be avoided and prevented;" for, as was declared in the twenty-seventh article, when a ship of the party remaining neutral, met with by a ship of the other party, had shown her sea-letter or passport, she was to "be free and at liberty to pursue her voyage, so as it should not be lawful to molest or search her in any manner, or to give her chase, or force her to quit her intended course."

It also merits observation, that, according to the tenor of the sea-letter or passport, in every port or haven where he (the neutral master) should enter with his ship, he is required to show, not a rôle d'équipage, but his passport. Yet this passport, made and intended by the Governments of France and the United States, in 1778, to facilitate and protect their commerce, to exempt it from vexations, and to prevent dissensions and quarrels, has, by the Government of France, been converted into a fatal snare, an engine of mischief, producing quarrels, dissensions, vexations, and, to the commerce of many American citizens, absolute destruction.

II. If these preliminaries should be satisfactorily arranged, then, for the purpose of examining and adjusting all the claims of our citizens, it will be necessary to provide for the appointment of a Board of Commissioners similar to that described in the sixth and seventh articles of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between the United States and Great Britain.

The Commissioners of the two nations may first meet at Paris. In choosing the fifth Commissioner, they will have a right to propose a Frenchman or an American. But it might conduce to more satisfactory results if the fifth Commissioner were a foreign civilian, eminent for his learning, talents, and integrity.

Three of the Commissioners may constitute a board, provided one named on each side and the fifth Commissioner be present. The four Commissioners, in the absence of the fifth, may also constitute a board; and, in each case, the decisions of a majority are to be valid. But, when on any questions, the four Commissioners, in the absence of the fifth, shall be equally divided, such questions are to be re-examined and decided in the presence of the fifth Commissioner. Further, in absence of the fifth Commissioner, any three of the other Commissioners may constitute a Board, and their decisions valid in cases where they are unanimous.

The salaries of the Commissioners, the expense attending the commission, and the supplying of vacancies in it, may be regulated in the manner proposed in the eighth article of our Treaty of Amity and Commerce with Great Britain.

The Commissioners should be appointed and meet at Paris, within six months after the ratifications of the treaty by the respective Governments, and as much sooner as may be.

Claims may be presented to the Board during

two years, commencing with the day on which the Commissioners shall first assemble to proceed to business; and, in particular cases, in which it shall appear to them reasonable and just, they may extend the time of receiving claims to any reasonable term after the expiration of the two years.

All sums which the Board may award to American claimants, France should stipulate to pay in gold and silver, without any deduction, at such place or places, and at such time or times, as the Commissioners shall appoint. The awards should comprehend a reasonable allowance of interest on the amount of the original losses and damages, or, instead of prompt payment, the whole may constitute a transferable capital, bearing interest until the debt be discharged.

The Board should also take cognizance of the claims which may be presented to them by American citizens for merchandise, or other property, seized by the French in their own ports or elsewhere, and not comprehended under the head of captures; and for their vessels arbitrarily and unreasonably detained in French ports, and for the losses and damages thereby sustained, the Board should award equitable compensations, to be paid in the manner prescribed in the case of captures.

The claims of the United States, as distinguished from those of their citizens, for injuries received from the French Republic, or its citizens, should be submitted to the same Board; and whatever sums they award, France should stipulate to pay, in the manner before mentioned, in the case of captures.

As the French Government have heretofore complained of infringements of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce by the United States, or their citizens, all claims for injuries thereby occasioned to France, or its citizens, are to be submitted to the same board; and whatever damages they award, will be allowed by the United States, and deducted from the sums awarded to be paid by France.

If, however, the French Government should desire to waive its national claims, you may do the like on the part of the United States. Doubtless the claims of the latter would exceed those of the former; but, to avoid multiplying subjects of dispute, and because national claims may probably be less definite than those of individuals, and consequently more difficult to adjust, national claims may, on both sides, be relinquished.

All claims for sums due to American citizens, by contracts with the French Government or its agents, which may be presented to the Board, France should stipulate to pay within the shortest periods possible to obtain, with interest, at the rate or rates agreed on; or, if no agreement about interest appears, then at the rate to be fixed by the Board, and from the times when the sums were respectively payable by contract. This also may be transferable stock.

The questions about interest, and any other questions which may arise out of the claims founded on contracts, not explicitly determined by the treaty, may be left to the decision of the Board of Commissioners.

III. If the preceding claims shall be duly attended to, and adequate arrangements made for adjusting and satisfying them, you will then turn your thoughts to the regulation of navigation and commerce, and to some other points interesting to the two nations.

IV. It may be stipulated that there shall be a reciprocal and entirely perfect liberty of commerce and navigation between France and the United States, and their territories and dominions, in every part of the world; but without admitting the vessels of either country into the rivers of the other beyond the highest ports of entry from the sea.

With the usual policy of European nations, France may object to the free admission of American vessels into the ports of her colonies. But the singular injuries our commerce has sustained from France, during the present war, which no payments to be made by her, under the preceding stipulations, can ever fully compensate, plead for an entire liberty of trade with her colonies, at least during the term of the proposed treaty, and until the stipulated compensations shall actually have been made. Another reason will naturally operate in favor of this claim; the inability of France immediately to furnish the requisite navigation and supplies for the commerce of her distant possessions.

But if France will not allow us a trade with her colonies on the terms which may be agreed in respect to the parent State, we should be silent on the subject. The commerce of all our territories will be open to France; that of all her dominions should be alike open to us. At any rate, it appears inexpedient for the United States to countenance injurious distinctions respecting colonial commerce, to obtain a share in it by agreeing to allow a price for it in the payment of extra duties. Neither ought we to stipulate anything like what is contained in the last clause of the third article of our treaty with the United Netherlands. Such an engagement would be a species of guaranty of the colony system. It is sufficient for the United States to treat foreign nations with justice and friendship.

V. It may be stipulated that no other or higher duties shall be paid by the ships or merchandise of one party in the ports of the other, than such as are or shall be payable by the like vessels or merchandise of all other nations; that no other or higher duties shall be imposed in one country on the importation of any articles which are the growth, produce, or manufacture of the other than are or shall be payable on the importation of the like articles being of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country; and that no prohibition shall be imposed on the exportation or importation of any articles from or to the territories of the two parties, respectively, which shall not equally extend to all other nations.

And for the information of their respective fellow-citizens, and to prevent abuses, it may be stipulated that the Consuls of each nation shall be officially furnished in the other with tariffs of all imposts, customs, duties, and charges; by which tariffs the demands of the officers of each nation may be respectively limited.

VI. The freedom of navigation and commerce here proposed will require the admission of the citizens of the two countries respectively into the dominions of the other, with liberty to reside there, to hire and possess houses and warehouses for the purposes of their commerce, and complete protection and security for the merchants and traders on each side, with their property, whether in going to, residing in, or returning from, the country of the other. Nor should they be liable to any tax on their persons or property, to which the natives are not equally subject. They should be at liberty to manage their own affairs, without being obliged to employ any factor, broker, or interpreter, or any persons to load or unload their vessels; with a right, however, to employ any or all of them, as well as advocates and attorneys, at their pleasure.

VII. The merchants and others of one nation residing in the other, should have liberty to dispose of their property by testament, or otherwise, including real estates already acquired; and, if dying intestate, their heirs should enjoy the right of succession. Provided that, if the laws of either country should at the time be incompatible with such transfer or inheritance of real estates by aliens, they may be sold or otherwise disposed of to citizens of the two countries respectively. The citizens of the United States should not, in respect to their property, be considered as aubains in France; and, consequently, should be exempted from the droit d'aubain, or other similar duty.

VIII. The mutual residence of citizens of the two nations in the countries of each other necessarily requires the free exercise of religion, at least in their own houses, and in their own way; and permission to bury the dead in convenient places.

IX. If debtors flee from one country to the other, the creditors should be allowed to pursue them, and have the benefit of the laws of the country to which they flee, in the same manner as if the debts had been there contracted.

X. Neither the debts due from individuals of the one nation to the individuals of the other, nor shares nor moneys which they may have in the public funds, or in the public or private banks, should ever, in any event of war or national differences, be sequestered or confiscated.

XI. The ships of the citizens of the respective countries coming upon any coasts belonging to either, but not willing to enter into port; or, being entered into port, and not willing to unload their cargoes or break bulk; they should be treated according to the general rules prescribed, or to be prescribed, relative to the object in question.*

XII. Neither party should permit the ships or goods belonging to the citizens of the other to be taken within cannon shot of the coast, nor elsewhere within their jurisdiction, by ships of war or others having commission from any Prince, Republic, or State whatever. But if such capture or other injury should happen, the party whose territorial rights are thus violated should use his utmost endeavors to obtain from the offending party full and ample satisfaction for the capture or other injury so committed. The just freedom of commerce, and the interest and dignity of the neutral nation, demand the protection of all vessels entering its ports, not only from being taken, but from being pursued within its jurisdiction, or immediately after their departure from its ports; therefore, their enemy, finding an asylum in those ports, should not be permitted to leave the same until the lapse of twenty-four hours after such departure.

XIII. No asylum should be given to pirates; vessels and property rescued from their hands should be restored to the proper owners; the pirates, and any who conceal or assist them, should be brought to condign punishment; all with the precautions customary in such cases.

XIV. The ships of war and other public vessels of each party should at all times be hospitably received in the ports of the other; their officers and crews paying due respect to the laws and government of the country.

XV. In case the citizens of either party with their private shipping, armed or unarmed, be forced through stress of weather, pursuit of pirates or enemies, or any other urgent necessity, to seek for shelter in the ports of the other, they should be received and treated with humanity, and enjoy all friendly protection and assistance.

XVI. In the case of vessels wrecked, foundered, or otherwise damaged, they should receive in each country the same protection and assistance as if they belonged to the inhabitants of the country on whose coasts the misfortune should happen.

XVII. Each party may appoint Consuls for the protection of trade, to reside in the dominions and territories of the other, including colonies as well as the mother country: for wherever trade is permitted, there the assistance and protection of Consuls is necessary. If a Consul be sent to a colony, his provisional admission by the colonial government might suffice until the pleasure of the national government should be known. The Consuls may enjoy the rights and liberties which belong to them by the law of nations.

XVIII. Deserters from public and private vessels should be delivered up, and the laws of each country make suitable provision for that purpose. The merchants and commanders of vessels, public and private, of one nation, in the country of the other, may engage and receive on board seamen or others, natives or inhabitants of the country to which the vessels belong: Provided that, either on one side or the other, they may not take into their service such of their countrymen (not deserters) who have already engaged in the service of the other party, whether in war or trade, and whether they meet them by land or sea; at least if the captains or masters under whose command such persons may be found, will not voluntarily discharge them from their service. Not only the original enlistment, shipping paper, or rôle d'équipage, but a copy, duly certified by a judge of the country, may be admitted in proof of desertion.

XIX. It may be agreed, that, on mutual requisitions by the respective Ministers or Consuls of the two nations, persons charged with murder or forgery committed within the territorial jurisdiction of one, and fleeing to the other, shall be delivered up.

XX. It may be agreed that neither party shall intermeddle in the common fisheries on the coasts of the other party, nor disturb the other party in the exercise of the rights which either now holds, or may acquire, of fishing on the banks of Newfoundland, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or elsewhere on the American coast northward of the United States of America: but that the whale and seal fisheries may be freely exercised in every quarter of the world.

XXI. The seventh and twenty-second articles of the Commercial Treaty between the United States and France, of February 6, 1778, have been the source of much altercation between the two nations during the present war. The dissolution of that and our other treaties with France leaves us at liberty with respect to future arrangements; with the exception of the now preferable right secured to Great Britain by the twenty-fifth article of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce. In that article we promise mutually that, while we continue in amity, neither party will in future make any treaty that shall be inconsistent with that article or the one preceding it. We cannot, therefore, renew with France the seventeenth and twenty-second articles of the Treaty of 1778. Her aggressions, which occasioned the dissolution of that treaty, have deprived her of the priority of rights and advantages therein stipulated. Indeed, if the public faith pledged in the British Treaty did not forbid a renewal of those engagements with France, sound policy should prevent it. We should preserve to ourselves the right of allowing every commercial nation in amity with us the like shelter, supplies, and assistance, under like circumstances; and, by excluding all equally when engaged in war, (saving to each the rights of humanity and hospitality,) we may keep the calamities of war at a distance. The engagements with Great Britain may cease in two years after the close of the present war: but, under the stipulations contained in the twenty-eighth and last articles of the British Treaty, the engagements in question may be continued to a longer period. If, therefore, you should find any cogent reasons for renewing in substance the seventeenth and twenty-second articles of the Commercial Treaty with France of 1778, it must be with the explicit declaration that neither at the present or any future time, shall the said articles be construed to derogate from the whole or any part of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth articles of the Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation between the United States and His Britannic Majesty, concluded at London on the 19th of November, 1794.

XXII. The present war has exhibited such inconveniences and mischiefs in our own country, and such monstrous abuses elsewhere, by trials, or pretended trials, and sales of prizes, by French Consuls and agents: in order to prevent any claim to the exercise of such powers, it will be expedient expressly to declare they shall not be exercised in the United States; whether the prizes are made by public ships or privateers. There will, of course, be a reciprocal denial of the exercise of the like powers by American Consuls and agents in the dominions of France. Prizes ought to be conducted to the country to which the captors belong, unless the two parties are engaged in hostilities against a common enemy. But, in this case, the established courts for prize causes in the country to which the prizes are conducted should alone take cognizance of them.

XXIII. The duties of an impartial neutrality, when either party shall remain neutral, will forbid any permission to the enemies of the other to arm originally, or to increase a former armament, in the ports of the neutral party.

XXIV. When one of the parties shall be engaged in war, the vessels of the other may be captured on just suspicion of having on board property belonging to the enemy of the former, or of carrying to the enemy any of the articles which are contraband of war. With these exceptions, the trade of each party to the ports of the enemies of the other should be perfectly free, unless to the ports actually blockaded; and if such enemies forbear to capture enemies' property in neutral vessels, it may be agreed that in such case, the contracting parties will forbear to capture the vessels of each other for that cause. The law of France of the 18th of January, 1793, respecting produce or manufactures coming from England or her possessions, is incompatible with the stipulation here proposed, and, if not repealed, negotiations with you must be deemed illusory.

But that captures on light suspicions may be avoided, and the vexations and injuries thence arising prevented, the usual stipulations for sea-letters or passports, and certificates or manifests of the cargoes of vessels, may be introduced. But neither party should be allowed to prescribe the form, or to require the exhibition of any document (the sea-letter and certificates before mentioned excepted) not required by the laws or usages of the party to whose citizens the vessels and their cargoes belong. The form of the sea-letter should be simple, like that now used by the United States, in that part of the passport which is printed in the English language.

When the quality of the ship, goods, and master, shall sufficiently appear from the sea-letter and certificates, the commanders of armed vessels should exact no further proof. And if any merchant ship be not provided with a sea-letter or certificates, the case should be examined by a proper judge; and if it be found, from other proofs and documents, that the vessel truly belongs to the citizens of one of the parties, it should not be liable to confiscation, but be released with its cargo, with the exception of enemies' property and contraband goods which may be found on board. The change of the master not to invalidate the passport.

Relations with France.

XXV. The following articles, beyond the quantities proper for the ship's use, may be deemed contraband of war: cannon, mortars, their carriages and beds, muskets, petards, match, ball, bombs, grenades, carcasses, cartridge-boxes, gunpowder, saltpetre, pikes, halberds, swords, belts, pistols, holsters, cavalry saddles and furniture, and, generally, all kinds of arms and warlike instruments fit for the use of troops; and all these articles may be declared to be just objects of confiscation, whenever they are attempted to be carried to an enemy; but the vessel in which they are laden and the residue of the cargo to be free. France will probably not desire to extend further the use of contraband, and especially not to comprehend timber for ship building, naval stores, and other articles for the equipment of ships. If, however, she urges an extension, then timber for ship building, tar, pitch, turpentine, rosin, copper in sheets, sails, and sail cloth, hemp and cordage, may be added; and, generally, whatever may serve directly and principally for the equipment of vessels. But iron in pigs and bars, timber for house frames, pine or fir planks and boards, staves, nails suitable for house building, coarse linens, and, generally, all other articles which, though occasionally or from necessity applicable to the equipment of ships, are not directly and principally prepared for that purpose.

It is also probable that France will not desire to consider provisions as contraband, unless going to a place actually blockaded, and we ought strenuously to resist any other construction; but if what is said on this subject in the eighteenth article of our commercial treaty with Great Britain should induce France seriously and with earnestness to demand the like stipulation, it may be conceded; yet a modification may first be attempted, by proposing not only that if provisions be captured, they shall be promptly paid for, with a reasonable mercantile profit, freight, and demurrage, but that they shall not be captured at all unless going to a place actually blockaded, or to supply an invading army or hostile fleet, though in situations not actually forming an investment or blockade.

XXVI. If, on the exhibition of the certificates or manifests of a ship's cargo, the property of an enemy, or contraband goods, be discovered, and the ship be consequently captured and carried into port, provision must be made to prevent embezzlement, waste, and destruction.

But there is a very common regulation to prevent disorder and injury in stopping and examining neutral ships, which certainly is disregarded in practice, viz: That the examining ship shall not approach the neutral within cannon shot, while her boat is sent to make the examination. It is a rule which would produce both inconvenience and delay, and in bad weather be impracticable, or very dangerous. The provision that only two or three men shall enter the neutral vessel is very proper, though, like many other salutary regulations, is not enforced by penalties on offenders. But instead of visiting the neutral, the other often requires the neutral to send an officer with his papers. This is an abuse; and many instances have occurred in the present war, in which it has been practised with great inhumanity, and most when it was most inhuman—in tempestuous weather, when a boat could not be put out, but with imminent danger of the lives of the men. It will therefore be very well to stipulate that the neutral party shall in no case be required to go on board the examining vessel. And if this should in any cases prevent an examination, it can afford no just ground of complaint; for prima facie, better is the right of the neutral than of the belligerent vessel. Besides, the stipulation would be reciprocal.

XXVII. The usual stipulations in treaties, designed to prevent abuses by armed vessels, have ever been found inadequate; perhaps they do not admit of a complete remedy. If, however, any nation does not provide penalties and securities, whereby to restrain offenders and indemnify the injured, the nation itself ought to be responsible. Doubtless, the nation should be immediately responsible for all abuses committed by national ships.

One abuse is the destruction or concealment of papers of captured vessels. A remedy for this seems practicable: the captors may be obliged to give a receipt for them upon a list of the papers; and they may also be sealed up with the seals of the captors and captured.

The master and supercargo, being entrusted by the owners with the vessel and cargo, ought never to be separated from them. They may prevent waste and embezzlement, and, on the arrival of the vessel, will be ready for examination; and, also, to claim the property in behalf of the owners, and contest, as of right they may do, the legality of the capture.

Bribery, or an attempt to bribe any one of the ship's company or passengers to depose to any fact tending to the condemnation of vessel or cargo, or putting any of them to torture for that or any other purpose, should absolutely procure her acquittal.

But a still greater evil remains, and more difficult to remedy—the improper institution of prize courts. Probably no provision can be explicitly made, other than that each party will take effectual care that the judgments and decrees in prize causes shall be given, conformable to the rules of justice and equity, and the stipulations of the treaty, and without any unnecessary delay, by judges above all suspicion, and who have no manner of interest in the cause in dispute. It would be some check on the judges in prize causes if their reasons for condemning were required to be stated, with the other proceedings, in writing; and copies of the whole should, if demanded, be delivered to the commander or agent of the captured vessel without the smallest delay, or, at furthest, within fifteen days after sentence pronounced, and sooner if practicable, and at the expense of the captors, (in case of condemnation,) not of the captured, who are otherwise sufficiently distressed.

Prizes, as already observed, should be conducted into the ports of the party at war, or of an associate in the war, and there adjudicated by the regular tribunals. The French have conducted their prizes into neutral as well as belligerent ports; and, when there was no Consul to try and condemn, leaving there the prizes, they have carried the papers to a distant place to find a French tribunal; and there, in the absence of the captured party, procured sentences of condemnation, and sold the prizes. The same mode of obtaining condemnation has been uniformly practised when they carried their prizes into the ports of an associate in the present war. But, without waiting for the result of this farcical trial, it has been common to unlade and sell the cargoes as soon as they reached a port.

An unreasonable burden is imposed on the captured, in requiring them, if they think proper to appeal to a higher tribunal, to find sureties in large penalties, which, as strangers, it is impossible to procure. This evil demands redress.

The crews are often stripped of their property, and even of their clothes, and turned ashore without money or provisions. Such inhuman pillage is disgraceful to the nation which permits, or does not, by adequate punishments, restrain it. The masters, supercargoes, other officers and seamen, should be allowed certain sums; the former to employ counsel to support their claims to the property captured, and also for their subsistence; and the seamen might have an adequate allowance of good provisions until they could find vessels returning to their own country. To admit masters and supercargoes into the courts to defend the property captured, when they have been previously stripped of their money, and all means of providing the legal assistance essential to a right defence, is to tantalize with the semblance of justice, while the substance is denied.

XXVIII. If vessels of either party sail for a place actually blockaded by the other, without a previous knowledge of the blockade, every such vessel may be turned away, but not detained, nor her cargo, if not enemy's property, nor contraband, be confiscated, unless, after notice, she shall again attempt to enter. Nor should any vessel that may have entered prior to the blockade, be restrained from quitting such place with her return cargo; nor, if found there after the reduction of the place, should they be liable to any injury.

XXIX. If a war should break out between the two nations, six months after the proclamation thereof may be allowed to the merchants and others of each nation, residing in the dominions of the other, for selling and transporting their goods and merchandise. And if, during that term, any thing be taken from them, or injury done them, by either party, or the citizens or subjects of either party, full satisfaction should be made.

XXX. The articles of the treaty which you may conclude, as far as they respect compensation and payment for past injuries and contracts, should be permanent, until the objects thereof be fulfilled. So likewise the article to prevent the sequestration or confiscation of debts, and shares or moneys in the public funds, or in public or private banks, should endure, while on either side there is a subject on which to operate. The other articles of the treaty should terminate in ten or twelve years; a period as long as they will be likely to be mutually satisfactory.

The following points are to be considered as ultimated:

1. That an article be inserted for establishing a board, with suitable powers, to hear and determine the claims of our citizens, for the causes hereinbefore expressed, and binding France to pay or secure payment of the sums which shall be awarded.

2. That the treaties and consular convention, declared to be no longer obligatory by act of Congress, be not in whole or in part revived by the new treaty; but that all the engagements, to which the United States are to become parties, be specified in the new treaty.

3. That no guaranty of the whole or any part of the dominions of France be stipulated, nor any engagement made, in the nature of an alliance.

4. That no aid or loan be promised in any form whatever.

5. That no engagement be made inconsistent with the obligations of any prior treaty; and, as it may respect our Treaty with Great Britain, the instruction herein marked XXI, is to be particularly observed.

6. That no stipulation be made granting powers to Consuls or others, under color of which tribunals can be established within our jurisdiction, or personal privileges be claimed by Frenchmen, incompatible with the complete sovereignty of the United States in matters of policy, commerce, and Government.

7. That the duration of the proposed treaty be limited to twelve years, at furthest, from the day of the exchange of the ratifications, with the exceptions respecting its permanence in certain cases, specified under the instruction marked XXX.

23. Personal passports for Judge Ellsworth and Governor Davie.

24. Passport for the frigate United States.

25. Letter to Judge Ellsworth and Governor Davie, mentioning the names of Consuls and agents of the United States in Spain, Portugal, and France.

Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie sailed from Newport, Rhode Island, on the 3d of November, having agreed to touch at Lisbon, before they made any port of France; arrived there on the 27th of November. Information of the revolution at Paris of the 18th Brumaire had just been received, and it was therefore thought expedient to remain long enough at that place to form some judgment of the consequences of that change in the French Government. Upon a conference on the 6th of December, the Envoys resolved on the measures detailed in the following letter to the Secretary of State:

LISBON, December 7, 1799.

SIR: We arrived at this place on the 27th ultimo. The late change in France, the circumstances of which we are informed will be fully detailed in Mr. Smith's despatches, and our desire to obtain a more accurate knowledge of the features and effects of this revolution before we entered that country, would have induced us to land in Holland, where we might join Mr. Murray, and be in a better situation to govern ourselves by circumstances; but Captain Barry apprehends it would hazard the frigate to attempt any port in Holland at this season of the year; we have, therefore, determined to sail immediately for L'Orient.

From L'Orient we shall probably proceed to Paris, if we can be satisfied that our present letters of credence will avail us. You will doubtless consider, sir, of the expediency of sending us, with your first despatches, other letters of credence addressed to the Supreme Executive of France, or in a manner more particular, which may introduce us, if necessary, or sanction the progress we have made. We have the honor, &c.,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE.

HON. TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie, being detained nine days by contrary winds, sailed on the 21st of December for L'Orient; a succession of heavy gales and continued bad weather then rendering it apparently impracticable to reach that place, they authorized Captain Barry to make any port in France or Spain, and arrived at Corunna on the 16th of January, and the next day sent the following letter to Ch. M. Talleyrand, Minister of the Exterior Relations of the French Republic, by a special courier:

CORUNNA, January 17, 1800.

The undersigned, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the French Republic, have the honor to inform you of their arrival at this port, after a lapse of ten weeks since their leaving America, and the loss of four in a fruitless attempt to get from Lisbon (where they touched) to L'Orient. From hence they will proceed immediately to the confines of France by land.

As they left the United States early in November, their letters of credence are, of course, addressed to "the Executive Directory of the French Republic." This circumstance being a matter of mere formality, they are induced to suppose that no objection will arise out of it, and that their letters of credence will have the same effect as they would have under an address adapted to the present distribution of the powers of the French Republic. Should the Government view this circumstance in the same light with the undersigned, they then request that passports may be granted for them and their suite to Paris, and that they may be forwarded by the courier charged with these despatches; and also that there may be granted, and that you would have the goodness to transmit, together with their letter to him, a like passport to William Vans Murray, Esq., at the Hague, who is joint Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, as before mentioned, with them. They pray you, sir, to accept the assurances of their high respect,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE.

MINISTER OF FOREIGN RELATIONS, &c.

The following is the letter forwarded to William Vans Murray, Esq., mentioned in the above

CORUNNA, January 17, 1800.

DEAR SIR: We enclose to you a copy of our note to the Minister of Foreign Relations of the French Republic, from which you will learn our situation, and the steps we have taken to facilitate your progress and ours to Paris, where we hope soon to meet you for the accomplishment of a business which we all have so much at heart. Your letter of credence and your instructions are with us. With much respect and esteem, we are, dear sir, your obedient servants,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE.

WILLIAM VANS MURRAY, Esq.

The above Envoys, in pursuance of the plan which they had adopted of going to Paris by land, left Corunna on the 24th of January, and arrived at Burgos on the 9th of February, where they met the courier returning from Paris, with the following answer from the Minister of Exterior Relations:

PARIS, 11th Pluviose, (30th January.)
8th year of the French Republic.

GENTLEMEN: I have received the letter dated at Corunna, which you have done me the honor to write. I regret exceedingly that an unpleasant and protracted voyage has so long delayed your arrival in France. You are expected with impatience and will be received with warmth. The form which has been given to your letters of credence will occasion no obstacle to the opening of a negotiation, from which I dare anticipate the happiest results. No time will be lost in transmitting to Mr. Murray the letter intrusted to my care, to which will be added the necessary passports. The requisite passports will also be forwarded to you. Agreeably to your desire, I confide this packet to the courier whom you have despatched.

Receive, gentlemen, the assurance of my high consideration.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

Messrs. ELLSWORTH and DAVIE,
Envoys, &c., of the United States.

Captain Barry having received directions from the Envoys to wait the return of the courier to Corunna, in order to take their despatches for the Government, the following letter was written to the Secretary of State:

BURGOS, February 10, 1800.

SIR: We have the pleasure to enclose to you a copy of our letter No. 1, dated at Lisbon, and forwarded from St. Ubes. We were detained in the Tagus by contrary winds till the 21st of December, when we sailed for L'Orient, under the expectation of making that port in seven or eight days; but, on the 24th, we encountered a severe gale, which blew with little intermission until the 2d of January, at which time it was ascertained that we had drifted as far as latitude 50, and to the west of Cape Clear. Observing that Captain Barry was extremely apprehensive of approaching any part of the French coast, on the Bay of Biscay, in bad weather, and as so much time had been already lost, we directed him to land us in any port of France or Spain that he could make with safety and convenience; he thought proper to choose the port of Corunna, and anchored in the Bay of Ares, a few leagues from that place, on the 11th of January. Being anxious to make the necessary preparations for our journey to Paris, and the wind continuing unfavorable for the sailing of the frigate to Corunna, we landed at the village of Puente d'Eume, and immediately after our arrival at Corunna, despatched a courier to Paris, with a letter addressed to the Minister of Foreign Relations, desiring the necessary passports, (a copy of which is enclosed, marked A.) covering also a letter to Mr. Murray, a copy of which (marked B.) you will receive under this enclosure.

The necessary arrangements were made to meet the courier at Burgos, or Victoria, and he fortunately reached this place yesterday, a few hours before our arrival, charged with the despatches (marked C.) from Ch. M. Talleyrand, Minister of Exterior Relations, enclosing the passports requested in our letter written at Corunna.

We regret exceedingly the time that must be consumed in a long and tedious journey by land, in the most rigorous and unfavorable season of the year; but after the ineffectual attempt to go to L'Orient by water, this measure appeared indispensable, notwithstanding any difficulties with which it might be connected. We expect to leave this place to-morrow, and flatter ourselves with the hope of arriving in Paris about the first of March. We have the honor to be, &c.,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE.

HON. TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

The Envoys set out from Burgos on the 11th of February, and, taking the route by Bayonne, arrived in Paris on the 2d of March, where Mr. Murray had also arrived the preceding day.

The following was delivered by Mr. Murray, as an extract from his journal:

Relations with France.

Mr. Semonville, the French Minister at the Hague, called on me on the 4th of February, and delivered to me a packet from Mr. Talleyrand, containing a passport, a letter from my colleagues Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie, dated at Corunna, and the following letter:

PARIS, 11th Pluviose, (30th January),
8th year of the French Republic.

SIR: I have received information that the Plenipotentiaries of the United States, after a long and difficult voyage, have arrived at Corunna. They have forwarded to me the enclosed letter, which I hasten to transmit to you. I avail myself of this occasion to enclose a passport, which may be necessary on your repairing to Paris. While indulging the hope that you will speedily join your colleagues, I felicitate myself upon the prospect that the time will soon arrive, when, by a frank and full discussion, a termination will be put to the difficulties existing between the Republic of France and the United States, and when the two nations will be restored to that friendly and harmonious intercourse which ought never to have been suspended. Receive, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

To Mr. MURRAY,

Envoy, &c., of the U. S. at the Hague.

To which I returned the following answer:

THE HAGUE, February 4, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTER: Mr. Semonville, the Minister Plenipotentiary of the French Republic, had the goodness to-day to deliver to me himself the letter of the 31st ultimo, which you did me the honor to write, enclosing passports for myself, family, and baggage, and a letter from my colleagues, Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie; accept my thanks for this communication.

I shall immediately prepare for my new destination, one from which I now permit myself to hope a restoration of that harmony which certainly ought not to have been so cruelly interrupted.

May I ask a repetition of an act of politeness in requesting that the enclosed may be delivered to my colleagues, who I hope will be in Paris immediately. Accept, Citizen Minister, the assurance of my high consideration.

W. V. MURRAY.

To CITIZEN TALLEYRAND,

Minister, &c., of the French Republic.

On the 10th, I requested personally of Mr. Vemder Goes, the Minister of Exterior Relations, an audience of leave. This was fixed for the 13th, when I took a temporary leave of the Batavian Directory, and on the 17th set out for Paris.

The severity of the season, and a two days' illness of Mrs. Murray on the road, prevented me from making a journey, generally made in five days, in less than thirteen. On Saturday evening, the 1st March, I arrived at Paris, and the next day had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie arrive.

MARCH 3d.

The following note was addressed to the Minister of Exterior Relations:

PARIS, 3d March, 1800, and of the Independence of the U. S. the 24th.

CITIZEN MINISTER: The undersigned, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the French Republic, have just met at this city, and request the favor of you to inform them at what time it may be convenient to you to receive a visit from them.

Accept, Citizen Minister, the assurance of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

To Citizen TALLEYRAND,

Minister of Exterior Relations, &c.

The following notes were received from the Minister, in answer to the above, and the demand verbally made by the Envoys of being formally received by the Premier Consul:

The Minister of Exterior Relations to Messrs. Oliver Ellsworth, W. R. Davie, and W. V. Murray, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America.

PARIS, 13th Ventose, (3d March),
year 8 of the French Republic.

GENTLEMEN: The information which you have just communicated, of your arrival at Paris, has given me real satisfaction. If you will take the trouble to call upon me at half-past twelve tomorrow, I will be exceedingly gratified at having the honor to receive you. Accept, gentlemen, the assurance of my high consideration.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

The Minister of Exterior Relations to Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, Ministers Plenipotentiary and Envoys Extraordinary of the United States of America.

PARIS, 14th Ventose, (4th March),
8th year of the French Republic,
one and indivisible.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to inform you that the First Consul of the Republic will give you an audience on the 17th instant; I pray you, therefore, to be so obliging as to attend on that day at the Tuilleries, in the Hall of the Ambassadors, a little before one o'clock. I beg you to accept the assurance of my high consideration.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

MARCH 8th, (17th Ventose.)

The Envoys were received by the Premier Consul, in the manner required by their instructions.

Citizens Joseph Bonaparte, Fleurieu, and Rœderer, being appointed by the Premier Consul, on the 13th Ventose, Ministers Plenipotentiary for the purpose of negotiating with the Ministers Plenipotentiary and Envoys Extraordinary of the United States, upon the differences existing between the two States, this event was announced to the Envoys of the United States, by the Minister of Exterior Relations, in the following letter, under date of the 18th Ventose, (8th of March:)

Relations with France.

The Minister of Exterior Relations to Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America.

PARIS 18th Ventose, (8th of March,) 8th year of the French Republic, one and indivisible.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to inform you that the First Consul of the Republic has just appointed Citizens Joseph Bonaparte, ex-Ambassador at Rome, Fleurieu, late Minister of Marine, and Røederer, Counsellor of State, Ministers Plenipotentiary, to treat with you concerning the differences existing between the two nations, to effect the accommodation which they mutually desire, and to fulfil the wish, expressed by the two Governments, to remove a misunderstanding which comports as little with their interests as with their sentiments. Receive, gentlemen, the assurance of my high consideration.

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Minister of Exterior Relations of the French Republic.

PARIS, March 9, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTER: The undersigned, Envoys Extraordinary of the United States, have the honor to acknowledge your letter of yesterday, announcing to them that the Premier Consul of the Republic had named the Citizens Joseph Bonaparte, ex-Ambassador at Rome, Fleurieu, late Minister of Marine, and Røederer, Counsellor of State, as Ministers Plenipotentiary to treat with them on the differences existing between the French Republic and the United States of America.

The Government of the United States, being always assured that the interests of both nations would be essentially promoted by the re-establishment of confidence and harmony between the two countries, is sincerely desirous to adjust all existing differences, and to restore between them that understanding and friendly intercourse so congenial to her wishes, and so essential to their mutual prosperity.

The agreeable and interesting task of effecting these great objects has been committed, on the part of the United States, to the undersigned, and they will be ready to enter upon that business as soon as the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic shall signify that they are ready to commence the negotiation. Accept, Citizen Minister, the assurances of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

The Envoys of the United States having thus informed the Minister of Exterior Relations of their readiness to enter on the business of the negotiation, as soon as it would be convenient for the Ministers of the French Republic, they waited until the 14th for some intimation from them on that subject: none, however, being then received, they agreed to address the following note to Messrs. Joseph Bonaparte, Fleurieu, and Røederer, the Ministers announced in the above communication:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, March 15, 1800.

MINISTERS: The undersigned had the pleasure to be informed of your appointment as Ministers Plenipotentiary to treat with them on the differences existing between the French Republic and the United States, by a letter from the Minister of Exterior Relations, under date of the 18th Ventose.

The necessary previous measures appearing now to be taken by both Governments, it remains with their Ministers to have their wishes fulfilled: and the undersigned permit themselves to hope that the strange phenomenon of a misunderstanding between the French Republic and the United States of America will soon disappear. They will have the honor to meet the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic at such time and place as they may prefer, for the exchange of powers, and to learn how soon it will be convenient for them to commence the negotiation. Accept, Ministers, the assurances of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

MARCH 27th.

The Envoys had received no answer to their note of the 15th, but had been informed, verbally, that the delay was much regretted by the French Government and the Ministers, and that it was occasioned by the indisposition of Mr. Joseph Bonaparte, President of the French Commission, who, in a note to the Envoys, of this date, announced his recovery. The French Ministers, however, continuing silent, the Envoys addressed the following note to them, on the morning of the 29th; and, in the afternoon of the same day, received the note under date of the 8th Germinal, (same date:)

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Citizens J. Bonaparte, Fleurieu, and Røederer, Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, March 29, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned are happy to learn that the indisposition of Mr. Bonaparte, which has so unfortunately retarded the commencement of the negotiation, is at length removed: and, impressed as they are with the importance of their mission, and the urgency of existing circumstances, they take again the liberty to express their solicitude that an early day may be named, at which it will be convenient for you to honor the undersigned with an interview, for the purpose of effecting the object of their last note. Accept, Citizen Ministers, &c.

WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic to the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America.

PARIS, 8th Germinal, year 8,
(27th March, 1800.)

GENTLEMEN: We participate, very sincerely, in the wish which you have expressed for the speedy re-establishment of friendly relations between the United States of America and the French Republic; and it is for the purpose of hastening its accomplishment that we propose a conference the 11th or 12th instant, at whatever hour may be most convenient to you, at the house of Citizen J. Bonaparte, one of us. Receive, gentlemen, the assurance of our high consideration.

RÖDERER.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, March, 30, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The underwritten Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 8th Germinal, proposing a meeting on the 11th or 12th following, at such hour as might be convenient.

The underwritten will have the honor to meet the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic at the house of the Citizen Joseph Bonaparte, on the 12th Germinal, (2d April,) at one o'clock in the afternoon; a time which they hope will be agreeable. Receive, Citizen Ministers, the assurance of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

On the 2d of April, (12th Germinal,) the Envoys of the United States met the French Ministers at the house of Joseph Bonaparte, where the following powers were exchanged, and the mode of conducting the negotiation adjusted:

Extract from the Registers of the Decrees of the First Consul of the Republic.

PARIS, 12th Ventose, (3d March),
year 8 of the French Republic,
one and indivisible.

In the name of the French people: Bonaparte, First Consul of the Republic, upon the report of the Minister of Foreign Relations, decrees:

ARTICLE 1. Citizen Joseph Bonaparte, ex-Ambassador of the French Republic. Fleurieu, and Rœderer, Counsellors of State, are appointed Ministers Plenipotentiary, for the purpose of negotiating with the Ministers Plenipotentiary and Envoys Extraordinary of the United States, upon the differences existing between the two nations.

ART. 2. Citizen Joseph Bonaparte shall preside over the French Ministers.

JOHN ADAMS, President of the United States of America. To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, by letters patent under the seal of the United States, and dated on the 26th day of February last, I did, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, appoint Oliver Ellsworth, Chief Justice of the United States, Patrick Henry, late Governor of Virginia, and William Vans Murray, Minister Resident of the United States at the Hague, to be Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, thereby giving and granting to them full powers, for and in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with the Minister or Ministers of the French Republic, who should be appointed and commissioned with equal powers, and with such Minister or Ministers to discuss and settle by a treaty all controversies between the United States and France, transmitting such treaty to the President of the United States of America, for his final ratification, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, if such advice and consent shall be given; and whereas the said Patrick Henry did signify to me that, from his bodily infirmities, being unable to execute his said appointment, he declined accepting the same; now, know ye, that reposing especial trust and confidence in the integrity, prudence, and abilities of William Richardson Davie, late Governor of the State of North Carolina, I have nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, do appoint him an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic, in the room of the said Patrick Henry, hereby giving and granting to him, and to the said Oliver Ellsworth, and William Vans Murray, full powers for and in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with the Minister or Ministers of the French Republic, who shall be appointed and commissioned with equal powers, and with such Minister or Ministers to discuss and settle by a treaty all controversies between the United States and France, transmitting such treaty to the President of the United States of America, for his final ratification, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the

Relations with France.

United States, if such advice and consent shall be given.

In testimony whereof, I have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the United States of America to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand, at the city of Philadelphia, the tenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, and of the independence of the United States the twenty-fourth.

JOHN ADAMS.

By the President:

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

Secretary of State.

The Envoys, after withdrawing, proceeded immediately to consider the copy of the powers delivered by the French Ministers; and, as they appeared to them not sufficiently full and explicit to authorize them to commence the negotiation under the limitation of their own powers, they addressed the following note to the French Ministers on the next day:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, April 3, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned Envoys, having conferred on the copy delivered to them yesterday, of the powers granted to you to negotiate with them concerning the existing differences between the French Republic and the United States, feel themselves compelled to present to you the doubts they entertain whether the terms in which those powers are expressed are sufficiently full and explicit. You will please to observe that the powers with which the undersigned are invested, authorize them to discuss and settle by a treaty all controversies between the United States and France, and they suppose it may be questionable, at least, whether the same latitude of power may be given by the expression, "à l'effet de négocier avec les Ministres, &c. sur les différends survenus entre les deux états;" and if it could be inferred from any construction of the terms used in the commission, that to "negotiate respecting the existing differences," implied a power to settle them also by treaty, yet the undersigned conceive that it would not be advisable to act upon powers deduced by implication from terms in their nature indefinite, in the same manner as if they had been fully and explicitly expressed. Upon examining the copy of the commission, which the undersigned had the honor to deliver to you yesterday, you will observe the nature and extent of their powers, and that they can only negotiate with Ministers of the French Republic, who may be commissioned with equal powers. This circumstance, it is hoped, will satisfy the Ministers of the French Republic, that the undersigned have not attached to this objection an unnecessary importance, and evince to them the propriety of procuring from their Government powers commensurate with those granted by the Government of the United States.

While the undersigned regret any trouble or delay that this circumstance may occasion, they are happy that the situation of the Ministers of the French Republic will enable them to remove the difficulty without any considerable inconvenience to the negotiation.

The Envoys of the United States have the highest confidence in the upright views and frank disposition of the French Government, and hope it will do them the justice to believe that they are actuated only by a respect to that duty which their commission and instructions prescribe. Accept, &c.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

APRIL 8.

Received the following letter from the French Ministers, under date of the 17th Germinal, (7th April,) enclosing a copy of the new powers, and a copy of a letter from the Minister of Exterior Relations:

The Minister of Exterior Relations to the Ministers Plenipotentiary appointed to negotiate with the Envoys of the United States.

PARIS, 19 Germinal, (April 6,) year 8.

I have received, citizens, your letter of the 13th and 14th of this month, (Nos. 1 and 2,) with the copies therein referred to.

By the first, you inform me of the exchange which you have made of your powers with the American Ministers; and, in the second, you communicate an extract of the note which these Ministers have addressed to you, respecting the insufficiency which they suppose to exist in the powers you have exchanged with them.

The First Consul, to whom I have submitted your despatches, in order to present to the Ministers of the United States an unequivocal proof of the spirit in which he desires to conduct the negotiation, has thought proper to furnish you with powers still more special and explicit than those contained in his first decree. In transmitting them, however, to the American Ministers, you will be pleased to apprise them that, in our diplomatic usages, since the Revolution, our negotiators have almost always been accredited and empowered by simple decrees, similar to the one which you have placed in their hands; and that in these decrees the expression "to negotiate" has always imported an authority "to conclude." I might have confined myself, indeed, to giving you, officially, this explanation; and the American Ministers, as they have themselves declared, would have been content with receiving it. But the First Consul has preferred the other mode, for the purpose, as I have already stated, of removing all the obstacles of mere form which could delay or embarrass the progress of the negotiation.

Safety and fraternity.

PARIS, the 17th Germinal,
(7th April,) year 8.

The undersigned, Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic, have the honor to inform the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, that their letter, dated the 13th of this month, has been received.

In order to reply to this letter, the French Ministers have awaited the result of its reference to their Government, which they hastened to make. The answer which they received is enclosed. In the new powers, of which they have the honor to transmit the subjoined copy, the American Ministers will perceive the manner in which the First Consul of the Republic has removed the doubt which they expressed; and in the explanations contained in the letter of the Ministers of Exterior Relations, they will not fail to discover new motives of confidence. The Ministers of the Republic, presuming that no obstacle will now oppose the opening of the negotiation, expect to receive, on the part of the Ministers of the United States, the memorial which was announced at the conference of the 12th instant.

They pray them to receive the assurance of their high consideration.

Extract from the register of the Decrees of the First Consul of the Republic.

PARIS, 15th Germinal, (5th March,) year 8th of the Republic, one and indivisible.

In the name of the French people: Bonaparte, Rœderer, and Fleurieu, appointed, by the decree of the 13th Ventose, (3d March) last, Ministers Plenipotentiary, to negotiate with the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America upon the differences existing between the two nations, are authorized to negotiate with the said Ministers upon all that concerns these differences; as well as to sign and conclude, in the name of the Republic, whatever shall to them appear necessary to effect a perfect re-establishment of good harmony. To this end, therefore, Citizens Bonaparte, Rœderer, and Fleurieu receive, by this decree, full and complets powers.

BONAPARTE.

The following answer was returned to the above communication, accompanied by a note under the same date, sketching the plan on which the Envoys proposed to open the negotiation. This proposition produced a discussion, detailed in the following correspondence up to the 17th April, inclusive;

when the Envoys considered the way sufficiently prepared to authorize them to offer some details in the form of articles of a treaty, respecting the claims of individuals.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Citizens Joseph Bonaparte, Fleurieu, and Rœderer, Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, April 7, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned have great pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of the note which you did them the honor of addressing to them to day, covering the arrêté of new powers, and the copy of the letter to you from the Minister of Exterior Relations. That Minister, they are happy to see, has done them justice upon the interpretation which they had presumed to be the correct one of the terms in question; and as they unite with you in the wish to press forward the negotiation, they believe that, in transmitting the note which accompanies this, and which was promised on the 12th of Germinal, they at once meet the frankness of your views, and give to you a certain demonstration of the confidence with which the justice and principles of the Government of the French Republic have inspired them.

Accept, Citizen Ministers, the assurance of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WM. R. DAVIE,
WM. V. MURRAY.

PARIS, April 7, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned, appreciating the value of time, and wishing by frankness to evince their sincerity, enter directly on the great object of their mission, an object which they believe may be best obtained by avoiding to retrace too minutely the too well known and too painful incidents which have rendered a negotiation necessary. To satisfy the demands of justice, and render a reconciliation cordial and permanent, they propose an arrangement, such as shall be compatible with national honor and existing circumstances, to ascertain and discharge the equitable claims of the citizens of either nation upon the other, whether founded on contract, treaty, or the law of nations. The way being thus prepared, the undersigned will be at liberty to stipulate for that reciprocity and freedom of commercial intercourse between the two countries, which must essentially contribute to their mutual advancement. Should this general view of the subject be approved by the Ministers Plenipotentiary, to whom it is addressed, the details, it is presumed, may be easily adjusted, and that confidence restored which ought never to have been shaken. Accept, &c.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WM. R. DAVIE,
WM. V. MURRAY.

The Ministers of the French Republic have perused with attention the plan proposed by the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States for conducting the negotiation.

They are of opinion that the first object should be, to determine the rules, and the mode of procedure, for the valuation and indemnification of those injuries for which the two nations, respectively, may have demands against each other, whether these demands are founded on national injuries or individual claims.

And that the second object is, to insure the execution of the treaties of friendship and commerce, now existing between the two nations, and the accomplishment of those views of reciprocal advantage which first dictated them.

The undersigned have only, in addition, to observe, that as no measures are authorized by the Government of France affording the least ground of inquietude to the American commerce, they would consider it a preliminary favorable to the negotiation, if the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States will be pleased to communicate the orders, no doubt issued by the President of the United States, to discontinue the operation of the acts of Congress, the enforcement of which must be viewed as repugnant to that good understanding for which both nations have expressed an equal desire.

The undersigned pray the Ministers Plenipotentiary to receive the assurance of their high consideration.

BONAPARTE,
FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, April 11, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned have seen with pleasure in your note which they had the honor to receive yesterday, an acquiescence in the principle of compensating equitable claims of citizens on both sides; though you have proposed to include also claims which either nation might have for herself.

This description of claims was omitted in the proposition of the undersigned, not from the apprehension of an unfavorable balance, but because in their nature they were difficult to define and limit, because their discussion might be unpleasant and dilatory, and because, also, to insist on pecuniary compensation for themselves, would be incompatible with that magnanimity which it was presumed both nations would prefer in an act of accommodation, so auspicious to their future prosperity. If, however, after considering these objections, and others which will suggest themselves, the Ministers of the French Republic shall deem it necessary to provide pecuniary compensation for such claims, the undersigned will be ready further to consider the question at a convenient stage of the negotiation, which they apprehend will be after it shall be seen what arrangement would be acceptable for the claims of citizens.

The expectation of the undersigned, with regard to commerce, is not to renew or amend the former treaty, but to propose a new one, which shall have fewer difficulties of construction and execution; shall more extend the provisions for intercourse, and better adapt them to the existing state of things; and they trust that, when the negotiation shall have sufficiently progressed to take up this branch of it more particularly, their expectation will be shown to be reasonable.

Any recent acts of the French Republic, having for their object to remove from the American commerce causes of disquietude, will be duly estimated in America, and be perceived to have strengthened the ground for returning confidence, when there shall have been time for it.

With respect to the acts of the Congress of the United States, which the hard alternative of abandoning their commerce to ruin imposed, and which, far from contemplating a co-operation with the enemies of the Republic, did not even authorize reprisals upon her merchantmen, but were restricted simply to giving safety to their own, till a moment shall arrive when their sufferings could be heard and redressed: of these acts the undersigned do not know that the President of the United States has suspended their effect, except in the instance of saving St. Domingo from famine. But, without doubt, their effects will wholly cease as soon as it can be assured that the necessity which imposed them no longer exists: of which the undersigned hope their mission will be regarded as a sufficient pledge.

Should it appear to the Ministers of the French Republic, from these explanations, made with a frankness equal to the candor with which they are sure to be examined, that the way is prepared to bring forward an arrangement for the claims of citizens, the undersigned will soon have the honor to offer for their consideration some details on that subject. Accept, &c.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

The Ministers of France to the American Envoys.

PARIS, 23d Germinal, (14th April,) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic do not perceive, from the considerations suggested rather than developed by the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, any obstacle to arrangements which it may be proper to make, on the subject of the individual claims of one nation upon the other. It being impossible, on the part of either, to estimate these claims except by the discussion of the principles of the law of nations and the obligations of treaties, the national claims will, for the most part, be impliedly estimated by the value affixed to those of individuals. National stipulations will be only the ulterior consequences of admitted principles.

The question, therefore, whether it is expedient to form a new treaty, cannot be answered until after a discussion, in which the meaning of ancient treaties shall be determined, the principles of the laws of nations unfolded, and the application of these principles to the claims brought forward, whether national or individual, clearly shown. It is only when the doubts thus raised shall be removed, that the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the two nations will be able to determine whether the ancient treaties will suffice to their interests or not.

Finally, the Ministers of the French Republic cannot see without concern that the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States are uninformed of any revocation of the hostile measures which their Government has adopted with regard to France. The French Government, after rescinding several regulations which had given inquietude to the Federal Government; after publishing many others for the purpose of re-establishing perfect harmony; after professing, also, a readiness to do all that justice shall demand, in order to efface every irritating remembrance; had a right to expect, with other evidences of reciprocity, that the armed vessels of the United States should cease to attack the vessels of the Republic, and that the effusion of human blood should no longer be feared.

To prevent the interruption of the negotiation by vexatious incidents like these, it is necessary that the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States shall give an assurance to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the Republic, that their Government will terminate, without delay, the hostile condition which it now maintains in relation to France. This assurance, strongly demanded by the acts of the French Government, to which a just reciprocity has been promised, can only be considered a legitimate exchange for that herein contained.

The undersigned pray the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to accept the assurances of their high consideration.

BONAPARTE,
FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, April 17, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned have been favored with your note of the 23d of Germinal.

With respect to the assurances desired of them that measures of the United States, which had been resorted to for the protection of their commerce, should immediately cease, they must explicitly declare that they are not authorized to give assurances, otherwise than by incorporating them in a treaty, it having been expected by their Government that, in that way, every necessary assurance on both sides would so soon be given as to render preliminary provisions of little use: and which expectation the undersigned yet confidently trust will not be disappointed.

Should they, however, be favored with copies of recent repeals of regulations, which had given inquietude to the United States, and of other regulations lately adopted with a view of re-establishing harmony, it would be as well their pleasure as their duty to transmit the same in the most favorable manner to their Government, which would be sure, in the conciliatory temper it has evinced, to receive from them very fully the correspondent impressions they are adapted to make. Penetrated as the undersigned are with the interests which both nations have in returning to a good understanding, they receive with sensibility a pledge of that event in the declaration, that the French Republic is ready to do all that justice can require to obliterate every irritating remembrance.

The undersigned, conceiving that the way is now prepared, have the honor to offer for consideration some details respecting the claims of individuals. They have preferred to offer them at once in the form of articles of the treaty, as containing a full and frank expression of their views; and as a mean by which the principles can be discussed connected directly with their application; as the most probable way of fixing the attention of the Ministers on both sides upon the points of difference of opinion, if any such exist; and as affording the most certain prospect of progressing in the business. And they have no doubt that in those articles or propositions will be seen a spirit of accommodation as well as of justice.

Accept, &c.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

ARTICLE 1. There shall be a firm, inviolable and universal peace, and a true and sincere friendship, between the French Republic and the United States of America, and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and people, without exception of persons or places.

ART. 2. Whereas complaints have been made by divers merchants and others, citizens of the United States, that, during the course of the war in which the French Republic is now engaged, they have sustained considerable losses and damage, by reason of irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of their vessels and other property, in ports and places within the jurisdiction or dominions of the said Republic, all under color of authority or commissions from the same; for which losses and damage they have failed, without manifest neglect or wilful omission on their part to obtain adequate compensation: it is agreed that, in all such cases, full and complete compensation shall be made by the Government of the French Republic.

And whereas complaints have also been made by divers merchants and others, citizens of the French Republic, that —, under color of authority or commissions from the United States; for which losses and damage they have failed, without manifest negligence or wilful omission on their part, to obtain adequate compensation: it is agreed that, in all such cases, full and complete compensation shall be made by the Government of the United States.

That, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of any such losses and damage sustained either by citizens of the United States or of the French Republic, five Commissioners shall be appointed and authorized to meet and act in the following manner, viz :

When the five Commissioners thus appointed shall first meet, they shall, before they proceed to act, respectively take the following oath or affirmation, in the presence of each other ; which oath or affirmation, being so taken and duly attested, shall be entered on the records of their proceedings, viz :

I, A B, one of the Commissioners appointed in pursuance of the second article of the treaty of —, between the French Republic and the United States of America, do solemnly swear or affirm that I will honestly, diligently, impartially, and carefully examine all such complaints as, under the said article, shall be preferred to the said Commissioners, and the same will decide to the best of my judgment, according to the rules and principles of decision expressed and contained in the said treaty of —. I will, also, in like manner, examine all such complaints as, under the fifth article of said treaty, shall be preferred to the said Commissioners, and will decide them to the best of my judgment, according to justice and equity ; and that I will forbear to act as Commissioner in any case in which I am personally interested.

Two years, from the day on which the Commissioners shall form a Board, and be ready to proceed to business, are assigned for receiving complaints and applications ; but the Commissioners are nevertheless authorized, in any particular case in which it shall appear to them reasonable and just, to extend the said term of two years for any term not exceeding six months after the expiration thereof. The Commissioners shall be appointed, and meet at —, within six months from the ratifications of this treaty by the respective Governments, and as much sooner as may be.

The Commissioners, in examining the complaints and applications so preferred to them, shall have power to examine all such persons as shall come before them, on oath or affirmation, touching the premises ; and also to receive in evidence, according as they may think most consistent with justice and equity, all written depositions, or books, or copies, or extracts thereof ; every such deposition, or book, or paper, or copy, or extract, being duly authenticated, either according to the legal forms now existing in the two countries, or in such other manner as the said Commissioners shall see cause to require or allow. They shall not, in examining claims under this article, be concluded either as to law or facts by any judicial decision, sentence, or decree, which has been had or rendered therein : and they shall decide the claims in question according to the original merits of the several cases, and to justice, equity, and the law of nations ; and in all cases of complaint existing prior to the 7th of July, 1798, according to the treaties and consular convention then existing between France and the United States.

The award of said Commissioners, or any Board of them, as hereinbefore provided for, shall be final and conclusive as to the justice of the claim, and the amount of the sum to be paid to the creditor or claimant. And they shall comprehend, when in favor of a claimant, a reasonable allowance of interest on the original losses or damage, computed up to the time when the award is to be performed.

And it is also further agreed, that not only the now existing cases, of all the descriptions before named, but all such as shall exist at the time of exchanging the ratifications of this treaty, shall be considered as being within the provisions, intent, and meaning of this article.

ART. 3. The French Republic, desirous, in an adjustment of differences with the United States, to give them a proof of her liberality, by waiving formal exceptions, and narrowing the ground of discussion, does agree that such claims of the citizens of the United States for compensation as shall be in other respects fair and equitable, shall not be prejudiced by reason of not having on board their vessels, when captured, any other passport or sea-letter than such as had been usually furnished by their Government prior to the 2d day of March, 1797, or any other ship's rôle d'équipage, or other shipping paper, than had been generally used by the citizens of the United States prior to that date ; nor shall their claims be prejudiced by reason of having on board their vessels, when captured, merchandise, the manufacture or production of any particular country or place.

ART. 4. Any sum which shall be awarded by the said Commissioners, pursuant to the second article of this treaty, in favor of a claimant, a citizen of the United States, the Government of the French Republic will, on the condition of such releases or assignments, to be given by him, as the said Commissioners may direct, cause to be paid to such claimant, in silver or gold coin, without deduction, at Paris, within three months after the date of the award ; or will then cause the sum so awarded to be converted into transferable stock or capital, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum ; which interest and principal the said Government will cause to be paid in silver or gold coin, without deduction, to such claimant, or his transferee at Paris, viz : the interest annually, and the principal by three equal instalments, viz : one-third in three years, one-third in five years, and the remaining third in seven years from the date of the award. The form of the security or securities, and the mode of transfer, to be such as the said Commissioners shall prescribe : and any sum which shall be so awarded in favor of a claimant, a citizen of the French Republic, the Government of the United States will, within six months after the date of the award, upon like condition, and in like manner and time, cause to be paid, or secure to be paid, to such claimant, or his transferee, at the city of Washington.

ART. 5. And whereas complaints have been made by divers merchants and others, citizens of the United States, that the French Government is indebted to them, by contract, in considerable sums, for provisions and other property received from them in France and other places within the jurisdiction or dominions of the said Republic, and for freight and use of their vessels to transport provisions and other property, and prisoners, all since the commencement of the war in which the French Republic is now engaged, for a part of which debts they hold certificates and bills, issued and drawn by officers and agents of the Republic, payable in France and in other places; and that, although they have used due diligence, it has never been in their power to obtain payment of said debts, certificates, or bills: it is agreed that, in such cases, the claimants may, if they see fit, prefer their claims to the Commissioners provided in the second article, who are authorized to proceed respecting the same as to the time of their reception, mode of examination, and admission of evidence, and generally, in other respects, as is prescribed for the claims there specified; and they shall decide them according to justice and equity.

The award of the Commissioners, in such cases, or any Board of them, as is provided in the second article, shall be final and conclusive, both as to the justice of the demand and the amount of the sum to be paid to the creditors or claimants: and, when in favor of claimants, they shall comprehend interest from the times, respectively, at which the debts ought, according to the tenor or nature of the contract, to have been paid, at the rates respectively stipulated therein; or, where none was specially stipulated, at such rate, in each case, as the Commissioners shall judge to be just. But it is understood that no person, by omitting to prefer such, his claim, to the said Commissioners, shall thereby impair his right to seek and obtain payment by any other means.

Whatever sum shall be awarded in favor of any claimant under this article, the Government of the French Republic will, in three months after the date of the award, on condition of such releases or assignments to be given by him as the said Commissioners may direct, cause to be paid to him, without deduction, in gold or silver coin, at Paris, or will then convert the same into transferable stock or capital, bearing an interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum; which interest and principal the said Government will cause to be paid, without deduction, in gold or silver coin, to such claimant, or his transferee at Paris, viz: the interest annually, and the principal by three equal instalments, viz: one-third in two years, one-third in four years, and the remaining third in six years from the date of the award. The form of the security or securities, and the mode of transfer to be such as the said Commissioners shall prescribe.

ART. 6. It is further agreed that the Commissioners mentioned in this and the preceding articles shall be respectively paid in such manner as shall be agreed between the two nations; such agreement being to be settled at the time of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty; and all other expenses attending the said Commissioners shall be defrayed jointly by the two parties; the same being previously ascertained and allowed by a majority of the Commissioners: and in case of death, sickness, or necessary absence, the place of every such Commissioner, respectively, shall be supplied in the same manner as such Commissioner was first appointed; and the new Commissioner shall take the same oath or affirmation, and do the same duties.

[Explanatory Note.]

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic will please to observe that a blank is left for the insertion of such claims of the citizens of the Republic on the United States as the Ministers may think proper to bring forward. A blank is also left for the mode of selecting the five proposed Commissioners, and another for the manner in which they shall be organized; for the filling of which two last the Envoys of the United States are preparing propositions, which will be sent in a day or two. A blank is also left for the title of the treaty, of which the proposed articles, if agreed to, may form a part.

APRIL 18.

The views of the French Government being in some measure developed in the preceding correspondence, and the negotiation having now assumed some form, it was thought proper to advise the Government of the United States of the progress and state of the business. The following letter was therefore written to the Secretary of State; duplicates and triplicates were also afterwards forwarded:

PARIS, April 18, 1800.

SIR: Your despatches of the 6th and 20th of January reached us some time since, as did also their duplicates and triplicates.

We all met here the 2d of March, Mr. Murray having arrived the evening before. The papers marked from A to V, which we have the honor to enclose, trace the circumstances connected with our mission, which have since taken place.

On the 5th of March, we waited on the Minister of Exterior Relations, delivered copies of our letters of credence, and requested to be informed at what time we should have an audience of the Premier Consul. He observed that, in cases like ours, it was usual to postpone the audience till the negotiation was finished. We replied that, should we be honored with one before the negotiation commenced, we thought its effects would be favorable. Mr. Talleyrand then said that he supposed there would be no difficulty on that point, and that he would speak to the Premier Consul about it.

On the 8th of March, agreeably to the notification which we had in the meantime received, we attended, and had an audience of the Premier Consul at the palace of the Tuilleries, and delivered him our letters of credence. We were received with the respect due to the character which we had the honor to bear. The audience was a public one, and was attended by the two other Consuls, the Ministers of the Government, members of the Council of State, general officers, and the Ministers of foreign Powers. After the compliments usual on such occasions had passed, Mr. Talleyrand informed us that a commission of three Ministers Plenipotentiary had been appointed to negotiate with us, and that we should receive a note from him officially notifying us of that appointment; which we accordingly received in the evening of the same day.

The illness of Mr. Joseph Bonaparte, President of the French Commission, prevented our meeting with them for the exchange of powers till the 2d instant; and the time till the 7th was also lost in obtaining such further powers as were satisfactory to us. Since that day you will perceive that the negotiation has made some progress; and will doubtless also perceive, that there has been, on our part, due solicitude to give it facility.

Our note of yesterday, sent to-day, was accompanied with six articles covering the whole ground of individual claims, and formed for a treaty; but there has not been time to prepare a copy for this despatch. It is understood that the campaign has opened between Austria and France, on the side of Italy.

We have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your obedient humble servants,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

P. S. We shall be hard pressed to revive the old treaty, so far, at least, as to save its anteriority.

APRIL 21.

The Envoys being extremely desirous of forming the Board of Commissioners for adjusting the claims in some manner that might avoid the inconveniences which have resulted from the mode prescribed in the sixth and seventh articles of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between the United States and Great Britain, had retained that part of the subject under consideration till the 21st of April; when, after the discussion of several projects, they finally agreed that, under all circumstances, the mode adopted in the above treaty was the least exceptionable, and transmitted the following note to the French Ministers:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, April 21, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned requests that the blanks in the articles which they had the honor to send you under the date of the 17th May, be filled as follows, viz: that left for the mode of selecting the five Commissioners with these words: "Two of them shall be appointed by the Premier Consul of the French Republic, two of them by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and the fifth by the unanimous voice of the other four; and, in case they should not agree in such choice, the Commissioners named by the two parties shall respectively propose one person; and of the names so proposed, one shall be drawn by lot in the presence of the four original Commissioners." That left for the organization of a board, with these words: "Three of said Commissioners shall constitute a board, and shall have power to do any act pertaining to said commission, provided that one of the Commissioners on each side, and the fifth Commissioner, shall be present."

And that the sentence which contains a blank for the place of their meeting, may be so completed as to read thus: "The Commissioners shall be appointed, and meet at Paris, within six months from the ratification of this treaty by the respective Governments, and as much sooner as may be; but they shall have power to adjourn from place to place, as they shall see cause." Accept, &c.

PARIS, 3d Floreal, (April 22,) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic have received the note which the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States have done them the honor to address to them the 17th of April, as well as the supplementary note of the 21st.

They have been engaged, since that time, in preparing a reply; and, as soon as their observations shall be reduced to writing, they will hasten to transmit them to the American Ministers.

They pray the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to accept the assurance of their high consideration.

PARIS, 16th Floreal,
(6th May) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic coincide with the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, in viewing the communication of their project of a treaty as a frank mode of leading to the discussion of principles which should guide the negotiation and promote its object.

The object of the negotiation is to restore the harmony and cement the friendship formerly subsisting between the two nations.

The principles, with which the undersigned conceive it necessary to commence, are those which can determine the true sense of the mutual obligations, the real or supposed infraction of which has caused a misunderstanding between the respective Governments.

The liquidation and discharge of the damages which may have resulted, either to the two nations or to their citizens, from this momentary misunderstanding, can only be considered as a consequence of the interpretation which, by common consent, shall be given to ancient treaties, as a proof of a sincere return to the primitive relations of the two nations, and as a pledge for the oblivion of those events by which the former relations have been disturbed.

The communication of this project, by the Ministers of the United States, has, therefore, a tendency to remove the obstacles which lie in the way between the object to which it is proposed to arrive and the principles with which it is proper to set out.

No doubt exists respecting the object to which the desires and interests of both nations are directed.

The Ministers, respectively, are also agreed on the expediency of providing a suitable indemnity.

The discussion, then, is now restricted to two points, viz: 1st. What are the principles which ought to have governed, and which ought still to govern, the political and commercial relations of the two nations? 2d. What is the mode, the best adapted to their respective interests, by which the ascertained indemnities shall be liquidated and discharged?

The examination of the principles ought to precede the consideration of the mode of indemnification: since, on the one hand, an indemnity cannot result except from an admitted contravention of an acknowledged obligation; and, on the other, it is only an agreement founded upon principles that can insure peace and maintain friendship.

The Ministers of the French Republic would, for this reason, have seized the present moment to develop their views respecting the various interpretations which, for years past, have been given to the treaties, if, upon reading the 2d article of the project which has been submitted, they had not been struck with an interpretation of which they can conceive neither the cause nor the object, and which, therefore, seems to require explanation. The words which contain it relate to the arbitrators to be appointed for the liquidation of damages. "They shall decide (says the project) the claims in question, according to the original merits of the several cases, and according to justice, equity, and the law of nations; and, in all cases of complaint, existing prior to the 7th July, 1798, according to the treaties and consular convention then existing between France and the United States."

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic are not aware of any reason which can authorize a distinction between the time prior to the 7th of July, 1798, and the time subsequent to that date, in order to apply the stipulations of treaties to the damages which have arisen during the first period, and only the principles of the laws of nations to those which have occurred during the second.

The commission of the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic has designated the Treaty of Alliance, and of Friendship and Commerce, and the Consular Convention, as the sole basis of their negotiations. Upon these acts the misunderstanding has arisen; and upon these acts it seems proper that union and friendship should be re-established.

In hastening to recognise the principle of compensation, it was the intention of the undersigned to exhibit an unequivocal proof of the fidelity of France to her ancient engagements; all pecuniary stipulations appearing to her proper as results from ancient treaties, not as preliminaries to a new one. The undersigned pray, &c.

FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

P. S. We have the honor to transmit herewith the acts which show the earnestness with which the Government desires to remove the causes of irritation which have heretofore existed.

MAY 7.

A conference was held to-day for the purpose of agreeing upon the draught of answer; and, as the French Ministers had acceded to the general proposition of mutual compensation and indemnity, in their note of the 19th Germinal, (9th of April,) and had again recognised the principle in their note of the 16th Floreal, (6th of May,) connected with certain discussions, and the ulterior adjustment of the existing differences in a treaty, the Envoys were of opinion that they would facilitate the arrangements as to the preliminary object, and avoid the waste of time, in the discussion of general abstract principles, by sending the entire project of a treaty which they had then prepared. By these means, they hoped to fix the attention of the French Ministers to the real objects of difference, and press the business forward with a degree of certainty that would mark the progress of the negotiation; and, therefore, the next day, the 8th of May, forwarded the answer which follows, of that date, accompanied by the remaining part of their project of a treaty, from article 7 to article 36, inclusive:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, May 8, 1800.

CITIZENS MINISTERS: The undersigned have been honored with your note of the 16th of Floreal. They readily assign the reason why it was proposed by them that the treaties and consular convention, made between France and the United States, should be the rule of decision on the claims of their respective citizens, only with respect to causes of complaint which arose prior to the 7th July, 1798, leaving their subsequent causes of complaint to rest upon the law of nations; and also the reason why they cannot regard those treaties as the basis of the present negotiation for any other purpose than that of giving a rule by which causes of complaint, prior to the period above mentioned, are to be tested.

It was not till after the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, of February, 1778, had been violated to a great extent on the part of the French Republic, nor till after explanations and an amicable adjustment, sought by the United States, had been refused, that they did, on the 7th day of July, 1798, by a solemn public act, declare that they were freed and exonerated from the treaties and consular convention which had been entered into between them and France. Nor would such declaration, though justified by the law of nature and of nations, have even then been made, if it had been possible for the United States, while continuing the treaties and consular convention as the rule of their conduct, to guard against injuries which daily increased, and threatened their commerce with total destruction. That declaration cannot be recalled; and the United States must abide by its effects, with respect to the priority of treaties, whatever inconveniences may result to themselves. Their Government, it was understood, could not, with good faith, give to the undersigned powers to change or effect such priorities, and they do not possess them.

The undersigned deem it unnecessary at present to enumerate the acts of the French Government which produced the above measure. The principles of those decrees are as well understood, and now as fully acknowledged, as the mischiefs they have generated: and, as the object of this negotiation is to produce the reconciliation, and to cement the ancient friendship of the two nations, such a painful recapitulation would, at this time, answer no valuable purpose. They are, therefore, still of opinion that the views of the respective Ministers should be directed to the object of terminating their differences in such a manner as, without a specific and detailed discussion on the merits of the respective complaints, might, by the adoption of plain and acknowledged principles of justice, produce mutual satisfaction and a permanent good understanding.

The undersigned recognise the principle that a right to indemnification can result only from the violation of a known obligation; and they conceive it to be equally incontrovertible that the law of nations constitutes such an obligation where treaties do not exist. They have not understood that the principle of compensation, proposed by them, was admitted without a supposition that the other points would be satisfactorily arranged; yet they trust that satisfying the demands of justice will always be considered as the wisest of political expedients.

The questions what are to be the political, and what the commercial relations of the two countries, have had the consideration, so far as the undersigned have been able to bestow it, which questions of such high and extensive import deserve.

For an answer to the first, they refer to their project of a treaty; and it is scarcely necessary to add that the interest of the United States, while it prompts them strongly to cultivate a good understanding with France, forbids them to wish such relations to any Power as might involve them in the contests with which Europe is so often scourged. They wish not even to afford in their ports, beyond the rights of hospitality, an asylum for privateers, which obstructs their commerce, and too easily entangles them in the conflicting passions and interests of the belligerent Powers.

It is true, however, that the engagements of the United States do not, as yet, permit them to pursue their policy, with respect to privateers, to its full extent. Those of one nation have a right of asylum in their ports, but it is a right which may cease in two years after the present war with Great Britain. Nor is it conceived to be very interesting to the French Republic during the present war, which is presumed to draw near to an honorable termination, to whose prizes and privateers the ports of the United States may, in the meantime, be most open, as few or none of her merchantmen now pass that coast to be exposed, and as few or none of her enemies pass it without convoys too strong for privateers.

For an answer to the other question, what is to be the commercial relation of the two nations, the undersigned refer particularly to the thirteenth article of their project, which they have endeavored to accommodate, not only to the existing circumstances, but to the future hopes of both nations.

It is seen that this article goes further than the colonial and monopolizing systems of Europe have admitted an experiment of; but it is hoped that the period approaches when nations will cease to interpose those barriers and restraints upon commerce, which, besides checking industry and enterprise, diminish the value of everything they have to sell, and enhance the price of everything they purchase.

As to an unembarrassed intercourse between the United States and French West India islands, in particular, nothing could more happily, or perhaps more justly, efface from the recollection of the former their sufferings in that quarter; and certainly nothing would sooner restore the latter to productiveness and utility. They need only, in addition to order, facility of supplies and sales for a few years for their complete re-establishment, and even to carry them to a height of prosperity which the neighboring islands could not rival.

Reserving to the Republic, exclusively, her coasting trade, and the direct trade between France and her colonies, and to the United States their coasting trade, and leaving each nation to encourage also, by a reduction of duties to a limited extent, the use of their own ships, is presumed sufficient so to raise the marines of both, (which, fortunately, can rise without being objects of mutual jealousy,) as to insure a reasonable share of the privileges of the ocean.

And, lastly, it will not be an objection to this article, that, while it proposes to invigorate the commerce of France, it promises also extension and activity to that of the United States; because, it is well understood, that every depression which the commerce of the latter feels, and every risk to which it is subjected, profit only the enemies of the former, by augmenting their carrying trade, and increasing their naval power.

With this note, the undersigned have the honor to transmit the remaining part of a project, which, together with what has been transmitted, discloses fully their views, and will, as they hope, facilitate the progress of the negotiation. Accept, &c.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

P. S. The Envoys of the United States have not had the pleasure to receive the copies referred to in the postscript of the note to which the above is an answer.

ART. 7. All citizens and inhabitants of either nation, detained within the jurisdiction of the other, for any cause, except for debt or crimes committed within the same, shall be immediately set at liberty. All ships of war, or other public ships, which either nation has taken from the other, and detains, shall be given up; or where that cannot without difficulty be done, the full value shall be restored; and the value, if not agreed between the parties, shall be ascertained by the Commissioners mentioned in the second article.

And it is further agreed that, if the armed ships of the United States have retaken and set free from the ships of war or other public ships of the French Republic, any prizes which they had captured from her enemies, the United States will make compensation to the French Republic for the prizes so liberated. Claims for the same may be preferred to the said Commissioners, who shall decide them according to justice and equity; and any sum or sums which they may award in satisfaction of such claims, the Government of the United States will cause to be paid, or secured in the same manner as is provided in the second article in the case of claims of the citizens of the French Republic. And, as well all cases of either of the descriptions aforesaid which shall exist at the time of exchanging the ratifications of this treaty, as those which now exist, shall be considered within the intent and meaning of this article.

ART. 8. The citizens and inhabitants of the United States shall be exempted in the French Republic from the droit d'aubaine, or other similar duty, under whatever name; and the citizens and inhabitants of both nations, may, by testament, donation, or otherwise, dispose of their real estates already acquired, and of their goods and effects; and their heirs or representatives, being citizens of one of the parties, and residing in either nation, or elsewhere, may succeed to them, even ab intestato, without being obliged to obtain letters of naturalization, and without having the effect of this provision contested or impeded under any pretext whatever; and their heirs or representatives shall receive such estate, or goods and effects, either in person, or by attorney or substitute; and if the heirs or representatives to whom such succession or devise, and goods or effects may have fallen, shall be minors, the guardian, tutor, curator, or executor established by the testament, or by the domiciliary laws of the country, whereof such minor shall be a citizen or inhabitant, may direct, administer, and alienate the estate or goods so fallen to such minors; and, in general, in relation to such estate and goods, use all the rights and fulfil all the functions which belong by the disposition of the laws to such guardian, tutor, curator, or executor. The inheritances, as well as the goods and effects which the said citizens or inhabitants, in changing their abode, shall be desirous of removing from the place of their abode, shall be exempted, with respect to each, from all duty whatever. But it is at the same time agreed, that this article shall in no manner derogate from the laws which either State may have now in force, or may hereafter enact, to prevent emigration. Provided, also, that if the laws of either country should at any time be incompatible with the inheritance or devise of real estate by and to aliens, it is agreed that such real estate may be sold, or otherwise disposed of, to citizens or inhabitants of the country where it may be.

ART. 9. Neither the debts due from individuals of the one nation to individuals of the other, nor shares, nor moneys which they may have in public funds, or in the public or private banks, shall ever, in any event of war, or national difference, be sequestered or confiscated.

ART. 10. And whereas, debtors may flee from the territories of one of the contracting parties to those of the other, it is agreed that the creditors, being citizens or inhabitants of either nation, may pursue such debtors, whether they be citizens or inhabitants, or not, of either country, and shall have the benefit of the laws of the country to which such debtors may flee, on the one side and on the other, in the same manner as if the debt or cause of action had arisen or been therein contracted.

ART. 11. And it is further agreed that the Governments of both nations, on requisitions by them respectively made, or by their respective Ministers, Consuls, or other officers authorized to make the same, will deliver up to justice all persons, who, being charged with murder or forgery, committed within the territories of the party making the requisition, shall seek an asylum within any of the territories or dependencies of the other; provided, that this shall only be done on such evidence of criminality, as, according to the laws of the nation where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the offence had been there committed; the expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by those who make the requisition and receive the arrested fugitive.

ART. 12. To favor commerce on both sides, it is agreed that, in case a war should break out between the two nations, (which God forbid!) the term of six months after the declaration of war, shall be allowed to the merchants, and other citizens and inhabitants, respectively, on one side and the other, in order that they may withdraw with their effects and moveables, which they shall be at liberty to send, carry away, or sell, where they please, without the least obstruction; nor shall their effects, much less their persons, be seized during such term of six months; on the contrary, passports, which shall be valid for a time necessary for their return, shall be given to them for their vessels and the effects which they shall be willing to send away or carry with them; and such passports shall be a safe conduct against all insults and prizes, which privateers may attempt against their persons or effects. And if anything be taken from them, or any injury done to them or their effects by one of the parties, their citizens, or inhabitants, within the time above prescribed, full satisfaction shall be made to them on that account.

ART. 13. And for the purpose of more effectually maintaining a good correspondence, and facilitating commerce between the citizens of the two nations, it is agreed, on the part of the United States, that the merchant ships and vessels of the French Republic may freely enter, lade and unlade, at such convenient port or ports in each of the United States situate on the ocean, as shall for that purpose be designated by the laws of the United States, and until such designation shall be made, at any of the ports of the same where foreign ships and vessels are now permitted to enter; and may, at all times, enter, lade, and unlade at any port in the said States, at which ships and vessels of the most favored nation shall be permitted to do the same.

The citizens of the French Republic may import in such ships and vessels, and freely dispose of all merchandises, without exception, of the manufacture, growth, or produce of any part of the territories or dominions of the French Republic, or of the produce of her fisheries, and also all merchandises of the manufacture, growth, or produce of any foreign country or place, the importation of which shall not be prohibited in ships and vessels of the United States; and they may export in such ships and vessels to any country or place out of the United States, all merchandises, the exportation of which shall not be prohibited in ships and vessels of the United States. There shall be paid on such ships and vessels in the ports of the United States, no other or higher duty than shall be paid on the ships and vessels of the most favored nation, nor any other or higher duty than a tonnage duty, not exceeding fifty cents per ton of the ship or vessel; and such duties or fees, on papers obtained from any office of the port, as the citizens of the United States shall pay in like cases.

No duties shall be paid on the exportation in such ships and vessels of any merchandise whatever; nor shall any other or higher duty be paid on the importation in such ships and vessels, of any merchandise, than the most favored nation shall pay in like cases; nor any other or higher duty than shall be paid on the importation of like merchandise in the ships and vessels of the United States; except that there may be exacted a duty less, by any proportion not exceeding one-eleventh part, on importations in their own ships and vessels than on importations in any other ships or vessels whatever; and except, also, that there may be exacted such duties on teas imported in the ships and vessels of the French Republic, as shall be paid on teas imported in the ships and vessels of the most favored nation.

The ships and vessels of the French Republic shall be permitted, when it shall be convenient for them, both to lade and unlade by parcels, at different ports in the United States, conforming to such regulations as the laws of the country shall prescribe to prevent frauds in the revenue. But they shall not unlade in any port of the United States what they have laded in any other port of the same, except in cases of distress, and shall then only be permitted to sell so much of what they have laded, as may be necessary for the repairs of the ship or vessel, and the prosecution of the voyage.

And it is also agreed, on the part of the French Republic, that the merchant ships and vessels of the United States may freely enter, lade, and unlade at such convenient port or ports in every part of the territories or dominions of the French Republic in any quarter of the world, as shall, for that purpose, be designated by the laws of the Republic; and until such designation shall be made, at all the ports in the said territories or dominions where the ships or vessels of the French Republic are now permitted to enter from the sea; and they may at all times enter, lade, and unlade at any ports within the said territories or dominions, at which ships or vessels of the most favored nation shall be permitted to do the same.

The citizens of the United States may import, in such ships or vessels, to every part of the said territories or dominions, and freely dispose of all merchandises, without exception, of the manufacture, growth, or produce of the United States, and of the produce of their fisheries; and also all merchandises of the manufacture, growth, or produce of any foreign country or place, the importation of which shall not be prohibited in ships and vessels of the French Republic. And they may export in such ships and vessels, from every part of the said territories or dominions, to any country or place out of the same, all merchandises whatever, the exportation of which shall not be prohibited in ships and vessels of the said Republic.

There shall not be paid on such ships and vessels, in any port in the territories or dominions of the French Republic, any other or higher duty than shall be paid at such port on the ships and vessels of the most favored nation; nor any other or higher duty than a tonnage duty of fifty-three sols per ton of the ship or vessel, and such duty or fees on papers obtained from any office of the port as the citizens of the French Republic shall pay in like cases.

No duties shall be paid on the exportation in such ships and vessels from any port in the said territories or dominions of any merchandise whatever; nor shall any other or higher duty be paid on the importation in such ships and vessels, to any part of the said territories or dominions, of any merchandise whatever, than the most favored nation shall pay in like cases; nor any other or higher duty than shall be paid on the importation of like merchandises in ships and vessels of the French Republic, except that there may be exacted a duty less, by any proportion not exceeding one-eleventh part, on importations in ships and vessels of the said Republic, than on importations in any other ships and vessels whatever; and except, also, that there may be exacted such duties on teas imported in ships and vessels of the United States as shall be paid on teas imported in the ships and vessels of the most favored nation.

The ships and vessels of the United States shall be permitted, when it shall be convenient for them, both to lade and unlade, by parcels, in different ports throughout the territories or dominions of the French Republic, conforming to such regulations as the laws of the country shall prescribe to prevent frauds in the revenue; but they shall not unlade in any port within the said territories or dominions what they have laded at any other port within the same, except in cases of distress; and shall then only be permitted to sell so much of what they had so laded as may be necessary for the repairs of the ship or vessel, and for the prosecution of the voyage.

ART. 14. The citizens of each party, respectively, shall have free admission into the dominions of the other, with liberty to reside there, to hire houses and warehouses, for the purposes of trade and commerce; and complete protection and security for the merchants and traders, citizens of either party, with their goods and effects, whether in going to, residing in, or retiring from the dominions, or from one part thereof to another of the other, shall be given. It shall be lawful for them, on either side, to employ such advocates, attorneys, notaries, solicitors, factors, brokers, and interpreters, without being obliged to employ either, as they shall think proper; and it shall be wholly free for all merchants, commanders of ships and vessels, citizens of either party, in every place subject to the jurisdiction of the other, to direct and manage their own affairs and business; and, in relation to the loading or unloading of their vessels, and everything which has relation thereto, they shall not be obliged, though they may, if they please, to employ any persons but those of the crew of the vessel.

ART. 15. The ships of the citizens of the respective countries coming upon any of the coasts belonging to either of the parties, but not willing to enter into port, or, being entered into port, and not willing to unlade their cargoes or break bulk, shall not be obliged to give an account of their lading, unless they are suspected, upon sure evidence, of carrying prohibited goods, called contraband, to the enemies of either of the two contracting parties; but shall be subject, nevertheless, to such regulations in the port as may be prescribed by the government of the place.

ART. 16. In case the citizens of either party, with their shipping, whether they be public, and equipped for war, or private, and employed in commerce, be forced, through stress of weather, pursuit of pirates or enemies, or any other urgent necessity for seeking of shelter and harbor, to retract and enter into any of the rivers, creeks, bays, ports, roads, or shores belonging to the other party, they shall be received with all humanity and kindness, and enjoy all friendly protection and help; and they shall be permitted to refresh and provide themselves, at reasonable rates, with victuals, and all things needful for the sustenance of their persons, or reparation of their ships; and they shall be allowed to break bulk, and unlade and sell, conformably to the orders and regulations of the government of the place, so much of the cargo as may be necessary to defray their expenses, without being obliged to pay any duties whatever, except only on such articles as they may be permitted to sell for the purposes aforesaid; and they shall no ways be detained or hindered from returning out of the said ports or roads, but may remove and depart when and whither they please, without any let or hindrance.

ART. 17. If any ship belonging to either of the parties, or their citizens, shall be wrecked, foundered, or otherwise damaged, the same protection and assistance shall be given to the persons shipwrecked, or such as shall be in danger thereof, or be otherwise distressed, as would be afforded in like cases to the inhabitants of the country on whose coast such misfortune may happen; and letters of safe conduct shall likewise be given to them, when required, for their free and quiet passage from thence, and their return to their own country.

ART. 18. It is likewise agreed that deserters from the public and private vessels of either nation shall be arrested and delivered up, on application made, according to the orders and regulation of the government of the place where such deserters shall be, by the Consul, Vice Consul, or agent of the nation of which such deserter may be a citizen; and suitable provisions shall be made by law, in each country, for that purpose; and not only the original enlistment, shipping-paper, or rôle d'équipage, but a copy or extract, certified to be conformable to the original, by a judge of the country in which the vessel may be, or from which she may have departed, shall also be admitted in proof of desertion; and such extract or copy shall have in all the ports of the respective Powers the same force with the original, for six months: And it is further agreed that the masters and commanders of vessels, public or private, of one nation, in the country of the other, may engage and receive on board seamen and others, natives or inhabitants of the country to which the vessels belong: Provided, That, either on one side or the other, they shall not be at liberty to take into their service such of their countrymen (deserters excepted) as may have already engaged in the service of the other party, whether they meet them by land or by sea, unless the captains or masters under whose command such persons may be found will voluntarily discharge them from their service.

ART. 19. Neither of the said parties shall permit the ships or goods belonging to the citizens of the other to be taken within cannon-shot of the coast, nor in any of the bays, ports, or rivers of their territories, by ships of war, or others having commissions from any foreign State or Prince; but, in case it should so happen, the party whose territorial rights shall thus have been violated, shall use his utmost endeavors to obtain from the offending party full and ample satisfaction for the goods and vessel or vessels so taken, whether the same be vessels of war or merchant vessels.

ART. 20. It shall be lawful for the citizens of either country to sail with their ships and merchandise (contraband goods always excepted) from any port whatever, to any port of the enemy of the other, and to sail and trade with their ships and merchandise with perfect security and liberty, from the countries, ports, and places of those who are enemies of both, or of either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever; and to pass, not only directly from the places and ports of the enemy aforementioned, to neutral ports and places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same Power, or under several; unless such ports or places shall be actually blockaded, besieged, or invested.

And whereas, it frequently happens that vessels sail for a port or place belonging to an enemy, without knowing that the same is either besieged, blockaded, or invested, it is agreed that every vessel so circumstanced may be turned away from such port or place, but she shall not be detained, nor any part of her cargo, if not contraband, be confiscated, unless after notice she shall again attempt to enter; but she shall be permitted to go to any other port or place she may think proper; nor shall any vessel of either, that may have entered into such port or place, before the same was actually besieged, blockaded, or invested by the other, be restrained from quitting such place with her return cargo; nor, if found therein after the reduction or surrender of such place, shall such vessel or her cargo be liable to confiscation, but they shall be restored to the owners or proprietors thereof.

ART. 21. In order to regulate what is in future to be esteemed contraband of war, it is agreed that, under the said denomination, shall be comprised gunpowder, saltpetre, petards, match, ball, bombs, grenades, carcasses, cartridge-boxes, pikes, halberds, swords, belts, pistols, holsters, cavalry saddles and furniture, cannon, mortars, their carriages and beds, and, generally, all kinds of arms and instruments fit for the use of troops. All the above articles, whenever they are destined to the port of an enemy, are hereby declared to be contraband, and just objects of confiscation; but the vessel in which they are laden, and the residue of the cargo, shall be considered free, and not in any manner infected by the prohibited goods, whether belonging to the same or a different owner.

ART. 22. It is agreed that in all cases where vessels shall be captured or detained on just suspicion of having on board enemy's property, or of carrying to the enemy any of the articles which are contraband of war, the said vessel shall be brought to the nearest or most convenient port of the country to which the captor belongs; and if any property of an enemy should be found on board such vessel, that part only which belongs to the enemy, or which consists of articles contraband of war, destined as aforesaid, shall be made prize, and the vessel shall be at liberty to proceed with the remainder, without any impediment; and a reasonable freight shall be paid by the captor on such property of the enemy as shall be made prize. And it is agreed that all proper measures shall be taken to prevent delay in deciding the cases of ships or cargoes so brought in for adjudication, and in the payment or recovery of any indemnification adjudged or agreed to be paid to the masters or owners of such ship: Nevertheless, it is agreed that such effects and merchandises, even though the property of an enemy, as were put on board before the declaration of war, or — months after it, shall not be in any manner subject to confiscation, but shall be faithfully and specifically restored to be carried to their place of destination: Provided, notwithstanding, That if such merchandise be contraband, destined as aforesaid, it shall not be in anywise lawful to carry them afterwards to a port belonging to an enemy; and, also, that if there shall be found on board the vessel of an enemy, captured by either party or its citizens, any property of the other party, or of its citizens, the same shall not be confiscated, but freely restored to the owners or proprietors thereof.

ART. 23. And that captures on light suspicions may be avoided, and injuries thence arising prevented, it is agreed that, in case either of the parties should be engaged in a war, the ships and vessels belonging to the citizens of the other shall be furnished with sea-letters or passports, expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, as also the name and place of habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, that it may appear thereby that the ship really and truly belongs to the citizens of one of the parties; which sea-letter or passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty; they shall likewise be renewed every year, that is, if the vessel should return home within the space of a year. It is likewise agreed that such ships, being laden, are to be provided not only with passports, as above mentioned, but also with certificates containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place from whence the vessel sailed, and whither she is bound, that so it may be known whether she carries any of the contraband goods specified in the twenty-first article of this treaty; which certificates shall be made out in the accustomed form of the country from whence the vessel sailed; and neither party shall require the exhibition of any papers or documents (the sea-letter and certificates aforementioned excepted) not required by the laws or usages of the party to whose citizens the vessels and their cargoes belong, nor in any other form than the laws and usages of such last mentioned party shall prescribe. And it is expressly stipulated and agreed, that, when the quality of the ship, goods, and master sufficiently appear from the passport and certificates aforesaid, it shall not be lawful for the commanders of armed vessels to exact any further proof, under any pretext whatever; and that when any merchant ship shall not be provided with such passport and certificates, such case may be examined by a proper judge or tribunal; and if it shall be found from other documents or proofs that the vessel truly belongs to the citizens of one of the parties, it shall not be confiscated, but shall be released with its cargo, (enemy's property and contraband goods, as aforesaid, excepted,) and be permitted to proceed on its voyage.

If the master of the ship named in the passport should happen to die, or be removed by any other cause, and another put in his place, the ship and goods laden thereon shall, nevertheless, be equally secure, and the passport remain in full force.

ART. 24. If the ships of the citizens of either of the parties shall be met with, either sailing along the coasts or on the high seas, by any ship of war, or by any privateers of the other, for the avoiding of any disorder, the said ships of war or privateers shall remain out of cannon shot, and may send their boats on board the merchant ship which they shall so meet with, and may enter her to the number of two or three men only, to whom the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall exhibit his passport concerning the property of the ship, made out according to the form annexed to this present treaty, and also the certificates aforesaid relative to the cargo; and, when the master or commander shall have exhibited such passport and certificates, and there shall not appear among the articles of the said cargo enemy's property, or any articles contraband of war, then such master or commander shall be at liberty to pursue his voyage, so as it shall not be lawful to molest or search his vessel in any manner, or to give her chase, or force her to quit her intended course: And it is expressly agreed that the neutral party shall in no case be required to go on board the examining vessel for the purpose of exhibiting his papers, or for any other examination whatever.

ART. 25. It is agreed that, in all cases where vessels shall be captured, or detained by reason of their having on board enemy's property, or carrying to the enemy any of the articles which are contraband of war, the captor shall give a receipt for such of the papers of the vessel as he shall retain; which receipt shall be annexed to a descriptive list of the said papers, and the said vessel shall be brought to the nearest and most convenient port of the country to which the captor belongs; and it shall be unlawful to break up or open the hatches, chests, trunks, casks, bales, or vessels found on board such ship, or to remove even the smallest parcel of the goods, unless the lading be brought on shore in the presence of the officers of the Admiralty, and an inventory made by them of the said goods; nor shall it be lawful to sell, exchange, or alienate the same in any manner, unless, after due and lawful process shall have been had against such goods, and the Judge or Judges of the Admiralty, respectively, shall, by sentence pronounced, have confiscated the same, saving, always, as well the ship itself as the other goods found therein; and if, when only part of the cargo shall consist of contraband goods, the master of the ship shall agree, consent, and offer to deliver them to the captor who has discovered them, in such case the captor, having received those goods as lawful prize, shall forthwith release the ship, and not hinder her by any means from prosecuting her voyage to the place of her destination.

ART. 26. And that proper care may be taken of the vessel and cargo, and embezzlement prevented, it is agreed that it shall not be lawful to remove the master or commander of any captured vessel, or the supercargo thereof, from on board the same, neither during the time that the vessel may be at sea after her capture, nor pending the proceedings against her or her cargo, or any part thereof. And in all cases where a vessel of the citizens of either party shall be captured or seized, and held for adjudication, her officers, passengers, and crew, shall be hospitably treated. They shall not be imprisoned, nor deprived of any part of their wearing apparel, nor of the possession and use of their money, not exceeding, for the captain, supercargo, and mate, five hundred dollars each; and, for the sailors and passengers, one hundred dollars each.

ART. 27. If it shall appear that the captor bribed, or attempted to bribe, any of the ship's crew or passengers to give any evidence, or make any declaration or disclosure whatever, respecting the vessel, her lading, or destination, or make use of any kind of torture upon the master of the ship, the crew, or others who shall be on board of the same, in such case, whatever grounds there might otherwise be for condemnation, the ship and her lading shall, without delay, be acquitted and restored, with costs and damages; and, also, such shall be guilty of any of the said crimes, as well as their accomplices, shall suffer the most severe punishment suitable to their offences. And, to insure the observance of this article, provision shall be made by law in each country to carry the same into full effect.

ART. 28. It is further agreed that all prizes shall be conducted to a port of the party at war; and, in all cases, the established courts for prize causes, in the country to which the prizes may be conducted, shall alone take cognizance of them. And whenever such tribunal or court of either of the parties shall pronounce sentence against any vessel, or goods, or property claimed by the citizens of the other party, the reasons or motives of such judgment shall be entered in the sentence or decree, and a duly authenticated copy of all the proceedings in the cause, and of the said sentence, shall, if required, be delivered to the commander or agent of the said vessel without the smallest delay, he paying all legal fees and demands for the same.

ART. 29. When process shall be moved, in the first or second instance, between those that have taken the prizes at sea and the persons interested therein, and the said interested persons shall come to obtain a favorable judgment or decree, the said judgment or decree shall have its execution, upon security given, notwithstanding the appeal of him that took the prize: but the same shall not hold, on the contrary, where the sentence goes against the claimers.

ART. 30. The merchant ships belonging to the citizens of either of the two contracting parties which intend to go to a port at enmity with the other, concerning whose voyage and the sort of goods on board there may be just cause of suspicion, shall be obliged to exhibit, as well on the high seas as in the ports and havens, not only their passports, but also their certificates expressing that the goods are not of the kind which are contraband, as specified in the twenty-first article of this treaty.

ART. 31. And that more abundant care may be taken for the security of the respective citizens of the contracting parties, and to prevent their suffering injuries by the men of war or privateers of either party, all commanders of ships of war and privateers, and all others the said citizens, shall forbear doing any damage to those of the other party, or committing any outrage against them; and, if they act to the contrary, they shall be punished, and shall also be bound in their persons and estates to make satisfaction and reparation for all damages, and the interest thereof, of whatever nature the said damages may be.

For this cause all commanders of privateers, before they receive their commissions, shall hereafter be obliged to give, before a competent judge, sufficient security, by at least two responsible sureties who have no interest in the said privateer; each of whom, together with the said commander, shall be jointly and severally bound in the sum of — dollars or — francs; or, if such ship be provided with above one hundred and fifty seamen or soldiers, in the sum of — dollars or — francs, to satisfy all damages and injuries which the said privateer, or her officers or men, or any of them, may do or commit, during their cruise, contrary to the tenor of this treaty, or to the laws and instructions for regulating their conduct; and further, that in all cases of aggressions, the said commissions shall be revoked and annulled.

ART. 32. It shall not be lawful for any foreign privateers, who have commissions from any other Prince or State in enmity with either nation, to arm their ships in the ports of either of the said parties, nor to sell what they have taken, nor in any other manner to exchange the same, nor shall they be allowed to purchase more provisions than shall be necessary for their going to the nearest port of that Prince or State from whom they obtained their commissions.

ART. 33. It is further agreed that both the said contracting parties shall not only refuse to receive any pirates into any of their ports, havens, or towns, or permit any of their inhabitants to receive, protect, harbor, conceal, or assist them in any manner, but will bring to condign punishment all such inhabitants as shall be guilty of such acts or offences. And all their ships, with the goods or merchandise taken by them, and brought into the port of either of the said parties, shall be seized, as far as they can be discovered, and shall be restored to the owners, or their factors or agents duly deputed and authorized in writing by them, (proper evidence being first given in the Court of Admiralty for proving the property,) even in case such effects should have passed into other hands by sale, if it be proved that the buyers knew, or had good reason to believe or suspect, that they had been piratically taken.

ART. 34. Neither party will intermeddle in the fisheries on the coasts of the other, nor disturb the other in the exercise of the rights which it now holds or may acquire of fishing on the banks of Newfoundland, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or elsewhere on the American coast northward of the United States of America; but the whale and seal fisheries shall be free to both in every quarter of the world.

ART. 35. It shall be free for the two contracting parties, respectively, to appoint Consuls for the protection of trade, to reside in the dominions and territories of each party. Either of the parties may except from the residence of Consuls such particular places as such party shall judge proper to be excepted. Before any Consul shall act as such, he shall be, in the usual forms, approved and admitted by the party to whose territory he is sent; and the said Consuls shall enjoy those liberties and rights which belong to them by reason of their function. And it is agreed that the admission of a Consul by the government of a colony, shall be deemed such a provisional admission as to entitle him to act as such until the will of the Government to which such colony belongs shall be formally made known. And it is hereby declared to be lawful and proper, that, in case of illegal or improper conduct towards the laws or Government, a Consul may be either punished according to law, or dismissed, and even sent back; the offended Government assigning to the other their reasons for the same.

ART. 36. It is agreed that the first twelve articles of this treaty shall be permanent, and that the subsequent articles shall be limited to twelve years, to be computed from the day on which the ratifications of this treaty shall be exchanged.

Nothing in this treaty shall be construed to operate contrary to former and existing public treaties with other Sovereigns or States.

MAY 16.

The following letter was received from the Secretary of State, and, on the next day, the letter under date of the 27th, was prepared, and forwarded with the several enclosures mentioned; duplicates and triplicates of this last despatch were also soon afterwards sent by different routes:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Philadelphia, February 14, 1800.

GENTLEMEN: In your commissions, containing your full powers, you are named "Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States to the French Republic;" and you are authorized "to meet and confer with the Minister or Ministers of the French Republic, who shall be appointed and commissioned with equal powers, and with such Minister or Ministers to discuss and settle by a treaty all controversies between the United States and France." Consequently, the circumstance of your letters of credence being addressed to the late "Executive Directory," need not prevent or impede the proposed negotiation, provided the existing Government in France are inclined to enter upon it, and to conclude a treaty.

This is the President's opinion, and, by his direction, I now communicate it to you. Indeed, the idea must have occurred to you, it being obvious that a satisfactory treaty, however negotiated, which shall be approved and ratified by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, will be alike valid as if conducted with the most minute attention to customary formalities.

I am, with great respect, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH, &c.,
Envoys to the French Republic.

PARIS, May 17, 1800.

SIR: We had the honor to write to you on the 18th ultimo, covering all the communications between us and the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic up to that date, and a duplicate and a triplicate of that despatch have also been forwarded. The quadruplicate of your letter, (No. —,) arrived some time ago, and your letters of the 14th of February and 7th of March were received last evening.

The enclosed copies, marked W. X., will give you the necessary information respecting the progress and present state of the negotiation. As the French Ministers entered on the business of their commission soon after their appointment, and at the seat of their Government, it seems to have been so arranged that they were to receive their instructions on important points as they might become necessary in the course of the negotiations. This duty was naturally attached to the office of Exterior Relations; and our progress has suffered some delay by the sickness of M. Talleyrand, who has been confined by a severe illness from about the 15th of April to the 14th or 15th of this month. You will observe, however, that, even during this period, the business has been pressed forward on our part the whole length of the proposed treaty, with a view of avoiding all useless discussion, of fixing the attention of the Ministers to the real points of difference, and of marking with certainty the progress of the negotiation.

The situation of the army of Italy, commanded by General Massena, has been extremely critical, and has attracted the particular attention of the Premier Consul; and the army of reserve, amounting to about sixty thousand men, has marched to its relief. The French are, however, very successful on the Rhine, and the Government is as yet unshaken; it professes justice and moderation, and appears to be desirous of peace, which, there is some reason to believe, may be the result of the present campaign.

Our success is yet doubtful. The French think it hard to indemnify for violating engagements, unless they can thereby be restored to the benefits of them. Very few American vessels have been brought into European ports since our arrival at Paris, and, for some time past, we have heard of none. We know not, however, of any orders of this Government for the restraining of captures, except such as may have been the consequence of the enclosed law, repealing that of the 29th Nivose. Prisoners have been generally released, on a receipt being given by the American agents, promising the discharge of as many French seamen from confinement in the United States.

The court lately established for deciding questions of prize administratively, as it is called, and before which there are many American appeals, has not yet made any decisions.

We enclose, also, the copy of the law repealing the 1st article of the law of the 29th Nivose, and the arrêt of the Consuls respecting their new court, called "le conseil des prises."

We have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servants,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

TIMOTHY PICKERING, Esq.,
Secretary of State.

The following note was received, covering two acts of the French Government:

26th FLOREAL, (16th April.)

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the Republic have the honor to transmit to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States the documents announced in the postscript to their last note, which had been accidentally omitted.

They pray the Ministers of the United States to accept the assurance of their high consideration.

RÖDERER,
FLEURIEU,
BONAPARTE.

PARIS, May 19, 1800.

The Envoys Extraordinary of the United States have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of two acts of the French Government, mentioned in the postscript of the note of the Ministers of the Republic. These papers have been forwarded to the Government of the United States, who, as late as the 7th of March, had received no advices respecting the acts or measures of the present Government of France.

They request the Ministers of the Republic to accept the assurance of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

MAY 23.

The French Ministers had frequently mentioned in conversation the insuperable repugnance of their Government to yield its claim to the anteriority assumed to it in the Treaty of Amity and Commerce of 1778; urging the equivalent alleged to be accorded by France for this stipulation; the meritorious ground on which they generally represented the treaty stood; denying strenuously the power of the American Government to annul the treaties by a simple Legislative act, and always concluding that it was perfectly incompatible with the honor and dignity of France to assent to the extinction of a right in favor of an enemy, and much more so to appear to acquiesce in the establishment of that right in favor of Great Britain. The priority with respect to the right of asylum for privateers and prizes, was the only point in the old treaty on which they had anxiously insisted, and which they agreed could not be as well provided for by a new stipulation. They had, however, transmitted no answer to the note of the Envoys, covering the remaining part of the project of a treaty; and only indirect intimations had been received, that difficulties had arisen, from the limited nature of the instructions of the French Ministers. But, at an interview to-day, the Envoys were officially informed that the negotiation was at a stand on the part of France; that no further progress could be made until other powers* were procured from the Premier Consul, as the tenor of their instructions made the acknowledgment of former treaties the basis of negotiation and the condition of compensation; that the French commission was working upon a report which would be delivered in a day or two to the Minister of Exterior Relations, and forwarded immediately by a courier to the Premier Consul, who had left Paris the 6th of May, and was supposed to be at this time in Switzerland or Italy.

MAY 24.

The Envoys held a conference to-day for the purpose of taking into consideration the information received yesterday, and the critical state of the negotiation; and, considering that the judgment of the Premier Consul would probably be formed upon the impressions made by the report; that the instructions which would be the result might possibly be conclusive; and that, in any event, there might be some difficulty, and certainly delay, in procuring any alteration, it was deemed expedient to transmit the note following, under date of the 25th, with a view to obviate any apprehension that our Government contemplated further grants to their prejudice, and as containing an intermediate ground, conciliatory to the pride of the French Government, without sacrificing the honor or interests of the United States.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, May 25, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned having bestowed the most mature consideration upon the subject so often mentioned with so much interest by the Ministers of the French Republic, and being desirous of guarding against any misapprehension on that head, have thought it expedient to propose the clause enclosed, as an addition to the thirty-second article of their project of a treaty.

Accept, Citizen Ministers, the assurance of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

To be added to the thirty-second article:

Nor will either of the said parties, while they continue in amity, make a treaty with any foreign Sovereign or State, stipulating for the privateers and prizes of such Sovereign or State an asylum in the ports of either, unless they shall have assured to each other such right of asylum for the privateers and prizes of each in the ports of the other.

MAY 25.

The following letter was received from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Philadelphia, April 9, 1800.

GENTLEMEN: On the 3d instant Capt. Barry arrived here with your letter, dated at Burgos, on the 10th of February, covering copies of your letters of December 7th from Lisbon, and January 18th from Corunna, and your correspondence with Mr. Talleyrand. These are the first and only despatches received from you since you left the United States. We are happy you escaped the perils of the sea in your attempting a voyage from Lisbon to L'Orient.

The answer of Mr. Talleyrand confirms the opinion expressed in your letter to him, that the circumstance of your letters of credence being addressed to the Directory of the French Republic could be viewed merely as a formality of no moment to the object of your mission. Your powers are full to negotiate and settle by treaty all differences between the United States and the French Republic, and to make commercial arrangements. The person or persons vested with the Executive power of the nation, if really desirous of such an adjustment, could not possibly make any serious objection to the address of your letters of credence, which was perfectly correct at their date. For these reasons, and because no official notice has been received of any change in the form of the Government of France, or in the person administering it, the President does not think it necessary to send any new letters of credence. Mr. Talleyrand having said that "the form of your letters of credence would be no obstacle to the opening of negotiations, of which he ventured to foresee the happy success," must indeed be considered as removing all doubt on the subject.

The ship Portsmouth, Captain McNeil, goes with this letter to Havre de Grace, whence he will send one of his officers to Paris, and receive your orders. The President supposes that by the time of her arrival, your negotiations will be concluded, and that Judge Ellsworth and Governor Davie will take their passage in her to America. Should your negotiations be still pending, and any reason satisfactory to yourselves, (according to the latitude given in your instructions,) determine you to wait longer in France, you will, at your discretion, either detain or send back the Portsmouth, as you shall think expedient for the public good.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH, &c.,

Envoys to the French Republic.

JUNE 1.

As the French Ministers had yet made no answer to the notes of the 8th and 25th of May, covering the remaining details of the project of a treaty, the American Ministers thought it would be proper to press them for an answer, or at least an explanation of the cause of their silence; and sent them the following note, which was answered by the note under date of the 16th Prairial:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, June 1, 1800.

Solicitous as are the undersigned, Citizen Ministers, to terminate happily and with promptitude a negotiation which is calculated to promote the interests of the two nations, they invite your attention to their notes of the 8th and 25th of May, and hope to be honored with as early an answer as the state of the business will admit of.

They trust that, while they avow a strong disposition to hasten the great object in view, they will not be chargeable with impatience; the frank development of their views will have been properly estimated.

Accept, Citizen Ministers, the assurances of their high consideration.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

PARIS, 16 Prairial, (5th June,) year 8.

The undersigned, Ministers of the French Republic, participate with the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, in the desire which they express, in their note of the 12th of this month, that the negotiation with which they are respectively charged should be brought to a speedy and favorable issue. The Ministers of France, in acknowledging the receipt of the note which the Ministers of the United States were pleased to address to them, the 18th Floreal, have had the honor to state that the examination of its contents would occasion some delay. That note has been since that time the subject of their most serious attention. After mature deliberation, they considered the propositions it contained of a nature to require submission, for ultimate decision, to the Government of the Republic. The Ministers Plenipotentiary have, therefore, transmitted it to the Minister of Exterior Relations, by whom they are informed that he has himself deemed it necessary to take the direction of the First Consul. As soon as the undersigned shall have received the expected instructions, they will hasten to transmit their answer to the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States.

Meanwhile, the undersigned pray the American Ministers to accept the assurance of their perfect consideration.

BONAPARTE,
FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

JULY 5th.

The following letter was received from C. Lee, Esq., acting as Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Philadelphia, 22d May, 1800.

GENTLEMEN: Since the letter at Burgos, 10th February, which was received early in April, the President has not had the pleasure of receiving a letter from any of the Envoys to the French Republic. But by various European gazettes, intelligence has reached him of your safe arrival in Paris, in the beginning of March, and, before many days shall elapse, he hopes to receive information from you upon the subject of your mission.

The unexpected and unavoidable delays after you left Lisbon may possibly have the consequence of your retarding your return home so long that this letter will find you at Paris; and, in contemplation of such a possibility, it is written.

Congress adjourned on the 14th instant. The most material acts of the session were the following:

An act on the subject of bankruptcies.

An act to authorize the President to borrow three millions and a half of dollars.

Sundry acts continuing the system of maritime defence, and the prohibitions of commerce in regard to the French Republic, and her dominions, as they stood at the commencement of the session.

And an act for disbanding the additional twelve regiments, excepting the artilleryists, and engineers, part thereof, on or before the 15th of June next.

Whatever may be the result of your negotiation, in the present state of France and the United States, this part of the military establishment was not deemed indispensably necessary. A considerable saving of money would be the immediate consequence; and if your negotiation should fail to restore peace and harmony between the two countries, a greater portion of the resources of the United States would remain to be expended more advantageously than in the support of an army. This alteration in the defensive system was very generally approved in the Senate and House of Representatives, just before the session was closed.

The judicial system remains as it stood. Our country is at present blessed with the prospect of a most plentiful harvest of wheat and rye, and the losses of our merchants arising from depredations are considerably diminished. I am instructed to express the President's hope that your reception at Paris has been agreeable, and that your mission has been accomplished in a manner entirely satisfactory, or, if not accomplished, that the negotiation is near a happy conclusion; and, at the same time, to add his wishes that you may soon return in health and happiness to the bosom of our beloved country. I have the honor to be, &c.

CHARLES LEE,
Acting Secretary of State.

The American Ministers having been officially advised that their notes of the 8th and 25th of May, with the details accompanying them, had been submitted to the Minister of Exterior Relations, were also soon afterwards confidentially informed that the whole business was referred to the decision of the Premier Consul, who was then in Italy; and about the — of June, Joseph Bonaparte, President of the Commission, set out for the headquarters of the Army. The object of his journey to the Premier Consul was not publicly known, nor was his departure announced to the American Ministers. The battle of Marengo took place on the 14th day of June, and the Premier Consul returned to Paris the 3d of July; Joseph Bonaparte also arrived a few days afterwards. While the American Ministers sincerely regretted the delay occasioned by the above unexpected circumstances, they supposed it probable that the Premier Consul might not have had sufficient leisure, amidst the active operations of the armies, to determine upon the several matters respecting the treaty, and that his decisions and instructions might have been postponed until his return to Paris. At a meeting, however, on the 6th of July, they were of opinion that they had then made a proper allowance for all circumstances that might have countenanced delay on the part of the French Ministers, and addressed to them the following note:

PARIS, July 6, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: Presuming, as the undersigned Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States do, that you are now acquainted with the ulterior views of your Government, respecting the negotiation between the United States and the French Republic, they request the honor of a conference on that subject, at such time and place as may be most convenient for you. They trust that the unfortunate delays, which have hitherto attended the business, will justify their hopes of bringing it to a speedy close.

Accept, Citizen Ministers, the assurance of their high consideration,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

TO MESSRS. JOSEPH BONAPARTE, FLEURIEU, and RÖDERER.

The next day the American Ministers were invited to dine on the 11th with the President of the French Commission; and, as no answer had been received to the note of the 6th, it was agreed that the 11th should be considered by them as the time appointed for the conference; the object of which, on their part, was to ascertain the difficulties which seemed to have arrested all progress on the part of the French Ministers; to designate, with more precision, the real grounds of difference; and, if possible, to adopt some arrangement that would accelerate the negotiation. On the 11th, before dinner, M. Bonaparte informed them that the whole business of the treaty was now under the consideration of the Premier Consul, and that his decisions and instructions were expected in the course of a few days, when the notes and propositions received would be immediately answered. The American Ministers repeated their regret at the long delay which had taken place; and, upon their expressing the desire that a conference should be held that evening, the French Ministers readily consented. After the objects of requesting an interview were stated, the President of the French Commission said they would frankly state the difficulties which had arisen with their Government: although they had not received officially its determination of instructions, they believed they were possessed of its present sentiments and opinions, and could not avoid adding that they accorded with those of the Commission. He then declared that it was the decided opinion of the Premier Consul that the ancient treaties ought to be the basis of negotiation; that compensation could only be a consequence of the existence of the treaties, and the re-establishment under them of the former privileges and relations; and that he would never consent to make a treaty which would surrender the exclusive rights of France, in effect, in favor of an enemy; or, in any event, make a treaty with the United States, which would not place France on a footing of equality at least with Great Britain. He thought it would be derogatory to the present Government to make a treaty, less advantageous and less honorable than that made by the royal Government. Discussions of some length took place on the most important points: but, as the whole business, on the part of the French Ministers, was under reference to their Government, no point could of course be settled; and the conference closed with the request of the French Ministers that all they had said should be considered merely as confidential.

After several deliberations on the difficulties which had now completely arrested the progress of the negotiation, and the selection of some expedient which might remove them, the American Ministers at length determined to request an early interview, and make a proposal to the effect that the payment of the indemnities should be suspended until the Government of the United States should have offered to France an article, re-establishing her in the exclusive privileges she claimed, under the treaty of 1778. It was considered that the American Government might or might not perform the condition, after a further view of the political state of Europe, and the possession of more ample means to estimate a promise of indemnity. It was also clearly perceived that, unless the indemnities were secured by some means under the present negotiation, they would be forever lost.

JULY 15.

At an interview to-day with the French Ministers, the following proposition was delivered to them in writing:

"Indemnities to be ascertained and secured in the manner proposed in our project of a treaty, but not to be paid until the United States shall have offered to France an article, stipulating free admission into the ports of each for the privateers and prizes of the other, and the exclusion of those of their enemies; nor unless the article be offered within seven years: such article to have the same effect, in point of priority, as a similar provision had in the treaty of 1778.

"JULY 15, 1800."

The circumstances which motived the proposition and its principle were briefly explained on the part of the American Ministers, who concluded by adding, that an answer was not expected at that interview. There was, however, no difficulty in perceiving, that the first impression was not perfectly satisfactory to the French Ministers; their observations took the same course they had done the preceding conference, and were answered on the same principles. Upon the American Ministers expressing their wish to receive an answer to this and their former propositions as speedily as possible, the French Ministers repeated their professions on that head; adding, that the observations they had made in these interviews were to be considered as merely hypothetical and unofficial.

JULY 20.

Meeting the French Ministers to-day at M. Røderer's, it was agreed to press them again officially for an answer. An interview took place after dinner, and M. Bonaparte said that he had seen the Minister of Exterior Relations that morning, on the business of the negotiation; and that he was assured that in a few days they should receive the decision and instructions of their Government.

JULY 23.

The American Ministers, having taken into consideration the importance of the discussions which took place at the late interviews, thought it expedient to address the following note to the French Ministers:

PARIS, July 23, 1800.

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The Envoys of the United States being apprehensive lest possibly their remarks to the Ministers of the French Republic, in the two last conferences which led to and accompanied their written proposition, may not have been fully comprehended, from being expressed in a language but imperfectly understood, they have thought proper to reduce the substance of them to writing.

As to the proposition of placing France, with respect to an asylum for privateers and prizes, upon the footing of equality with Great Britain, it was remarked, that the right which had accrued to Great Britain in that respect, was that of an asylum for her own privateers and prizes, to the exclusion of those of her enemies; wherefore, it was physically impossible that her enemies should at the same time have a similar right.

With regard to the observation, that by the terms of the British Treaty the rights of France were reserved, and, therefore, the rights of Great Britain existed with such limitation as would admit of both nations being placed on a footing which should be equal, it was observed by the Envoys of the United States, that the saving in the British Treaty was only of the rights of France resulting from her then existing treaty; and that that treaty having ceased to exist, the saving necessarily ceased also, and the rights, which before that event were only contingent, immediately attached and became operative.

With respect to the supposition that the treaties with France yet continued to exist, it was remarked, that a treaty being a mutual compact, a palpable violation of it by one party did, by the law of nature and of nations, leave it optional with the other to renounce and declare the same to be no longer obligatory, and that, of necessity, there being no common tribunal to which they could appeal, the remaining party must decide whether there had been such violation on the other part as to justify its renunciation. For a wrong decision it would doubtless be responsible to the injured party, and might give cause for war; but, even in such case, its act of public renunciation, being an act within its competence, would not be a void but a valid act; and other nations, whose rights might thereby be beneficially affected, would so regard it: that it had become impossible for the United States to save their commerce from the depredations of French cruisers, but by resorting to defensive measures; and that as, by their Constitution, existing treaties were the supreme law of the land, and the Judicial department, who must be governed by them, is not under the control of the Executive, or Legislative, it was also impossible for them to legalize defensive measures, incompatible with the French Treaties, while they continued to exist. Then it was that they were formally renounced, and from that renunciation there resulted necessarily a priority in favor of the British Treaty as to an exclusive asylum for privateers and prizes. A right, indeed, which she has made little use of, and with respect to which it would be un consequential, during the remainder of the present war, whether she or France possessed it; but as it was a vested right, neither the Government of the United States nor their Ministers could, with good faith, stipulate to France a right inconsistent with it.

To the still further suggestion that the law of nations admitted a dissolution of treaties only by mutual consent or war, it was remarked by the undersigned, that their conviction was clearly otherwise; and that Vattel, in particular, the best approved of modern writers, not only held that a treaty violated by one party might for that reason be renounced by the other, but that, when there were two treaties between the same parties, one might be rendered void in that way, and the other remain in force: whereas, when war dissolves, it dissolves all treaties existing between the parties at the time.

It appearing, however, to be the ultimate opinion of the French Ministers that it did not comport with the honor of France to be deprived of that right, and at the same time to be called upon for compensation, the undersigned, solicitous for the honor of France as well as of America, devised and offered, as their last effort, the written proposition alluded to, which, it was conceived, did essentially remove the difficulty. Its object was to suspend the payment of compensations, a consideration of much weight in the estimate of the United States, until France could be put into complete possession of the privileges she contended for; and, at the same time, to give that security, which a great pecuniary pledge would amount to, for her having the privilege, as soon as it could be given with good faith, which might, perhaps, be in a little more than two years, and at any rate within seven.

Accept, Citizen Ministers, the assurance of their high consideration.

The following answer was received:

PARIS, 8th Thermidor,
(26th August), year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic have received the note dated 23d July, 1800, (4th Thermidor, year 8.) which the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America have been pleased to address to them.

That note has two objects:

The first, to recapitulate the answers which had been given by the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, at two former conferences, to the remarks then made by the Ministers Plenipotentiary of France, on the subject of the right of asylum, in the ports of the United States and France, which has been assured to the privateers and prizes of both nations, reciprocally, and exclusively, by the Treaty of 1778; a right which the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States maintained had been annulled between France and the United States, and established, to the injury of France, between the United States and England.

The second object of the note is, to explain the propositions, made by the American Ministers, at the last conference, by which they offered to stipulate that the indemnities which may be due to the United States, "shall not be paid, until the United States shall have offered to the French Republic an article stipulating free admission, in the ports of each, for the privateers and prizes of the other, and the exclusion of those of their enemies; and, moreover, that these indemnities shall not be paid unless the article shall be offered within seven years: such articles to have the same effect, in point of priority, as a similar provision in the Treaty of 1778."

As to the first object, the Ministers of the French Republic are compelled to repeat, that their instructions, predicated on the complete recognition of the ancient treaties, leave them no power to consent to the extinguishment of a right, confirmed by the Treaty of 1778, by which the privateers of the two nations, respectively, are allowed to enter the ports of each other; and, least of all, to consent to the incorporation of that right with the existing relations between the United States and Great Britain.

But being convinced that the true interest of France is closely connected with that of the United States, and that the prosperity of the United States mainly depends on their complete independence; being convinced, also, that an exclusive right, conferred by one nation upon another, to bring prizes into her ports, has a tendency to compromise tranquillity, and by that means endanger independence: inasmuch, as, in a number of cases, causes either of complaint or of distrust must be given to the Power from whom prizes have been taken; the undersigned hasten to repeat to the American Ministers the proposition already made, that, in the event of a reconciliation being effected, they will consider it their duty to urge upon their Government to abolish the exclusive right to enter the ports of each other, with privateers and their prizes; and to limit their privilege to that enjoyed by the most favored nation. They believe that France would do herself honor by the voluntary sacrifice of a privilege prejudicial to her allies; but that, to consent to be despoiled of that privilege, for the benefit of an enemy, without thereby contributing to American independence, would exhibit to the world a striking instance of self-degradation.

The Ministers of France cannot discover, in the note of the 23d July 1800, any reason to incline them to the supposition that the treaties between France and the United States* are abrogated.

When on the one hand, Congress declare that France has contravened these treaties, and that the United States are released from their stipulations; and when, on the other, the Government of France declares that she has conformed to these treaties, that she desires their execution, and that the United States alone have infringed them; where is the tribunal or the law to enforce the exoneration, in preference to the execution?

So long as a difference exists between two contracting parties, respecting the existence or abrogation of a treaty, no right or benefit can result to a third party from the abrogation contended for by one.

If France had declared the treaties annulled, and

* The act of Congress of July 9, 1798, is the declaration of one of two parties; but the treaties were the work of two. A compact formed by two can be destroyed by one in no other way except by war and victory.

Relations with France.

the United States had maintained their validity: England would have no ground for saying to America, "We succeed to the rights of France." There is no foundation, even for a doubt, whether a treaty is cancelled by the declaration of its abrogation made by one only of the parties.

These reflections are in conformity with the doctrines advanced by all writers upon the laws of nations. The opinion of Vattel can only be understood of a nullity in point of right, not of a nullity in fact: and it is only a nullity in fact that can give an opening, respecting the claim of anteriority, to rights resulting to a third party.

These reflections, moreover, arise from the very nature of things. If one of two contracting parties is at liberty, whenever he may please, to cancel his obligations, in virtue of his own judgment concerning facts, or men, or things, no binding force can be attached to treaties, and the term itself should be erased from every language.

If the right of anteriority can be destroyed, to the prejudice of the nation that possesses it, by the sole act of one of the parties by whom that right has been recognised, it must be acknowledged as a principle, that the nation making the second treaty converts the one with whom she first contracted into an enemy; and that she may be certain of being despoiled by that enemy whenever the time may be propitious for an open explanation.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic refrain from pursuing these observations. What has been said will already suffice to establish the rights of France and to insure to herself the honor of a sacrifice which she would make by renouncing the exclusive right under which the privateers of France, together with their prizes, are entitled to enter the American ports.

Passing to the second object of the note, the Ministers of France observe, that the proposition of the American Ministers offers to the Republic, at a remote period, the hope of enjoying exclusive advantages, of which, in the mean time, they think that France should not be jealous; and at the present moment, perhaps for seven years to come, it tenders the humiliating forfeiture of privileges acquired by effective services to America in time of war, and a degrading inferiority to a rival Power, at whose expense these privileges were first obtained. When the Ministers of France shall subscribe to a condition so unworthy of the French nation, the price of her humiliation will assuredly not be the simple postponement of a state of subjugation, which she regards as inconsistent with the interests of the United States. The dependence of her allies will never be considered a suitable indemnity for the wrongs she may endure. The Ministers of France, believing it their duty to recommend to their Government the surrender of a privilege honorably acquired, might be charged with inconsistency if they should prudently provide for its restoration at a distant period.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic can, therefore, only await the final determination of their Government; and, whenever received, they will hasten to transmit it to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States.

They have the honor to assure the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of their high consideration.

AUGUST 11.

The following note was received from the French Ministers:

PARIS, 23 Thermidor,
(11th August,) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic have received from their Government the new instructions which they thought themselves obliged to ask, when they were informed, by the unexpected note of the Ministers Plenipotentiary of America, that the United States consider their treaties with France as annulled, and that the validity of these treaties could not be recognised, with all the advantages attached to their date. The French Ministers hasten to present to the Ministers of the United States the reflections and overtures which the actual state of the negotiation appears to demand.

In the first place, they insist upon the principle already established in their former note, viz: that the treaties by which France and the United States have been united are not annulled; that war itself could not have annulled them; and that the misunderstanding which, through the agency of individuals more than the intention of the respective Governments, has for some time existed between France and the United States, has not constituted a state of war, at least on the part of France.

If the reflections presented by the French Ministers on this subject, in their note of the 8th instant, have been sufficient to induce the American Ministers to admit the validity of these treaties, it would follow, as a necessary consequence, that the Ministers of France would hasten to renew the declaration that the parties should be reciprocally indemnified for injuries mutually sustained during the existence of that misunderstanding. If the treaties are preserved unimpaired, as originally concluded, it would be just and proper to extinguish even the remembrance of the recriminations which have occurred during the period of their existence.

The first proposition, then, of the Ministers of France, is to stipulate a full and entire recognition of the treaties, and a reciprocal promise of indemnities for the damages resulting, on the part of either, from their infraction.

If the American Ministers shall continue to believe that they possess no authority to recognise the validity of the ancient treaties, with the advantage arising from their date; if it shall appear that France has been only deceiving herself with delusive hopes, while relying upon an uninterrupted friendship with the United States; and that, in consenting to indemnify the injuries committed by a few privateers and some unauthorized agents, she has made only a useless display of her sacred adherence to her own engagements; the Government of France will, nevertheless, consent to the abrogation of the treaties; and with the less reluctance, because the American Ministers have appeared to consider some of their stipulations as incompatible with the perfect independence of the United States. Such is the provision referred to in the note of the American Ministers of the 18th Floreal, (8th May,) in which the desire is expressed to restrict the privateers of foreign nations, within the ports of the United States, to the rights of hospitality, in order to liberate the commerce of the United States from every restraint, and free their political relations from all connexion with the interests and passions of the belligerent Powers. The Government of France is convinced that it is only a complete independence than can advance the United States to the highest point of prosperity; and it agrees to make a willing sacrifice of advantages which may endanger that independence, however ample the equivalent by which they were acquired, and with whatsoever reciprocity or services it may have been repaid.

They, therefore, declare that the demands concerning the treaties, and the offer to repair the damages arising from their infraction, if an infraction has taken place, (a demand dictated by a scrupulous fidelity to engagements, and, at the same time, advantageous to the United States,) will now easily give place to the views, dictated by considerations of interest, independence, and security, with which they are now occupied: they especially declare, that they will not refuse to relinquish the exclusive privilege enjoyed by the privateers of France, to carry their prizes into the ports of the United States. Whilst, however, the Ministers of France acquiesce in the nullity of the treaties, they cannot conceal from themselves that the act of the United States, by which their abrogation has been declared, has been an unequivocal provocation to war; that the hostile acts, by which this provocation has been followed, increasing in number and publicity, even after France had removed every just cause of complaint, were nothing less than war; that France had desired to be insensible to the real state of her extraordinary relations with the United States; in a word, that a new treaty between France and the United States ought to be preceded by a treaty of peace. If the correctness of these observations is admitted, it would seem, that the two Governments ought to be occupied no longer with their respective losses: the rights of war acknowledge no obligation to repair its ravages: their consideration even is prohibited by national honor, since the State inflicting the greatest injury would, by making compensation, acknowledge a victor and purchase peace.

As to the rest, it must be perfectly understood that, in acquiescing in the annulment of these treaties, the French Government intends only to renounce the privileges which these treaties assured to France; and that France will never submit to be placed, in her relations with the United States, on a footing inferior to that of any other Power. She would renounce, without regret, the exclusive advantages she has enjoyed, but she cannot consent that other Powers shall enjoy the same advantages to her prejudice. She would relinquish freely the right she has acquired, but she will never acknowledge the right of another, founded on the destruction of her own. This she owes to her own character, and even to the prosperity of the United States. If it is the wish of the United States to be liberated from engagements which weigh, perhaps, too heavily on their national independence, they ought to desire the loosening of their fetters, in order to assume a more erect and imposing attitude, and not for the purpose of being bent with equal force in the opposite direction.

The second proposition of the Ministers of France, in case the former shall not be accepted, will then be the abrogation of ancient treaties; the formation of a new treaty, in which the French nation, abandoning a privilege inconvenient to the United States, shall be placed, in her political and commercial relations, on an equal footing with the most favored nation; and an entire silence on the subject of indemnities.

Thus, the proposition which the Ministers of France have the honor to communicate to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States is reduced to this simple alternative:

Either the ancient treaties, carrying with them the privileges resulting from anteriority, together with stipulations for reciprocal indemnity;

Or a new treaty, promising equality, unattended with indemnities.

In this double overture, and the explanation accompanying it, the Ministers of the United States will, without doubt, perceive the desire of the French Government to terminate the negotiation in a manner satisfactory to the United States.

The French Ministers have the honor to assure the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of their high consideration.

AUGUST 15.

The following letter was written to the Secretary of State, and forwarded by the Franklin, sailing from Bourdeaux:

PARIS, August 15, 1800.

SIR: Having ascertained, by an interview with the French Ministers, soon after our note to them of the 8th of May, a copy of which you have doubtless received, that, as we refused to assume the former treaties, they could proceed no further with our new instructions, and that a report on the state of the negotiation was preparing for the Minister of Exterior Relations, and ultimately for the Premier Consul; we judged it expedient, in order to obviate an apprehension that our Government contemplated further grants to the prejudice of France, and to diminish the hazard of sending off the business to the Premier Consul, then with the army in Switzerland, who, in a moment of agitation, might decide definitely upon it, to propose the following clause as an addition to the 32d article of our project, viz: "Nor will either of the said parties, while they continue in amity, make a treaty with any foreign Sovereign or State, stipulating for the privateers and prizes of such Sovereign or State, an asylum in the ports of each other, unless they shall have assured to each other such right of asylum for privateers and prizes of each in the ports of the other;" and it was accordingly sent with the note marked A.

Embarrassing as the delay for new instructions was seen to be, it was nevertheless deemed inexpedient, in the then critical state of European affairs, to treat it as a studied delay.

On the 1st of June, we addressed the note marked B, and on the 5th, received an answer marked C.

Soon after the Premier's return from Italy, the note marked D was sent.

The requested interview took place on Friday, the 11th July; and although the French Ministers declared that they had not received further instructions, yet, as they expressed a willingness to converse upon the subject, a conversation was entered upon, which had for its object to ascertain with more precision the grounds of difference between us. Their observations led to, and finally terminated in, this position: that, to be deprived of her former privileges in the ports of the United States, and that, too, in favor of an enemy, and at the same time to be called upon for compensation, was derogatory to the honor of France.

At a further interview, on the 15th July, we brought forward, in order to remove what seemed to be the difficulty at the interview, on the 11th July, a written proposal to suspend the actual payment of indemnities, on the condition of replacing France in the privileges she contended for. A condition which our Government might or might not perform, after it should have further seen the political state of Europe: and also been better able to estimate a promise of indemnity. The proposition was as follows, viz: "Indemnities to be ascertained and secured, in the manner proposed in our project of a treaty, but not to be paid until the United States shall have offered to France an article, stipulating free admission in the ports of each for the privateers and prizes of the other, to the exclusion of her enemies; nor unless the article shall be offered within seven years, such article to have the same effect, in point of priority, as a similar provision had in the treaty of 1778."

An immediate reply to the proposition was not pressed or wished; there was no difficulty, however, in perceiving that the impression was not perfectly satisfactory.

On the 23d of July, the note was sent, marked E, which throws some further light on the two preceding conferences.

The note marked G, purporting to be predicated on the new instructions, was received the 11th of August. This note is now under consideration, and will not be formally answered, till there has been an interview to ascertain some points.

It has however become manifest, that the negotiation must be abandoned, or our instructions deviated from. Should the latter be ventured upon, which, from present appearances, is not improbable, the deviation will be no greater than a change of circumstances may be presumed to justify.

The success of the French in Italy has produced an armistice, and has since opened with the Emperor a negotiation for peace, which is still pending. The result is daily and anxiously expected.

Captain McNeil, with the Portsmouth, arrived safe at Havre on the 23d of May, where he yet remains. The despatches sent by him were duly received. We are, &c., &c.,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

An interview took place with the French Ministers on the subject of their note of the 23d Thermidor, for the purpose of ascertaining with more precision their views on some points which were supposed to be covered under the general terms of their note. The conference was opened on the part of the American Ministers in a manner which they supposed would entitle them to the utmost candor and frankness. The French Ministers were, however, extremely reserved, answering with great caution to every inquiry in the general terms of their note. The result of the conference was, of course, little satisfactory to the American Ministers, who were consequently obliged to consider the French note in the general terms of its text. It now became necessary to decide whether the negotiation should be broken off, or the instructions departed from; whether the treaties should be revived, or the indemnities sacrificed; and, if the treaties were revived, whether, after considering the text of the French note, and the obstinacy with which the Ministers adhered to it, an attempt should be made to effect a modification that might enable Government to extinguish the exclusive privileges of France under the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, as well as her claims under the Treaty of Alliance. The following note became the result of the several deliberations and discussions on these points, and was sent to the French Ministers on the 20th of August:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, August 20, 1800.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The undersigned Ministers have been honored with your note of the 23d Thermidor.

It adds to the regret, occasioned by three months' delay for further instructions, that they confirm the obstacles which had brought the negotiation to a stand.

To abandon indemnities would be illy to select the means of restoring France to the confidence of a nation, too long accustomed to revere and practise justice ever to forget its demands. Nor could America ever conceive that, protecting from depredations her property which remains, had impaired a claim for that of which she has been despoiled. More difficult still of comprehension would it be, that she had aggressed by declaring the truth: for, doubtless, declaring that treaties ceased to bind her which the other party had long and greatly infringed, was no more. If, however, that declaration, as necessary for judicial purposes as it was conformable to truth, had amounted to a cause of war, yet, as the wisdom of France reconciled it to peace, its application on the principle of war to the extinguishment of claims would be inexplicable; and even as to war itself, though it does by its rights, or rather by its usages enforced against weaker Powers, merge the injuries it operates, it does not cancel obligations prior to its existence. If war had actually commenced when it is suggested there was cause given, still, how could its rights be seen to extinguish the claims of America, as the mass of her sufferings was at a time when her conduct towards France was remarkable for nothing but the patience with which she endured, and the moderation with which she sought to remove them?

If, in applying the principle, or exercising the natural right of self-defence, in a state of things now mutually and equally lamented, certain events have taken place, which might be regretted when considered in connexion with their cause; if these events have been attended with a sensation which the French Ministers are pleased to term "eclat," they will have candor enough to admit that this sensibility was natural among men sore by repeated losses, and citizens who had thought their country degraded by her patience and long suffering. A mutual stipulation, however, of restoration or indemnity will save the honor of both nations, and efface with the hand of justice every irritating remembrance. It is but proper here to remark, that if the action, or the notice of it, to which the French Ministers Plenipotentiary have particularly alluded, betaken in connexion with dates and distances, the American Government cannot be charged with neglecting to avail itself of conciliatory measures.

In a word, while nothing would be more grateful to America than to acquit herself of any just claims of France, nothing could be more vain than an attempt to discover to her reasons for the rejection of her own.

It is time for the two nations to return from a state of things difficult to name, and more difficult to account for, to the correcter views of '78; to the confidence inspired by co-operating for an object equally interesting to both; to that spirit which disavowed the idea of founding pretensions on exertions; and, finally, to that friendship which knew not the alloy of purchase.

Too much concerned with that epoch not to recollect its professions, and too confident in the wisdom of those professions to despair of their fruits, the American Ministers have persevered in efforts for a reconciliation. To remove obstacles interposed, they have developed their views and their doubts with more frankness than effect. To go further, they must take on themselves a high responsibility.

If, then, the dignity of one party cannot be satisfied with a recognition of former treaties, still less can the interests of the other dispense with a re-modification of them.

The seventeenth article of the Commercial Treaty, which stipulated an exclusive admission for the privateers and prizes of each in the ports of the other, was but nominally reciprocal; not only because America would seldom be at war, but also by reason of the prior engagements of France under the Treaty of Utrecht, then in force, and since renewed. The real reciprocity of that article was to be sought for in another, which made free goods in free ships—a stipulation greatly beneficial for the United States could they have enjoyed it. This stipulation, however, proved inconvenient to France, as appeared from her defeating the use of it so early in the present war; and for that reason, the undersigned Ministers, in their project of a treaty, proposed to give it up, trusting that it would be deemed a full equivalent for abandoning, on the part of France, the first mentioned privilege stipulated to her.

The American Ministers have shown, in their note of the 8th May, that the free admission of privateers is inconvenient to the United States, and the Ministers Plenipotentiary of France have reasoned, in a note of the 8th Thermidor, and assumed in others, that an exclusive admission of those of one nation compromises their independence. France, then, will not insist on that privilege for herself, exclusively and forever. She will not embarrass that progress to greatness, which, with so much reason and so much solicitude, she seeks to cherish; nor, least of all, compromise the independence she guaranties. Doubtless, upon a review of this claim, her Ministers will be satisfied with the footing of the most favored nation; and, as to rights beyond that, will relinquish them gratuitously, or, at most, on terms not difficult to be complied with.

With respect to the eleventh article of the Treaty of Alliance, it has produced mischievous apprehensions, and never can produce an effect which will not contravene its professed design. If France should not discern the utility of relinquishing this article, she will acquiesce in a specification which may render it less incompatible with her policy.

If the American Ministers, in attending to the note before them, have avoided retracing the measures of the late French Government, which forced the United States to take the defensive position in which the present negotiation found them; if they have declined to renew former discussions, or have not availed themselves of the opportunity of commencing others; it is because time has become precious with them, and because also they yet think it may be more useful to search for means of healing the breach than for the causes which produced it.

As a further effort on their part to ascertain those means, they make the following propositions, predicated on the adoption of the first alternative in the overture of the French Ministers Plenipotentiary.

1. Let it be declared that the former treaties are renewed and confirmed, and shall have the same effect as if no misunderstanding between the two Powers had intervened, except so far as they are derogated from by the present treaty.

2. It shall be optional with either party to pay to the other, within seven years, three millions of frances, in money or securities, which may be issued for indemnities, and thereby to reduce the rights of the other as to privateers and prizes, to those of the most favored nation; and, during the said term allowed for option, the right of both parties shall be limited by the line of the most favored nation.

3. The mutual guaranty in the Treaty of Alliance shall be so specified and limited, that its future obligation shall be, on the part of France, when the United States shall be attacked, to furnish and deliver, at her own ports, military stores to the amount of one million of francs; and on the part of the United States, when the French possessions in America in any future war shall be attacked, to furnish and deliver, at their own ports, a like amount in provisions.

It shall, moreover, be optional for either party to exonerate itself wholly of its obligations, by paying to the other, within seven years, a gross sum of five millions of francs, in money, or such securities as may be issued for indemnities.

4. The articles of commerce and navigation, except the seventeenth article of the treaty, shall admit of modifications, reserving for their principle the rights of the most favored nation, where it shall not be otherwise agreed, and be limited in their duration to twelve years.

5. There shall be a reciprocal stipulation for indemnities, and these indemnities shall be limited to the claims of individuals, and adjusted agreeably to the principles and manner proposed by the American Ministers in their project of a treaty heretofore delivered, except where it shall be otherwise agreed. Public ships taken on either side shall be restored or paid for.

6. All property seized by either party, and not yet definitively condemned, or which may be seized before the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, shall be restored on reasonable, though it should be informal, proof of its belonging to the other, except contraband goods of the United States destined to an enemy's port. This provision to take effect from the signature of the treaty; and if any condemnations should take place contrary to the intent of this stipulation, before knowledge of the same shall be obtained, the property so condemned shall be paid for without delay.

The Ministers of the United States pray the Ministers of the French Republic to accept the assurance of their high consideration.

AUGUST 25.

The following note and propositions were received from the French Ministers:

PARIS, 7th Fructidor, (Aug. 25,) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic have received the note which the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States have done them the honor to address to them the second of the present month.

They cannot regard the overtures therein contained as complying with the first part of the proposed alternative. In reality the first of the propositions offered to the option of the American Ministers was, that the United States should explicitly recognise the treaties they had concluded with France, with all the advantages attached to their date. In the last conference, which took place the 25th Thermidor, (13th August,) it was well understood, and even reduced to writing, that this part of the alternative should particularly exclude every idea of a modification extending to the contested points of the negotiation, and especially to the privilege assured to the French nation, in relation to other Powers. Nevertheless, the note of the American Ministers proposes an important modification of the seventeenth article: whence, it is evident that this note applies to the second branch of the alternative, which consisted in offering a new treaty without indemnity.

The French Ministers might here insist upon the condition, that every stipulation on the subject of indemnities should be laid aside. Nevertheless, France will give the United States a new proof of her friendly disposition, in consenting to the modification of the treaties, and also to the principle of indemnities, in the manner expressed in the subjoined note; in which the U. States will discover undoubted proofs of the desire of France to effect a speedy and complete reconciliation.

The Ministers of the French Republic have the honor to assure the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of their high consideration.

J. BONAPARTE,
C. P. CLARET FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

1. The ancient treaties shall be continued and confirmed; and they shall be carried into execution, in the same manner as if no misunderstanding had taken place between the two nations.

2. Commissioners shall be appointed to liquidate the respective damages.

3. The seventeenth article of the Treaty of Commerce of 1778 shall be preserved inviolate, with the single addition, at the end of the following words: "on the contrary, no shelter or refuge shall be given in their ports or harbors to such as shall have made prize of the subjects, people, or property of either of the parties;" "except in virtue of treaties known at the time of the signature of the present treaty, and subsequent to the treaty of 1778; and this for the space of seven years."

The twenty-second article to contain the same exception as the seventeenth.

4. If, in the space of seven years, the seventeenth and twenty-second articles shall not be offered and accepted in their original force, the indemnities awarded by the Commissioners shall not be paid.

5. The guaranty, stipulated by the Treaty of Alliance, shall be converted into a promise of succor, to the amount of two millions; but this promise shall not be redeemable except by a capital of ten millions.

Relations with France.

AUGUST 24.

As the French Ministers dined to-day with Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie, they were requested to attend a conference after dinner, for the purpose of giving some explanations of the propositions subjoined to their note. Mr. Bonaparte and Mr. Fleurieu, mentioning that they had some urgent business at the council, went away, leaving Mr. Rœderer authorized to give any explanation required. After a conversation of some length, during which Mr. Rœderer discovered how unsatisfactory those propositions were to the American Ministers, he suggested the following idea for consideration, viz: "that the option contained in the note of the American Ministers, to extinguish by an equivalent of eight millions of francs certain claims of France under the former treaties, ought to be reciprocal; so that, if the offer should be made by either party, the other should be bound to accept it;" saying that this suggestion ought not to be considered official, as his colleagues were not consulted.

The next day it was reduced into the form of an article, and shown to Mr. Rœderer, to know whether the principle of his proposition was correctly taken; and upon its being stated to him in the form it was supposed to be made the preceding evening, and upon the article being translated, he admitted that he was correctly understood; and then delivered another proposition, which he said had been approved by the Minister of Exterior Relations, to the following effect:

"If, in the space of seven years, the renewal of the 17th and 22d articles, in their full meaning, shall not be offered, the indemnities which the Commissioners may award shall not be paid; and if the renewal of the 17th and 22d articles, in their full meaning, shall be offered within the space of seven years, France shall have the option, between this renewal and an indemnity of eight millions, which shall be paid to her in money, or in obligations given for the payment of indemnities which shall have been awarded by the Commissioners."

NOTE, (said to have been added by the Minister of Exterior Relations.) "It is understood, and shall be stipulated, in conformity with a note of the American Ministers, that, whenever the privilege respecting prizes shall be abolished, as to France and England, by the expiration of the treaty, neither the United States nor France shall again concede it to any Power whatever."

AUGUST 29.

The American Ministers intended to avail themselves of another conference to-day with the French Ministers; but the President of the French Commission and Mr. Rœderer had gone into the country on the 27th, and were not returned this morning; therefore, with the expectation of attracting the earliest attention of the Ministers to the business of the negotiation, the following note was addressed to them and sent to Mr. C. P. C. Fleurieu:

6th Con.—38

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, August 29, 1800.

7 o'clock, P. M.

CITIZEN MINISTERS: The Envoys of the United States have given the most serious attention to the note and the propositions enclosed, which the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic did them the honor to address to them under date of 7th Fructidor; and they regret that they have not been able to consider those propositions in the light they are presented by the French Ministers, as connecting the justice of indemnity with a beneficial modification of the treaties.

The third and fourth propositions leave it optional with France to reject indemnities, while they secure to her, unconditionally, the Treaty of Commerce, with a minute exception, which is so limited by time and other circumstances as to render it of little consideration with either party. With respect to the other treaty, the option to reject indemnities produces no effect whatever; its inconveniences are only to be avoided by a purchase of ten millions; so that, by those propositions, indemnities may be sacrificed, and the treaties remain recognised and confirmed—a measure which, in its operation, would be a complete departure from the principle proposed as the basis of negotiation by the French Ministers, and the abandonment of an object to which the American Ministers are bound to adhere, and upon which their sentiments have never varied.

As to the fifth proposition, it is rendered inadmissible only by an augmentation of the sums proposed by the undersigned Ministers, to extinguish the right of France under the mutual guaranty—a right, indeed, which, if France ever placed a value upon, she must have long since discerned that the abolition of it had become as essential to her interests as to those of the nation which she wishes not to embarrass. Confidently was it presumed by the American Ministers, that, in the equivalent for that right offered by them, there would be seen a liberal regard to the honor of the French Republic, and a still further proof of that desire which has so much sought to facilitate to her an adjustment of existing differences.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, having exhausted their efforts to discover, by a spirit of justice and accommodation, the means of accomplishing the desires and realizing the views of both nations, can only now hope to avail themselves of the better directed efforts of the Ministers Plenipotentiary, with whom they have the honor to treat.

The American Ministers, willing to profit even of suggestions, remark that, in a late conference, which respected as well their notes of the 20th of the present month as that of the French Ministers Plenipotentiary of the 7th Fructidor, it was suggested by one of the latter (though not officially, or as a matter upon which the sense of his colleagues had been taken) that the option contained in the first mentioned note, to extinguish, by an equivalent of eight millions of francs, certain claims of France under the former treaties, ought to be reciprocal; so that, if the offer should be made by either party, the other should accept it. That principle, if reduced to a form proper to give it effect, it is conceived, would be expressed as follows, viz:

"If the United States shall, at any time, within seven years from the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, offer to the French Republic an article of the tenor following, viz:

"It is agreed that the United States shall pay to the French Republic, within seven years from the day of exchanging the ratifications of the treaty of —, eight millions of francs, in money, or such securities as have been or may be issued to citizens of the United States for indemnities under the said treaty, together with interest hereafter, at the rate of — per centum per annum, until the principal shall be discharged; and that, as a consideration of such engagement, the United States shall forever be exonerated of the obligation on their part to furnish succors or aid under the mutual guaranty of the 11th article of the Treaty of Alliance of the 6th of February, 1778; and the rights of the French Republic, under the 17th and 22d articles of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, of the same date, shall be forever limited to such as the most favored nation shall in these respects enjoy."

The French Republic will accept the same; or, if the French Republic shall, at any time within that term, offer such an article, the United States will accept the same; and, in either case, the article so offered shall become part of the present treaty.

To such a stipulation, in connexion with the first, fourth, fifth and sixth propositions offered by the American Envoys in their note of the 20th of the present month, they would agree, so great is their desire to terminate, without further loss of time, the present negotiation. They pray the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic to accept the assurances of their high consideration.

W. R. DAVIE,

SEPTEMBER 5.

The following propositions were delivered by Mr. Røderer:

To the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America at Paris.

PARIS, 17th Fructidor, (4th Sept.,) year 8.

We shall have the right to carry our prizes into the American ports.

A commission shall regulate the indemnities due by each of the two nations to the citizens of the other.

The indemnities which shall be found due by France to the citizens of the United States shall be discharged by the United States; and, as an equivalent, France makes an abandonment of the exclusive privilege resulting from articles XVII and XXII of the Treaty of Commerce, and of the rights of guaranty resulting from the eleventh article of the Treaty of Alliance.

BONAPARTE,
C. P. C. FLEURIEU,
RØDERER.

Mr. Røderer delivered, at the same time, a paper unsigned, containing the following observations:

The Ministers of the United States appear to have mistaken the sense of the last note of the French Ministers. They imagine that the indemnities may be sacrificed by the propositions of the 7th Fructidor, and the treaties notwithstanding remain completely acknowledged and confirmed. It has always been the intention of the Ministers of France to reserve to her the right of choice between the restoration of her privileges and the payment of indemnities which may be brought against her; so that they have never supposed that she would enjoy privileges without the payment of indemnities, or could pay indemnities without the enjoyment of privileges.

The American Ministers have also misunderstood the private observations of one of the French Ministers. Their sole object was to show that, during the term of seven years, France should possess (agreeably even to the plan of the Ministers of the United States) the right to choose between the re-establishment of the privileges resulting from the seventeenth and twenty-second articles of the Treaty of Commerce, and a sum of at least eight millions, since France regards those privileges as an advantage peculiar to her, and for the abandonment of which she may stipulate as she deems proper.

To avoid the uncertainty which might arise from such a stipulation, hastily reduced to a diplomatic style, the Ministers of France have offered anew a naked draught of their final determination; and they observe that, if the American Ministers agree to the substance of the note, they may settle the form of it in concert with the French Ministers, and even modify the means of arriving at the same end.

SEPTEMBER 6.

The American Ministers being unanimous in the opinion that they could not accede to the propositions under date of the 17th Fructidor, agreed to offer the following articles as the basis of negotiation, and as predicated upon the original overtures of the French Ministers, referring only the determination of the question respecting the treaties and indemnities to the American Government, and postponing that determination no longer than to the time of ratification:

For the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, Sept. 6, 1800.

The American Ministers consider the propositions received from the Ministers Plenipotentiary of France yesterday, under date of the 17th Fructidor, as altogether inadmissible. The nearest approach to them, which the American Ministers can make, is—

1. The former treaties shall be renewed and confirmed.

2. The obligations of the guaranty shall be specified and limited, as in the first paragraph of their third proposition of the 20th of August.

3. There shall be mutual indemnities, and a mutual restoration of captured property not yet definitively condemned, according to their fifth and sixth propositions of that date.

4. If, at the exchange of ratifications, the United States shall propose a mutual relinquishment of indemnities, the French Republic will agree to the same; and, in such case, the former treaties shall not be deemed obligatory except that under the 17th and 22d articles of that of Commerce, the parties shall continue forever to have for their public ships of war, privateers, and prizes, such privileges in the ports of each other as the most favored nation shall enjoy.

SEPTEMBER 8.

The above note was sent on the same day to the French Ministers; no answer, however, being yet received, the following note, requesting an interview, was sent to-day:

To the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, Sept. 8, 1800.

The Envoys of the United States request the honor of an interview with the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, at such place as may be convenient to them, in order to learn whether the note of the undersigned of the 6th of the present month can serve as the basis of a treaty, or, if not, whether any further overtures are to be expected on the part of France. They pray the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic to accept the assurances of their high consideration.

O. ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

SEPTEMBER 9.

Mr. Røderer informed the American Ministers that the conference requested could not take place, owing to the absence of Joseph Bonaparte, the President of the Commission.

SEPTEMBER 11.

The following note was received:

PARIS, 24th Fructidor,
(September 11,) year 8.

The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic will do themselves the honor to meet the Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, at their residence, Hotel des Oiseaux, to-morrow, at two o'clock, P. M.

I pray them to accept the assurance of my high consideration.

J. BONAPARTE.

SEPTEMBER 12.

The American Ministers met this morning to settle the mode of conducting the expected conference, and resolved to press their last propositions to the utmost; and, if the French Ministers should finally disagree to them, without offering any admissible substitute, then, in that case, to offer the written proposition delivered by Mr. Røderer on the 26th of August, in two forms, one connecting the 11th article of the Treaty of Alliance with the 22d and 17th of that of Amity and Commerce, in the option of an equivalent; the other pursuing strictly the original proposition, but connecting it with a modification of the guaranty. Some remarks were also prepared with respect to the operation and effect of a guaranty in the form of the 11th article; it being the object of the American Ministers to discuss the business fully, and, if possible, to press it to a termination.

The French Ministers attended at the hour appointed, and the propositions of the 6th of September were taken up and considered, article by article. The 1st and 3d were agreed to, with some modification of the 3d, as to rules of evidence, which did not vary its principle. The 2d and 4th were considered together, as in some measure connected; and, after considerable discussion, the French Ministers said they were determined not to accede to these, unless an option, perfectly similar and reciprocal, was assured to the French Republic, the operation of which enabled her to get rid of the indemnities, by an offer of abandoning the exclusive privileges. They now openly avowed that their real object was to avoid, by every means, any engagement to pay indemnities, giving as one reason the utter inability of France to pay, in the situation in which she would be left by the present war. The subject of the modification of the guaranty was now particularly pressed in the manner agreed. The conversation on this subject closed by a declaration of the President of the French Commission, that such a modification could not be acceded to without new instructions; that they had no powers to assent to such a stipulation; but that, if the Government should think proper to instruct them to make a treaty on the basis of indemnities and a modified renewal of the old treaties, he would resign sooner than sign such a treaty; adding that, if the question could be determined by an indifferent nation, he was satisfied such a tribunal would say that the present state of things was war on the side of America, and that no indemnities could be claimed. The other two Commissioners made similar declarations.

The American Ministers retired a few minutes and agreed that it was now clearly in vain to make any further attempts on this ground, and, of course, useless to bring forward the proposition of Mr. Røderer in any form.

The conference was, therefore, closed by the American Ministers requesting a written answer to the note of the 6th of September.

Relations with France.

Reflections of the American Ministers on their overture respecting the guaranty delivered to the French Ministers, at their conference, on the 12th day of September.

Adopting the universality of modern practice as a rule of exposition, a guaranty which omits to stipulate specific succors does not contemplate any to be furnished, and is, only, on the part of the guarantor, a renunciation of interfering claims, an engagement not to countenance or admit such claims in favor of a third Power, and, generally, an assurance of good offices for the security of the object guarantied, which shall not be onerous to himself.

If, however, the guaranty between France and the United States did in fact contemplate succors, they must have been principally for the latter, who might need them, rather than for the former, who was evidently competent to protect herself; and the mutuality of the obligation to succor could have been intended for little more than to save appearances.

Again, if the ability to furnish succors was to be the measure of them, (and if they were contemplated at all, there could have been no other measure,) much less must have been expected from the scattered agriculturists of a new country than from a nation habitually prepared for war, and one of the most powerful in Europe.

The American Ministers, however, have proposed, not only to render the guaranty specific, but to render the succors equal, and that without taking into account that France will frequently receive, and but seldom have occasion to furnish them. Their offer, it is presumed, in the view of the subject here given, will be sufficiently appreciated. The French Ministers will see in this proposition only those motives of liberal policy, and that sincere spirit of accommodation which have continually actuated the United States towards France; there being no circumstance in the present juncture that would dictate a sacrifice to that object of their convenience or their interests, and nothing in the perspective of the future from which they might augur such a necessity. And the American Ministers presume that France will not raise new obstacles to the progress of the negotiation, by placing a high and unexpected value upon what she really placed none heretofore: it would accord neither with her accustomed magnanimity, nor that conciliatory policy towards the United States which she professes to pursue.

SEPTEMBER 12.

The following note was received from the French Ministers:

PARIS, 26 Fructidor,
(13th September,) year 8.

The Ministers of France are unable to depart from the modifications which they had yesterday the honor to propose verbally to the American Ministers, on the subject of their note of the 6th of September, (19th Fructidor.) They adhere to these principles:

1. That a stipulation of indemnities carries with it a full and entire recognition of the treaties; and

2. That the abandonment of the advantages and privileges stipulated by the treaties, in consideration of the reciprocal abandonment of indemnities, will be the most useful and honorable arrangement for both nations.

Acting on these principles, the French Ministers persist in the verbal declarations made at the conference yesterday. They will, therefore, proceed to give some explanations on each of the articles of the note of the 6th of September.

I. The ancient treaties shall be recognised and confirmed.

II. The obligations of the guaranty shall be specified and limited, as in the first paragraph of their third proposition of the 20th of August.

III. There shall be mutual indemnities, and a mutual restoration of captured property, not yet definitively condemned, according to the fifth and sixth propositions of that date.

IV. If, at the exchange of ratifications, the United States shall propose a reciprocal abandonment of indemnities, the French Republic will agree to this proposition; and, in this case, the ancient treaties shall not be deemed obligatory; except that, under the 17th and 22d articles of the Treaty of Commerce, the parties shall continue to have, for their vessels of war, privateers, and prizes, in their respective ports, the privileges enjoyed by the most favored nation.

They accede to the proposition contained in the first article.

The second cannot be admitted unless the fourth article shall give to the French Republic the assurance that, if she should propose to the United States the reciprocal abandonment of indemnities, this proposition will be accepted, in consideration of the abandonment of the right of guaranty, resulting from the Treaty of Alliance, and the privileges resulting from the 17th and 22d articles of the Treaty of Commerce. If article four does not carry with it this stipulation, neither article four nor article two can be admitted.

The third has appeared to require some explanations. The Ministers of France understand:

1. Indemnities shall be provided for captures made from individuals, and which shall have been condemned at the time of signing the treaty.

2. That the vessels and national ships, respectively taken, shall be restored or paid for.

3. That the captures made from individuals, and not adjudicated at the time of signing the treaty, shall be adjudicated according to the treaty of 1778, correctly interpreted, as may be agreed on.

Article IV cannot be admitted, as has already been observed, if it does not offer the same rights to France as to the United States; and if it does not preserve the ancient treaties, with the exception of the privileges, and the stipulation of guaranty.

In order to attain this object, and render the second article admissible, the 4th article should be expressed in the following, or some other equivalent terms: "If, at the exchange of ratifications, the United States shall offer to the French Republic, or if the French Republic shall offer to the United States, the reciprocal abandonment of indemnities, this proposition will be accepted; and, in this case, the engagement of guaranty resulting from the eleventh article of the Treaty of Alliance, and the privileges resulting from articles eleven and twenty-two of the Treaty of Commerce shall be restricted to the advantages which can be enjoyed by the most favored nation.

J. BONAPARTE,
C. P. C. FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

SEPTEMBER 13.

The American Ministers being now convinced that the door was perfectly closed against all hope of obtaining indemnities, with any modification of the treaties, it only remained to be determined whether, under all the circumstances, it would not be expedient to attempt a temporary arrangement which would extricate the United States from the war, or that peculiar state of hostility in which they are at present involved, save the immense property of our citizens now depending before the Council of Prizes, and secure, as far as possible, our commerce against the abuses of captures during the present war.

After mature deliberation, the American Ministers resolved to make the overture contained in the following note, which was sent to the Commissioners of the French Republic the same day:

The Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

PARIS, September 13, 1800.

The undersigned had the honor of receiving the note of the French Ministers of the 26th Fructidor yesterday.

The discussion of former treaties and indemnities, being for the present closed, it must, of course, be postponed till it can be resumed with fewer embarrassments.

It remains only to consider the expediency of a temporary arrangement. Should such an arrangement comport with the views of France, the following principles are offered as the basis of it:

1. The Ministers Plenipotentiary of the respective parties, not being able at present to agree respecting the former treaties and indemnities, the parties will in due and convenient time further treat on those subjects; and, until they shall have agreed respecting the same, the said treaties shall have no operation. In the meantime,

2. The parties shall abstain from all unfriendly acts; their commercial intercourse shall be free, and debts shall be recoverable in the same manner as if no misunderstanding had intervened.

3. Property captured, and not yet definitively condemned, or which may be captured before the exchange of ratifications, shall be mutually restored. Proofs of ownership to be specified in the Convention.

4. Some provisional regulations shall be made to prevent abuses and disputes that may arise out of future cases of capture.

The Ministers of the United States request the honor of an early interview at such time and place as may be convenient to the Ministers Plenipotentiary of the French Republic, and offer them the assurances of their high consideration.

O. ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE,
W. V. MURRAY.

SEPTEMBER 19.

A conference was held to-day with the French Ministers, at the opening of which they delivered the following articles as a kind of counterproject:

PARIS, 2 Complémentaire,
(19th September,) year 8.

The Ministers of France and those of the United States, finding, at the close of numerous discussions, that they cannot agree, at this time, either respecting the interpretation of the 11th article of the Treaty of Alliance of 1778, and the 17th and 22d articles of the Treaty of Commerce of the same year, or on the subject of the reciprocal indemnities due in consequence of the captures made from the citizens of the two nations, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The two parties defer to another time, the discussion of the indemnities, and of the abovementioned articles of the treaties of 1778: in every other particular, these treaties are, by these presents, recognised and confirmed, as well as the Consular Convention of 1778.

ART. 2. The vessels and the privateers, with their prizes, of the two nations, shall be treated, in their respective ports, as those of the most favored nation.

ART. 3. The public ships shall either be restored or paid for.

ART. 4. The property of individuals not yet condemned, shall be adjudicated according to the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce of 1778; in consequence of which, no rôle d'équipage shall be required, nor any other proof which is not required by that treaty.

C. P. C. FLEURIEU,
RÖDERER.

These articles were discussed, with the corresponding articles in the propositions of the American Ministers of the 13th of September; and it was agreed to meet from day to day until the business was finished.

SEPTEMBER 24.

The following note was received from the Secretary of the French Legation:

4th Complémentaire, (Sept. 21,) year 8.

M. Pichon's compliments to Messrs. Davie and Ellsworth, and sends to them, herewith enclosed, copies of the articles settled. Mr. P. has it in charge from the French Ministers to desire the American Envoys, if they see no impropriety, to communicate what they intend to propose further on the fourth principle of the note, in order that the French Ministers may look to it until the next conference, and that the debates after dinner may be the shorter.

If the American Ministers have no objection to this, and they are pleased to forward the articles to Mr. Pichon, he will translate and communicate them to the French Ministers, so that time may be spared, and business, as much as possible, forwarded.

SEPTEMBER 22.

The American Ministers present their compliments to Mr. Pichon, and readily comply with the proposal in his obliging note of yesterday.

They will bring forward, as details under their fourth proposition, the 21st, 22d, 23d, 24th, 25th, 26th, and 28th articles of their former project, with some variation of the 22d and 23d to adapt them to principles already agreed on. These articles, it is presumed, cannot occupy much time, as they have been so long in the hands of the French Ministers, as they are principally drawn from the treaty of '78, and are only varied or enlarged to prevent a repetition of abuses and misunderstandings. It will also be proposed to add to the 24th, the following clause: "Nevertheless, it shall not be required to examine the papers of vessels conveyed by vessels of war, but credence shall be given to the word of the officer who shall conduct the convoy;" principally with a view to check West India privateers, till your Government shall be able to reduce them to obedience.

The American Ministers present their compliments to Mr. Pichon, and now send, agreeably to his request, the 23d article of their former project, varied agreeably to the intimation given in their note to him of yesterday. He will have the goodness to present the article to the French Ministers for their examination. It accommodates their views to subject enemy goods in free bottoms as soon after the ratifications as papers can be furnished, requisite to prevent great embarrassments. It concedes the principle they desire, while it so regulates the exercise of that principle as to render it less distressing to neutral commerce, and, of course, less injurious to France.

SEPTEMBER 23.

ART. 23. And that captures on light suspicions may be avoided, and injuries thence arising prevented, it is agreed that, when one party shall be engaged in war, and the other party be neuter, the ships of the neutral party, that is, such of them as have already left, or which, prior to the 1st day of May next, may leave, the ports of the nation to which they belong, shall be furnished with passports similar to those described in the article, that it may appear thereby that the ships really belong to the citizens of the neutral party. They shall be valid for any number of voyages, but they shall be recalled every year, that is, if the ship should return home within the space of a year. Such ships, being laden, are to be provided not only with passports as abovementioned, but also with certiicates similar to those described in the same article, that so it may be known whether they carry any contraband goods. No other paper shall be required, any ordinance or usage to the contrary notwithstanding. And if it shall not appear, from said certificates, that there are contraband goods on board, the ships shall be permitted to proceed on their voyage: if it shall appear from the certificates that there are contraband goods on board any such ship, and the commander of the same shall offer to deliver them up, he shall, notwithstanding, be at liberty to proceed on his voyage, unless the quantity of the contraband goods shall be greater than can be conveniently received on board the ship of war, or privateer; in which case, the ship may be carried into port for the delivery of the same.

With respect to ships which shall leave the ports of the nation to which they belong after the last day of April next, they shall be furnished with passports as abovementioned, and, if laden, shall be furnished with like certificates as beforementioned, excepting that the certificates shall also express to whom the cargo belongs, and of what nation, State, or Prince, the owner is a citizen or subject, that so it may be known if there are contraband or enemy goods on board. No other paper shall be required, any usage or ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding. And if it shall not appear from the last mentioned certificates that there are either contraband or enemy goods on board, the ships shall be permitted to proceed on their voyage: if it shall appear from the certificates that there are contraband or enemy goods on board any such ship, and the commander of the same shall offer to deliver them up, he shall, notwithstanding, be at liberty to proceed on his voyage, unless the quantity of contraband or enemy goods, or of both, be greater than can be conveniently received on board of the ship of war or privateer; in which case, he may be carried into port for the delivery of the same.

If any ship in the predicament first above mentioned shall not be furnished with such passport and certificates as is above required for the same, such case shall be examined by a proper judge or tribunal; and, if it shall be found, from other documents or proofs admissible by the usage of nations, that the ship belongs to the citizens of the neutral party, it shall not be confiscated, but shall be released, with her cargo, (contraband goods excepted,) and be permitted to proceed on her voyage. And, if any ship in the second predicament above mentioned shall not be furnished with such passport and certificates as is above required for the same, such case may be examined by a proper judge or tribunal; and, if it shall be found, from other documents or proofs admissible by the usage of nations, that the ship belongs to the citizens of the neutral party, the same shall not be confiscated, but shall be released, with her cargo, (contraband goods and such as shall be found to be enemy goods excepted,) and be permitted to proceed on her voyage.

The business was now conducted by conference, from day to day until the 30th of September, when the Convention was finished, under the title of a "Provisional Treaty." The French Ministers had insisted that the treaty should be signed, under a recognition that the original was in the French language, after the manner of the treaty of '78. As the American Ministers refused to acknowledge this as a precedent, or recognise any prerogative with respect to language, the French Ministers delivered the following note on that subject:

Relations with France.

PARIS, 8th Vendemiaire,
(29th September,) year 8.

The Ministers of France insist, in relation to the treaty, upon one of three things:

Either that the treaty shall be signed in the French language only, without any reservation, the mode pursued by the Consular Convention of 1788, between France and the United States, and by the Treaty of 1786, between France and England;

Or, that it shall be signed in the French language only; and that a separate article (similar to the one at the close of the Treaty of 1783, between France and England,) shall stipulate, "That the French language, used in this treaty, shall not constitute a precedent, nor operate to the prejudice of either of the contracting parties;"

Or, finally, that it shall be signed in the French and English languages, accompanied by the following declaration, conforming to the one at the end of the Treaty of Alliance and the Treaty of Commerce of 1778: "In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the above articles, both in the French and English languages; declaring, nevertheless, that the present treaty was originally written and concluded in the French language."

The Ministers of France cannot depart from either the one or the other of these forms, or from one by which it will appear, with equal clearness, that the negotiation has been conducted in French, and that the original treaty is in that language. Their reasons are conclusive.

The first is, that this has been the usage between France and America, between France and England, between France and many other States, and even between America and other States besides France.

The second is, that this usage involves no principle opposed to the equality of the two nations; and that the use of one language, whatever that may be, in a treaty common to several parties, is a mutual advantage, and ought not to be considered as a privilege conferred on the nation to whom the adopted language is most familiar.

These two propositions may require a few words in explanation. On the first, we will only observe that, in addition to the cited examples of the two treaties of 1778, between France and America, and the Consular Convention of 1788, the United States have used the French language, without hesitation or objection, in treaties with which France had no concern. The Treaty of Friendship and Commerce between the United States and Sweden, concluded at Paris, the 3d of April, 1783, may be referred to as an instance. May it not be asked, why should the French language be now rejected, after having been adopted as the original in treaties formed by the United States with both France and Sweden?

The second proposition is founded upon very obvious considerations.

1st. When two nations or individuals are desirous of terminating differences existing between them, it is natural that they should make their several explanations in a common language, as well for the purpose of avoiding the tediousness and incorrectness of interpretations, as of preventing an increased misunderstanding which might arise from verbal misconstruction.

When public negotiations are carried on between three, four, or five different nations, speaking different languages, the necessity of a common language becomes the more apparent.

Formerly, when Europe had no common language except the Latin, treaties were formed in that language. But since the French, a derivation from the Latin, has become a classical language, it has generally been considered more convenient than the Latin for general use, and has therefore been substituted for the Latin. Hence, the French language has acquired a privilege, if you please, over other languages, but not the French nation. It has acquired this privilege at the expense of the Latin, not of any living language, and still less in prejudice of the rights of any Power whatever. Nations, in acknowledging it as the legitimate successor of the Latin, and in adopting it as their own, have only had recourse to a practice the most convenient to themselves in the exposition, discussion, and expression of their rights; and have thus advanced those rights by yielding up their prejudices.

2d. When two or more parties have been carrying on a negotiation in one language, it is possible to agree that the treaty shall be translated in the language of each of the parties, and signed by all. But, in this case, good sense and common interest require two things: First, that one of the copies, thus signed by all the contracting parties, should be acknowledged as the original: Secondly, that the copy written in the language in which the negotiation was conducted should be regarded as that original.

We say, in the first place, that there must be one original copy. Because, if time and usage should disclose differences of expression, at first unperceived, in the phraseology employed in two copies, written in different languages, (a circumstance which seems inevitable, and has, indeed, occurred in relation to the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce of 1778,) it will be necessary to have recourse to a common version.

We say, in the second place, that the copy, written in the language in which the negotiation was conducted, is the one to which the title of original should be given. The reasons are evident: First in point of fact, it is the original, as it respects the rest, having been first composed, article by article, in the language of the negotiation, as the negotiation itself progressed: Secondly, in the event of a discrepancy in expression between two copies of the same treaty, written in different languages, it is the dictate of reason and justice that the contracting parties should have recourse to that expression which was agreed upon and avowed by all, in the language of the negotiation. What is more reasonable than that each should refer to the first expression of his own will, and the faithful signs of his own intentions?

In the adoption, therefore, of the French, as the original language of the treaty, every idea of national prerogative should be discarded, as foreign to the subject. No innovation is urged upon the American Ministers, and no consideration can authorize the Ministers of France to depart from established usage.

C. P. C. FLEURIEU,
RÆDERER.

The American Ministers finally, but with great reluctance, agreed to the signing in the form of the Treaty of 1778, and it was executed accordingly.

OCTOBER 2.

The French Ministers called this morning with the treaties, proposing some alterations, with regard to the style of the French Republic, and that the word "provisional" should be stricken out in the name or description of the treaty. The American Ministers availed themselves of this opportunity to resume their opposition to the admission in favor of the French language, and consented to the proposed alterations, respecting the style of the French Government, and offered to change the term "provisional treaty" for that of "convention," on the condition that that part of the treaty which respected the French language was stricken out, agreeing, at the same time, that a clause might be inserted, saving the right of both nations; to which the French Ministers acceded without any further discussion.

OCTOBER 3.

Six copies being now prepared, as agreed to be amended, they were signed and sealed under the former date of the 30th of September, (9 Vendémiaire;) two copies were retained by the French Commissioners, two were left with Mr. Murray, and the other two were taken in charge by Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie.

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
W. R. DAVIE.
W. V. MURRAY.

PARIS, October 4, 1800.

SIR: The undersigned have the honor to present to you a journal of their proceedings, and a convention in which these proceedings have terminated.

The claim of indemnities brought forward by them was, early in the negotiation, connected by the French Ministers with that of a restoration of treaties, for the infractions of which the indemnities were principally claimed. To obviate this embarrassment, which it had not been difficult to foresee, the American Ministers urged, in the spirit of their instructions, that those treaties having been violated by one party, and renounced by the other, a priority had attached in favor of the treaty with Great Britain, who had thereby acquired an exclusive right for the introduction of prizes; wherefore, that right could not be restored to France. The argument was pressed, both by notes and in conferences, as long as there remained a hope of its utility, and until there appeared no alternative but to abandon indemnities, or, as a means of saving them, to renew, at least partially, the Treaty of Commerce. Whether, in fact, it could or could not be renewed consistently with good faith, then became a question for thorough investigation; in the course of which, the following considerations occurred?

1st. It is not a breach of faith to form a treaty with one nation inconsistent with an existing treaty with another; it being well understood that the prior treaty prevails, and has the same operation as if the subsequent one were not formed; nor is it necessary or usual for a subsequent to make an express saving of the rights of a prior treaty, the law of nations having made that saving as complete and effectual as it can be rendered. This rule of construction holds universally, except where the subsequent treaty can have no operation but by violating the first; in which case, it will be taken for an agreement to come to a rupture with the Power with whom the first was formed.

2d. Indeed, by a clause in the twenty-fifth article of the British Treaty, it is provided, "that while the parties continue in amity, neither of them will in future make any treaty that shall be inconsistent with that or the preceding article," which articles contain, among other things, the exclusive right of introducing prizes into the ports of each other. If, however, the British be considered in the light of a prior treaty, as it must be to raise a doubt, all its rights, as well those of a restrictive nature as others, would be saved, of course, and none of them would at any time or in any degree, be affected by the subsequent stipulation. The subsequent stipulation, in the case supposed, although it should give in general terms the right of introducing prizes, would be understood with a limitation, that it was never to extend to a case in which Great Britain should be the enemy.

3d. The instructions to the American Ministers authorized a renewal of the seventeenth article of the Treaty of Commerce, if it should be necessary, though with a special saving for two articles of the British Treaty. That special saving, however, cannot be material, as the settled rule of construction would, without it, make a saving still more comprehensive.

4th. The renewal of the 17th article of the Commercial Treaty is not conceived to be within the expression or design of the restraining clause of the British Treaty, "not in future to make any treaty that shall be inconsistent with," &c. To recognise a pre-existing treaty which contains a stipulation inconsistent with, &c., is not to make a new or future treaty containing such stipulation. To recognise the former treaties would be only to preserve or restore the state of things existing when the British Treaty was formed, and not to introduce a new state of things, which was, doubtless, the event intended to be guarded against. It would be only to do what is usually done in the termination of misunderstandings. We are not to presume, and much less is it expressed, that the United States and Great Britain meant to deprive themselves of the usual means of terminating national contests in which they might be involved. And the facility of terminating misunderstandings, by restoring things to their former condition, is not so great, but so conformable to justice, and so favorable to general tranquillity, that the law of nations will not favor a construction which goes to deprive a contracting party of the benefit of it.

5th. The language in which pre-existing treaties are usually recognised at the close of a war does not import that the treaties have in fact ceased to exist, but rather that the causes which suspended their operation have ceased. And in various instances such treaties are counted upon as becoming again operative, without any express provision to render them so.

6th. Nor is it conceived, that the treaties between the United States and France have undergone a more nullifying operation than the condition of war necessarily imposes. Doubtless, the Congressional act, authorizing the reduction of French cruisers by force, was an authorization of war, limited, indeed, in its extent, but not in its nature. Clearly, also, their subsequent act, declaring that the treaties had ceased to be obligatory, however proper it might be for the removal of doubts, was but declaratory of the actual state of things; and certainly it was only from an exercise of the constitutional prerogative of declaring war that either of them derived validity. So that the treaties in question, having had only the usual inoperation, might, without a breach of faith, have the usual negotation.

7th. As far as the opinion of Great Britain goes, there would be no difficulty in recognising a treaty, which gives to France an exclusive right to introduce prizes into the ports of the United States; because she, by a project of a treaty of peace, drawn up at her own Court in 1792, and offered by Lord Malmesbury to the French Plenipotentiaries, proposed to give to France such exclusive right in the British ports; that is, the project renewed the treaties of Paris of 1763, and of 1783, both of which renewed the Commercial Treaty of Utrecht of 1713, which contained such a stipulation.

The foregoing considerations induced the undersigned to be unanimously of the opinion that any part of the former treaties might be renewed consistently with good faith.

They then offered a renewal, with limitations of the seventeenth article of the Commercial Treaty, which, without compromising the interests of the United States, would have given to France what her Ministers had particularly insisted on, as essential to her honor, and what they had given reason to expect would be deemed satisfactory. The overture, however, finally produced no other effect than to enlarge the demand of the French Ministers, from a partial to a total renewal of the treaties; which brought the negotiation a second time to a stand.

The American Ministers, however, after a deliberation of some days, the progress of events in Europe continuing in the meantime to grow more unfavorable to their success, made an ulterior advance, going the whole length of what had been last insisted on. They offered an unlimited recognition of the former treaties, though accompanied with a provision to extinguish such privileges claimed under them as were detrimental to the United States, by a pecuniary equivalent, to be made out of the indemnities which should be awarded to American citizens. A compensation which, though it might have cancelled but a small portion of the indemnities, was, nevertheless, a liberal one for privileges, which the French Ministers often admitted to be of little use to France, under the construction which the American Government had given to the treaties.

This offer, though it covered the avowed objects of the French Government, secured an engagement to pay indemnities, as well as the power to extinguish the obnoxious parts of the treaties. To avoid any engagement of this kind, the French Ministers now made an entire departure from the principles upon which the negotiation had proceeded for some time, and resumed the simple, unqualified ground of their overture of the 23d Thermidor, declaring that it was indispensable to the granting of indemnities, not only that the treaties should have an unqualified recognition, but that their future operation should not be varied in any particular, for any consideration or compensation whatever. In short, they thought proper to add, what was quite unnecessary, that their real object was to avoid indemnities, and that it was not in the power of France to pay them.

No time was requisite for the American Ministers to intimate that it had become useless to pursue the negotiation any further.

It accorded as little with their views as with their instructions, to subject their country perpetually to the mischievous effects of those treaties, in order to obtain a promise of indemnity at a remote period—a promise which might as easily prove delusive as it would reluctantly be made; especially, as under the guaranty of the Treaty of Alliance, the United States might be immediately called upon for succors, which, if not furnished, would of itself be a sufficient pretext to render abortive the hope of indemnity.

It only remained for the undersigned to quit France, leaving the United States involved in a contest, and, according to appearances, soon alone in a contest, which it might be as difficult for them to relinquish with honor as to pursue with a prospect of advantage; or else to propose a temporary arrangement, reserving for a definite adjustment points which could not then be satisfactorily settled, and providing, in the meantime, against a state of things of which neither party could profit. They elected the latter, and the result has been the signature of a convention.

Of property not yet definitively condemned, which the fourth article respects, there are more than forty ships and cargoes, and a number of them of great value, at present pending for decision before the council of prizes; and many others are doubtless in a condition to be brought there, if the claimants shall think fit.

Guards against future abuses are, perhaps, as well provided as they can be by stipulations.

The article respecting convoys may be of use in the West Indies, till it shall be more in the power of the French Government than it is at present to reduce the corsairs in that quarter to obedience.

As to the article which places French privateers and prizes on the footing of those of the most favored nations, it was inserted as drawn by the French Ministers, without any discussion of the extent of its operation; the American Ministers having, in former stages of the negotiation, repeatedly and uniformly declared, agreeably to the rule of construction settled by the law of nations, that no stipulation of that kind could have effect as against the British Treaty, unless the stipulation were derived from former treaties, which it is here expressly agreed shall have no operation whatever. This article, however, is less consequential, as it will soon be in the power of the United States, and doubtless, also, within their wisdom, to refuse to the privateers and prizes of any nation an asylum beyond what the rights of humanity require.

If, with the simple plea of right, unaccompanied with the menaces of power, and unaided by events either in Europe or America, less is at present obtained than justice requires, or than the policy of France should have granted, the undersigned trust that the sincerity and patience of their efforts to obtain all that their country had a right to demand will not be drawn in question.

We have the honor to be, sir, with high respect, your most obedient,

OLIVER ELLSWORTH,
WILLIAM R. DAVIE,
WILLIAM V. MURRAY.

Hon. JOHN MARSHALL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. King to the Secretary of State.

LONDON, October 31, 1800.

SIR: The Convention with France, having been published at Paris, immediately found its way into the English newspapers, in which it appeared the day after Mr. Ellsworth's arrival in London; its authenticity being confirmed by him, it became my duty to endeavor, with as much diligence and as extensively as was in my power, to communicate such sentiments and opinions respecting it as would be likely to procure to it a favorable consideration.

After conversing with the Lord Chancellor and some others of the Ministers, I found an occasion to mention the subject to the King: and, though this was not altogether regular, I had no reason to be dissatisfied with having done so.

After waiting several days, during which I might see and converse with the persons about the Court, I yesterday asked a conference with Lord Grenville, which took place this morning. The conversation began by my observing that I wished to speak with him respecting our reconciliation with France, in order that I might communicate to my Government, which would be desirous to understand the light in which it was considered by the British Government. This beginning led to a free and apparently candid conversation respecting it, which was followed by Lord Grenville saying to me that he saw nothing in the convention inconsistent with the treaty between them and us, or which afforded them any ground of complaint; nor did he perceive in it anything that might not have been expected, unless it was the article respecting convoys, which we were certainly free to make, but which, nevertheless, just at the present juncture, had somewhat of a less friendly appearance than might have been wished. I expressed my satisfaction that I had not been mistaken in believing that the British Government would find nothing to object to in the convention; and remarked, that the article of free bottoms having made a part of the old treaty, it was natural enough that it should be inserted in the new one, and that the provision respecting convoys seemed to be no more than a convenient consequence of that article, by which the visit of the belligerent is not only restrained in its object, but placed under special regulations as to the manner in which it shall be made; and, moreover, that convoys would be indispensable to protect our trade against French corsairs in the West Indies, which could not at present be controlled by France. Lord Grenville had not manifested any marks of disappointment or discontent concerning the convention; showed no inclination to controvert what I had just said; contenting himself by repeating (but without seeming to place much importance upon the observation) what he had before said, with regard to their misunderstanding with the Northern Powers. The subject of convoys being before us, I thought the occasion not an unfavorable one concisely to suggest certain reflections which had passed in my mind concerning it, and which are the foundation of the observations contained in my No. 80. After some general remarks respecting the rights of neutrals and belligerents, I observed that it seemed to me practicable to devise regulations, by which the trade of neutrals might be secured by convoys, without affecting injuriously the right of search. It might, for example, be stipulated that no ship should be entitled to sail under convoy which should not possess a certificate, in an agreed form, attesting her neutrality, and the neutrality and innocence of her cargo; the Consuls or other agents of the belligerent, residing in the neutral countries, might assist in taking the proofs upon which certificate should be granted; and it might, moreover, be settled that the visit of the belligerent should be confined to the convoying ship, the commander of which, on exhibiting the certificates of the ships under his convoy, should, with them, be entitled to proceed unmolested. Other regulations might be devised, for places where the agents of the belligerents could not, on account of the war, assist in receiving the proofs of neutrality.

Lord Grenville, without hesitation, admitted the fairness of the project, adding that it would be indifferent to them, as belligerents, whether the examination was made by their agents before the sailing of the neutral ship, or, upon the ocean, by their naval officers.

With perfect respect and esteem, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient faithful servant,
RUFUS KING.

Extract of a letter from Mr. King to the Secretary of State.

"LONDON, November 22, 1800.

"SIR: Upon the probability of the conclusion of peace, well informed persons continue to differ extremely in their opinions. Austria will make peace if she can make a good bargain, which, as in former wars, she may probably be able to do. England (I mean the Government) desires to make peace with Bonaparte; and, from the language made use of by the English Ministers, one would almost be led to think that she is now willing to countenance and support the First Consul upon the very principles which have induced her to oppose those who have hitherto been at the head of the affairs of France.

"Whatever may have been the temper or inclination of this Government, in a different posture of its affairs, and before the convention with France was published, its sentiments in respect to that instrument, and the distinguished manner in which Mr. Ellsworth has been received by the Court, have a tendency to show that at present it has no animosity nor unusual prejudice against us; on the contrary, those who disseminate its opinions encourage the people to bear their distresses, arising from the dearness of bread, by holding forth to them the abundant harvest of America, and the prospect of a great supply from thence."

The Senate, having considered the foregoing convention with France, adopted the following resolution:

IN SENATE, February 3, 1801.

Resolved, By the Senate of the United States, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein,) that they do consent to and advise the ratification of the convention between the French Republic and the United States of America, made at Paris, the 8th day of Vendemiaire, of the 9th year of the French Republic, (the 30th day of September, Anno Domini 1800:) Provided, The second article be expunged and the following article added or inserted:

It is agreed that the present convention shall be in force for the term of eight years from the exchange of ratifications.

The following Message was thereupon transmitted to the Senate:

UNITED STATES, March 2, 1801.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I have considered the advice and conduct of the Senate to the ratification of the convention with France under certain conditions. Although it would have been more conformable to my own judgment and inclination to have agreed to that instrument unconditionally, yet, in this point, I found I had the misfortune to differ in opinion from so high a Constitutional authority as the Senate. I judged it more consistent with the honor and interest of the United States to ratify it under the conditions prescribed than not at all. I accordingly nominated Mr. Bayard, Minister Plenipotentiary to the French Republic, that he might proceed without delay to Paris, to negotiate the exchange of ratifications. But, as that gentleman has declined his appointment, for reasons equally applicable to every person suitable for the service, I shall take no further measures relative to this business, and leave the convention, with all the documents, in the office of State, that my successor may proceed with them according to his wisdom.

JOHN ADAMS.

The ratification of the convention which was made by the French Government, is contained in the following translation:

Bonaparte, First Consul, in the name of the French people: The Consul of the French Republic having seen and examined the convention concluded, agreed to, and signed at Paris, the 8th Vendemiaire, ninth year of the French Republic, (30th September, 1800,) by the Citizens Joseph Bonaparte, Fleurieu, and Røederer, Counsellors of State, in virtue of the full powers which have been given to them to this effect, with Messieurs Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States, equally furnished with full powers, the tenor of which convention follows:

Approves the above convention in all and each of the articles which are therein contained; declares that it is accepted, ratified, and confirmed; and promises that it shall be inviolably observed.

The Government of the United States having added to its ratification, that the convention should be in force for the space of eight years, and having omitted the second article, the Government of the French Republic consents to accept, ratify, and confirm the above convention, with the addition importing that the convention shall be in force for the space of eight years, and with the retrenchment of the second article: Provided, That by this retrenchment the two States renounce the respective pretensions which are the objects of the said article.

In faith whereof, these presents are given. Signed, countersigned, and sealed with the great seal

The Minister of Exterior Relations:

CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

By the First Consul: The Secretary of State,
HUGUES B. MARET.

The following Message of the President and resolution of the Senate terminate the proceedings upon the convention:

DECEMBER 11, 1801.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

Early in the last month I received the ratification, by the First Consul of France, of the convention between the United States and that nation. His ratification not being pure and simple, in the ordinary form, I have thought it my duty, in order to avoid all misconception, to ask a second advice and consent of the Senate before I give it the last sanction, by proclaiming it to be a law of the land.

TH: JEFFERSON.

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 19, 1801.

Resolved, That the Senate (two-thirds of the members present concurring therein) consider the convention between the United States and the French Republic as fully ratified.

PRUSSIA.

[Communicated to the Senate, December 6, 1799.]

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I lay before you, for your consideration, a treaty of Amity and Commerce between the United States and the King of Prussia, signed by their Ministers on the 11th of July last.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Dec. 6, 1799.

A Treaty of Amity and Commerce between His Majesty the King of Prussia and the United States of America.

His Majesty the King of Prussia and the United States of America, desiring to maintain, upon a stable and permanent footing, the connexions of good understanding, which have hitherto so happily subsisted between their respective States, and for this purpose to renew the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, concluded between the two Powers, at the Hague, the 10th of September, 1785, for the term of ten years, His Prussian Majesty has nominated and constituted as his Plenipotentiaries, the Count Charles William de Finckenstein, his Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet, Knight of the orders of the Black Eagle and of the Red Eagle, and Commander of St. John of Jerusalem; the Baron Philip Charles d'Alvensleben, his Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet, Knight of the orders of the Black Eagle and of the Red Eagle, and of that of St. John of Jerusalem; and the Count Christian Henry Curt de Haugwitz, his Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet, Knight of the orders of the Black Eagle and of the Red Eagle: and the President of the United States has furnished, with their full powers, John Quincy Adams, a citizen of the United States, and his Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of His Prussian Majesty; which Plenipotentiaries, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have concluded, settled, and signed the following articles:

ART. 1. There shall be in future, as there has been hitherto, a firm, inviolable, and universal peace, and sincere friendship between His Majesty the King of Prussia, his heirs, successors, and subjects, on the one part, and the United States of America, and their citizens, on the other, without exception of persons or places.

ART. 2. The subjects of His Majesty the King of Prussia may frequent all the coasts and countries of the United States of America, and reside and trade there in all sorts of produce, manufactures, and merchandise; and shall pay there no other or greater duties, charges, or fees whatsoever, than the most favored nations are or shall be obliged to pay. They shall also enjoy, in navigation and commerce, all the rights, privileges, and exemptions which the most favored nation does or shall enjoy, submitting themselves, nevertheless, to the established laws and usages, to which are submitted the citizens of the United States and the most favored nations.

ART. 3. In like manner, the citizens of the United States of America may frequent all the coasts and countries of His Majesty the King of Prussia, and reside and trade there in all sorts of produce, manufactures, and merchandise, and shall pay, in the dominions of His said Majesty, no other or greater duties, charges or fees, whatsoever, than the most favored nation is, or shall be, obliged to pay; and they shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, and exemptions in navigation and commerce, which the most favored nation does, or shall, enjoy; submitting themselves, nevertheless, to the established laws and usages to which are submitted the subjects of His Majesty the King of Prussia, and the subjects and citizens of the most favored nations.

ART. 4. More especially, each party shall have a right to carry their own produce, manufactures, and merchandise, in their own or any other vessels, to any parts of the dominions of the other, where it shall be lawful for all the subjects and citizens of that other freely to purchase them; and thence to take the produce, manufactures, and merchandise of the other, which all the said citizens or subjects shall in like manner be free to sell them, paying in both cases such duties, charges, and fees only, as are or shall be paid by the most favored nation. Nevertheless, His Majesty the King of Prussia and the United States respectively reserve to themselves the right, where any nation restrains the transportation of merchandise to the vessels of the country of which it is the growth, or manufacture, to establish against such nations retaliating regulations; and also the right to prohibit, in their respective countries, the importation and exportation of all merchandise whatsoever, when reasons of State shall require it. In this case the subjects or citizens of either of the contracting parties shall not import nor export the merchandise prohibited by the other. But if one of the contracting parties permits any other nation to import or export the same merchandise, the citizens or subjects of the other shall immediately enjoy the same liberty.

ART. 5. The merchants, commanders of vessels, or other subjects or citizens of either party, shall not, within the ports or jurisdiction of the other, be forced to unload any sort of merchandise into any other vessels, nor to receive them into their own, nor to wait for their being loaded longer than they please.

ART. 6. That the vessels of either party, loading within the ports or jurisdiction of the other, may not be uselessly harassed or detained, it is agreed, that all examinations of goods, required by the laws, shall be made before they are laden on board the vessel, and that there shall be no examination after; nor shall the vessel be searched at any time, unless articles shall have been laden therein clandestinely and illegally; in which case, the person by whose order they were carried on board, or who carried them without order, shall be liable to the laws of the land in which he is; but no other person shall be molested, nor shall any other goods, nor the vessel, be seized or detained for that cause.

ART. 7. Each party shall endeavor, by all the means in their power, to protect and defend all vessels and other effects belonging to the citizens or subjects of the other, which shall be within the extent of their jurisdiction, by sea or by land; and shall use all their efforts to recover, and cause to be restored to the right owners, their vessels and effects, which shall be taken from them within the extent of their said jurisdiction.

ART. 8. The vessels of the subjects or citizens of either party coming on any coast belonging to the other, but not willing to enter into port, or who, entering into port, are not willing to unload their cargoes or break bulk, shall have liberty to depart and to pursue their voyage, without molestation, and without being obliged to render account of their cargo, or to pay any duties, charges, or fees whatsoever, except those established for vessels entered into port, and appropriated to the maintenance of the port itself, or of other establishments, for the safety and convenience of navigators; which duties, charges, and fees, shall be the same, and shall be paid on the same footing as in the case of subjects or citizens of the country where they are established.

ART. 9. When any vessel of either party shall be wrecked, foundered, or otherwise damaged, on the coasts, or within the dominions of the other, their respective subjects, or citizens, shall receive, as well for themselves, as for their vessels and effects, the same assistance which would be due to the inhabitants of the country where the damage happens, and shall pay the same charges and dues only as the said inhabitants would be subject to pay in a like case; and if the operations of repair shall require that the whole or any part of their cargo be unladed, they shall pay no duties, charges, or fees, on the part which they shall relade and carry away. The ancient and barbarous right to wrecks of the sea shall be entirely abolished with respect to the subjects or citizens of the two contracting parties.

ART. 10. The citizens or subjects of each party shall have power to dispose of their personal goods within the jurisdiction of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise; and their representatives, being subjects or citizens of the other party, shall succeed to their said personal goods, whether by testament, or ab intestato, and may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and dispose of the same at their will, paying such dues only as the inhabitants of the country wherein the said goods are shall be subject to pay in like cases. And in case of the absence of the representative, such care shall be taken of the said goods, as would be taken of the goods of a native in like case, until the lawful owner may take measures for receiving them. And if question should arise among several claimants to which of them the said goods belong, the same shall be decided finally by the laws and judges of the land wherein the said goods are. And where, on the death of any person holding real estate within the territories of the one party, such real estate would, by the laws of the land, descend on a citizen or subject of the other, were he not disqualified by alienage, such subject shall be allowed a reasonable time to sell the same, and to withdraw the proceeds without molestation, and exempt from all rights of detraction on the part of the Government of the respective States. But this article shall not derogate in any manner from the force of the laws already published, or hereafter to be published, by His Majesty the King of Prussia, to prevent the emigration of his subjects.

ART. 11. The most perfect freedom of conscience and of worship is granted to the citizens or subjects of either party, within the jurisdiction of the other, and no person shall be molested in that respect, for any cause other than an insult on the religion of others. Moreover, when the subjects or citizens of the one party shall die within the jurisdiction of the other, their bodies shall be buried in the usual burying grounds, or other decent and suitable places, and shall be protected from violation or disturbance.

ART. 12. Experience having proved, that the principle adopted in the 12th article of the treaty of 1785, according to which free ships make free goods, has not been sufficiently respected during the two last wars, and especially in that which still continues, the two contracting parties propose, after the return of a general peace, to agree, either separately between themselves, or jointly with other Powers alike interested, to concert with the great maritime Powers of Europe such arrangements and such permanent principles as may serve to consolidate the liberty and the safety of the neutral navigation and commerce in future wars. And if, in the interval, either of the contracting parties should be engaged in war, to which the other should remain neutral, the ships of war and privateers of the belligerent Power shall conduct themselves towards the merchant vessels of the neutral Power as favorably as the course of the war then existing may permit, observing the principles and rules of the law of nations, generally acknowledged.

ART. 13. And in the same case of one of the contracting parties, being engaged in war with any other Power, to prevent all the difficulties and misunderstandings that usually arise respecting the merchandise of contraband, such as arms, ammunition, and military stores of every kind, no such articles carried in the vessels, or by the subjects or citizens of either party, to the enemies of the other, shall be deemed contraband, so as to induce confiscation or condemnation, and a loss of property to individuals. Nevertheless, it shall be lawful to stop such vessels and articles, and to detain them for such length of time as the captors may think necessary to prevent the inconvenience or damage that might ensue from their proceeding; paying, however, a reasonable compensation for the loss such arrest shall occasion to the proprietors: and it shall further be allowed to use, in the service of the captors, the whole or any part of the military stores so detained, paying the owners the full value of the same, to be ascertained by the current price at the place of its destination. But in the case supposed, of a vessel stopped for articles of contraband, if the master of the vessel stopped will deliver out the goods supposed to be of contraband nature, he shall be permitted to do it, and the vessel shall not in that case be carried into any port, nor further detained, but shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage.

All cannons, mortars, fire arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, muskets, flints, matches, powder, saltpetre, sulphur, cuirasses, pikes, swords, belts, cartouch-boxes, saddles, and bridles, beyond the quantity necessary for the use of the ship, or beyond that which every man serving on board the vessel, or passenger, ought to have; and, in general, whatever is comprised under the denomination of arms and military stores, of what description soever, shall be deemed objects of contraband.

ART. 14. To insure to the vessels of the two contracting parties the advantage of being readily and certainly known in time of war, it is agreed that they shall be provided with the sea-letters and documents hereafter specified.

1. A passport, expressing the name, the property, and the burden of the vessel, as also the name and dwelling of the master, which passport shall be made out in good and due form, shall be renewed as often as the vessel shall return into port, and shall be exhibited whensoever required, as well in the open sea as in port. But if the vessel be under convoy of one or more vessels of war belonging to the neutral party, the simple declaration of the officer commanding the convoy that the said vessel belongs to the party of which he is, shall be considered as establishing the fact, and shall relieve both parties from the trouble of further examination.

2. A charter-party; that is to say, the contract passed for the freight of the whole vessel, or the bills of lading given for the cargo in detail.

3. The list of ship's company; containing an indication by name, and in detail, of the persons composing the crew of the vessel. These documents shall always be authenticated, according to the forms established at the place from which the vessel shall have sailed.

As their production ought to be exacted only when one of the contracting parties shall be at war, and as their exhibition ought to have no other object than to prove the neutrality of the vessel, its cargo, and company, they shall not be deemed absolutely necessary on board such vessels belonging to the neutral party as shall have sailed from its port before or within three months after the Government shall have been informed of the state of war in which the belligerent party shall be engaged. In the interval, in default of these specific documents, the neutrality of the vessel may be established by such other evidence as tribunals authorized to judge of the case may deem sufficient.

ART. 15. And to prevent entirely all disorder and violence in such cases, it is stipulated, that, when the vessels of the neutral party, sailing without convoy, shall be met by any vessel of war, public or private, of the other party, such vessels of war shall not send more than two or three men in their boat on board the said neutral vessels, to examine her passports and documents. And all persons belonging to any vessel of war, public or private, who shall molest or insult in any manner whatever the people, vessels, or effects of the other party, shall be responsible in their persons and property for damages and interest; sufficient security for which shall be given by all commanders of private armed vessels before they are commissioned.

ART. 16. In times of war, or in cases of urgent necessity, when either of the contracting parties shall be obliged to lay a general embargo, either in all its ports, or in certain particular places, the vessels of the other party shall be subject to this measure, upon the same footing as those of the most favored nations, but without having the right to claim the exemption in their favor stipulated in the 16th article of the former treaty of 1785. But, on the other hand, the proprietors of the vessels which shall have been detained, whether for some military expedition, or for what other use soever, shall obtain from the Government that shall have employed them an equitable indemnity, as well for the freight as for the loss occasioned by the delay. And furthermore, in all cases of seizure, detention, or arrest, for debts contracted, or offences committed by any citizen or subject of the one party, within the jurisdiction of the other, the same shall be made and prosecuted by order and authority of law only, and according to the regular course of proceedings usual in such cases.

ART. 17. If any vessel or effects of the neutral Power be taken by an enemy of the other, or by a pirate, and retaken by the Power at war, they shall be restored to the first proprietor, upon the conditions hereafter stipulated, in the twenty-first article, for cases of recapture.

Relations with Prussia.

ART. 18. If the citizens or subjects of either party, in danger from tempests, pirates, enemies, or other accident, shall take refuge, with their vessels or effects, within the harbors or jurisdiction of the other, they shall be received, protected, and treated with humanity and kindness, and shall be permitted to furnish themselves, at reasonable prices, with all refreshments, provisions, and other things necessary for their sustenance, health, and accommodation, and for the repair of their vessels.

ART. 19. The vessels of war, public and private, of both parties, shall carry freely, wheresoever they please, the vessels and effects taken from their enemies, without being obliged to pay any duties, charges, or fees, to officers of admiralty, of the customs, or any others; nor shall such prizes be arrested, searched, or put under legal process, when they come to and enter the ports of the other party, but may freely be carried out again at any time by their captors, to the places expressed in their commissions, which the commanding officer of such vessel shall be obliged to show. But, conformably to treaties existing between the United States and Great Britain, no vessel that shall have made a prize upon British subjects shall have a right to shelter in the ports of the United States; but, if forced therein by tempests, or any other danger, or accident of the sea, they shall be obliged to depart as soon as possible.

ART. 20. No citizen or subject of either of the contracting parties shall take from any Power with which the other may be at war, any commission or letter of marque for arming any vessel to act as a privateer against the other, on pain of being punished as a pirate: nor shall either party hire, lend, or give any part of its naval or military force, to the enemy of the other, to aid them offensively or defensively against the other.

ART. 21. If the two contracting parties should be engaged in a war against a common enemy, the following points shall be observed between them:

1. If a vessel of one of the parties, taken by the enemy, shall, before being carried into a neutral or enemy's port, be retaken by a ship of war, or privateer of the other, it shall, with the cargo, be restored to the first owners, for a compensation of one-eighth part of the value of the said vessel and cargo, if the recapture be made by a public ship of war; and one-sixth part, if made by a privateer.

2. The restitution in such cases shall be after due proof of property, and surety given for the part to which the recaptors are entitled.

3. The vessels of war, public and private, of the two parties, shall reciprocally be admitted with their prizes into the respective ports of each: but the said prizes shall not be discharged or sold there, until their legality shall have been decided, according to the laws and regulations of the State to which the captor belongs, but by the judicatories of the place into which the prize shall have been conducted.

4. It shall be free to each party to make such regulations as they shall judge necessary for the conduct of their respective vessels of war, public and private, relative to the vessels which they shall take and carry into the ports of the two parties.

ART. 22. Where the contracting parties shall have a common enemy, or shall both be neutral, the vessels of war of each shall, upon all occasions, take under their protection the vessels of the other going the same course, and shall defend such vessels, as long as they hold the same course, against all force and violence, in the same manner as they ought to protect and defend vessels belonging to the party of which they are.

ART. 23. If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country, then residing in the other, shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects, without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed, and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and, in general, all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt, or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy, into whose power, by the events of war, they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price.

ART. 24. And to prevent the destruction of prisoners of war, by sending them into distant and inclement countries, or by crowding them into close and noxious places, the two contracting parties solemnly pledge themselves to the world, and to each other, that they will not adopt any such practice; that neither will send the prisoners whom they may take from the other into the East Indies, or any other parts of Asia or Africa; but they shall be placed in some part of their dominions in Europe or America, in wholesome situations; that they shall not be confined in dungeons, prison ships, nor prisons, nor be put into irons, nor bound, nor otherwise restrained in the use of their limbs; that the officers shall be enlarged on their paroles within convenient districts, and have comfortable quarters, and the common men be disposed in cantonments open and extensive enough for air and exercise, and lodged in barracks as roomy and good as are provided by the party in whose power they are for their own troops; that the officers shall also be daily furnished by the party in whose power they are with as many rations, and of the same articles and quality, as are allowed by them, either in kind or by commutation, to officers of equal rank in their own army; and all others shall be daily furnished by them with such rations as they allow to a common soldier in their own service; the value whereof shall be paid by the other party on a mutual adjustment of accounts for the subsistence of prisoners at the close of the war; and the said accounts shall not be mingled with, or set off against any others, nor the balances due on them be withheld as a satisfaction or reprisal for any other article, or for any other cause, real or pretended whatever; that each party shall be allowed to keep a commissary of prisoners, of their own appointment, with every separate cantonment of prisoners in possession of the other, which commissary shall see the prisoners as often as he pleases, shall be allowed to receive and distribute whatever comforts may be sent to them by their friends, and shall be free to make his reports in open letters to those who employ him; but if any officer shall break his parole, or any other prisoner shall escape from the limits of his cantonment, after they shall have been designated to him, such individual officer, or other prisoner, shall forfeit so much of the benefit of this article as provides for his enlargement on parole or cantonment. And it is declared, that neither the pretence that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the next preceding article; but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature or nations.

ART. 25. The two contracting parties have granted to each other the liberty of having each, in the ports of the other, Consuls, Vice Consuls, Agents, and Commissaries, of their own appointment, who shall enjoy the same privileges and powers as those of the most favored nations. But if any such Consul shall exercise commerce, he shall be submitted to the same laws and usages to which the private individuals of their nation are submitted in the same place.

ART. 26. If either party shall hereafter grant to any other nation any particular favor in navigation or commerce, it shall immediately become common to the other party, freely, where it is freely granted to such other nation, or on yielding the same compensation, when the grant is conditional.

ART. 27. His Majesty the King of Prussia, and the United States of America, agree that this treaty shall be in force during the term of ten years from the exchange of the ratifications; and if the expiration of that term should happen during the course of a war between them, then the articles before provided for the regulation of their conduct during such a war shall continue in force until the conclusion of the treaty which shall restore peace.

This treaty shall be ratified on both sides, and the ratifications exchanged within one year from the day of its signature, or sooner, if possible.

In testimony whereof, the Plenipotentiaries before mentioned have hereunto subscribed their names and affixed their seals.

Comte de Haugwitz.

The following instructions and correspondence were communicated to the Senate by the Message of 17th February, 1799:

Instructions from the Secretary of State to John Quincy Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary to Prussia.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, July 15, 1797.

SIR: By inspecting the Treaty of Amity and Commerce, concluded in the year 1785, between the United States and the late Frederick the Second, King of Prussia, you will observe that it was to be in force during the term of ten years from the exchange of ratifications. This exchange took place about the month of September, in the year 1786, and, of course, the treaty has expired.

You will receive herewith a commission containing full powers to renew this treaty in its present form, for another term of ten years, but with the following exceptions, if the same shall be assented to on the part of the King.

1. It will be expedient to omit that part of the sixteenth article which exempts the vessels of each party from embargo, and to render them liable to a general embargo. There is a like clause of exemption in our treaty with Sweden, which occasioned disagreeable comparisons and real inconveniences, when, by a general embargo in 1794, the vessels of all other nations, and of our own citizens, were detained in port.

2. The twenty-third article of our treaty with Prussia forbids the commissioning of privateers to take or destroy the trading vessels, or to interrupt the commerce of the contracting parties, in case a war should arise between them. And, considering the abuses too often committed by privateers, and the spirit in which privateering is commenced and prosecuted, it has sometimes appeared desirable to abolish the practice altogether. But the policy of this principle, as it respects the United States, may well be doubted; we are weak, at present, in public vessels of war, and our actual revenues are not adequate to the equipping of powerful fleets; but we are strong in the number of our seamen, in private wealth, and in the uncommon enterprise of our citizens. Our chief means, therefore, of annoying and distressing a maritime enemy would be our privateers. For these reasons, you will propose, and endeavor to effect, an alteration of the 23d article, and to leave commerce, in case of a war between us and Prussia, to the attacks of privateers.

The principle that free ships make free goods, is also found in the treaty with Prussia, (article 12.) It is a principle that the United States have adopted in all their treaties, (except that with Great Britain,) and which they sincerely desire might become universal; but treaties formed for this object they find to be of little or no avail, because the principle is not universally admitted among the maritime nations. It has not been regarded in respect to the United States when it would operate to their benefit, and may be insisted on only when it will prove injurious to their interest. You will, therefore, propose to abandon it in the new treaty which you are empowered to renew and negotiate with Prussia.

Relations with Prussia.

On the like ground, you are to propose to admit of articles contraband of war; and, among them, to enumerate timber for ship building, tar, pitch, turpentine, and rosin, copper in sheets, sails, hemp, and cordage, and, generally, whatever may serve directly to the equipment of vessels, unwrought iron and fir-planks only excepted.

But, although these alterations appear desirable, yet if the state of things shall, in your judgment, render it expedient not to propose them, or, if proposed, not to insist on them, you will act accordingly. In another period of ten years, it will probably not occasion any material embarrassment between the United States and Prussia, to renew the treaty precisely in its present form. And, at this time, it is peculiarly interesting to us to conciliate the good will of that and other European nations.

Another, and the principal design of the President in this appointment was, to place at Berlin a Minister of your abilities and knowledge in diplomatic affairs, from whom, in the existing situation of Europe, correct intelligence and information highly interesting to the United States might be derived; and who, by his vigilance and sagacity, might find and embrace opportunities to promote their security and welfare.

A third object will be to renew the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between the United States and Sweden; for which, also, full powers are herewith transmitted. By the Swedish Minister at Berlin, or otherwise, you will make known to the Court of Sweden that you are invested with such powers.

The ratifications of the Swedish treaty, it is supposed, were exchanged in the beginning of the year 1784; as, on the 9th of March of that year, Dr. Franklin wrote from Paris to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs that he had made the exchange. In like manner, Mr. Adams wrote from London, on the 27th of October, 1786, that he had been in Holland, and exchanged the ratifications of the Prussian treaty. No documents are found to show the day when the exchange took place.

For the reasons above assigned, in respect to the Prussian treaty, that with Sweden should be altered, in the 17th article, so as to subject the vessels of Sweden, as well as those of other nations, to the effects of a general embargo: enemies' property found on board them to capture and confiscation, as good prize; and ship timber and naval stores (as before enumerated) to be deemed contraband of war. The right of privateering is to remain as already fixed in the treaty with Sweden. I have the honor to be, &c.,

TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

From the Secretary of State to John Quincy Adams.
DEPARTMENT OF STATE, July 17, 1797.

SIR: In the instructions, dated the 15th instant, relative to your renewing our treaties with Sweden, you see expressed the earnest wishes of the United States that the principle that free ships should make free goods should become universal.

6th Con.—39

This principle is peculiarly interesting to us, because our naval concerns are mercantile, and not warlike; and you will readily perceive that the abandonment of that principle was suggested by the measures of the belligerent Powers during the present war, in which we have found that neither its obligations by the pretended modern law of nations, nor the solemn stipulations of treaties, secured its observation; on the contrary, it has been made the sport of events. Under such circumstances, it appeared to the President desirable to avoid renewing an obligation which would probably be enforced when our interest should require its dissolution; and be contemned when we could derive some advantage from its observance.

But it is possible that, in the pending negotiations for peace, this principle of free ships making free goods may be adopted by all the great maritime Powers; in which case, the United States will be among the first of the other Powers to accede to it, and to observe it as a universal rule.

In like manner, if the rigid rule of the law of nations respecting contraband, should be relaxed, and ship timber and naval stores be declared free, we shall eagerly embrace this liberal rule.

The issue of the negotiations for peace, which we suppose to be now pending, will probably be known to you before it will be necessary to finish the renewal of the treaties between us and Prussia and Sweden; and you will conform our stipulations with those two Powers on the points above mentioned, to the result of those negotiations.

But if the negotiations for peace should be broken up, and the war continue, and more especially if, as you have conjectured, the United States should be forced to become a party in it, then it would be extremely impolitic to confine the enterprises and exertions of our armed vessels within narrower limits than the law of nations prescribes. If, for instance, France should proceed from her predatory attacks on our commerce to open war, the mischievous consequences of any other limitations will be apparent. All her commerce will be sheltered under neutral flags, while ours would remain exposed, as at present, to the havoc of her numerous cruisers.

These remarks, added to your instructions, will possess you fully of the principles by which the President desires you may be influenced in renewing the treaties with Prussia and Sweden.

I am, sir, with perfect esteem, &c.,

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

From the Secretary of State to John Quincy Adams.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Philadelphia, March 17, 1798.

SIR: As the war continues, and as it now seems scarcely possible for the United States to avoid becoming a party in it, you will doubtless be determined, by your instructions of the 15th and 17th July last, in renewing our treaties with Prussia and Sweden, and to reject the article in each which stipulates that free ships shall make free goods. With this prospect before us, no considerations occur which should induce its admission. But the reasons suggested in those instructions are now strongly enforced by the law of the French Republic before cited,* if, as Mr. Fenwick supposes, though general in its expressions, it is really and exclusively intended to operate against the Americans. In this case, a renewal of that stipulation is positively to be refused. The Swedish and Prussian commerce will then be only on the footing of the commerce of Denmark, with whom we have no treaty; and if we must be involved in the war, it will be desirable that the commerce of those three Powers, in relation to the United States, should rest on one and the same principle. But if this iniquitous French law exists (and we have no room to doubt it) will all the Northern Powers submit to it? We hope not. We hope that the inordinate ambition of France, and avowed design to subjugate all Europe (of which she already calls herself "the great nation" and "the conqueror,") will excite the resistance of all the Powers whom her arms have not reached, and rouse anew those whom the course of events have induced to submit. At present Britain appears to be the only bulwark against the universal domination of France, by sea as well as by land. It is plain that those Powers who have avoided becoming parties in the present war, and have congratulated themselves on their superior policy and good fortune, will finally have no reason to rejoice: they were only reserved for future plunder and oppression. This is now strikingly verified in respect to the United States. Her exactions are as unexpected as her victories have been unexampled. Instead of stipulating for even future compensation for the many millions of which she has authorized her cruisers to rob us, she demands immediate contributions to the enormous amount of her depredations; making them the measure, not of rendering justice, but of increasing her oppression! A full knowledge of her treatment of our Envoys, and of the propositions made to them, would confound her partisans among us, convince our citizens in general of the impossibility of preserving their property and independence but by resistance, and produce general unanimity in the measures requisite for that end: or, if I am mistaken in this opinion, we are already under the yoke of foreign domination.

I have the honor to be, &c.

TIMOTHY PICKERING.

JOHN Q. ADAMS,
Minister, &c., Berlin.

*The following is the law referred to:

1. The character of a vessel, as neuter or enemy, is determined by her cargo. Therefore, all vessels laden with merchandise which has come from England, or her colonies, shall be declared good prize, whoever may be the owner.

2. Every vessel which, in the course of her voyage, shall have entered an English port, shall not enter the ports of the French Republic, except in case of distress, and when that cause shall have ceased, she shall immediately depart.

Extract of a letter from John Quincy Adams, Minister, &c., to Berlin, to the Secretary of State, dated

OCTOBER 31, 1797.

"A few days after I had the honor of writing to you last from London, I received a duplicate of your instructions, dated July 15th, together with a copy of those bearing date the 17th. I shall pay all the attention to them which their importance requires, and the circumstances will admit. It is, however, to my mind very questionable whether it will be expedient to propose the alterations suggested in your letters, except that relative to the embargo. The principle of making free ships protect enemy's property has always been cherished by the maritime Powers who have not had large navies, though stipulations to that effect have been more or less violated. In the present war, indeed, they have been less respected than usual, because Great Britain has held more uncontrolled the command of the sea, and has been less disposed than ever to concede the principle; and because France has disclaimed most of the received and established ideas upon the laws of nations, and considered herself as liberated from all the obligations towards other States which interfered with her present objects, or the interests of the moment. Yet, even during this war, several decrees of the French Convention, passed at times when the force of solemn national engagements was felt, have recognised the promise in the Treaty of 1778; and at times it has been in a great degree observed. France is still attached to the principles of the Armed Neutrality, and yet more attached to the idea of compelling Great Britain to assent to them. Indeed, every naval State is interested in the maintenance of liberal maxims in maritime affairs against the domineering policy of Britain. Every instance, therefore, in which these principles are abandoned by neutral Powers, which favor the rights of neutrality, is to be regretted as furnishing argument, or at least example, to support the British doctrines. These observations apply with more weight with regard to the Swedish Treaty than to the other, as I believe Sweden is peculiarly attached to the liberal system, and entertains hopes that it may finally prevail by the concurrence of all the maritime Powers, excepting only Britain."

Relations with Prussia.

No. 121.

Extract of a letter from John Quincy Adams to the Secretary of State, dated

BERLIN, May 17, 1798.

"I deem it highly inexpedient to propose any alteration in the principle agreed upon in our present treaty neutralizing enemy's property on board of neutral vessels. It is indeed true, that this stipulation has not, in the course of the present war, been observed by France. But she has uniformly professed her attachment to the principle, and attributed her violation of it to the example and previous practice of her enemy. There is certainly a great inconvenience, when two maritime States are at war, for a neutral nation to be bound by one principle to one of the parties, and by its opposite to the other; and in such cases it is never to be expected that an engagement favorable to the rights of neutrality will be scrupulously observed by either of the warring States. It appears to me, therefore, that the stipulation ought properly to be made contingent, and the contracting parties to a Commercial Treaty should agree that, in all cases when one of the parties should be at war and the other neutral, the bottom should cover the property, provided the enemy of the warring Power admitted the same principle, and practised upon it in their Courts of Admiralty; but, if not, that the rigorous rule of the ordinary law of nations should be observed.

"In truth, I am fully convinced that there is only one Power in Europe averse to the general establishment of the principle favorable to neutrality; a Power which does not even disguise the pretension of domineering upon the ocean, and whose naval force is almost equal to that of all the world besides. It must be admitted, that, so long as she rejects the liberal principle, every agreement of other nations between themselves admitting it, excepting contingently, as above stated, must, if it have any operation, operate altogether in her favor, and to her advantage; for while it gives her the benefit of a safe and protected neutral conveyance of her goods, it refuses the same to her enemy."

No. 122.

Extracts from a letter of John Quincy Adams to the Secretary of State, dated

BERLIN, May 25, 1798.

"I shall be guided by your instructions relative to the stipulations upon the subject of neutral commerce, though I have very recently written that, in my own opinion, the proposal of an alteration would be inexpedient. The reasons for my opinion are given in my last letter. Sweden and Prussia are both strongly attached to the principle of making the ship protect the cargo. They have more than once contended that such is the rule even by the ordinary laws of nations. A Danish author of some reputation, in a treatise upon the commerce of neutrals in time of war, lays it down as a rule, and argues formally, that, by the law of nature, free ships make free goods. Lampredi, a recent Florentine author, upon the same topic, has discussed the question at length, and contends that, by the natural law in this case, there is a collision of two rights equally valid; that the belligerent has a right to detain, but the neutral an equal right to refuse to be detained. This reduces the thing to a mere question of force, in which the belligerent, being ready armed, naturally enjoys the best advantage. I confess the reasoning of Lampredi has, in my mind, great weight, and he appears to have stated the question in its true light."

"I intend to propose a conditional article, putting the principle upon a footing of reciprocity, and agreeing that the principle, with regard to bottom and cargo, shall depend upon the principle guiding the Admiralty courts of the enemy. This will at once discover our own inclination and attachment to the liberal rule, and yet not make us the victims of our adherence to it, while violated by our adversaries. Whether the other party will, in either instance, accede to this, I cannot undertake to say; but you may be assured that, after your last instructions, I shall not accede to the renewal of the articles under their form in the previous treaties."

No. 122.

To their Excellencies the Ministers of State and of the Cabinet of the King.

The subscriber, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, upon his arrival at Berlin, had the honor to deliver to their Excellencies a copy of the full power with which he is charged, on the part of the United States, to renew the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between His Majesty and the United States, with such alterations as may be agreeable to both parties mutually.

He has now that of communicating to their Excellencies the alterations which he is ordered to propose, on the part of his Government, and to add some observations upon the motives which gave occasion to those propositions.

The twelfth article of the former treaty declares, that in case either of the high contracting parties should be at war with another Power, enemy's property, on board of the neutral vessel, shall not be subject to be made prize. It is proposed to substitute, instead of this rule, that of the ordinary law of nations, which subjects to seizure enemy's property on board of neutral vessels.

The Government of the United States is not unaware, that the principle which communicates to the cargo the character of the vessel, would be conformable to the interests of the United States, as they are persuaded it would be to those of Prussia, and all the Powers preserving neutrality in maritime wars, if it could be universally acknowledged and respected by the belligerent Powers. But it is known that the Powers most frequently engaged in naval wars do not recognise, or do not respect, the principle. The United States have had, during the present war, the experience that, even the most formal treaty did not suffice to secure to them the advantage of this principle; but, on the contrary, only contributed to accumulate the losses of their citizens, by encouraging them to load their vessels with merchandise declared free; which they have, notwithstanding, seen taken and confiscated, as if no engagement had promised them all security.

At the present moment neither of the Powers at war admits the freedom of enemy's property on board of neutral vessels. If, in the course of events, either of the contracting parties should be involved in war with one or the other of those Powers, she would be obliged to behold her enemy possess the advantage of a free conveyance for her goods, without possessing the advantage herself, or to violate her own engagements, by treating the neutral party as the enemy should treat her.

It is for the same reason proposed, instead of the thirteenth article of the former treaty, to admit a list of contraband of war, and to comprise in it ship-timber, tar, pitch, turpentine, and rosin, copper, (in sheets,) sails, hemp, cordage, and generally everything serving for the equipment of vessels, unwrought iron and fir planks excepted. These two changes indicate several additional articles, naturally proceeding from them: as, for instance, a designation of the papers which shall be necessary to ascertain the neutrality of vessels and their cargo; and, likewise, the restrictions proper to prevent the armed vessels of the belligerent Power from abusing the privilege of arresting neutral vessels, and seizing the enemy's property found on board.

By the sixteenth article of the former treaty, the vessels of the subjects or citizens of each of the high contracting parties, in the ports of the other, are declared exempt from all embargo. It is proposed, in the treaty, to subject them to every general embargo, which the respective Governments may judge necessary. This proposal is founded upon the necessity under which both Governments are supposed alike liable to find themselves, of imposing, from time to time, a general embargo upon all the vessels either in all its ports, or in certain particular ports; exceptions, then, might defeat the advantages which might be expected from this measure, and may, besides, give occasion to comparisons, which one would wish to avoid, on the part of other nations, whose vessels would be detained with those belonging to the nation itself where the embargo should be laid.

The nineteenth article will require some alteration. By the present engagements of the United States, no vessel that shall have made either English or French prizes can obtain an asylum in the ports or harbors of the United States.

A modification of the twentieth article may declare that it shall not be understood to invalidate the guaranty of the French possessions in America, stipulated by the United States in their Treaty of Alliance with France, bearing date 6th February, 1778.

It is proposed to omit the last clauses of the twenty-third article, which declare, that, in case of war between the high contracting parties, the merchant and trading vessels shall not be subject to capture. This stipulation, being of little importance as to the high contracting parties, between whom no probability of war, no opposing interests which might lead to it, appear to exist; it is, therefore, in regard of other nations, who may require similar conditions when they might import very different consequences, that this engagement is desired to be omitted.

The twenty-fifth article of the former treaty grants mutually the faculty of keeping Consuls and Vice Consuls, agents and commissaries, in the respective ports: it adds, that their functions shall be determined by a particular agreement, when either of the parties shall appoint to such office. It would, perhaps, be well to stipulate that they shall enjoy the same privileges and powers as those of the most favored nations.

The duration of the new treaty may, like that of the old one, be limited to ten years, reckoning from the day of exchanging the ratifications, with the same faculty of renewing it again at the expiration of that period.

In submitting these observations and propositions to their Excellencies, the subscriber requests them to accept the assurance of his respect and high consideration.

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

Berlin, July 11, 1798.

No. 128.

Extracts of a letter from John Q. Adams, Esq., dated Berlin, 16th July, 1798, to the Secretary of State.

"On the 11th I delivered to Count Finckenstein, first Minister in the Department of Foreign Affairs, a memorial of which I herewith enclose a translation. I would send, at the same time, a copy of the original French, but I do not think it would be prudent to send it unciphered, and I have no French cipher with you: I presume you will not judge it material. I hope you will find it exactly conformable to your instructions and intentions. The proposal for abandoning the principle of making free ships cover enemy's property, I have repeatedly informed you will not be acceptable: still less will that of a large list of contraband, especially comprehending many of the most material articles of Prussian exports. I have said, however, all that occurred to me as calculated to show that these would be but equitable alterations. If these proposals should be accepted, I have mentioned the necessity of some additional articles designating the papers that shall be deemed necessary to prove the neutrality of vessels and their cargoes, and to abuses by the armed vessels of the warring Power. The former treaty mentions the necessity of passports, but leaves their forms unsettled."

"I proposed an alteration of the nineteenth article, which appeared to me necessary to render it conformable to the twenty-fifth article of our treaty with Great Britain; and a modification of the twentieth, which might otherwise be liable to a collision with the guaranty in our treaty with France; although this treaty has, in numberless instances, been violated by the French Government, as it has not been declared by our Government formally dissolved, but as they have, on the contrary, invariably respected it, I thought the stipulation deserved attention."

"The twenty-fifth article referred to a future arrangement at the time when Consuls should be named. As this nomination had taken place, and no arrangement was made, an alteration of the article became necessary. I found, in our treaty with Spain, a precedent for what I proposed; and I believe it is what on our part is conceded alike to all foreign Consuls by law."

No. 136.

Extracts of a letter from John Q. Adams, Esq. to the Secretary of State, dated Berlin, Oct. 1, 1798.

"I have the honor to enclose herewith a copy of a note from the Department of Foreign Affairs here, in answer to mine of 11th July, with the proposals for the renewal of the treaty, which has heretofore been forwarded to you."

"The objections to the changes which, conformably to your instructions, I proposed, are those which I have constantly expected, and repeatedly announced."

"I shall reply to this note as soon as possible; but if you do not think it advisable to renew the stipulation for making the bottom cover the property, and for excepting at least ship timber from the list of contraband, I have no sort of expectation that either treaty will be renewed. At present, I consider myself as expressly forbidden from acceding to their proposal for renewing the twelfth article as it is, and have no idea that they will consent to leave it out."

[Referred to in Mr. Adams's despatch of Oct. 1, 1798.]

Messrs. Finckenstein, Alvensleben, and Haugwitz, to Mr. Adams.

BERLIN, 25th September, 1798.

We have considered with great attention the official note which Mr. Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, has transmitted to us the 11th of July of the present year; and, after having discussed the objects of that note with the departments to which they relate, we now reply to it in detail.

The King could not but receive with due sensibility the desire manifested by the United States to cultivate with him the relations of friendship and good will, which have, until this time, subsisted between Prussia and the American Republic, and his Majesty is therefore well disposed to renew the Treaty of Commerce concluded at the Hague, the 10th of September, 1785; and to adopt in it the changes and modifications which the actual circumstances and the respective interests of the two contracting Powers may render necessary.

With this view, we have examined the propositions just made by the Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, and we have the honor to communicate the observations to which they have given rise.

The first alteration proposed in his note relates to the 12th article of the ancient treaty, where it is said, "that, in case one or the other of the contracting parties shall be at war with any other Power, the vessels of the neutral Power may navigate in perfect safety in the ports and upon the coasts of the belligerent Powers; free ships making the merchandise free."

For this rule, the United States desire to substitute the following: "That all the property of enemies on board neutral vessels ought to be subject to seizure; and that neutral property on board enemies' vessels should remain free."

It cannot be denied that the ancient principle of the freedom of neutral navigation has been little regarded in the two last wars, and especially in that now carried on; but it is not the less true, that it served until the present time as a foundation and guide to the commerce of all neutral nations; and that, in consequence, it has been, and still is, followed and maintained. If, in the midst of the war now waging, its sudden abandonment and destruction should be advised, the following results might be expected:

1. Inevitable confusion would arise in all the commercial speculations of neutral nations, and the finishing blow would be given to the remonstrances and proceedings which are still urged, in numerous instances, both in England and France, for illegal captures.

2. We should directly oppose the Northern Powers, who maintain, to this very time, the ancient principle of armed convoys.

3. Nothing would be gained by establishing at the present period, the principle that neutral property on board enemies' vessels should be free. Neutral Powers would admit this principle with as much reluctance as the belligerent; and this would constitute an additional reason to authorize the judicial condemnation of the prizes made in contravention of the ancient rule.

4. Finally, supposing for an instant that the great maritime Powers of Europe should wish to acknowledge hereafter the principle substituted by the United States, it would only multiply the embarrassments in the proceedings against the privateers; for while, formerly, the character of the vessel decided at the same time that of the cargo, it would be necessary in future, to distinguish the one from the other, and provide separately the proofs of each.

All these difficulties combined prevent us from acceding to the alteration proposed by Mr. Adams; and we submit to his consideration, whether it would not suit the reciprocal interests of the two high contracting parties, as well as the interests of their commercial citizens and subjects, to suffer the twelfth article to remain provisionally as it is, in conformity with the system which they have maintained to the present time; and to add the eventual stipulation, "that, experience having unfortunately shown, in the course of the existing war, that the ancient principle of free neutral navigation has not been sufficiently respected by the belligerent Powers, the two high contracting parties, upon the return of a general peace, reserve the right of deciding definitely on this subject, either separately between themselves, or conjointly with other interested Powers, in order to concert, with the great maritime Powers of Europe, such arrangements as might serve to establish, in subsequent wars, upon fixed and permanent rules, the liberty and safety of neutral navigation." Mr. Adams proposes, also, to insert, in the thirteenth article, a specific list of the objects which shall be considered contraband in time of war, and to comprehend in it "ship timber, tar, pitch, turpentine, and rosin, copper in sheets, sails, hemp, cordage, and generally all that serves to the equipment of vessels, unwrought iron and fir planks excepted."

If an attempt should be made to specify, in the new treaty, the articles of contraband, we are obliged to adhere to those which have been considered and adopted as such in the maritime convention concluded with Prussia and Russia, the 8th of May 1781, after the example of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation formed between Russia and Great Britain, the 20th of June, 1766. The eleventh article of this last mentioned treaty declares contraband, "cannon, mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, fusils, flints, matches, saltpetre, sulphur, hauberks, pikes, swords, sword belts, cartridge boxes, saddles and bridles, or whatever each man, serving on board a vessel, should be furnished," &c.

This list has been the foundation of those rules of maritime commerce which we have always followed, as well in former wars as in the war now carried on; and it appears to us to embrace all the articles which appertain in reality to contraband property, so called. If this list is susceptible of additional extension at all, we can never consent to its comprehending ship timber, one of the principal productions of the Kingdom of Prussia, and always regarded, in all maritime wars, as an object of unrestricted commerce.

On the other hand, we willingly agree with Mr. Adams, that it will be useful and necessary to designate with precision, in the fourteenth article, the papers and documents with which the master of every vessel should be furnished, in order to establish the neutrality of the vessel and cargo. This should be done according to the usages admitted in our maritime tribunals.

1. The document showing the construction of the vessel, (building letter) or, in its absence, the contract of purchase. The original, or a certificate copy of either the one or the other.

2. The sea-letter, which, within the dominions of the King, is generally issued, for the term of one year, by the provincial officers appointed to inspect the affairs of the maritime commerce. It may be ordered, also, that the sea-letter ought to be renewed every time the vessel shall return to the port from whence she sailed.

3. The register of the crew.

4. The charter-party, or the contract, passed in bulk, for the freight of every vessel; or, where this is deficient, the proof in detail of what the cargo contains.

The change proposed in the fourteenth article is predicated on the suppression of the clause which, in case of a general embargo, would establish an exemption in favor of vessels belonging to the subjects or citizens of each of the two contracting parties. If the interests of the United States, and particular considerations, require in reality, a similar modification, the King will, on his part, accede to it. It will be just, however, to add a stipulation that, in these cases, the ships of the two nations, respectively, shall be treated equally with those of the most favored nation; and that an equitable indemnity should be granted to them as well for the freight as for the losses occasioned by detention.

Nor do we perceive any objection to the alterations proposed by articles XIX and XX, in order to adapt them to the relations subsisting between France and the United States. It may be declared, also, in article XIX, for the greater clearness and safety, that, among the prizes that may be carried into the ports and harbors of the United States, no neutral vessel or cargo shall be found among them, and still less when the property of Prussian subjects. The twenty-third article, which protected the merchant vessels from every species of capture, has, no doubt, been dictated solely by considerations of humanity and benevolence, and it will not be expunged without regret; but, inasmuch as this pleasing theory can with difficulty be enforced, it only remains to renounce it, whenever it can be done consistently with the political interests of the United States.

We acquiesce in the proposed addition to the twenty-fifth article, by which the Consuls of the two Powers, respectively, shall enjoy the same rights and privileges with those of the most favored nation; and we adopt again, for the duration of the treaty, the term of ten years, reckoning from the exchange of ratifications, and providing for its renewal at the expiration of that time.

We believe that, in the present note, we have replied fully to all the propositions which Mr. Adams has been charged to make; and we leave to him the care of transmitting to the United States the counter propositions and observations herein contained. We shall be ready, at any time thereafter, to resume the negotiation, and also to conclude the treaty whenever he may desire it.

Relations with Prussia.

No. 138.

BERLIN, Oct. 30, 1798.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a copy of the note, which I this day delivered to Count Finckenstein, in reply to the answer of the Cabinet Ministry to my former note of 11th July. Before I delivered it, I had two conferences with Count Haugwitz, concerning the subject matter of it. He professed himself highly satisfied with the within note, and assured me that there would not be the least objection made to expediting the business without waiting for further instructions to me from America. The proposal, to say nothing in the treaty relative to the property of enemies on board of neutral vessels appeared to have his assent altogether. I hope the answer to this note will not be delayed quite so long as that of the last; but as to what its tenor will be, I beg leave to refer you to my former letters, (No. 136, and those preceding it,) relative to this business. I have had no reason to alter my opinions therein expressed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

[Enclosed in No. 138.]

From Mr. Adams to Messrs. Finckenstein, Alvensleben, and Haugwitz.

BERLIN, October 29, 1798.

The undersigned, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, considers it his duty to submit to the consideration of their Excellencies, the following observations on the subject of the objections presented, in the reply of their Excellencies to the note which he had the honor to transmit to them, dated the 11th of July of the present year, proposing certain alterations in the treaty about to be renewed between His Majesty the King of Prussia and the United States.

The principle on which is founded the proposed change respecting the security of enemy's property on board of neutral vessels, is, that, by the law of nations, in times of maritime war, the property of enemies on board of neutral vessels is subject to capture, and that the property of neutrals on board of enemies' vessels is free; that this rule cannot be changed, except by the general consent of all the maritime Powers, or by separate treaties, the stipulations of which cannot extend beyond the contracting parties; that the opposite principle, the establishment of which ought to be one of the principal objects of the Armed Neutrality, was not universally acknowledged even during the period of the American war; and, during the existing war, has not been maintained by any of those Powers which, at that time, acceded to this system; that Prussia, herself, while one of the belligerents in the last war, did not admit it; and that, to the present moment, the ancient principle of the law of nations subsists in all its force among all the Powers, except in the case where the opposite rule is stipulated by the engagements of positive treaty.

In proposing, then, to acknowledge the freedom of neutral property on board the vessels of enemies, and to acknowledge as subject to capture the property of enemies on board neutral vessels, it is only desired to confirm, by treaty, the principles which exist, even at the present moment, independently of all treaties: it is intended, not to make a change in the existing state of things, but to avoid one.

Far from wishing to prescribe on this point to the belligerent Powers, it is not supposed that an agreement between Prussia and the United States could, in any manner, serve as a rule for other Powers, not being parties to the treaty, in order to legalize prizes; and, as the effect of this convention, even between the high contracting parties, could only extend to the future, without being retroactive, it is still less imagined that the reclamations and proceedings of the subjects of neutral Powers, whether in England or in France, would be at all regarded.

Nor has the idea ever occurred that this measure could come in conflict with the Powers of the North, who could not be bound by a treaty to which they would not be the contracting parties; besides, this opposition could not extend to Russia, since, far from sustaining the principle that the flag ought to protect the property, she has engaged, by her convention with Great Britain, dated the 25th of March, 1793, to employ all her efforts to prevent its being carried into effect during the existing war.

Sweden and Denmark reciprocally engaged, in the view of all Europe, by their convention dated the 27th of March, 1794, to lay no claim, in cases not provided for in treaties, to any advantage which shall not be supported by the universal law of nations, "recognised and respected to the present time, by all the Powers and all the Sovereigns of Europe." It is not conceived possible to comprehend, under this description, the principle that the property should follow the destiny of the flag under which it sails; and, it may be added, that constant experience has demonstrated the insufficiency of the protection afforded by armed convoys to this principle, since we have seen them follow their convoys regularly, without resistance, into the ports of the belligerent Powers, there to be adjudged according to principles established in their tribunals entirely opposed to the one which makes the vessel neutralize the cargo.

According to the settled usage of the tribunals of all the maritime Powers, the proofs of the character of the cargo ought to be distinct from those which concern the vessel. Even in the treaties which adopt the principle that the flag protects the property, it is common to stipulate for papers which designate the cargo, for the purpose of proving that it is not contraband. The charter-party, or the bill of lading, is among the papers required by the Prussian maritime tribunals, and which it is proposed to designate as necessary in the new treaty. It seems, then, that the adoption of the principle in question would not exact a single additional paper, and, consequently, would add nothing to the embarrassment of the proceedings against the armed vessels; or, at least, so little as to be considered a slight inconvenience in comparison with the losses and sufferings occasioned by the recognition of a principle which has been abandoned by all the maritime Powers, and which not one of them has effectually maintained; of a principle by which the high contracting party who might be at war would be disadvantageously bound, whilst her enemy would disregard it altogether, and the neutral would present to her citizens or subjects the allurements of a free commerce, only to see it interrupted, intercepted, and destroyed.

But, as the opinions entertained by this Government appear to differ from those of the Government of the United States on the subject of the principles prescribed by the law of nations, and, as it appears to their Excellencies that many inconveniences may result from the substitution of a principle opposed to the one contained in the ancient treaty, the undersigned has the honor to propose to omit entirely this part of the article, and on this point to enter into no engagement whatever; this will leave it in the state in which it formerly stood, without requiring of either of the high contracting parties any stipulation on the subject. And as the establishment of a stable and permanent principle, with the hope of seeing it respected and maintained in future wars, is an object important to commerce in general, and especially to that of the high contracting parties, the undersigned will readily consent to an eventual stipulation similar to that which their Excellencies propose, which, without implying, on the one part or the other, the admission of a contested principle, will defer a decision upon the subject to the period which will follow a general peace, either by an agreement between the high contracting parties, or in concert with the Powers who are interested in its adjustment. At the same time, the United States will be always disposed to adopt the most extended principles which can be desired in favor of the freedom of neutral commerce in time of war, from the moment that they can flatter themselves with seeing it adopted and recognised in a manner to insure its execution.

As to the list of contraband, the undersigned is persuaded that his Government has only been desirous to specify the articles enumerated in his last note, because they have been considered in the class of contraband articles by the laws of nations, independently of treaties. But, inasmuch as ship-timber constitutes an object so important to the commerce of Prussia, he is persuaded that in consenting to exclude it from the proposed list, and thus furnishing the evidence of a desire to conform to the wishes of His Majesty's Government, he will not fail to receive the entire approval of his own.

By the laws and usage of the United States, their vessels ought to be provided with the papers and documents designated by their Excellencies as required by the maritime tribunals of Prussia, such as the sea-letter, the charter-party, or the bill of lading; and, instead of the beil-brief, a certificate of the registration, signed by a public officer, and which proves the ownership of the vessel, as well as the time of her construction. Not one of the commercial treaties which have been formed by the United States, to the present time, requires the muster-roll. A great proportion of the remonstrances now made in France, by citizens of the United States, against the depredations of French privateers, are founded on the seizure of their vessels, with their cargoes, for not having been furnished with the muster-roll, a document not required by the treaty with France. If it were possible that foreign tribunals could avail themselves of a convention between Prussia and the United States only, as the pretext of their decisions upon prizes previously made, and concerning which another treaty prescribed the rule, some reason would exist for hesitation in admitting the muster-roll among the papers which it is proposed to specify in the treaty. No difficulty, however, will arise on this point. But, in order to avoid the multiplication of papers, he submits to the consideration of their Excellencies, whether it will not suffice to designate, in addition to the charter-party, or the bill of lading, and the muster-roll, the sea-letter, adding to it the name, the ownership, and the port of the vessel, with the name and residence of the captain, without at the same time requiring the "document of construction," which could only serve to repeat the same proofs.

The condition, that, in the event of an embargo, the ships of the high contracting parties shall receive the same treatment with those of the most favored nation, (with the exception of those exempted by a reciprocal engagement from all embargoes,) and shall receive an equitable indemnity on account of the freight, and for the losses occasioned by detention, is in itself too just to occasion any difficulty.

A reciprocal stipulation not to admit in the ports of one of the high contracting parties the prizes taken from the other, will be equally acquiesced in, as far as is compatible with the prior engagements of the United States, who, by several treaties, have agreed with other Powers for the reciprocal admission of prizes in the ports of each other.

In submitting these observations to the judgment of their Excellencies, the undersigned cannot refrain from tendering his own acknowledgments, as well as the satisfaction which he has no doubt will be felt by his Government, for the readiness with which they have acceded to the other alterations it became his duty to propose. The United States will see in this an unequivocal proof of the good will and friendship of His Majesty.

Relations with Prussia.

which they cannot estimate too highly. If the present observations and propositions shall have the good fortune to receive the assent of their Excellencies, he hopes that they will be willing to pursue this object, and to put their last hand to the work, without waiting the return of a correspondence so remote as that with the United States. Without wishing to hasten their decision, or to manifest impatience upon a subject which appears to his Government important, he has to regret the delays which have been already caused by events in the course of the negotiation with which he has the honor to be charged. He considers it, therefore, a duty which he owes to his Government and country, to solicit the consent of their Excellencies to permit no further delay to the termination of this business, which may not be required by urgent and indispensable considerations.

To the MINISTERS OF STATE, &c.

No. 141.

BERLIN, December 31, 1799.

SIR: I have now the honor to enclose copies of the answer of the Cabinet Ministry to my note of the 29th of October, concerning the renewal of the commercial treaty between the United States and Prussia, and of my reply, which I presented to Count Finckenstein on the 25th instant. During the interval from the time when I received the answer, I had repeated conversations with Count Haugwitz upon the subject, and the substance of my reply was founded upon the result of those conversations.

You will observe, by these papers, how tenaciously this Government adheres to the principle of making neutral bottoms cover enemy's property in time of war, and to the very limited list of contraband contained in the treaty of 1766 between Russia and Great Britain. At the time when Frederic II. acceded to the Armed Neutrality, having no commercial treaty with any of the then belligerent Powers, he adopted this list as that which was most favorable to neutral interests, and it has ever since been considered here as the criterion of contraband. After having given up, in my last note, the article of timber for ship-building, I should most probably have abandoned the other naval stores in the present, had not your letter of September 24, expressed so much indifference whether the treaty should be renewed at all. I shall yet abandon them if this Government should persist in rejecting them.

Upon the other point, the stipulation proposed instead of the twelfth article of the old treaty, expressly holds out the question concerning neutral bottoms and goods as a contested point, and it is preceded by a labored argument to prove that, by the present law of nations, the principle of the old treaty is prescribed. But, in conformity to your instructions, I did not think myself authorized even to admit, by any implication, that the principle prescribed by the law of nations can be a subject of controversy, and hence, in objecting to the words which present it as such, it was necessary to answer the arguments in maintenance of the position.

I have, in my reply, offered two alternatives for avoiding, in the new treaty, any mention of the point; and, if a positive inference could be drawn from what Count Haugwitz assured me was his opinion, I might conclude that one or the other of them might be accepted. I shall not be surprised, however, if the difficulty in this case should still recur; for I judge, from what has hitherto passed, that they are apprehensive an alteration of the express agreement in the treaty of 1785 might be construed into an abandonment of the principle, unless the substituted article should contain some expression which should evidently reserve it; and it is perfectly clear that they are extremely averse to abandon the principle. Their own convention with Great Britain, in 1793, is, to be sure, an argument against them, so strong in itself, that I have not thought it necessary to dwell much upon it, and therefore barely alluded to it in my second note. You will see how they explain it in the enclosed answer, and consider it as compatible with the system which, at other times, Prussia has maintained, and now again wishes to support.

In the discussion concerning the papers to be specified for the purpose of ascertaining the neutrality of merchant vessels and their cargoes in time of war, as I had not the benefit of your instructions, I was obliged to proceed upon such principles as occurred to my mind as best calculated to answer the object proposed by those papers. The sea-letter, the muster-roll, and the invoices, appeared indispensable in a treaty which does not adopt the principle of allowing the bottom to protect both persons and goods; but the other paper, for which they so strenuously contend, seemed to me unnecessary, as tending to prove nothing but what the sea-letter alone suffices to show, and as binding the parties to certain forms of documents which their internal commercial regulations might require to be altered. In my last conversation with Count Haugwitz, he concurred with me fully in the opinion; and I hope, therefore, that the additional paper will not be insisted upon. I have felt more embarrassment upon this subject, because I have not with me the latest laws of the United States prescribing the papers with which vessels of the United States must be provided.

The case of the Wilmington packet, upon which so many fruitless applications were made to the Government in Holland for indemnity, suggested to me the idea of allowing time, after the breaking out of war, for the neutral nation to furnish its vessels with the proper papers.

Since receiving your letter of the 25th of September, I have felt much less anxious about the speedy conclusion of the treaty than I was before. In one of my last conversations with Count Haugwitz, I told him that, if the Prussian Government had the smallest scruple or hesitation about the renewal of the treaty, on account of the situation of our affairs with France, I knew enough of the sentiments of my Government to assure him that they were by no means desirous that Prussia should take any step at which she should feel the smallest reluctance, and, if she thought it most expedient, would postpone the conclusion of the treaty until a time which should be perfectly suitable to both parties. He said he was very glad I had given him an opportunity to assure me, in the most positive and unequivocal manner, that the situation of our affairs with France had never entered into the consideration of His Majesty's Government, in regard to the renewal of the treaty, and that it certainly never would. That the friendly sentiments of the King towards the United States rested upon grounds which could not be affected by the changes in the political views of other European Powers, and that the transactions between the American and French Governments were of a nature which could not induce any impartial and honest third party to favor the latter. He then expressed [himself] with great bitterness and severity concerning the conduct of the French Government in general, and especially upon its present treatment of the King of Sardinia.

Since beginning this letter, I have received your favor of the 7th of November, No. 11, with duplicates of the Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10; a copy of your letter to Mr. Gerry, of the 25th of June; of your despatch to Mr. King, of the 17th of September, 1796; and extracts of his letters of the 13th of April, and the 3d of June, 1797. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

BERLIN, 29th November, 1798.

We have received the last note which Mr. Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, has done us the honor to transmit, dated the 29th of October; and we hasten to reply to it, in order to show how greatly it is desired, on our part, to expedite the negotiation with which we are now entrusted, by every means in our power.

Whatever may be the reciprocal dispositions of Mr. Adams, in this respect, it appears, nevertheless, that he finds some difficulty in acknowledging the force of the reasons which have prevented us from agreeing to the proposed alterations relating to the twelfth article of the Treaty of 1785. He objects that, by the ordinary law of nations, the property of neutrals, on board the vessels of enemies in times of war, is free. This rule, it is true, has heretofore been followed by most of the Powers of Europe, and it is to be found in many treaties which have been concluded during the fifteenth and fourteenth centuries; but it is also known that it has been since abandoned: the inconveniences to which it was liable having determined the maritime and commercial nations to depart from it. In the year 1646, the two treaties concluded by the States General of the United Provinces with France and England, have stipulated, "that the vessels of friends and neutrals shall render their cargoes free:" and this principle, thus laid down, has been re-affirmed and preserved in almost all the treaties concluded since that epoch among the commercial nations of Europe. The convention formed between Russia and England, in the years 1798, which Mr. Adams cites in his note, is directed against France exclusively, and is, therefore, only an exception to the rule; and if it be true that, in the beginning of the present war, the combined Powers have thought proper to depart from the received principle, this momentary deviation can only be attributed to particular circumstances; and it is not, on that account, the less true, that Prussia had but one permanent system in relation to commerce and neutral navigation. It is founded on the maxim declared in the twelfth article of her ancient treaty with the United States of America; and this rule is better adapted than any other to the convenience of commercial nations: it has restricted the formalities of the required proofs concerning the ownership of the different cargoes of the same vessel; it protects navigation against vexatious searches; and, in a word, arrests the abuses and shackles of every kind to which it is exposed.

We are, moreover, convinced that, in the existing war, in which the commerce and navigation of neutrals are subjected to so many interruptions, purely arbitrary, the principle proposed by Mr. Adams would not be more respected than the former; many examples having occurred which show that even neutral vessels laden only with neutral merchandise are liable to be seized and confiscated under all sorts of pretexts, however frivolous.

But it would be useless to extend this discussion; Mr. Adams being convinced, with us, that, instead of hazarding a new stipulation, both eventual and uncertain, it would be better to leave it in suspense until the epoch of a general peace; and then to consider with earnestness the means of insuring the freedom of neutral commerce, and placing it, in future wars, upon a solid basis. Nothing, therefore, remains to be done at present except to suppress, provisionally, the twelfth article of the ancient treaty, and to substitute the following stipulation, to which we suppose that no objection can be made:

"Experience having shown that the principle adopted in the twelfth article of the Treaty of 1785, according to which free ships make the merchandise free, has not been sufficiently respected during the two last wars, and especially in that which is now carried on; and that contradictory dispositions of the principal belligerent Powers not permitting, at the present time, a satisfactory adjustment of the litigated question; the two high contracting parties reserve to themselves the right, after the restoration of a general peace, to resume this subject, either separately between themselves, or conjointly with other Powers whom it also concerns, in order to concert with the great maritime Powers of Europe such arrangements and such permanent principles as may serve to confirm, in future wars, the freedom and safety of neutral navigation and commerce."

Relations with Prussia.

Mr. Adams having, in his last note, replied to the reasons which prevent the Prussian Government from including ship timber in the class of contraband articles, we propose to him the alternative either to retain the thirteenth article of the ancient treaty as it is, or to insert in it, specifically, the list of contraband articles extracted from the eleventh article of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded between Russia and Great Britain, the 20th of June, 1766. If the precaution shall appear necessary, it will suffice to add to the end of the thirteenth article of the new treaty the following passage:

"Shall be considered objects of contraband, cannon, mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, fusils, flints, matches, powder, saltpetre, sulphur, cuirasses, pikes, swords, sword-belts, cartouch-boxes, saddles and bridles, beyond the quantity which may be necessary for the use of the vessel, and beyond that which each man serving on board the vessel, or each passenger, ought to possess; and, in general, all that can be comprised under the denomination of arms, provisions, and munitions of war, of whatever kind they may be."

We only desire to simplify the formalities and the proofs which are required of the owners of vessels, in order to verify the neutrality of the vessel and of the cargo; in this respect, however, we are obliged to consult the rules established by our laws, and the usages received in our maritime tribunals. The document of construction (called beil-brief;) being precisely the one which proves the neutral quality of the ship, it appears impossible to erase it from the list of papers with which the Prussian navigators should be provided. But as this document is not used in the same form in the American Republic, nothing, in our opinion, would prevent the substitution, by American navigators, of the certificate of registry, which is the equivalent for it, and set forth this difference in the new treaty.

In return, we willingly consent to dispense with the muster-roll, which, it appears, the Constitution of the United States does not allow; but it will be preserved, notwithstanding, among the number of documents prescribed by our laws to the Prussian navigators, and this difference will be also declared in the new treaty.

We entirely concur with Mr. Adams in the other modifications proposed by him, respecting the articles 16, 19, 20, 23, and 25; and as we presume that he will readily accede to the equitable observations submitted to his consideration in the present note, we shall expect his assent, in order to reduce the new treaty into proper form, and close, as soon as possible, a negotiation, the prompt and happy termination of which is alike desired by us and him.

FINCKENSTEIN,
ALVENSLEBEN,
HAUGWITZ.

Mr. Adams to the Prussian Ministers.

BERLIN, 24th December, 1798.

The undersigned, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, has seen, with pleasure, in the reply of their Excellencies, in their last note, that almost all the points relating to the renewal of the Treaty of Commerce between His Majesty and the United States, which required discussion, are adjusted; and that, with regard to those upon which some further explanation is still necessary, no difficulty will arise sufficiently serious to retard the conclusion of the negotiation to the entire satisfaction of the two Governments.

He would not hesitate to subscribe to the stipulation proposed by their Excellencies, as a substitute for the 12th article of the ancient treaty, if he could omit the following words: "And the opposing dispositions of the belligerent Powers not permitting the satisfactory adjustment, at the present moment, of the contested question." It is possible that the belligerent Powers may find in these expressions a kind of sanction to their dispositions, which would not accord with the intentions of the high contracting parties; and besides, the undersigned would desire to omit entirely an allusion to a point, of which it is the desire of the two Governments to defer the consideration, rather than to announce it formally as a contested question.

In order to justify the opinion of his Government, on the subject of the principle in question, he believes it his duty to observe that it is not founded on the treaties of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. He considers the principle of the law of nations as absolutely distinct from the engagements stipulated by particular treaties. These cannot establish a fixed principle on this point; because such stipulations bind only the parties by whom they are made, and the persons on whom they operate; and because, too, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, as well as in the fourteenth and fifteenth, different treaties have adopted different rules for each particular case, according to convenience and agreement of the contracting parties.

Rejecting, therefore, all positive engagements stipulated in treaties, it may be well doubted whether, antecedently to the American war, a single example can be found of a maritime belligerent Power who has adopted the principle that enemy's property is protected by a neutral flag. For, without speaking of England, whose system in this respect is known, France by the ordinance of 1744, renewing the provisions of that of 1781, declares enemies' property on board neutral vessels subject to seizure and confiscation. It excepts from this rule the ships of Denmark and the United Provinces, conformably to the treaties then existing between these Powers and France. This ordinance has continued to have its effect, in the tribunals of France, to the epoch of the ordinance of the 26th July, 1778. By the first article of this last, the freedom of enemies' property on board of neutral ships is yielded to neutrals as a favor, but not as a principle of the laws of nations, since the power is reserved to withdraw it at the expiration of six months, if a reciprocal stipulation should not be conceded by the enemy. Spain by the ordinances of the 1st of July, 1779, and 13th of March, 1780, ordered, in like manner, the seizure

It will only be added, that a celebrated publicist, a Prussian subject, who, in the latter part of the present century, wrote a highly esteemed work upon the laws of nations, Vattel, says expressly, (book 3, section 115,) that "when effects belonging to an enemy are found on board a neutral vessel, they may be seized by the laws of war." He cited no example where the opposite principle has been practised or insisted on.

When the system of armed neutrality, however, was announced, the United States, although a belligerent Power, hastened to adopt its principles; and during the period succeeding this epoch in which they were engaged in war, they scrupulously conformed to them. But, on the first occasion, when, as a neutral Power, they might have enjoyed the advantages attached to this system, they saw themselves deprived of these advantages, not only by the Powers who had never acceded to these principles, but also by even the founders of the system. The intentions of the combined Powers, it is true, were exclusively directed against France, but the operation of their measures did not extend the less to all neutrals, and especially to the United States. However peculiar may have been the circumstances of the war, the rights of neutrality could not be thereby affected. The United States have regretted the abandonment of principles favorable to the interests of neutrality, but they have perceived their inability to prevent it; and they are persuaded that equity cannot require of them to be the victims, at the same time, both of the rule and of the exception; to be bound, as a belligerent party, by laws, of the advantages of which, as a neutral Power, they are wholly deprived.

It is the wish, however, of the Government of the United States, to prove that it has no desire to depart from the principles adopted by the Treaty of 1785, except upon occasions when an adherence to those principles would be an act of injustice to the nation whose interests are confided to it. In consequence of the instruction he has received, the undersigned has the honor to propose, in adopting, (with the omission of the words already cited,) the stipulation contained in the note of their Excellencies, as a substitute for the twelfth article, the insertion of a clause to the following effect:

"And if, during this interval, one of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in a war to which the other is neutral, the belligerent Power will respect all the property of enemies laden on board the vessels of the neutral party, provided that the belligerent Power shall acknowledge the same principle with regard to every neutral vessel, and the decision of his maritime tribunals shall conform to it."

If this proposition has not the good fortune to be accepted by their Excellencies, the undersigned takes the liberty to make another; it is to adopt nearly the formula of the Treaty of 1766, between Russia and Great Britain, and to say that, "as to the search of merchant vessels, in time of war, the vessels of war and the private armed vessels of the belligerent Power will conduct themselves as favorably as the object of the then existing war will permit; observing, as much as possible, the principles and rules of the laws of nations, as generally recognised."

He cites this Treaty between Russia and Great Britain, because their Excellencies propose to take it as authority in defining the articles of contraband, and because this article is renewed by the Treaty of Commerce concluded between the same two Powers the 10th (21st) February, 1797.

The undersigned had flattered himself, after their Excellencies' reply to his first note, that ship timber would be the only article of those which he had specified which they would have any difficulty in admitting in the list of contraband. In adopting the proposition to preserve the principles, with regard to contraband, contained in the 13th article of the ancient treaty, he still hopes that they will consent to add the articles cited in his first note, with the exception of ship timber, to the list contained in the Treaty of 1766, between Russia and Great Britain. He had supposed that the stipulation that even contraband articles should not be subject to confiscation would have the tendency to facilitate this arrangement.

It would also, perhaps, be proper to omit the term provisions, which appears synonymous with that of munitions of war, and which is susceptible of being interpreted in a broader sense than that intended by the high contracting parties.

As to what regards the papers to be produced, in order to prove the neutrality of the vessels and their cargoes, the undersigned has the honor to observe, that, in designating certain documents, which the armed vessels of one of the high contracting parties should have the right to demand in time of war of the merchant vessels of the other, the respective Governments do not intend to resist the reciprocal power of ordering, for the municipal regulation of their commerce, whatever document or paper they may think proper to prescribe to their citizens or subjects; that, consequently, the Government of his Majesty may, at all times, require his commercial subjects to have the beil-brief on board their vessels; and, in like manner, the Government of the United States may order their seamen to be provided with a certificate of registry, although neither of these papers may be prescribed by the treaty. But, on the part of both, the nature of this document appears to be rather to prove the ownership of the vessel, on a question concerning the individual and his Government than the neutrality of the vessels, before the officers or tribunals of a foreign Power. It is the very document, on the credit of which the Government relies in granting its protection to the vessels which may be provided with it; but, as it regards foreigners it becomes a superfluous document, when the sea-letter, supported by the signature of public officers, gives still greater authenticity to all that it can attest.

When the armed vessel of a belligerent Power and the merchant vessel of a neutral Power meet together at sea, three objects are presented, to which the first will naturally look in order to ascertain the neutrality of the second—the vessel, the cargo, and the crew. Each of these objects has its own document. The sea-letter is that which particularly concerns the vessel; and, when it is found perfectly regular, it seems unnecessary to confer the right to exact others, the only effect of which would be to confirm what that alone ought sufficiently to prove.

The undersigned has taken the liberty to make these observations, because he has thought that the interests of the two high contracting parties would be equally consulted by not stipulating in a treaty for documents which seem more properly to appertain to the interior administration, and which each Government would probably desire to continue or to change, as its own policy might dictate, without embarrassment or control. A clause to that effect may even be added to this article, where a question may arise respecting the papers. However, if their Excellencies shall continue to think it necessary, the undersigned will not hesitate to specify the beil-brief for the Prussian vessels, and the certificate of registry for those of the United States, among the papers designated in the treaty.

He will also admit the muster-roll for the vessels of the two nations. This paper is not excluded by the Constitution of the United States. It is true, that it is not required by any of their former treaties; but the usage of having it is recently established, in consequence of the inconveniences which have been felt from not possessing it; and the Government will find no difficulty in expressly naming it in the new treaty, so as to prevent the possibility of any misunderstanding on this subject.

As all these papers ought to be stipulated only for the case when one of the high contracting parties shall be at war, and as their sole object is to prove the neutrality of the vessels and their cargoes, it would seem proper to give a delay (of three months, for example,) after the declaration of war, or notification of hostilities, before the expiration of which, these documents shall not be considered absolutely necessary. The justice of a similar arrangement will be evident, when it is considered that some time must be requisite to furnish the vessels of the neutral party with papers, the use of which will naturally cease in time of peace.

The undersigned has also the honor to apprise their Excellencies that, subsequently to the last note he has had the honor to transmit to them, he has received official information of a law of the United States, approved by the President of the United States, the 7th of last July, by which all the Treaties between the United States and France are declared to be no longer obligatory upon the Government and citizens of the United States. The reasons upon which this law is founded are declared in the preamble: "Because the engagements contained in these treaties have been manifestly violated on the part of the Government of France; because the just demands of the United States, for the reparation of these injuries, have been rejected, and their efforts to negotiate an amicable arrangement, upon all the differences existing between the two nations, rejected with indignity; and because, under the authority of the Government of France, a system of predatory violence has been continued, opposed alike to the aforesaid treaties, and to the rights of a free and independent nation." In consequence of this law, it will not be necessary to stipulate, on the part of the United States, in the new treaty, the exceptions in favor of France, proposed in the first note of the undersigned; nor to renew that which is contained in the 19th article of the Treaty of 1785.

The undersigned concludes, by observing, that he only awaits the time which will be convenient to their Excellencies, either to receive the formal project of a treaty which they shall have prepared, or to present one himself, as shall be most acceptable to them.

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

The MINISTERS OF STATE, &c.

No. 144.

BERLIN, 4th April, 1799.

SIR: Since I had the honor of writing to you last, I have received from the department of Foreign Affairs here a note, with a copy of the full powers given by the King to the three Ministers at the head of that department, to renew the Treaty of Commerce between the two Powers, and they sent me, at the same time, the project of a treaty, in the French language. I have replied, by a note containing my observations upon such parts of the projected plan as appeared to me to require them, and have returned the plan, with such alterations noted in the margin as I thought would be necessary or proper, and with a copy of the same plan, as verified by the marginal alterations, in our own language, for the consideration of the Cabinet. I enclose herewith copies of these papers, excepting of the projects for a treaty, which I shall reserve until we shall have agreed upon the tenor of the instrument; and, in the notes themselves, you will see in what respect they differ from the former treaty.

It is more than a fortnight since I delivered to Count Finkenstein my reply, with the two projects; and Count Haugwitz had before had them a fortnight in his possession. He told me that there would be few objections, perhaps none at all, to the alterations I proposed; and I do not apprehend that any further essential difficulty will occur to impede an agreement and the conclusion of the treaty.

I did not think it expedient to insist any further upon comprising naval stores among the articles of contraband, because they had given up the point of making free ships free goods; and, as it was evidently with reluctance on their part, I considered myself fully authorized by your instructions to show a disposition to comply with their wishes in the other particular. These articles have, indeed never been allowed by this country to be contraband, and even Great Britain has generally considered them as free, so far as Prussia is concerned. In the general Prussian code of laws, they are expressly named as not contraband, and they could not have been admitted under the opposite denomination, without repealing a law which has reference to all other nations as well as to the United States.

The alteration in the twenty-first article I agreed, without hesitation, to adopt, as it appeared much more equitable than the former arrangement, and as the salvage allowed to ships of war is the same which the British Courts of Admiralty have allowed in cases of recapture of American vessels from French cruisers, though without any stipulation upon the subject by treaty. And I have not understood that any complaint has been made against this disposition.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

The Prussian Ministers to Mr. Adams.

BERLIN, 19th February, 1799.

The note, dated the 24th December last, which Mr. Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, has done us the honor to transmit, brings us to the close of the interesting negotiation with which we have been occupied with him during his residence at Berlin; and we now find ourselves prepared to communicate the subjoined projet of a new treaty, upon which it will be necessary to make a few observations.

We had proposed to him, in our note of the 29th November, to omit entirely the discussion which has arisen on the subject of the twelfth article, relating to neutral navigation; and we are now governed by the same desire in adopting, without variation, the stipulation which ought to be substituted for the one contained in the ancient treaty. Agreeably to the desire expressed by Mr. Adams, we have expunged the passage which refers to "the contradictory dispositions of the present belligerent Powers;" and following the analogy of the treaty concluded in 1766 between Russia and Great Britain, we have added an additional clause, which relates to the search of merchant vessels in time of war; by means of which this article will be found perfectly regular.

It is different with the thirteenth article, which concerns objects of contraband. We have declared to Mr. Adams, in our first note of the 25th of September, 1798, "that if it should be necessary to specify them in detail in the new treaty, we shall be obliged to restrict them to those which have been stipulated and adopted as such in the maritime convention concluded between Prussia and Russia, the 8th of May, 1781, after the example of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded between Russia and Great Britain, the 20th of June 1766."

According to this principle, we have declined to place ship timber on the list of articles of contraband; and we have also tacitly omitted the other exceptions which Mr. Adams has proposed to us. These are, also, the productions of the soil, or of the industry of Prussia, which have been considered in every war as lawful merchandise, and which we have no power to prohibit.

Mr. Adams will, therefore, be willing, after our example, to adhere to the ancient list, which has, to the present time, served as a rule for all the maritime Powers. We have in this article omitted the word provisions, which seemed to him liable to objections.

To manifest to this Minister how much we are disposed to enter into his views, as well as to abridge superfluous formalities, we consent to suppress the document showing the building of the vessel, and we have, therefore, passed it over in silence to the 14th article; so that, in time of war, neutral vessels will have occasion for no other papers, except the sea-letter, muster roll, and charter party. Agreeably to the proposition of Mr. Adams, a delay of three months, after a declaration of war, is granted to the respective navigators to provide themselves with the required documents.

Finally, we have expunged from the nineteenth and twentieth articles the exceptions in favor of France, which have been revoked by the law of the United States of the 7th of last July.

After having thus yielded to the propositions of Mr. Adams, and to the views of his Government all that depended upon us, it remains for us to invite his attention to an article of the ancient treaty, which has not yet been noticed in the course of the negotiation, and which seems, nevertheless, to require revision. We refer to the twenty-first article, which has established, in 1785, exorbitant insurances, at the expense of the merchant vessels, which, in time of war, may be retaken from the enemy by vessels of war, or private armed vessels of either nation. The promised remuneration to private armed vessels has been fixed at one-third of the value of the vessel and cargo, when the vessel shall not have been in the power of the enemy more than twenty-four hours, and the owner would be condemned to lose the whole should the vessel be retaken after twenty-four hours.

As to the vessels of war, a thirtieth of the value is adjudged them, in the first case, and a tenth in the second. At the time the ancient treaty was concluded, these were the customary rates; but a new code of laws, subsequently introduced into the Prussian monarchy, has adopted on this subject the following regulation—Title 9, § 208-10:

"That if a Prussian privateer, or vessel of war, should retake a ship or merchandise belonging to the subjects of the King, or to those of a friendly neutral Power, the captor ought not to retain his booty, except where the vessel shall have been carried, before the recapture, into a neutral or enemy's port. But if the recapture has taken place before the vessel, or cargo, shall have been carried into an enemy's or neutral port, they shall be restored to the first owner upon a recompence being made; this recompence, in the case of private armed vessels, is fixed at one-third of the value; and, where vessels of war are concerned, it shall be determined, in each particular case, by the maritime tribunals."

This regulation, which has been sanctioned by a royal ordinance, published and dated the 24th of September, 1798, has, in many respects, moderated the stipulations of the Treaty of 1785, and especially has abolished the short and unjust delay of twenty-four hours, which formerly, to the injury of the legitimate owner, sufficed to determine the fate of a vessel captured by the enemy.

A short time, however, after this law had been introduced into the dominions of the King, the Court of Madrid invited His Majesty, last November, "to observe, reciprocally, in future, between the two Powers, the usages established by the maritime ordinances of Spain, declaring that every national vessel, friend or neutral, captured from the enemy, shall be restored to the owner, for a remuneration of one-eighth of the value, in the case of a vessel of war, and one-sixth to privateers only."

The King hastened to adopt the principle of humanity, thus proposed for his imitation by His Catholic Majesty; and the two Courts have accordingly agreed to conform to it.

It is to be presumed that the United States of America, who, in their first treaty with Prussia, have so clearly manifested their generous intention to withdraw, as much as possible, navigation and commerce from the effects of war, will not, on this occasion, evince a disposition less liberal than others; and we therefore believe that we can appeal with confidence to their Minister. He will himself perceive that we could not be at liberty to agree to the stipulations which would impair the sanctions of an existing law, and that, therefore, in any event, we shall be obliged to conform the twenty-first article to the first modifications herein announced. We would submit it to his option, whether in the treaty to be concluded he will adopt these modifications, or prefer, as a substitute, the still more moderate regulations derived from the maritime ordinances of Spain. In this respect, we will do whatever he may think proper to suggest; and we only expect his reply, to supply the article which remains in blank.

As soon as this shall be done, supposing that we are now agreed on all the other stipulations of our projet, we will cause two draughts of the treaty to be prepared, and will not fail to inform him of the day when we may assemble, for the purpose of proceeding to the signature and to the exchange of the full powers. In anticipation of which, we have the honor to communicate herewith a copy of that with which we are provided.

FINCKENSTEIN,
ALVENSLEBEN.
HAUGWITZ.

To Mr. ADAMS, Minister, &c. of the U. S.

Full powers to the Ministers of State and of the Cabinet, Count of Finckenstein, Baron of Alvensleben, and Count of Haugwitz, having for its object the renewal of the Treaty of Commerce and Friendship with the United States of America.

We, FREDERICK WILLIAM the Third, by the grace of God, King of Prussia, make known to whomsoever it may concern:

The United States of America having proposed to us the renewal of the Treaty of Commerce and Friendship which our august predecessor, King Frederick the Second of glorious memory, concluded with them the 10th September, 1785; and it being equally our intention to establish on a solid basis the ties of commerce and good intelligence which, to the present time, have so happily subsisted between Prussia and the American Republic: we have nominated, constituted, and deputed, and do nominate, constitute, and depute our Ministers Plenipotentiary—

Charles William, Count of Finckenstein, our Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet; Knight of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle, and Commander of that of St. John of Jerusalem;

Philip Charles, Baron of Alvensleben, our Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet; Knight of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle, and of that of St. John of Jerusalem;

And Christian Henri-Curce, Count of Haugwitz, our Minister of State, of War, and of the Cabinet, Knight of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle:

To negotiate with John Quincy Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America near our Court, the Treaty of Commerce and Friendship which ought to be substituted for the former; giving them, by these presents, jointly and separately, full and absolute power to confer and deliberate on the objects relating thereto, to conclude the stipulations which a change of circumstances has rendered necessary, and thereafter to sign a new treaty; and such other conventions, declarations, or acts, as they may judge suitable, in order to consummate their negotiation: promising, upon the faith and word of a King, to consider as right, to hold firm and stable, forever, and to accomplish and execute punctually all that our said Ministers shall have stipulated, concluded, and signed, in virtue of the present full powers, without either contravening it, or permitting its contravention by others, from any cause, or on any pretext whatsoever; as also to cause our letters of ratification, in proper form, to be issued and delivered, in order to be exchanged within the time which may be agreed upon.

In faith of which, we have signed these presents, and have caused our royal seal to be affixed thereto.

Given at Berlin the 10th of December, in the year of our Lord 1798, and of our reign the second.

FREDERICK WILLIAM. [L. S.]

Mr. Adams to the Ministers of Prussia.

BERLIN, March 16, 1799.

The Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America has received the note of their Excellencies, dated the 19th February, accompanied by a copy of their full power, and the project which they have been pleased to transmit. He hastens to make some observations in reply, for which he solicits the indulgence they have been kind enough to extend to his previous representations on the same subject.

Relations with Prussia.

The ancient treaty of 1785 was concluded and signed, as an original, in two languages, the French and English; and the undersigned hopes that the new treaty will be executed in the same manner. Relying on this expectation, he has now the honor to transmit the project in the English language; in which he has repeated the terms of the ancient treaty, in every article where the project of their Excellencies has preserved the French terms, with the exception of two inconsiderable changes, rendered necessary by the alterations in the Constitution of the United States: the one in the preamble, the other in the fourth article.

As to the new articles, a translation has generally been made by the undersigned, in the project which their Excellencies have communicated. He would, in his opinion, very ill return the courtesy which he has received in the course of this negotiation, and not less imperfectly exhibit the deference which his Government has desired him to manifest towards His Prussian Majesty, if he insisted further on the article of contraband. He has, therefore, in this respect, adopted entirely the provisions contained in the project of their Excellencies.

Upon the same principle, he has not hesitated to adopt, in relation to maritime recaptures, the alternative of those proposed by their Excellencies, which he finds has been sanctioned by the approbation and preference of His Majesty the King of Prussia; being persuaded that his Government will do itself the honor of participating in those sentiments of humanity which have dictated that preference.

The term "high," applied to the contracting parties, is not found in the articles copied from the ancient treaty. It is proposed to erase it from the new articles, not only for the sake of uniformity, but because the United States, having declined the adoption of any title of distinction, have never applied this epithet in any of their treaties.

In the thirteenth article, the terms "heretofore called" do not appear to apply appropriately to the articles of contraband; since the article itself contains a list of what is contraband. On that account it is proposed to expunge them.

In the fourteenth article, it is wished to add, that the charter-party, or bill of lading, as well as the muster-roll, shall be accompanied by the certificates of the public officers who are accustomed to issue them, in order to give to these papers a degree of authenticity, without which no documents would be entitled to credit, even in the private transactions of individuals. The undersigned believes that these documents are in use within the Prussian dominions, and that their Excellencies have intended to comprise them within the words "bills of lading," and "muster-roll." But as these certificates are not an essential part of these papers, and as these papers themselves are only necessary in a time of maritime war, it would perhaps be better to name them expressly. Another consideration appears to render these certificates necessary; the bills of lading, on board of American vessels, very frequently designate only the bales and boxes, with their marks and numbers, without specifying their contents, as is required of Prussian navigators by the laws of this country.

The project of the undersigned has slightly varied the clause which gives to the navigators a delay of three months, in order to procure the documents necessary in time of war. It only exacts these documents from vessels which shall have sailed from the ports of the neutral Power more than three months after the neutral Government has knowledge of the war; because, on the one hand, the vessel may be at sea more than three months after a declaration of war, without possessing these documents, if it shall have sailed from a neutral port before, or a little after this declaration; and, on the other, the intention of the contracting parties is not to exempt neutral vessels from the production of every document that can prove their neutrality; (an exemption which the enemies of the belligerent party may abuse, by demanding it without right,) but to allow the vessels necessarily unprovided with these specified documents every other reasonable and equivalent proof.

In the fifteenth article it may be proper to omit the stipulation that ships of war shall not approach neutral vessels within cannon shot. Although this engagement is frequently to be found among modern treaties, it has been seldom or never observed. It would be always difficult, and sometimes impossible, to observe. In tempestuous weather a boat could be rarely sent the distance which would be necessary, if the vessel should remain out of cannon's reach. In moderate weather, the two vessels must stop while a boat is passing between them, and this would occasion a useless waste of time, both to the neutral and belligerent vessels; besides, in binding one's self by this stipulation towards a neutral, an obligation is also created in favor of an enemy, since nothing is more usual with belligerent vessels than attempts to escape an enemy under the mask of a neutral flag. But, if this clause were observed, an armed ship would be arrested in the pursuit of every vessel that could raise a neutral flag; and, if a pretended neutral were at liberty to remain out of the reach of cannon while a boat could be sent for the examination of papers, facilities would be given to fraud.

In the same article, the words "passports and documents" seem more proper than "sea-letters and passports," which have been borrowed from the ancient treaty, which does not require the documents designated in the new one.

In the sixteenth article, to avoid the possible construction that the ships of one of the parties in the ports of the other might be subjected to an embargo, for the purpose of being employed on some special occasion, it is proposed to substitute for the words "public or private" the word "whatsoever."

To the nineteenth article a clause has been added, to make it conform to the subsisting treaties between the United States and Great Britain, to which the undersigned referred in his note to their Excellencies, dated the 11th July of the last year.

Relations with Prussia.

In submitting these remarks to the consideration of their Excellencies, he has only to add, that, whenever they shall have decided whether it will be their pleasure to sign the treaty in the two languages, he will cause two copies of the original to be prepared in English, that he may be ready, at the time it may suit their convenience, to proceed to the exchange of the full powers and to the signature.

No. 147.

Extract of a letter from John Quincy Adams, Minister, &c. at Berlin, to the Secretary of State, dated

"MAY 10, 1799.

"I received a few days since a note from the Cabinet Ministers, with a new project for a treaty, in which they have complied with all the alterations I had proposed in my last note, excepting in one particular, and for that they offer an expedient, which, I think, will answer perfectly well the purpose. I have therefore replied, and sent them a draught in our language entirely conformable to their plan; so that, at present, we are fully agreed upon the tenor of the treaty, the several copies of which only remain to be drawn up and signed, which I hope will be done in the course of a month."

The Prussian Ministers to Mr. Adams.

BERLIN, April 30, 1799.

In the reply we have now to make to the note of Mr. Adams, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States, dated the 16th of March, but few observations will be necessary.

The greater part of the alterations which he has recently suggested present no essential difficulty. We have, therefore, unhesitatingly adopted them, in conformity with his desire. The only exception is in the fourteenth article, in which he proposes to stipulate "that, in times of war, the charter-parties, bills of lading, and lists of the ship's company, shall be issued by the magistrates or public officers of the place from whence the ship shall have sailed." We are informed, from the statements with which we have been furnished on this subject, that, in some of our provinces, the practice has prevailed for a long time, to issue the above named sea-papers judicially; but that, in others, our merchants and owners of vessels are content with making their contracts before a notary or a commissary of justice, and sometimes even under a private seal; and they are, in this respect, the more enabled to follow the established usages and consult their own convenience, inasmuch as there is no law enacted by the Sovereign, or recognised by the maritime tribunals, which has required of them more rigorous formalities. It is not, therefore, within our competency to impose on the subjects of the King a new restraint, which would conflict with their rights and privileges; and the nearest approximation which we can make to the views of Mr. Adams is, to add to the fourteenth article "that the documents shall always be issued in the form established at the place from whence the ship shall have sailed." He will be the first to acknowledge that it is not in our power to go beyond this; and, in justification of our decision, we rely upon that equity of which he has given, in the course of the negotiation, so many satisfactory proofs.

All the residue of the treaty is in conformity with his desires; and we can anticipate no objection to the second project we herewith communicate. We pray him, however, to collate once more the English translation, herewith also transmitted, and to change the latter, in the passage redrawn in the 14th article, according to the alteration in the French text.

Perhaps, also, it will be necessary to retrench the last period of the same article, as well as the 7th, 19th, and 21st articles, to assimilate them still more to the expressions and phraseology which we have adopted in the original.

After Mr. Adams shall have had the goodness to return these two copies, we will not delay the conclusion of the treaty in duplicates, each in the two languages; and nothing will afterwards prevent our proceeding with him to the signature.

Mr. Adams to the Ministers of Prussia.

BERLIN, May 4, 1799.

The Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America has the honor to return to their Excellencies the new project of the treaty which they have been pleased to transmit to him, with the copy in English, which has been made to conform to it throughout.

In adopting, without hesitation, all the changes which their Excellencies have thought necessary, as well in relation to the papers stipulated by the 14th article, as to the phraseology of the 17th, 19th, and 21st articles, he will confine himself to the single remark that, in his project, in order to designate the modification at the close of the 19th article, he has used the precise expressions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain; and as it is the extent of the engagement formed by a previous treaty, which ought to serve as the measure of its actual modification, he understands that the change of phraseology, in this article, will occasion no difference in its meaning.

He will be ready to sign the treaty as soon as the copies shall be prepared, and at whatever moment their Excellencies may signify their wishes.

BERLIN, July 13, 1799.

SIR: I have the honor to send with this the two originals, in the French language and our own, of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce between His Majesty the King of Prussia, and the Relations with Tunis.

United States, signed on the 11th instant. I am, with great respect, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

TUNIS.

[Communicated to the Senate, December 13, 1799.]

Gentlemen of the Senate:

In conformity with your recommendation, expressed in your resolution of March 6, 1798, I have entered into a friendly negotiation with the Bey and Government of Tunis on the subject of the fourteenth article of the Treaty of Peace and Friendship between the United States and that Power. The result of that negotiation I now lay before the Senate, for their consideration.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Dec. 13, 1799.

Extract from the instructions of Richard O'Brien, William Eaton, and James Leander Cathcart, appointed to negotiate alterations of the Treaty with Tunis.

By the powers herewith delivered to you, from the President of the United States of America, you are authorized to confer, negotiate, and conclude, with the Bey and Regency of Tunis, on the alterations to be made in the treaty between the United States and that Power, as arranged in the month of August, 1797, by the agency of Joseph Etienne Famin, who was employed by Joel Barlow, Esq., Agent and Consul General of the United States at Algiers.

The important object of discussion arises out of the fourteenth article of that treaty, of which the following is a translation:

"ARTICLE 14. The citizens of the United States of America who shall transport into the Kingdom of Tunis the merchandise of their country, in the vessels of their nation, shall pay three per cent. duty. Such as may be laden by such citizens, under a foreign flag, coming from the United States or elsewhere, shall pay ten per cent. duty. Such as may be laden by foreigners on board of American vessels, coming from any place whatever, shall also pay ten per cent. duty. If any Tunisian merchant wishes to carry merchandise of his country, under any flag whatever, into the United States of America, and on his own account, he shall pay three per cent. duty."

This article is subversive of our great revenue system: it is, besides, without reciprocity. It cannot be important to the Bey and Regency, though ruinous to us.

The revenues of the United States arise chiefly from duties on goods imported. These duties generally exceed ten per cent. They are imposed on our own merchants, and increased on the merchants of foreign nations. Our treaties with those nations stipulate that no higher duties shall be paid by their subjects than by those of the most favored nation. Consequently, if this article in the treaty with Tunis should be ratified by the American Government, the duties on all the goods imported into the United States by the subjects of those foreign nations must be reduced to three per cent. This would necessarily involve the reduction of the duties on goods imported in our own vessels, or our whole navigation would sink under the unequal burden. This sacrifice, then, it is impossible to make. We should thereby deprive ourselves of the means of supporting our own Government, of paying our public debts, and even of fulfilling our engagement with the Bey and other Barbary Powers. While no advantage would arise to the Bey and his proper subjects, probably a few European and Jewish merchants, settled at Tunis, would alone be benefited.

For these reasons, the President cannot apprehend any difficulty in your obtaining the Bey's consent to abolish the fourteenth article before mentioned. In its place may be substituted a stipulation that the commerce of the United States with Tunis, and of Tunis with the United States, should be on the footing of the commerce of the most favored nations, for the time being, respectively. At all events, the fourteenth article must be rejected, if war should be the consequence.

This evil, however, by every soothing and persuasive measure, you will endeavor to prevent. Should, it nevertheless, be insisted on, it will evidently be for the purpose of extorting further stipulations for the delivery of money or stores; but the demand must be resisted. As the article is destitute of any reasonable foundation, without a precedent in any treaty with any other Barbary Power, and strikingly wanting reciprocity, a submission to it would be dishonorable to the United States. If, to prevent a war, anything should be added to the very burdensome contract already made, that addition should not have any reference to the fourteenth article, but be stipulated at large, on the conclusion of the new article or articles which you may negotiate.

The Senate have revisited the ratification of the treaty, with the exception of the fourteenth article alone; but the eleventh and twelfth articles are objectionable. In firing salutes in the ports of the two Powers reciprocally, to return gun for gun will be proper; but, as the Tunisian vessels of war would probably never enter the ports of the United States, while the vessels of war of the latter were likely often to enter the ports of Tunis, to stipulate for the donation of a barrel of powder for every gun which shall be required for the salute, was to authorize the levying of a contribution in a way not very honorable on either side. It will, therefore, be desirable to expunge this stipulation, and to confine this article to mutual salutes, gun for gun; and it will be very well to limit the number to fifteen, the federal salute. The twentieth article of the treaty with Algiers requires a mutual salute of twenty-one guns; and, if there be any motive to induce the Bey of Tunis to require a salute of more than fifteen guns, the number may be increased to twenty-one. If, nevertheless, the Bey should persist in claiming a barrel of powder for every gun fired in his ports, for a salute to a vessel of war of the United States, then it will be of more consequence to limit the number of guns to at least fifteen, and at most to twenty-one.

In the twelfth article it is stipulated that "the subjects or citizens of the two nations shall be protected by the government or commandants of the places where they may be, and not by the other authorities of the country." This is not very intelligible: possibly it may mean that the officers on the spot shall furnish such protection, without obliging the citizens of the United States in the Tunisian dominions, or the subjects of Tunis in the United States, to seek it at a distance, if the seat of Government be distant; but, if such protection be withheld by subordinate officers, the persons needing protection ought not to be forbidden to resort for justice to the chief authority in each nation. But the clause most objectionable in this article is that which permits the Government of Tunis to compel an American captain to put his vessel into its service at such freight as the Government itself shall prescribe. This will put it into the power of any merchant resident at Tunis, who has the ear of the Bey or of one of his chief officers, to command the service of American vessels for compensations wholly inadequate and unreasonable. The fourteenth article of the treaty with Algiers is proper and honorable: "Should the Dey want to freight any American vessel in the Regency or Turkey, said vessel not being engaged, in consequence of the friendship subsisting between the two nations, he expects to have the preference given him, on his paying the same freight offered by any other nation."

The three articles in question may be changed into the following forms:

"ARTICLE 11. When a vessel of war of one of the parties shall enter a port of the other in which there is a fortification, he shall be saluted with fifteen guns, which salute the vessel of war shall return, gun for gun."

ARTICLE 12. The first part may stand as it is as far as the words (in the English translation,) "which may extend to merchant vessels, but not to those of war;" after which the article may be thus continued: "The subjects and citizens of the two nations, respectively, shall be protected, in the places where they may be, by the officers of the Government there existing; but, on failure of such protection, and for redress of every injury, the party may resort to the chief authority in each country, by whom adequate protection and complete justice shall be rendered."

"In case the Government of Tunis shall have need of an American vessel for its service, such vessel being within the Regency, [and not previously engaged,] the Government shall have the preference, on its paying the same freight as the Tunisian merchants usually pay for the same service, or at the like rate, if the service be without a customary precedent." The words, in brackets, [and not previously engaged] if objected to, may be omitted.

"ARTICLE 14. All vessels belonging to the citizens and inhabitants of the United States shall be permitted to enter the different ports of the kingdom of Tunis, and freely trade with the subjects and inhabitants thereof, on paying the usual duties that are paid by all other nations at peace with the Regency. In like manner, all vessels belonging to the subjects and inhabitants of the kingdom of Tunis shall be permitted to enter the different ports of the United States, and freely trade with the citizens and inhabitants thereof, on paying the usual duties that are paid by all other nations at peace with the United States."

Or, if preferred, the fourteenth article may be in the following form:

"The commerce of the citizens and inhabitants of the United States with the kingdom of Tunis, and of the subjects and inhabitants of the kingdom of Tunis with the United States, shall be on the footing of the most favored nations, for the time being, respectively."

Some such form is indispensable: it is impossible to place the commerce of the Tunisian subjects on a better footing than that of the most favored nation; and there must be an exact reciprocity in the stipulation.

A copy of the act of the Senate on this subject is annexed. By that you will see that an alteration in the fourteenth article only is essential; but you will aim at the proposed alterations in the eleventh and twelfth articles.

SINKING FUND.

[Communicated to the Senate, December 11, 1799.]

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund respectfully report to Congress as follows: That the measures which have been authorized by the Board, subsequent to their report of the 15th of December, 1798, so far as the same has been completed, are fully detailed in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to this Board, dated the 10th of December, 1799, and in the proceedings of the officers of the Treasury therein referred to, which are herewith transmitted, and prayed to be received as part of this report.

SAMUEL LIVERMORE,

President of the Senate, pro tem.

DECEMBER 11, 1799.

The Secretary of the Treasury respectfully reports to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund: That no purchases of the public debt of the United States have been made, since the date of the last report to Congress, on the 15th day of December, 1798; and that the sums of capital stock heretofore purchased and transferred, prior to the present year, in trust for the United States, the interest whereon is appropriated by law towards the reduction of the public debt, amount to two millions seven hundred and thirty-four thousand four hundred and seventy-nine dollars and forty-four cents, as will more particularly appear from the document hereto annexed, marked A.

That the following sums have been applied towards the discharge of the principal debt of the

Mint of the United States.

United States, since the date of the last report to Congress, of the 15th of December, 1798:

1. To the fourth instalment of the six per cent. stock, bearing a present interest, which, pursuant to the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," passed on the 3d day of March, 1795, and the act in addition thereto, passed on the 28th day of April, 1796, became payable on the first day of January, 1799, the sum of - - $674,938 02
2. To the payment of the seventh instalment of the subscription loan for bank stock, due on the first day of December, 1798, - - 200,000 00
3. To the payment of the second instalment of a loan of one million of guilders, obtained in Holland, and which fell due the present year, pursuant to a contract, dated the 1st of June, 1787, estimated at 40 cents per guilder, - 80,000 00
4. To the payment of the first instalment of a loan of one million of guilders, obtained in Holland, and which fell due in the present year, pursuant to a contract, dated the 13th of March, 1788, estimated at 40 cents per guilder - - 80,000 00

Amounting in the whole to - $1,034,938 02

The payments before enumerated have been made out of the following funds:

1. The interest on the sums which accrued upon the stock purchased, and vested in the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, in trust for the United States, as particularly stated in the document hereto annexed, marked B, $89,375 72
2. The fund arising from the payment of debts, which originated prior to the present Constitution of the United States, as particularly stated in the document marked C, - - 6,710 68
3. The fund arising from the sales of lands in the Northwestern Territory, as particularly stated in the document hereto annexed, marked D, - - 11,963 11
4. The fund arising from dividends on the capital stock belonging to the United States, in the Bank of the United States, from the 3d of March, 1795, to the 30th of June, 1798, after deducting the interest paid on the subscription loan for the same period, as particularly stated in the document hereto annexed, marked E, - - 144,889 08
5. The fund arising from a loan obtained of the Bank of the United States, pursuant to the 6th section of the act passed on the 3d of March, 1795, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," and agreeably to a resolution of the Board of Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, of the 15th December, 1798, approved by the President of the United States, 200,000 00

6. The proceeds of the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported; on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on spirits distilled within the United States, and stills, appropriated by the 8th section of the act of March 3, 1795, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," being for the period, and in reference to the objects, mentioned in this report, 581,999 43

Making in the whole an equal amount to the reimbursement before mentioned.

There remained in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, as agent of the Board of stant, the sum of five hundred thousand seven hundred and eighteen dollars and fifty-five cents, which, with the growing produce of other appropriated funds, will be sufficient for the reimbursement, at the close of the present year, of the fifth instalment of the six per cent. stock, bearing a present interest, and the eighth instalment of the subscription loan for stock of the Bank of the United States, which reimbursements are required to be made by the 11th section of the act of Congress, passed on the 3d of March, 1795, hereinbefore mentioned.

All which is most respectfully submitted, by
OLIVER WOLCOTT,

Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 10, 1799.

[The tables of details are omitted.]

THE MINT.

[Communicated to Congress, January 8, 1800.]

To the President of the United States:

The Director of the Mint respectfully reports, that there has been coined and issued from the Mint, from the first day of January, to the thirty-first day of December, 1799, inclusive, the quantity of 213,285 dollars, in gold coin; 423,515 dollars, in silver coin; and 9,106 dollars and 68 cents, in copper cents; amounting to 645,906 dollars and 68 cents, or 1,365,681 pieces of coin; which, added to the former returns, makes the whole of the coinage, since the establishment of the Mint, 696,530 dollars in gold, 1,210,158 dollars and 75 cents in silver, and 50,111 dollars and 42 cents in copper cents; making the amount of the whole coinage of the Mint, 1,962,800 dollars and 17 cents; all which will more fully appear by the enclosed returns from the Treasurer of the Mint; as also, that the coinage of the last year has exceeded that of any former year, by 100,208 dollars 68 cents.

It is almost needless to observe, that the 50,000 dollars in copper coin, required by the second section of the act of Congress, passed on the 8th of May, 1792, being now completed, it becomes necessary for the Treasurer of the United States to comply with the provision of the said section, by giving the public notice therein mentioned.

The Mint has been regularly supplied with bullion, both gold and silver, so as to keep it in constant operation, on the present establishment, during the year past, excepting two months, in which the works were totally stopped, on account of the then prevailing fever; and there is a rational prospect that the supply will be continued for the present year.

From the late arrangements with regard to supplies of copper planchettes, for the coinage of cents, there is no doubt but that one press, equal to the coining of 1,400 per day, may be kept in constant operation.

It becomes necessary for the Director to draw the attention of the President to the act of Congress for the establishment of the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States. By the original institution of the Mint, it was established at the seat of Government. By the sixth section of the act of Congress, above referred to, it is enacted "that all offices attached to the seat of Government, shall be removed to the permanent seat of the Government of the United States, by their respective holders, on the 1st day of December next." A question has arisen under this act, whether the Department of the Mint is included therein or not. If it is, without further provision by law, the Mint must be removed, with the other Departments, agreeably to the directions of that act; and if it is not, many necessary provisions must be made by law, applicable to the Mint being carried on at a distance from the seat of Government. The doubtful consequences of a removal must strike every person acquainted with the business of the Mint, as it is in a great measure supported by the bullion passing through the different banks of this city, and for want of which, it would frequently be without the means of coinage, while the expense would be nearly the same to the Government. The Director, therefore, thinks it is his duty respectfully to submit to the President the propriety of bringing this subject before Congress, in the early part of the session; this step is rendered more obviously necessary, from the present state of the machinery of the Mint. The works ought to be kept in perfect repair, unless they are so soon to be removed; in which case some parts, not worth the transportation to so great a distance, might be suffered to remain as they are, or barely kept in such repair as to answer for immediate use.

The Director is sorry to observe, that the practice of melting down the coin of the United States, by workmen in gold and silver, is, he fears, becoming too common, to the manifest loss of the United States. As there are not any laws prohibiting it, every one is left to his own discretion, which, from the certainty of the standard, becomes so great a convenience, if not a pecuniary advantage, as to render the prevalence of the practice almost beyond a doubt, if not prohibited by law.

All which is respectfully submitted to the President.

BENJAMIN RUSH.

The DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

*Mint of the United States.

[Communicated to the Senate, March 14, 1800.]

Mr. HILLHOUSE, from the Committee to whom was referred the Message of the President of the United States, of the 8th day of January, 1800, together with the Report of the Director of the Mint, of the first of January last, made the following report:

That the existing law requires the removal of the Mint to the permanent seat of Government; that such removal would, in many respects, be inconvenient; but the policy of keeping up that establishment, in a situation where its operations will not be under the immediate superintendency and direction of the principal officers of Government, is questionable.

It appears by official reports, that, on the 31st of December, 1799, there had been coined and issued from the Mint, since its first establishment, in gold, $696,530; in silver, $1,216,158 75; and in copper, $50,111 42; amounting, in the whole, to $1,962,800 17. That the expense, during the same period, has been $213,336 02, of which sum there has been reimbursed by the payment of cents and half cents into the Treasury, $48,041 42; leaving a balance of $175,254 60; an expense, in the opinion of the committee, disproportionate to the advantage which has been derived from a circulation of the coins of the United States, which have been very limited, and mostly confined to places in the vicinity of the Mint.

To furnish coin sufficient for a circulating medium throughout the United States would be impracticable, unless the powers of the Mint should be greatly increased, and the practice of melting down the coin, and the exportation to foreign countries, prevented; which may be done by debasing the coin—a measure which the committee cannot recommend.

The providing a fixed and permanent standard, by which the value of property, contracts for money, and foreign coins, shall be regulated, is an object of great importance. This may be effectually done without the aid of a permanent Mint establishment: for it is not an indispensable requisite, that the whole circulating medium should be of the coins of the United States. Wholly to exclude foreign coins from circulation, if not impracticable, would be attended with great inconvenience, especially in the extreme parts of the Union.

The banks afford the most effectual guard against the circulation of base coin; a regard to their own interest will induce caution, and such coin will not be there received for more than its intrinsic value; which will fix the rate at which it will have a currency. An authority might be, by law, vested in the bank, for ascertaining the intrinsic value of coins of a new impression, by assaying them at the expense of the United States: for these purposes the present Mint establishment cannot be necessary.

Causes, in their nature temporary, have hitherto furnished a great proportion of the bullion which has been coined at the Mint, and the committee has not discovered any mode which can in future be relied on, for furnishing a regular and certain supply, but that of prohibiting the circulation of foreign coins, and converting them into bullion, which seems to have been the mode contemplated. In addition to the inconvenience attending this measure, the committee are strongly impressed with an apprehension, that it will be ineffectual, unless the transporting bullion to the Mint, and the replacing the value in coin, is to be at the risk and expense of the United States: for the difference in value between bullion and coin will be so small, that no individual would be induced to take upon himself the risk and expense: and the vast extent of the territory of the United States, the foreign commerce which is carried on from the various ports, almost wholly disconnected from, and independent of each other, and there being no place where the trade of this country is, or can be concentrated, will always make that risk and expense an object of no small importance.

The furnishing a supply of cents and half cents sufficient for circulation, would, in the opinion of the committee, be a desirable object, but they are well satisfied that the Mint, upon its present establishment, will not furnish such supply. The efforts of almost seven years have done very little towards it. Perhaps a more economical, and the most effectual, mode would be by contract.

Though the coining of gold and silver may, at times, be deemed expedient, there will still remain a doubt as to the propriety of keeping up the present Mint establishment: and the committee have no hesitation in declaring it as their opinion that a plan may be devised, which will be more eligible, and better comport with economy, and the interest of the United States, for securing every object of importance in relation to a national coin.

As the removal of the Mint must be attended with expense, and probably a derangement of many of the officers, if a change of the system is to take place, the present is beyond a doubt the most convenient time for effecting it.

The committee, therefore, recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for repealing the first section of the act, entitled "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States," and such other sections, and parts of sections, of said act, and other acts, as relate to the establishment of a Mint, and to provide for taking care of the materials and property appertaining to the Mint, and which belong to the United States.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report a plan for furnishing the United States with cents and half cents, and such other coins as shall be deemed necessary or expedient.

ADDITIONAL REVENUES.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., April 30, 1800.]

Mr. HARPER made the following report: The Committee of Ways and Means having, in a former report, wherein they recommended a loan of three millions and a half for the service of the present year, adverted to the propriety of providing permanent revenues, equal to the interest of the debt to be incurred, and to the gradual and timely extinguishment of the principal, now beg leave to call the attention of the House again to that important subject; on which they submit the following report:

The first point which presented itself for the consideration of the committee, in examining this subject, was "the amount for which it would be proper to establish additional revenue at this time." This must depend on the present and future increase of permanent expenditure, compared with the probable amount of permanent revenue from existing taxes.

When Congress, in the year 1798, was compelled, by the continued aggressions of a foreign Power, to commence active and extensive preparations for defence, by sea and land, the ordinary expenditure of the Government, including the interest of the public debt, the payment on account of the principal, and an adequate allowance for occasional grants and incidental expenses, was something less than seven millions of dollars. No increase, of any consequence, has been made in this expenditure, since that time, except what was occasioned by the interest of the debt, which the measures necessary for the defence of the country forced Congress to contract. As this debt amounts to five millions, at eight per cent., the increase, on that account is $400,000.

The continuation of those measures, for some time longer, having rendered it necessary, in the opinion of the House, to contract a further debt of three millions and a half, for the present year, that measure, if ultimately adopted, and carried into effect on the same terms with the former, which may perhaps be found unavoidable, will induce a further increase of $280,000 in the ordinary expenditure of the Government, making, in the whole, an increase of $680,000 for the interest of new loans.

It is known that, at the beginning of next year, a further addition of about $1,200,000 must be made to the ordinary expenditure, for the interest and extinguishing annuity of the deferred debt: and that, in 1802, the payments on the foreign debt will be larger, by one million, than in the present year. In 1803 and 1804 those payments will be increased to two millions beyond their present amount; but, after that period, they will gradually diminish, and, in 1809, they will finally cease, by the extinguishment of the debt.

The committee, however, though they have thought it useful to extend their view to this more remote increase of expenditure, are of opinion that it is not necessary for Congress to make provision, now, on that subject. No part of this increase will take place till two years hence; and before that period arrives, Congress will have a better view of the political and financial situation of the country than at present, and will be better able to judge respecting the means of meeting the exigency. But yet, the certainty of this future increase proves the necessity of providing, as far as can be conveniently done, for that which has already taken place, or must soon happen; so that the burden may be divided between different periods, and as little as possible may be left to be done hereafter.

Neither do the committee think it necessary to make provision, during the present session, for the deferred debt. The political situation of the country is now far more uncertain, than, in all probability, it will be at the next meeting of Congress. Should it change for the better, as there is reason to hope, the augmentations now to be made, together with the increase of revenue which we may reasonably expect, from our present system, may be sufficient, with some small aids, for defraying this additional expense. If, on the contrary, our situation should remain the same, still we shall have more experience than we now possess of the operation of our present system, and of the effect of the war on our commerce and our revenue. The preparatory arrangements, moreover, for an amelioration and enlargement of our system, will then be completed, or in a much more advanced state than at present. We shall, consequently, be then in a better situation than we now are for judging whether a further augmentation will be necessary, to what extent it must be carried, and how it may best be made.

It is only for the interest of the loans of the present and last years, therefore, and for a sum equal to the reimbursement of the principal, within a convenient time, that the committee would propose to make provision, during the present session of Congress.

That interest, at the highest calculation, will amount to $680,000. It is known that an extinguishing annuity, or a sinking fund, equal to two per cent. on the principal of a debt, will, if steadily applied, extinguish it in about twenty-four years. This is the plan heretofore adopted by Congress for the extinguishment of the six per cent. stock; and the committee conceive that it may be safely adhered to, in all arrangements for a similar purpose: it appearing certain that, while adequate provision is made for the punctual discharge, within so short a period, of every new engagement, there can be but little reason to apprehend a dangerous or inconvenient accumulation of debt.

This annuity of two per cent. on the loans of the last and present years, admitting the latter to be fixed at $3,500,000, will amount to $170,000; and, added to the amount of interest, will produce an aggregate expenditure of $850,000, annually, for twenty-four years. As this annuity, however, by the terms of the former loan, which are likely to be found necessary in the present, also, cannot, until the end of ten years, be applied to the discharge of this particular debt, it must be employed, should Congress think fit to raise it, in the purchase of the public debt in general, by way of sinking fund. The committee are of opinion that every consideration of sound policy, and the best established principles of financial economy, are in favor of raising it.

At the period above referred to, the Summer of 1798, the Government possessed a revenue of something more than eight millions of dollars, derived from the duties on imports and tonnage; the tax on domestic distilled spirits and stills, on retailers licenses, on refined sugar, on carriages, and on sales at auction; the postage of letters; dividends of bank stock belonging to the United States; and some other less considerable branches of revenue. As the ordinary expenditure, at that time, was less than seven millions, there was a balance of a million and upwards in favor of the Treasury.

Had the revenue continued equally productive in the subsequent year, 1799, there would have been no need of further provision at this time; since the above mentioned balance would have been more than sufficient to cover the increase of permanent expenditure. But this was not the case. The duties on imports and tonnage, which, in 1798, produced $7,405,420, fell, in 1799, to $6,437,886—a diminution of very nearly one million; and although the stamp duties, and perhaps the other branches of the internal revenue, were more productive in that year than in the former, yet that increase, amounting to only $200,000, was far from sufficient to counterbalance the diminution in the imports and tonnage.

It is not, however, to be apprehended, in the opinion of the committee, that the diminution in question will be permanent. On the contrary, they suppose it to have resulted from two causes, of a temporary nature: first, the extensive depredations on our commerce, which took place in 1796, 1797, and 1798, especially the two former, the full effect whereof was not felt in the revenue, till 1799, because it was in that year that the duties on the imports of 1798 became payable; and secondly, the great re-exportation of foreign commodities in 1799, which amounted to $45,523,335, exceeding, by $12,000,000, those of any former year, and which drew from the Treasury very great sums in drawbacks. As this branch of the revenue is bottomed on the consumption of the country, which, notwithstanding occasional fluctuations, has a constant progressive increase with the increase of population and wealth, the committee conceive that it may be expected soon to regain its former level, and gradually to augment. In proof of which they remark, that the first quarter of the present revenue year, the returns of which are before the House, exceeds in product the first quarter of the last year, or of 1797, and very nearly equals that of 1798.

This event, however, though highly probable, as it seems to them, being still uncertain, and the revenue, in its present state, being unequal to the increased scale of expenditure, resulting from the interest of this and the last year's loans, and to a reasonable provision for deficiencies, and for the extinguishment of the principal; the committee conceive it proper, and even indispensable, to provide, at present, for the additional sum of $850,000, at the least. More, they think, will not now be necessary.

Having come to this conclusion, as to the amount of the sum which it would be expedient to provide for at this time, they next turned their attention to the ways and means of making the provision.

As the official situation of the Secretary of the Treasury gives him more exact and extensive information, on the subject of revenue, than any other person can be supposed to possess, and enables him to form the most correct opinions respecting the probable operation, and comparative merits, of different schemes of taxation, the committee thought it proper to address their inquiries, in the first instance, to him, and wait for the result of his deliberations, before they should decide. For this purpose was written the letter, of which a copy, No. 1, is subjoined to this report.

In his answer, which, together with the statements therein referred to, No. 2, is also hereto annexed, the Secretary proposes to augment the duties on several kinds of wine; to raise those articles which now pay a duty of ten per centum ad valorem, to $12\frac{1}{2}$ per centum; and to make a new arrangement respecting drawbacks on goods re-exported, the effect of which would be, to impose a tax from about 15 to 18 per centum of their whole amount, on the drawbacks now allowed. This effect would be produced, by refusing, altogether, the drawback on certain articles, which are enumerated in the paper C, accompanying the Secretary's letter, and by withholding a greater or less part of it on a variety of other articles, in the manner stated in the paper B, referred to in the same letter.

The Secretary has informed the committee that he expects, from these three measures, should they be adopted, an addition to the revenue of about $900,000 annually. But he has not stated what part of this addition he expects from each measure separately. The two first he proposes to make perpetual. The third, the tax on drawbacks, he would continue no longer than during the present war in Europe.

When they proceeded to the examination of this plan, they found no difficulty as to that part of it which relates to the augmentation of duties.

Wines, indeed, are now highly taxed; but, being a mere luxury, which is consumed solely by people in affluent or easy circumstances, they appear to be a very proper object of revenue; and it is not apprehended that a moderate increase of the duty would diminish the consumption, or endanger smuggling. This reasoning, as the committee conceive, will be confirmed by a statement of the amount of duties on wines, which is annexed to this report, (No. 3.) and from which it appears that, from 1794 to 1797, inclusive, the net product of those duties has increased from $457,308 to $524,135, although no additional duty has been laid during that period. The returns for 1798 are too incomplete to be taken into the calculation. During the latter part of that period, indeed, there has been a fall in this product, as that of many other branches of the revenue; but it appears from the average, that this fall is more than counterbalanced by the rise in the former part, and the committee conceive that such fluctuations, arising from accidental and transient causes, are always to be expected, and that the average of a number of years can alone afford a safe criterion whereby to judge on subjects of this kind.

It is, moreover, to be observed, that the duties on wines have, hitherto, been injudiciously laid, so as to produce a strong temptation to enter high priced wines, which pay a very high duty, under the names of those of a low price, whereon the duty is comparatively low. There is reason to believe, as the committee are informed by the Secretary of the Treasury, that much loss to the revenue has already been experienced from this cause. The plan contained in his new tariff, the paper B, proposes to remove this cause, by a different adjustment of the duties in question.

As the average product of the duties on wines appears, by the statement No. 3, to be upwards of $600,000, an addition of twenty per cent. on the amount of the present duty would produce $120,-

000. This addition, it is conceived, might be safely made, in the manner proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

As to the articles paying a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem, which are very numerous, and of great value, including all woollen goods, white cottons, and nankeens, with other articles of less importance, the committee are of opinion, with the Secretary of the Treasury, that an additional duty of two and a half per centum on the value of the article may be safely laid on them. The present duties on all articles paying a rate per centum, ad valorem, of which the ten per cent. constitute a great proportion, probably two-thirds, were fixed in 1792, except a few, which were raised from 10 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in 1797; and they produced their full effect in 1793: from the end of which latter year, until the end of 1798, the net product of those duties rose from \$2,319,817 to \$2,717,657, as appears by a statement, No. 4, which is subjoined to this report. The increase, indeed, must probably have been greater, as the returns for the last mentioned year, 1798, are very incomplete—two quarters being wanting from Philadelphia, as many from Charleston, and four from Savannah; which deficiencies will, probably, be found to have produced a greater deduction from the product in 1798, than can have been made up for by the additional duties laid in 1797. This progressive increase, notwithstanding the intermediate fluctuation, appears to the committee to prove, satisfactorily, that the importation of the articles in question is not injuriously affected by the present duty; which may, therefore, be safely augmented to the amount proposed.

There is another consideration on this head, which is conceived to be of great weight. These articles are all imported from distant places, on general freight, and in ships of great value; which circumstances so much increase the difficulty and hazard of smuggling, as to leave little danger of its being attempted, under the operation of any duties that the consumption will bear. They are, moreover, in the same situation with many other articles, such as muslins, muslinets, and colored cottons, which now pay the proposed duty of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

The average net product of the ad valorem duties, from 1794 to 1798, inclusive, a period of five years, being \$3,181,173, as appears from the statement above mentioned, No. 4, it follows that, if the ten per cents be supposed to constitute two-thirds of the whole mass, which is probably the case, the additional $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. proposed to be laid on them would produce \$600,000.

As to the third proposition of the Secretary, the tax on drawbacks, it appeared liable to more doubt.

In support of the plan, it was urged, that the great mass of our re-exportation consists in commodities, chiefly sugar and coffee, which we bring from the East and West Indies, and afterwards carry to Europe, for the consumption of France, Holland, and Germany; and in East India and China goods, wherewith we supply the people of the West Indies and of South America. That the commerce of France, Holland, and Spain, being annihilated by the events of the war, and that of Sweden and Denmark very inconsiderable, the carrying trade may be considered as almost exclusively possessed by the English and ourselves. That the English, being at war with France, Spain, and Holland, and thereby excluded from the ports of those nations in Europe, Asia, and America, cannot enter into competition with us, in the business of supplying their possessions, especially those in South America and the West Indies, with East India and China goods; and that we, consequently having the exclusive possession of this traffic, may lay what price we please on the goods re-exported; and, of course, may compel the consumers to repay to us the tax laid on those goods here, by the refusal of part of the drawback. That the same reasoning will apply, in a great degree, to the supply of Europe with sugar, coffee, and other East and West India commodities, because France, Holland, and Spain, being shut against the English, by the war, they cannot become our competitors for the direct supply of those countries. That, as to the indirect supply, through the ports of Germany and Portugal, especially the former, which are by far the most considerable, we can furnish it on better terms than they; because they are excluded from many of the countries where the commodities are produced, and because their trade with the north of Germany is exposed to great danger and interruption from the French and Dutch privateers. And, finally, that the English are less liable to enter into a competition which we ought to dread, inasmuch as the monopoly of their East India trade, by a particular company, prevents individual enterprise and ingenuity from being excited in carrying it on, upon the best terms; and as the English Government itself has laid a duty on exports, during the war, equal to that proposed by the plan under consideration: so that her merchants and ours being on an equal footing, in that respect, they could not underbid us in the foreign markets to which both resort.

From hence, it was concluded that, while the war in Europe, and the present state of things resulting from it, shall continue, a tax on drawbacks, such as that proposed, would be a tax, not on our own commerce or our own merchants, but on foreign nations, who, being the consumers of the re-exported commodities, whereon the tax would fall in the first instance, and being compelled, during the war, at least, to purchase those commodities from us alone, would be under the necessity of repaying to us the tax, in addition to the price which we should otherwise demand.

To this it was answered, that the whole argument rests on the supposition of our being able to effect two things, both of which are of a very uncertain nature, namely to monopolize the business of supplying the countries in question with East and West India and China commodities, and to compel those commodities to touch first at our own ports, before they are carried to the places where they are consumed: it being clear that if, by raising the price of the commodities, we should raise up competitors, who would underbid us in foreign markets; or should, by taxing them on their arrival in our ports, render it the interest of our merchants to carry them directly from the places of their production, to the places where they are to be consumed, without landing them in this country; we should, in either case, lose the duty: in the first, by ruining altogether the trade, whereon it must depend; and, in the second, by turning the trade away from our own ports, where alone the duty can be collected.

Whether we should be able to monopolize the business in question, to such an extent as to have it in our power to lay our own price on the commodities which compose it, was said to be very uncertain, for various reasons: First, because the English possess very far the greater part of those places, in the East and West Indies, where the valuable commodities consumed in Europe are produced, and their merchants can carry them directly from thence to the ports of Germany, or of Denmark and Sweden, from whence they would easily find their way into Holland and France. Secondly, because the duty on exports laid in England, may easily be avoided by her merchants, by means of going directly to the foreign markets, instead of first touching at home; and the danger of privateers is greatly lessened, by the convoy which she gives to her trade, and the great number of her squadrons and cruising frigates in those seas—circumstances whereby her trade is, probably, rendered more secure than ours. And, thirdly, because, although her merchants cannot carry the East India and China goods, directly, to the French, Spanish, and Dutch possessions, in the West Indies and South America, they can and do carry those goods, in immense quantities, to their own islands; from whence they are known to find their way, by means of an illicit trade, perhaps connived at by those employed to prevent it, into the places of which we suppose ourselves to possess the exclusive supply.

As to the example of England, which is said to have laid our export duty analogous to the tax or drawbacks now proposed, it was observed, in the first place, that the experiment in England has not been long enough made to enable us to judge of its success; secondly, that so far as time has furnished information on that head, the experience of England is against the plan, her exports having diminished since the period when that tax was laid; and thirdly, that what is called a tax on exports in England, is, in fact, a premium paid for convoy, which the Government, in consideration of this premium, engages to furnish, and does furnish, to every ship sailing from her ports; an arrangement which enables shippers to obtain their insurance at a lower rate; so that the duty on exports, instead of being a tax on the trade of England, is merely a part of the premium of insurance, which the merchants pay to the Government, instead of paying to the underwriters: whereas, in our case, as we give no convoy, it would be a mere tax on our trade, which our merchants must pay in the first instance, and might or might not be able to get back from the consumers.

Additional Revenues.

If they should prove unable to get it back from the consumers, by reason of the competition, which the augmentation of price, consequent to the duty, might create or increase, the trade must, in the end, be ruined; and with it must perish, not only a great portion of our revenue, and of our navigation, the basis of our future maritime strength, but also of the industry of our seaport towns, which is nourished and sustained by our navigation.

If, on the other hand, they should prove able to levy this tax ultimately on the consumers, still it was urged, would the question remain, whether the tax would be sufficient to induce the merchants to avoid our own ports, and either to go directly to the consumers, from the places where the commodities are produced, or where that cannot be done, to touch at some ports where no such duty is laid; in either of which cases, we should not only lose the revenue expected from this duty, but also affect, to a degree not easily foreseen, all those branches of industry, in our country, which are connected with the landing, storage, and re-shipment of goods, and the arrival, repair, and supply of ships.

The duty of two and a half per cent. on the amount of a valuable cargo, it was observed, is a premium sufficient to afford a very strong temptation to avoid our own ports. Men of small capital, who could only import parcels of goods on freight, might not be able to do this, and therefore must pay the duty; while large capitalists, who import entire cargoes, in their own or in chartered ships, might be able to do it, and thus avoid the duty; whereby a monopoly would be created, to the very great detriment of our commercial interest, the prosperity of which depends far more on the mass of small capitalists than on the small number of great ones.

It was further urged, that this measure, so hazardous in itself, and the mischiefs whereof, should it prove unsuccessful, must always take place, and may have become irremediable before they can be perceived, is by no means necessary, since the two first parts of the Secretary's plan, the additional duties on wines and the ten per cent. articles, will afford an additional revenue of from six to seven hundred thousand dollars; to which might be added $200,000 by a half cent per pound additional on brown sugar; and $50,000 by a like addition, per pound, on coffee—making, in the whole, an additional revenue of at least $900,000; which is more by $50,000 than the sum proposed to be raised.

It was shown, by a statement of the duties on brown sugar, for six successive years, which is annexed to this report, No. 5, that the net product of that article, at a duty of one and a half cents per pound, from the beginning of 1793 to the end of 1797, a period of five years, increased from $646,715 to $735,671; and that the average net product, for a period of six years, from 1793 to 1798, inclusive, was $586,292. It was contended that, although an addition of half a cent was made to that duty in 1797, and the product in 1798, nevertheless, appeared to be less than in former years, being only $630,791, as stated from the returns, yet no conclusion unfavorable to the duty could be drawn from thence; because the returns for that year were very deficient; two quarters being wanting from Philadelphia and Charleston, and four from Savannah; which, probably, had reduced the apparent amount much more than the actual receipt had been augmented by the additional duty.

Hence, it was inferred, that the consumption and importation of brown sugar had not yet been injuriously affected by the former duty; and that the average net product being at the rate of $200,000 for every half cent of duty, that sum might be expected from the proposed augmentation.

On the subject of coffee, it was shown, by a statement of the duties on that article, for six successive years, from 1793 to 1798, inclusive, which is also annexed herewith, No. 6, that the average net product of those duties, during the period in question, was $498,762, although the returns for the last year in the period were incomplete, as has been already stated, and no addition has been made to the duty since 1792. Hence, it was inferred that an additional half cent might safely be laid on that article also; which, as the present duty is five cents per pound, would produce the sum of $50,000.

Such were the arguments for and against the proposed tax on drawbacks; and such the objects of revenue, which it was thought might, with more safety and propriety, be adopted in its stead. The committee did not deem it their province to pronounce any decision on these points, but solely to bring them into the view of the House, and submit them to its consideration. There was, however, one proposal made, which does not appear to them to be of a doubtful nature, and which they have, therefore, thought it proper to recommend.

In the act allowing drawbacks, there is a provision, that one per cent. on the whole amount of them shall be retained, in order to defray the expense of management. Afterwards, one quarter per cent. was added to this first deduction, in lieu of stamp duties on debentures. It has been suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, that the sum thus retained is found insufficient to defray the expenses incident to the allowance of drawbacks; and the committee are of opinion that it will be proper to double it. In that case, the reduction made by the Government for the expense of management, and in lieu of stamp duties on debentures, will amount to about $100,000 annually, which, as the present amount does not exceed $50,000, will be a further addition to the revenue of $50,000.

Having thus brought the whole subject into view, as fully as seemed to them to be proper, the committee beg leave, in order to take the sense of the House on the various matters stated in their report, to submit to its consideration the following resolutions.

COMMITTEE ROOM, Feb. 14, 1800.

SIR: The Committee of Ways and Means, conceiving it proper for Congress to establish, during the present session, permanent revenues equal to the interest of the loan which may be necessary to make this year, and perhaps, to that of last year also, the amount of which two charges will, probably, not fall short of six hundred and eighty thousand dollars, annually, have directed their attention to the inquiry, "from what sources this additional revenue may be drawn, with the least difficulty to the Government, and the greatest ease to the public." Before, however, they come to any final resolution on so important and difficult a subject, they wish to obtain your opinion on the following points:

1st. Admitting the necessity of providing for both loans, can the requisite sum, or any considerable part of it, be raised by an addition to the duties on certain articles imported? What are those articles, and to what amount may new duties be laid on them? The committee have thought of wines, spirits, brown sugars, and woollen cloths. Salt, also, has been suggested as an article on which a further duty might perhaps be laid.

2d. Admitting a further duty to be laid on wines and spirits imported, will it not be necessary to make a corresponding augmentation on the tax on stills, and domestic distilled spirits? And can such augmentation be made with due regard to the situation of remote parts of the country?

3d. What would be the policy of abandoning altogether the idea of augmenting the imposts, and resorting to an internal tax, by way of excise, on wines, spirits, coffee, teas, and sugars? Or, would it be better to adopt both modes, in part?

4th. As a change will, probably, be made this year, in the mode of stamping, which will render it proper to call in and change the stamps, might not those duties be safely augmented, so as to raise a further sum of one hundred thousand dollars?

5th. Might not a national lottery be established, so as to raise from one hundred thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually? And how far would such a mode of taxation be advisable?

In addition to your opinion on these several points, sir, the committee would be much obliged by the communication of any ideas which may have occurred to you on the subject in general. And as the interest and extinguishing annuity of the deferred debt will commence next year, they beg you to take into view the means of providing for those objects likewise.

With the highest respect, I have the honor to be, sir, &c.

ROBERT G. HARPER.

HON. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 10, 1800.

SIR: I have, with the aid of the best information which I could obtain, deliberately considered the important questions, upon which, on behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, you have been pleased to request my opinion.

Although, according to my view of the subject, the public debts have not hitherto considerably increased, since the establishment of the existing Government; yet, as the expenditure, at the present time, considerably exceeds the stated income from duties and taxes, an augmentation of the revenue appears to be advisable.

The sources from which this revenue may be expected, with the greatest ease to the community, are believed to be the following:

1st. From an increase of duties on the importation, and a new arrangement of drawbacks, payable on the exportation of certain articles of foreign growth or manufacture.

2d. From a new modification of the duties on stills employed in the distillation of spirits from domestic materials.

3d. From a duty on the transfer of real property, to be collected by stamps.

The first mentioned subject being the most complex, and of great importance, considered both in relation to the interests of commerce and the revenue, is separately presented to the consideration of the committee.

The paper herewith transmitted, marked A, exhibits a view of the rates of duties at present levied on imports; that marked B is respectfully offered as a substitute.

It is proposed to increase the duties on several kinds of wines, and generally to impose a duty of twelve and a half per centum, ad valorem, on the merchandise at present subject to duties at ten per centum; a few articles only, of no great importance, are placed in the list of goods subject to the rate of fifteen per centum.

It is known to the committee, that the quantities of articles of foreign growth or manufacture, which are imported into the United States for the purpose of being exported, have greatly increased, and are still increasing; the sum of one and one quarter per centum upon the duties at present retained, is found, on calculation, to be hardly sufficient to defray the custom-house expenses, occasioned by this branch of business. After a very close examination of the subject, it is my opinion that the revenue may be increased, and the manufactures of the country encouraged, by reducing the drawback in the mode proposed, without injury to commerce.

This opinion will, it is believed, receive a confirmation, from an examination of the commercial and financial systems, and actual situation of the countries with which our commerce of importation and exportation is, at present, prosecuted; to guard, however, against the consequences of any mistake, it is respectfully proposed that the present rates of drawback shall be allowed after the termination of the present war in Europe.

I have the honor to be, with the greatest respect, sir, &c.

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

HON. ROBERT G. HARPER, Chairman, &c.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 12, 1800.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to inform you that, if the tariff of duties and drawbacks, which accompanied my communication of yesterday, shall be established, the revenue will probably receive an addition of about nine hundred thousand dollars per annum.

I have added, at your request, a particular list of the articles upon which the duties are proposed to be increased or varied.

I have the honor to be, with respect, sir, &c.,

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

HON. ROBERT G. HARPER, Esq.

PUBLIC DEBT.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., May 18, 1800.]

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee who were appointed, on the twentieth of March, to examine the accounts of the United States, relating to the public debt, and to report the amount respectively incurred and extinguished, and, generally, such facts as relate to the increase or diminution of the same, since the establishment of the Government of the United States, under the present Constitution, made the following report:

That, for the purpose of obtaining every statement from the Treasury which could elucidate the subject of inquiry, they addressed a letter to the Secretary of that Department, on the twenty-fourth of March, a copy of which is subjoined to this report, and, on the twenty-ninth of April they received his answer, transmitting sundry statements, numbered from 1 to 9, inclusive, and exhibiting, in the most clear and satisfactory manner, the most important of the Treasury operations in relation to the debt, from the commencement of the present Government. These statements, together with three letters from the Secretary, on this subject, are now submitted to the House; and, although it is certainly possible that some trivial errors may have taken place in the details which these documents contain, yet the committee are perfectly confident that the general results which they produce must be correct.

The statements numbers 1 and 2, contain an account of the receipt and expenditure of all public money, from the commencement of the Government, and, whilst they show the application of the revenue to the debt, they will present, at the same time, in one view, every expense with which the Treasury has been charged, and enable the Legislature, with more accuracy, to decide how far those objects, or the amount of expense, in particular cases, may be diminished.

The order of the House having particularly directed the attention of the committee to the increase or diminution of debt, they have thought it their duty to bring into view the amount of debt with which the present Government commenced its operations, and to contrast the same with the balance of debt on the first of January, in the present year. In discharging this duty, it will become necessary to explain the principles on which these statements rest, which the committee will do, in as concise a manner as possible. But, before they enter upon this detail, they cannot forbear to express the satisfaction which they feel, in declaring that the documents which have been obtained from the Treasury will, in their opinion, fully demonstrate the precision and ability with which the business of the Department has been conducted, and that, by the fiscal operations of the Government, the public debt has been diminished.

In ascertaining the amount of the old debt, two different principles have been taken by those who have made their calculations on this subject. The first has been to include only the interest upon the debt to the close of the year 1789, as the nearest convenient period to the day when the Government commenced its operations, and, after deducting from the aggregate of debt the amount of funds then in the power of the Government, to consider the balance as the amount of old debt. The second principle has been, to take the amount of debt as the same has been liquidated and funded, under various acts of Congress, and after deducting therefrom the funds acquired or possessed by the Government at the close of the year 1790, to consider the balance as constituting the true amount of old debt. The difference between these principles consists in this: by the last mode of computation, the interest which accumulated upon the debt, subsequent to the close of the year 1789, and until the debt was funded and provided for, by law, is considered as a part of the old debt, whereas, by the first mode of computation, that interest is totally excluded.

In consequence of a difference in opinion, which, it is understood, still exists on this point, the committee have thought proper to state the debt in both modes, that the results, in both cases, may be perfectly understood.

The nominal amount of debt, on the 1st of January, 1790, as appears by statement No. 9, amounted to - $72,237,301 97

For the purpose of showing the rapidity with which the public debt was diminishing, at the time when the hostility of France compelled the Government to incur those great and extraordinary expenses which appear in the Treasury statements, and to enter upon that extensive system of defence, which has resulted in the security of our commerce, the committee have thought it necessary, in addition to the preceding statements, to present a view of the debt on the first of January, 1798, remarking, at the same time, that the reduction which at that time had been made, proves, in the most satisfactory manner, the case with which the debt may be extinguished, whenever the Government shall be left unembarrassed by internal disorder or foreign hostility.

Public Debt.

From whence it results that, if the amount of debt on the 1st of January, 1800, is contrasted with the debt on the first of January, 1790, it will appear that the debt has diminished by the sum of $1,092,841 48, or, if it is compared with the debt of January 1st, 1791, the debt has diminished by the sum of $3,972,878 66; so that, in either mode of stating the account, it clearly appears that the debt has in fact been diminished.

It is, perhaps, of little importance whether the one or the other of the preceding views is taken of the public debt, as the result, in either case, will be highly favorable to the financial operations of the Government; the committee, however, have inclined to the opinion that the debt, as it has been liquidated and funded by the Government, after deducting the amount of funds which arose prior to the 1st of January, 1791, ought to be considered as constituting the true amount of debt with which the present Government has been charged by the Constitution.

It is perfectly clear that no part of the national debt can, with propriety, be considered as new debt, which arose prior to the complete establishment of the present Government; and it is equally certain that the funded debt originated from the contracts of the late Government, and although it is certain that the interest, for a certain period after the present Government commenced its operations, was suffered to accumulate, and now composes a part of the capital of the debt, yet it will be recollected that the Government commenced its operations without revenue, without any system of finance, or funds of any description, to meet even the ordinary civil list expenditure; that every plan which was ultimately adopted, for the purpose of revenue, was to be devised, matured, and finally carried into execution, before any money could be brought into the Treasury; that, from the nature of things, a considerable time must necessarily have elapsed before the Government could be considered as completely established, before any arrangements could be made, either for liquidating the debt or providing the means of discharging the interest arising thereon, and that, during that period, the interest (as had been the case before the adoption of the Constitution) did necessarily accumulate; but the committee believe that this accumulation of interest is entirely chargeable to the imbecility of the late Government, and, of course, ought to be considered as composing a part of the old debt. It may likewise be remarked, that the sum which was lost by this accumulation of interest was more than replaced by the terms on which the debt was funded.

The debt which had been contracted by the late Government generally bore an interest at six per cent., and the large arrearage of interest which had accumulated thereon had been long due, and might have been demanded by the creditors in cash; but, by the terms of the new contracts with them, that interest was converted into a capital, bearing an interest of three per cent., and the difference between the value of that stock and specie, has been gained by the Government; so that, in whatever point of view this subject is considered, it appears clearly to the committee that the old debt cannot be considered as composing a sum less than that at which it has been funded.

The committee would not have thought it necessary to explain the principles on which they have deducted, from the nominal amount of debt, at the various periods when they have stated the same, the amount of funds acquired or possessed by the Government at those periods, respectively, had not the propriety of those deductions been formerly questioned. It is, however, understood to be now admitted that all the items composing those funds form a proper deduction from the amount of debt, except the bonds remaining uncollected at the custom-houses; this item alone, it has been said, ought to be excluded from the account.

The propriety of deducting these bonds, together with the other items, from the debt, has appeared to the committee so apparent, that they have found some difficulty in rendering a principle more intelligible, which to them appears self-evident.

The object of every statement of this nature must be to ascertain the balance of debt; and to do this, it is apparent that the debts and credits of the Government must be drawn into the account. The principle which applies to the accounts of an individual, applies in the same manner to the accounts of a nation; the amount of debt can, in neither case, depend on the amount of accounts, but upon the balance which results from a comparison of debt and credit; that these bonds are the property of the Government has not been controverted, and if there is any meaning in terms, they contain personal engagements for money, and must be credits; the obligation to pay these bonds could be no stronger, if they had been executed by individuals for money loaned, nor would the mode of collection be in the least varied; and whilst the effect is precisely the same with that of all credits, it remains for those who place them on different principles to explain the grounds of distinction.

That they have been executed for duties is true, but the credit which is thereby given to the merchant is entirely for his accommodation; and such are the express provisions of the law, which requires that the duties on goods shall be paid or secured before they are landed, at the option of the importer. The duties are to be paid or secured, not upon the consumption, but upon the importation, and the bonds which have at any period been taken for duties, and which remain uncollected, are to be considered as securities for the revenue of the preceding year; the Government has nothing to do with the goods on which duties have been secured after the bonds are taken; whether they are consumed or destroyed, neither increases or diminishes the obligation of the merchant to pay the contents of his bond. A further circumstance may be adverted to, which, if anything can render this point more clear and certain, may, perhaps, produce that effect—it is the consideration that a considerable amount of these bonds have already been pledged for the payment of a part of the debt. The temporary loans which appear in the preceding statements have all been obtained in anticipation of the money arising from the bonds; and it would be a singular case, indeed, if the pledge, which is confessedly of greater value than the debt, and from the proceeds of which the debt must in fact be discharged, is to be totally excluded from a general account of debts and credits.

In reviewing the progress and present situation of the debt, the committee have been led to consider the causes which have hitherto retarded its extinguishment. The deranged state, or rather total want of funds and revenue, at the commencement of the Government, has been already noticed, and it cannot be necessary to add, that the delays which necessarily attend all financial operations, at their outset, must have prevented the Government, for a considerable time, from extending the revenue so far as convenience and policy might afterwards require; but the committee deem it important to add that the extraordinary expense which has arisen within a few years, has swallowed up large sums of the public wealth, and diverted the application of those moneys which might otherwise have gone to the extinguishment of debt, to objects connected with the honor, and, in some cases, with the immediate existence of the Government.

In this class of expense will be included a large sum occasioned by the Indian war, one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars expended in quelling two insurrections in the State of Pennsylvania, more than one million and a half expended in our transactions with Algiers, and other Mediterranean Powers, together with a much larger expense occasioned by the unprovoked aggressions of France upon this country. Had it been possible steadily to have applied those various sums to the purchase of debt, it is easy to conceive how rapidly the same might have been extinguished. The committee have likewise noticed the large sums which have been necessarily expended in the erection of light-houses, repairing fortifications, in purchases for replenishing our military and naval arsenals, and in the building, purchase, and equipment of more than forty sail of ships and armed vessels, together with a considerable loan to the Commissioners of the City of Washington. The money expended on these objects, it is well known, arise to a very large amount, and the property thus acquired by the Government, and which is now on hand, cannot be estimated, on the most moderate calculations, at a sum less than four millions of dollars. The value of this property might be considered as composing another item in the credit of the general account of debt, but the committee have not thought it necessary to include it, and have noticed it particularly at this time, for the purpose of exhibiting a more general view of the extraordinary expense incurred by the Government, and for the purpose of presenting all that information in relation to the debt which will enable the House accurately to appreciate the great and increasing resources of the country; and on this point the committee cannot forbear to remark, that the progress of the Government, in its financial operations, must afford the most flattering presages of its future success, if the same system is pursued which has hitherto proved so successful. It cannot certainly be unworthy of remark, that ten years have not at this time elapsed since the Government fairly commenced its operations; that, during that period, it has been necessary to liquidate, to fund, and to provide for a large capital of floating debt, which had grown out of the disorders of the Confederation; that, during the same short period, the Government has been compelled to contend with one expensive war on the frontier, with two insurrections in the centre of our own country, and with depredation and hostility from the nations of Europe; that these embarrassments have nevertheless been faced by the Government; most of the difficulties have been surmounted; the debt has been liquidated and diminished; and the nation has still continued to increase in wealth and population, beyond all former example; and although the contest in which we are now engaged may, for a short period, retard the further extinguishment of debt, or perhaps produce a small addition to that which already exists, yet it cannot be doubted that, whilst we maintain order at home, no exterior circumstances can exhaust or greatly diminish the increasing resources of the nation.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose the copy of a resolution which passed the House of Representatives on the 20th instant.

The committee who have been appointed, in pursuance of this resolution, have directed me to request from you such a statement of the public accounts, relating to the debt, as will enable them, with the greatest facility and accuracy, to make a report on this subject.

The principal object contemplated, is to ascertain, with precision, how far the public debt has been increased or diminished since the establishment of the present Government.

With a view to this object, it will naturally occur that two general accounts are necessary.

1st. An account exhibiting the amount of debt incurred, under the Confederation, and with which the present Government has been charged by the Constitution.

2d. An account of the existing debt, at the latest possible period, which it is presumed must be on the first day of January, 1800.

In respect to the first of these accounts, it is requested that the whole amount of the old debt, of every description, may be given, arranged under distinct and proper heads, as the same has been funded, assumed, liquidated, or otherwise ascertained, by acts of the Government, or settlement at the Treasury. It is, however, desired, that the account may be so stated that the interest which accumulated after the commencement of the present Government, and which has, in any shape, been converted into capital, may distinctly appear.

Estimate of Appropriations.

The interest herein particularly alluded to, has accrued upon the foreign debt, upon loan-office certificates, together with other evidences of debt, prior to the 1st of January, 1791, on the assumed debt, prior to the 1st of January, 1792, distinguishing, however, the interest which accumulated in the last year, and on the debt due to certain creditor States, to the close of the year 1794.

In respect to the account for exhibiting a view of the debt on the 1st of January, 1800, it will, of course, contain a complete statement of the old and new debt, together with the purchase and reimbursement of so much of the same as has been already discharged; but it is the wish of the committee that the payments in specie, which have been made, under authority of direct grants from the Legislature, may be particularly stated, and the aggregate brought into one view.

The committee likewise request an account of payments for military pensions, cash in the Treasury, cash in the hands of collectors, and an estimate of the current bonds at the custom-houses, deducting debentures and estimated drawbacks.

An estimate of the value of public property, acquired by the present Government, is likewise desired; including the capital employed in trading houses, light-houses, and other public buildings, public ships, arsenals, with their contents, and fortifications.

The amount of extraordinary expense incurred by the Government, in consequence of events which it is hoped will not be repeated, is also requested. Under this head will be included the expense of treaties with the Mediterranean Powers; the two insurrections in Pennsylvania, and the war with the Indian tribes; together with the extraordinary expense incurred in the Military and Naval Departments, in consequence of the present disputes with France, exclusive of ships, and stores in the arsenals.

It will likewise be satisfactory to the committee to be informed whether the assumed debt, including the interest which accumulated on the same, to the close of the year 1701, was not charged to the particular States in the settlement with them, and whether the temporary loans which have been obtained from the bank, have not been obtained on the principle of anticipating the revenue.

A statement of the account with the bankers in Holland, on its latest adjustment, and a general account of debts contracted and debts discharged, annually, will gratify the wishes of the committee.

The committee do not wish that the statements from the Treasury should be exclusively confined to the objects which have been particularly detailed: they submit to your judgment the propriety of furnishing any other statements which, in your opinion, will elucidate the object of inquiry. They take the liberty, however, to suggest, that, if the time can be spared at the Treasury, it might be useful to obtain a general account of receipts and expenditures, from the commencement of the Government. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

ROGER GRISWOLD.

Hon. Mr. WOLCOTT, Sec. of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 29, 1800.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, herewith, sundry statements, numbered from 1 to 9, inclusive, which have been prepared in pursuance of your letter of March 24, and which, I trust, will satisfy the inquiries of the committee appointed to report to the House of Representatives such "facts as relate to the increase or diminution of the public debt, since the establishment of the Government of the United States, under the present Constitution."

I have every reason to believe that the general results of these statements are entirely correct, and am unconscious of any defect in the details required by the committee, except in respect to the sums expended on fortifications, ships, arsenals, and other buildings, and in the purchase of military and naval stores. The sums stated under these heads have been necessarily founded on estimates, as a precise account could only be obtained from an examination of the transactions of the agents employed by each of the Executive Departments, and a valuation of the property now remaining in the possession of the Government. I trust, however, that I am not mistaken in assuring the committee that the value of the public property has not been overrated.

If the documents now transmitted should, in the opinion of the committee, require elucidation, their commands shall be executed with alacrity; it being certain, that, whatever opinions may be entertained respecting the increase or diminution of the public debt, in consequence of expenditures which have been authorized by the present Government, there can be no difficulty in determining the true state of all the facts by which those opinions must be supported. I have the honor to be, with perfect respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

HON. ROGER GRISWOLD, Chairman, &c.

The funds out of which appropriations may be made for the purposes before mentioned, are:

1st. The sum of six hundred thousand dollars of the proceeds of duties on imports and tonnage, which will accrue in the year 1801, which sum is by law annually reserved for the support of Government.

2d. The surplus of the revenue and income of the United States, which may accrue, to the end of the year 1801, after satisfying the objects for which appropriations have been heretofore made.

The Secretary also transmits a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States, for the year prior to the 1st of October last, being the latest period to which an account can be prepared. All which is most respectfully submitted, by

OLIVER WOLCOTT,
Secretary of the Treasury.

After this general statement the Secretary descends to a distinct specification of the several items; the most interesting of which, frequently in a condensed form, follow:

SINKING FUND.

[Communicated to the Senate, Nov. 28, 1800.]

The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund respectfully report to Congress as follows:

That the measures which have been authorized by the Board, subsequent to their report of the 11th of December, 1799, so far as the same have been completed, are fully detailed in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to this Board, dated the 27th of November, 1800, and in the proceedings of the officers of the Treasury, therein referred to, which are herewith transmitted, and prayed to be received as part of this report.

JOHN E. HOWARD,
President of the Senate pro tem.

November 28th, 1800.

The Secretary of the Treasury respectfully reports to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund:

That no purchases of the debt of the United States have been made, since the date of the last report to Congress, of the 11th day of December, 1799; and that the sums of capital stock heretofore purchased and transferred, prior to the present year, in trust for the United States, the interest whereon is appropriated, by law, towards the reduction of the public debt, amounts to four millions seven hundred and four thousand two hundred and nineteen dollars and sixty cents, as will more particularly appear from the document hereto annexed, marked A.

That the following sums have been applied towards the discharge of the principal debt of the United States, since the date of the last report to Congress of the 11th of December, 1799:

1st. To the fifth instalment of the six per cent. stock, bearing a present interest, which, pursuant to the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," passed on the 3d day of March, 1795, and the act in addition thereto, passed on the 28th day of April, 1796, became payable on the first day of January, 1800, the sum of - $716,894 36

2d. To the payment of the eighth instalment of the subscription loan for bank stock, due on the last day of December, 1799 - 200,000 00

3d. To the payment of the third instalment of a loan of one million of guilders, obtained in Holland, and which fell due the present year, pursuant to a contract, dated the 1st of June, 1787, estimated at 40 cents per guilder - 80,000 00

4th. To the payment of the second instalment of a loan of one million of guilders, obtained in Holland, and which fell due in the present year, pursuant to a contract, dated the 13th of March, 1788, estimated at 40 cents per guilder - 80,000 00

Mint of the United States.

5th. To the payment of the first instalment of a loan of three millions of guilders, obtained in Holland, and which fell due in the present year, pursuant to a contract, dated the 1st day of January, 1790, estimated at forty cents per guilder - - - - - 240,000 00

Amounting in the whole to $1,316,894 36

The payments before enumerated have been made out of the following funds:

1st. The interest fund on the sums which accrued upon the stock purchased, and transferred to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, in trust for the United States, as particularly stated in the document hereto annexed, marked B - - - - - $522,323 11

2d. The fund arising from the payment of debts, which originated prior to the present Constitution of the United States, as particularly stated in the document marked C - - - - - 2,943 39

3d. The fund arising from dividends on the capital stock, belonging to the United States, in the Bank of the United States, from the 1st of July, 1798, to the 30th of June, 1799, after deducting the interest on the subscription loan for the same period, as particularly stated in the document hereto annexed, marked D - - - - - 29,040 00

4th. The proceeds of duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on spirits distilled within the United States, and stills, appropriated by the 8th section of the act of March 3d, 1795, entitled "An act making further provision for the support of public credit, and for the redemption of the public debt," being for the period and in reference to the objects mentioned in this report - - - - - 762,587 86

Making, in the whole, an equal amount to the reimbursements before mentioned.

There remained in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, as agent of the Board of Commissioners, on the twenty-fifth of the present month, one hundred and sixty-nine thousand and eighty-seven dollars and four cents, which, with the growing produce of other appropriated funds, will be sufficient for the reimbursement, at the end of the present year, of the sixth instalment of the six per cent. stock, bearing a present interest, and the ninth instalment of the subscription loan for stock of the Bank of the United States, which reimbursements are required to be made by the 11th section of the act of Congress, passed on the 3d of March, 1795, herein before mentioned.

All which is respectfully submitted, by
OLIVER WOLCOTT,
Secretary of the Treasury.

THE MINT.

[Communicated to Congress, January 21, 1801.]

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,

January 2, 1801.

The Director of the Mint respectfully informs the President that the enclosed abstract of coin issued from the Mint of the United States, and struck since the 31st of December last, shows the amount to be three hundred and seventeen thousand seven hundred and sixty dollars, in gold coins; two hundred and twenty-four thousand two hundred and ninety-six dollars, in silver coins; and twenty-nine thousand two hundred and seventy-nine dollars and forty cents, in copper cents and half cents; making up, in the whole, the quantity of five hundred and seventy-one thousand three hundred and thirty-five dollars, and forty cents.

For the information of Government, the Director thinks it expedient to enclose a statement of the expenses and profits of the Mint for the year past, which, from a number of concurring circumstances, has been full as expensive as may hereafter be expected, extraordinary supplies or repairs excepted.

The Director has a peculiar satisfaction in informing the President that there has been received from the test bottoms and ashes, accumulated before his administration of the Mint, four hundred and twenty-eight dollars and forty-seven cents; which repays so much of the nine hundred and seventy-four dollars, heretofore allowed by Congress, as a deficiency in the former account of bullion, and that there is still a quantity of ashes remaining to be cleansed and refined.

The cents issued from the Mint, amounting, now, to the sum of seventy-nine thousand three hundred and ninety dollars and eighty-two cents, the proclamation required by law ought to be issued, by which all other copper coin will be put out of circulation.

The late act of Congress, directing the Mint to remain at Philadelphia, will expire in March next; some further legal provision will be necessary for its continuance here, or removal to the seat of Government. At all events, it will be necessary to provide some other mode of assaying the reserved pieces, set apart by direction of the act of Congress of the 2d of April, 1792, and required by that act to be done once in every year, under the inspection of the Chief Justice, the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, Secretary for the Department of State, and the Attorney General, who are required to attend at the Mint, for that purpose. As it will be impracticable for those officers to leave the seat of Government, to comply with this part of the law, and the year will expire on the second Monday in February next, the Director respectfully submits to the President the propriety of recommending to Congress the necessity of a previous provision by law, to prevent a non-compliance with a positive injunction of an act of Congress.

The great rise in the price of copper, in Great Britain, has prevented so large an importation, and of course so large an issue of cents from the Mint, as would, otherwise, have been done, the public being now tolerably well supplied with that species of small change.

The Director thinks it his duty to inform the President that, having had occasion, during the past year, to have accurate assays made of Spanish milled doubloons, it was found that their real value, compared with the standard of the United States, was rather less than eighty-five cents the pennyweight; whereas, by the act of Congress, of the 9th of February, 1793, they are made a legal tender, at about eighty-seven cents the pennyweight, or, in the language of the act, "at the rate of one hundred cents for every twenty-seven grains and two-fifths of a grain, of the actual weight thereof" which creates a loss, on the part of the citizens of the United States, of twenty-seven dollars and forty-two cents on one thousand pennyweight. The official certificate of the assayer is enclosed with this report.

All which is respectfully submitted to the President.

ELIAS BOUDINOT, Director.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO MANUFACTURES.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 2. 1801.]

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom were referred the several memorials and petitions of sundry mechanics and manufacturers, of New York; of the Providence Association of Mechanics and Manufacturers; of the Asylum Company of Journeyman Printers of Philadelphia; and of John Davies, of Alexandria, praying for further encouragement to be given to the manufactures of the United States, by extending the duties on importation, reported:

That, in their opinion, it would be inexpedient, at the present time, further to increase the duties on imported articles.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled, the memorial of the subscribers, mechanics and manufacturers, in the city of New York, respectfully sheweth:

Your memorialists, with deference to the superior discernment of Congress, entreat permission to call their attention to the subject of manufactures within the United States.

While the prosperity of agriculture and commerce are deservedly objects of national solicitude, the interest of the manufacturer is entitled to a share of attention.

It appears to your memorialists to be a principle of the most obvious policy, that the capital and labor of a State should be directed towards objects most conducive to the public prosperity.

A country so extensive as the United States, and comprehending such varieties of soil and climate, must, necessarily, afford a proportionable variety and quantity of materials for the purposes of manufacture. Wool, cotton, flax, iron, indigo, and numberless other articles, can, with care, be furnished in the greatest abundance; the addition of labor, only, is wanted, to convert them into valuable fabrics. Labor can be considerably facilitated by machinery, and the American genius is particularly adapted to mechanics.

Your memorialists do further respectfully represent, that the prosperity of a State is not only evidenced by its population, but that it likewise consists in the industry of its inhabitants; their usefulness to each other, and their independence of foreign Powers.

While destitute of manufactures, and dependent upon Europeans for a supply of those articles which nature or habit have classed among the necessities of life, we hold some of our principal blessings upon a precarious tenure, of which war or shipwreck may deprive us.

So long as we remain a nation of farmers and merchants merely, we shall be tributary to the Europeans; we shall lavish upon them the wealth that may be retained at home, and pay to them a tax, which is multiplied in every hand through which it passes.

The value of the raw material frequently bears an inconsiderable proportion to that of the manufactured article. The iron, which costs a single cent, is worth an eagle when moulded by the ingenuity of the artisan of Birmingham or Sheffield. To reward the labor of foreign artificers would be generous; but it would be just to remunerate the industry and ingenuity of our own countrymen and citizens.

With submission, your memorialists represent, that the introduction of manufactures would not militate against the interest of the American merchant. The manufactures of Britain constitute the foundation of her commerce. Should any branch of manufacture, when fostered by the protecting hand of Government, rise superior to our internal necessities, we should trust to its excellence to furnish it with a market. Should any branch of commerce be affected by the origin of domestic manufactures, the activity and enterprise of the merchant will not fail to discover a new employment for his capital. The increasing population and wants of our country will prevent a diminution of foreign commerce, for a long time; while the introduction of manufactures will support a domestic commerce, equally advantageous to the merchant, because it will employ his capital at much less hazard; more beneficial to the community, because its profits will be distributed among our own citizens; more conducive to the prosperity of the Government, because the internal intercourse it will occasion, will tend to assimilate and strengthen the empire.

It is not on a sudden that manufactures can be established; they must be pursued with persevering diligence, and nursed by guardian care. They will have many obstacles to encounter, and will be opposed by those Europeans, whose interest it is to render us their perpetual tributaries. But this is a stage through which manufactures must inevitably pass. The weakness of infancy must precede the maturity and vigor of manhood; and unless a commencement is made, we shall have nearly the same obstacles to combat in the next century, that are opposed to us in the present. It appears, therefore, to your memorialists, to be the true interest of the United States to lay the foundation of infant manufactures, and to commence with such articles as can best be supported. When countenanced by the protection of the Government, they will gradually increase, and a new source of opulence and prosperity be opened to our country.

Nations the most polite and enlightened have ever bestowed the utmost attention upon manufactures; they have even cherished valuable fabrics by premiums and bounties, though your memorialists require not these inducements to call forth their enterprise and industry.

Your memorialists beg leave further to represent that, by some fatal inattention, the breed and numbers of our sheep are now on the decline, and with deference submit to the consideration of Congress, whether suitable measures should not be taken to encourage the raising and importation of these valuable animals.

And your memorialists do pray that Congress, by imposing protecting duties, and by such other measures as they, in their wisdom, may suggest, will afford encouragement to such manufactures and fabrics as may be most useful and most likely to succeed in the United States. Your memorialists take the liberty of suggesting, in a schedule, hereto annexed, such particular manufactures as they consider may be most successfully established, and your memorialists pray that such encouragement may be extended toward them, as, in the opinion of Congress, may be deemed proper and necessary.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Asa Benjamin, reported:

That the petitioner is a manufacturer of cordage, and states that, in consequence of the high price of labor, the manufacturers of that article are not able to afford cordage at so moderate a price as foreign cordage is sold at, in our own markets; and he prays that an additional duty may be laid on imported cordage.

The committee highly appreciate the importance of the cordage manufacture, and fully believe that, if any serious danger existed of the loss of this important branch of business, it would be expedient that Government should immediately extend its patronage to it; but, from the best information the committee can collect, they are persuaded that no such danger exists.

And when it is recollected that imported cordage is already subjected to a high duty; that duties upon foreign goods must, in their nature, operate to give a bounty to the home manufacture of the same articles, and must be paid by the consumer, it is believed that the home manufacturers have not, at this time, any reasonable ground of complaint; and that an increase of duty, at this time, merely to increase the price of the article, would be unreasonable, as it respects the consumer.

The committee, therefore, report, that it is not expedient to grant the prayer of this petition.

STATE BALANCES.

[Communicated to the Senate, March 3, 1801.]

Mr. BLOODWORTH, from the committee appointed to inquire whether any, and what, further measures it is expedient to adopt with respect to the balances reported by the Commissioners appointed to settle the accounts between the United States and several States, made the following report:

That, as no disposition has been evidenced by any of the States, against whom balances were reported by the aforementioned Commissioners, except by the State of New York, to subscribe to the terms offered by Congress, a further continuance of the demand against those States, the justice and equity of which they do not admit, and for effecting the payment of which no measure of coercion can ever be resorted to, is not likely to answer any useful purpose, but, on the contrary, is calculated to occasion perpetual disquiet, as well to the creditor as to the debtor States. Under this, and every other view of the subject that they have been able to take, the committee are impressed with an opinion that it is advisable to extinguish the claim of the United States for the balances of those States who have declined accepting the terms of payment proposed by the act of Congress, passed on the 15th day of February, 1799.

INSURRECTION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

[Communicated to Congress, Dec. 5, 1799, by Message from the President of the United States.]

Letter from the District Judge of Pennsylvania,
PHILADELPHIA, March 11, 1799.

SIR: I cannot longer omit transmitting to you some documents which are enclosed, showing that a daring combination, and treasonable opposition to the laws of the United States, has recently been brought to a crisis, in Northampton county, in this district. I had some time ago issued my warrants against sundry offenders in that county who had been charged, on oath, with misdemeanors in entering into unlawful combinations to resist the law commonly called the house-tax law, and rendering it unsafe for the officers appointed under that act to perform their duties. The Marshal endeavored to execute my warrants, and had proceeded in the business as far as is related in the papers enclosed. The result may be gathered from these papers. But I have directed the Marshal to make a more accurate statement, which, with other proofs I daily expect, I will transmit. I shall proceed, when furnished with the necessary testimony, to issue warrants against those who took up arms and rescued the prisoners. But I fear the process cannot be executed without a military force: this, at least, seems to be probable from the opinions given in the enclosed papers, and from the facts therein stated. The same spirit exists in some parts of Montgomery and Bucks counties, though it has not yet arrived to the violent extreme exhibited in Northampton. I shall issue a number of warrants against offenders in those latter counties forthwith; and if any resistance should there happen, I will duly inform you, that you may lay the information before the President, to whom, I pray you, to transmit that herein given.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD PETERS,
Judge of the Pa. District, U. S.
Colonel TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

Report of the Marshal of the District of Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11, 1799.

SIR: On the 20th of February last the honorable Richard Peters, Esq. issued warrants against sundry persons residing in the county of Northampton, who had given opposition to the execution of the law of the United States laying a tax on lands and houses, and a number of subpoenas for witnesses there and in the county of Montgomery. The writs were put into my hands on the 23d; on the 26th I set out, and got to Norristown that night; on the next morning (the 27th) I set out from thence, and on that day served all my subpoenas in Montgomery, and on the 28th got to Emaus, in Northampton county. I was informed there that an express had arrived from Philadelphia with despatches informing them of my business, which created some alarm amongst the people in opposition in Millerstown and its vicinity. A meeting of a troop of horse was called there, of which a Mr. Jarrett, a Justice of the Peace, was the Captain. Messengers were sent to various places for purposes of which I was unacquainted. Next day I proceeded to Nazareth, saw Judge Henry and Mr. Eyerly, and on Saturday morning, the 2d instant, Mr. Eyerly and I rode into Lehigh township, where I arrested eleven persons, and on the next day took security from them that they would appear at Bethlehem, at the public inn, on Thursday morning, the 7th instant, to march with me to the city of Philadelphia, there to enter into recognizance to appear at the next circuit court to answer, &c. Five others came in and signed the obligation. This being accomplished, we came to Bethlehem; set out for Macungy township in company with Colonel Stephen Balliot. We lodged that night at Emaus; next morning, the 5th instant, we set out for Millerstown; on our way I stopped at the house of George Seider to serve a subpoena on him as a witness on the part of the United States. His wife came to the door; on being asked for her husband, she abused me and the gentlemen with me. He came to the door, (with a club in his hand, of green oak, which seemed to have been procured for the occasion,) and called us every abusive name the German language can afford, refusing at the same time the subpoena. I gave it into the hands of a person present, who afterwards gave it to him, and rode on. When we got near Millerstown, we observed people assembling from all quarters; in some instances two men riding on one horse. This, from the conduct of Seider, led to a belief that an opposition was intended to be made to the arresting of any of the offenders against the laws of the United States in that place. We left our horses at Mr. Buskirk's, (a German clergyman near the town,) and walked in. We went first to the house of George Schaffer, one of the worst offenders. We were there informed that he had gone the day before to Philadelphia. We then went to the house of Henry Shankweiler, where we found upwards of fifty men (chiefly armed with clubs,) prepared to prevent the execution of the law. Shankweiler was shown to me; as I advanced towards him, he retreated into the midst of the crowd. I, however, arrested him; he refused to submit to the arrest; the mob swore that, before he should be taken, they would, to a man, fight till they died; that he should not submit; he swore he never would; he would die first. I explained to them the consequence of resisting; he swore he did not care if it cost him his life and all his property, even to the destruction of his family, he would not. Upon which, Jacob and Daniel Schaffer, brothers of the aforementioned Henry Schaffer, a young man of the name of Schwartz, who tore the cockade from Col. Balliot's hat, and many others whom I did not know, nor could find any person who would furnish me with their names, rushed on in the most violent torrent of abuse, threatening vengeance, particularly against Eyerly and Balliot, calling to each other, "strike, strike!" all desirous that some one might begin the affray. I desired Shankweiler to quiet those people, to keep them off. He desired them not to hurt the Marshal; but Eyerly and Balliot, he said, were damned rascals. I informed him and his people that those gentlemen were under my protection; that I would protect them; and showed some little resolution, which seemed to strike terror into them; upon which they gave way, and the gentlemen got out of the house. It is my opinion that if one single blow had been struck the whole of the rascals would have fallen on, and we three should have been killed. Shankweiler, however, before I left him, promised to meet me on Thursday morning at Bethlehem, but without a promise of submission. We went from thence to Jeremiah Trexler's; lodged there that night. Next morning I hired a constable to go with and show me the persons of Daniel Harvey, Adam Stephen, and Herman Hortman, whom I arrested, and obtained their promise to meet me on the morning after at Bethlehem. Hortman was insolent, disputed my authority, but submitted. I returned to Trexler's; was there informed that a rescue of the prisoners, as soon as I had them assembled, was intended. Mr. Eyerly, Mr. Balliot and I, returned to Bethlehem, where Judge Henry gave us the same information. I then called a posse comitatus of about fourteen men to my aid in support of the authority of the United States, who attended unarmed. About 11 o'clock in the forenoon of Thursday, two men came into the yard of the public inn. One had a large duck gun, and the other a rifle. After some conversation with them I disarmed and confined them, concluding that if all the rescuers came in that scattered and unmilitary manner, a good account might be given of them.

After some time, up came Shankweiler of Millerstown, with William Desh, Jacob Cline, and David Scheffer, three of Captain Jarrett's troop of horse; I asked him if he had come to surrender himself to me, and submit to the laws of the United States? He impudently answered no, and kept rather behind the horsemen. I asked him for what purpose he came? He answered, to see his partner, (meaning his accuser.) I commanded him to submit; he refused in the most positive manner. After some time a person came up, informing us that, a large body of men, horse and foot, were assembled, armed with guns, swords, and pistols, at the Lehigh bridge, in a hostile manner; on which information, I sent down John Mulhallon, Esq., Major William Burnett, Isaac Hartzell, and Christian Rhodt, two of whom were supposed to be in the confidence of the people in arms, to ask of them their object, whether it was a rescue, and to warn them of the danger of such an attempt. They went down, spoke with them, and returned with reports unfavorable, which were that a rescue was intended, that I must submit to their will, and release the prisoners, or the consequences would be such as they would not be answerable for. I absolutely refused, and showed them the writs. They then offered to give bail to me to attend the court. I informed them that I was an executive officer only, that I must strictly obey the commands of the writs, that I could not take bail, desired them to go back and state this to their people in arms, that if they attempted a rescue, it would be punished severely. This they treated with contempt, and boasted of their strength. I asked them if they knew the power and strength of the United States, and the danger of resisting the authority thereof; that punishment would most assuredly follow any indignity offered to them. They went off, and returned with three of the insurgents, who came to demand a surrender of the prisoners, but who were too ignorant to inform me of the object they had in view. I informed them of my determination; then the whole body of them marched up immediately, the horsemen and officers of the infantry with swords drawn; the infantry marched with trailed arms and surrounded the house, and seemed to be without an officer of their own corps to command them. The whole troops seemed to be under the command of a Captain Fries, of Bucks county. Fries made himself conspicuous on the occasion; he said he was the commanding officer, the oldest captain; he insisted on all the prisoners being set at large. This I refused, and continued to refuse, notwithstanding their threats, till I was informed that their resentment against Judge Henry, Colonel Balliot, and Mr. Eyerly, was great, that their lives were in danger unless an immediate surrender was made; I then informed the prisoners that I could not resist longer the force against me, but that I dared not give up the prisoners. I desired the prisoners to march with me for Philadelphia; and added, that if those people chose to rescue them, they might, and take the consequence. The prisoners of Lehigh township refused to march, declaring that, if I would suffer them to go home for the present, they would meet me at Philadelphia, on the Monday and Tuesday next following, and submit to the laws. Previous to this, I had entreated Captain Jarrett, who was present and armed with pistols, to use his influence, to prevent their doing a thing so improper and dangerous to themselves. He answered, that he could do nothing with them, till he saw all the prisoners were given up to them. He then said, Now I will take away my people, which he did in perfect order. Fries prepared his, returned and asked for Eyerman, the priest; he said he must be given up, that his people would not march without him. I assured him that he had been surrendered with the other prisoners; on which assurance he went out, found the priest, and then marched. By this time night was fast approaching. I feared these ungovernable men might do things in the dark which they would avoid in the light; therefore agreed, for the safety of the gentlemen, to give the prisoners up. Upon the whole of my observations, I am well satisfied, in my own mind, that the laws of the United States cannot be executed by the officers of the Government throughout the county of Northampton, without military aid; the people are determined to resist; they calculate largely on their strength in this State, and the aid they will have from the neighboring States, and particularly that of Virginia.

I have the honor, sir, to be your most obedient, humble servant,

WILLIAM NICHOLS.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, Northampton county, ss:

Before me, Joseph Horsfield, Esq., one of the justices of the peace, personally appeared, Valentine Fuhrer, of Bethlehem, in the said county, toll receiver of the bridge across Lehigh, who, on his solemn affirmation, duly administered according to law, doth declare and say, that on the 7th day of March, about noon, a number of men, unknown to affirmant, came to the bridge gate and told affirmant, that a party of armed men would come soon; that they were much enraged; that they advised him to leave the bridge gate open, otherwise they would break through. Affirmant, on seeing the armed horse and footmen, opened the gate, and left the passage free till evening. Affirmant thinks about eighty horsemen, some armed and some unarmed, passed over the bridge; and about eighty footmen, all armed either with guns or clubs, also passed across; that after all the horse and foot had passed the bridge, Mr. Henry Jarrett also crossed. In about four or five hours all the horse and foot returned, without paying any toll, except Mr. Henry Jarrett, who offered to pay for himself and the red coats, which were about ten or twelve horsemen, and paid three quarters of a dollar to affirmant; and further he saith not.

Deposition of Jacob Eyerly and Stephen Balliot.

PENNSYLVANIA, Northampton county, ss.

Before the subscriber, one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, in and for said county, on the 8th day of March, A. D., 1799, personally came Jacob Eyerly, Esq., one of the commissioners of the direct tax, and Stephen Balliot, Esq., collector of the revenue, &c.; the said Jacob Eyerly having made solemn affirmation according to law, and the said Stephen Balliot having made solemn oath according to law, do depose, declare, and say, that they set out from Bethlehem on the 5th instant, in company with Colonel William Nichols, Marshal of the United States for the district of Pennsylvania, who intended to serve several subpoenas and warrants issued by the Judge of the District Court; that the Marshal, upon the road to Millerstown, served a subpoena upon a certain George Seider, who, when he was called upon, came to the door with a club, and called the Marshal and these deponents highway robbers, thieves, rascals, and scoundrels, and spoke other very abusive language, and would not receive the copy of the subpoena; that the Marshal handed the copy to a certain Daniel Schwartz, who was present with the said Seider; that we rode on from there to Millerstown, where the Marshal and these deponents entered the house of Henry Shankweiler to serve a warrant upon him; here we found at least fifty men collected in his bar-room, among others the abovenamed George Seider, with a club; that, upon the arrestation of said Shankweiler, Jacob Shaeffer and David Shaeffer, with others whom the deponents do not know, came in the most violent and threatening manner close up to the deponents and the Marshal, and in a most violent manner threatened to beat and otherwise did abuse the deponents, and declared, that if the Marshal dared to take off said Shankweiler, they would fight to the last. And further, that said Shankweiler did declare he would not submit;

but, upon the Marshal's representing to him the consequences, he said whatever Jarrett (meaning Henry Jarrett) did he would do; that the Marshal endeavored to get a man from the neighborhood who should know the persons so collected, but could procure nobody else to accompany him; that the people of the neighborhood consider themselves in imminent danger of their lives by appearing in favor of the Government; that previous to the return of the deponents with the Marshal to Bethlehem, they had received information which induced them to believe there would be some attempts be made to rescue the prisoners either at Bethlehem or on the road.

That yesterday, the 7th of March, the Marshal having collected about eighteen of the prisoners in a quiet and peaceable manner, at the house of Abraham Levering, tavern keeper, in the town of Bethlehem, during the morning of said day, a number of men, partly horsemen and foot, collected at the said house; the first few that came within reach were disarmed, but the prisoners who had been arrested in and about Millerstown, in Macungy township came up to the said house in company with a number of horsemen, armed with pistols and swords; that, in a short time after, a number of other horsemen, well armed, partly in uniform, came up; about half an hour after came up also to the said house two parties of men on foot, well armed; upon the whole, we suppose to the amount of about or between eighty and one hundred; that there were various and numerous threats made that if the prisoners were not released they would proceed to violence. And further, that your deponents are fully assured that the laws of the United States cannot be executed under the present circumstances, as it is every day becoming more and more dangerous throughout all that part of the county of Northampton called Macungy, and Upper Milford, and several other places. And further saith not.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, combinations to defeat the execution of the laws for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, within the United States, have existed in the counties of Northampton, Montgomery and Bucks, in the State of Pennsylvania, and have proceeded in a manner subversive of the just authority of the Government, by misrepresentations, to render the laws odious, by deterring the public officers of the United States to forbear the execution of their functions, and by openly threatening their lives: And whereas, the endeavors of the well-affected citizens, as well as of the Executive officers, to conciliate a compliance with those laws, have failed of success; and certain persons in the county of Northampton aforesaid have been hardy enough to perpetrate certain acts, which I am advised amount to treason, being overt acts of levying war against the United States, the said persons exceeding one hundred in number, and armed and arrayed in a warlike manner, having, on the 7th day of this present month of March, proceeded to the house of Abraham Levering, in the town of Bethlehem, and there compelled William Nichols, Marshal of the United States in and for the district of Pennsylvania, to desist from the execution of certain legal process in his hands to be executed, and having compelled him to discharge and set at liberty certain persons whom he had arrested by virtue of criminal process, duly issued for offences against the United States, and having impeded and prevented the commissioner and the assessors, appointed in conformity with the laws aforesaid, in the county of Northampton aforesaid, by threats and personal injury, from executing the said laws; avowing, as the motives of these illegal and treasonable proceedings, an intention to prevent, by force of arms, the execution of the said laws, and to withstand, by open violence, the lawful authority of the Government of the United States: And whereas, by the Constitution and laws of the United States, I am authorized, whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed in any State, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals, to call forth military force to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed: And whereas, it is, in my judgment, necessary to call forth military force, in order to suppress the combinations aforesaid, and to cause the laws aforesaid to be duly executed; and I have accordingly determined so to do, under the solemn conviction that the essential interests of the United States demand it: Wherefore, I, John Adams, President of the United States, do hereby command all persons, being insurgents as aforesaid, and all others whom it may concern, on or before Monday next, being the 18th day of this present month, to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes; and I do moreover warn all persons whomsoever against aiding, abetting, or comforting the perpetrators of the aforesaid treasonable acts; and I do require all officers and others, good and faithful citizens, according to their respective duties and the laws of the land, to exert their utmost endeavors to prevent and suppress such dangerous and unlawful proceedings.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed [L. s.] to these presents, and signed the same with my hand.

By the President:

TIMOTHY PICKERING,
Secretary of State.

Letter from the Secretary of War to the Governor of Pennsylvania.

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 20, 1799.

SIR: To suppress the insurrection now existing in the counties of Northampton, Bucks, and Montgomery, in the State of Pennsylvania, in opposition to the laws of the United States, the President has thought it necessary to employ a military force, to be composed, in part, of such of the militia of Pennsylvania, whose situation and state of preparation will enable them to march with promptitude. The corps of militia first desired on this occasion are the troops of cavalry belonging to this city, and one troop from each of the counties of Philadelphia, Bucks, Chester, Montgomery, and Lancaster. These troops I have the honor to request your Excellency will order to hold themselves in readiness to march on or before the 28th instant, under the command of Brigadier General McPherson.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES MCHENRY.

His Excellency Governor MIFFLIN.

Instructions to General McPherson.

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 21, 1799.

SIR: In pursuance of the President's proclamation, bearing date 12th day of this month, it has become indispensable to determine upon and put in motion the military force proper to be employed for suppressing the insurrection in the counties of Northampton, Montgomery, and Bucks, in this State.

You will therefore be pleased to form a detachment from the volunteers, who have associated in the State of Pennsylvania, and been accepted by the President, as a part of the provisional army, to consist of the two volunteer companies of cavalry of the city of Philadelphia, to which you will add two more of the troops of militia cavalry of the same city, now under orders to hold themselves in readiness to march, so as to compose a body of two hundred and forty horse, including non-commissioned officers, and proceed with the detachment, without delay, to the theatre of insurrection.

You will forthwith make returns of such articles as may yet be wanted for this detachment, that the necessary orders may be given for their delivery.

A paymaster for the volunteers and militia that may be employed ought to be appointed. You will please to name one, who will be advanced a sum, on account, equal to one month's pay, for the companies now called into service.

You will cause correct muster and pay-rolls for the volunteers and militia called into actual service, in the usual forms, to be made out, with the view of rendering the settlement of the accounts for their services prompt and easy.

The quartermaster of the detachment, who will be appointed by the Quartermaster General, will receive in advance from the Quartermaster General a sum on account, which may be conceived adequate to the expenditure that may be incurred in this particular department.

Insurrection in Pennsylvania.

Rations will be furnished by the contractors for supplying the same to the military within the State of Pennsylvania. It is presumed he will employ a proper agent or agents, and execute your orders with precision respecting provisions.

Doctor Joseph Strong will attend the expedition, in quality of surgeon, furnished with a competent supply of medicines and instruments.

As one object of the expedition is to assist the Marshal of the District to make prisoners of, and hold amenable to justice, persons who have either resisted the service of legal process, or been concerned in rescuing from him those who were in his lawful custody, or for whom he may have process on other charges, and to conduct the prisoners to Philadelphia, you will perceive the propriety of applying your cavalry, in the manner best calculated, consistently with the safety of the detachment, to secure as many of the offenders at the same moment as possible.

You will inform the Quartermaster General and the contractor of the precise time you design to put the detachment in motion, and make them acquainted with whatever it may be necessary for them to know, previously, in order to insure, as much as possible, no failure in your operations, from the want of means in either of their departments.

The Marshal of the District of Pennsylvania will move with you, and give you the names of the offenders, their descriptions, and respective places of abode, who are to be made prisoners under criminal process. You will be particularly careful that the most criminal, or the ringleaders, be attended to, and in preference secured, and to prevent, by the most pointed orders, any insult to the inhabitants, or unnecessary rigor towards the prisoners taken.

It is left entirely to your discretion to determine upon your place or places of rendezvous, which should be such as are best calculated to enable the troops that may be stationary to defend themselves in case of attack, and also to aid as effectually as possible your parties of horse in their transit to and from their points of departure.

You will have observed that is designed to give to the volunteer and militia cavalry selected by you a principal agency in suppressing the existing combinations against the laws, and of quelling an insurrection and rebellion against the Government and rightful authority of their country, at a time when its sovereignty and liberties are threatened by a powerful, implacable, and insidious nation, who have been accustomed to divide and conquer other nations. It is not doubted, therefore, but that they will exhibit a useful example upon this service of military promptitude, spirit, vigilance, discipline, and obedience of orders.

To be prepared for adverse contingencies, it will be proper that you continue the orders for holding themselves in readiness to march, at the shortest notice, to the volunteer companies and militia not immediately called into actual service.

To cover the active operations of the volunteer and militia cavalry, a company of infantry, under Captain Shoemaker, and a company of artillerists under Captain Irwin, from Carlisle, Pennsylvania, have been ordered to march and rendezvous at Reading; and a company of artillerists at Fort Mifflin, intended to rendezvous at the same place, is under orders to march at the shortest notice. Two companies of artillerists, from New York, and a party of infantry, recruits under Lieutenant Boote, supposed about thirty, from New Brunswick, New Jersey, have been ordered to march to Newtown, Pennsylvania: these latter troops are on the establishment of the United States; expected to arrive at their first places of rendezvous on or about the 23d instant, and subject to your orders, to be stationed where their presence can produce the best effects, and employed in case circumstances should require their actual co-operation with the volunteers and militia.

If rebellion should acquire a strength demanding further force, you are, using a sound discretion, and keeping economy in view, fully authorized by the President to call into actual service the whole or any part of the volunteer and militia companies that have been ordered to be held in readiness in the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

It is expected that the detachment of volunteers and militia will be pushed forward, as rapidly as the season and roads will permit to the point or points you may think proper to occupy with the regular troops, and to which your capturing parties may be instructed to conduct their prisoners.

You are earnestly requested to employ every moment of your time in accomplishing the objects of your command, conformably to these orders, and to keep constantly in mind that, if the offenders against the laws can be suddenly and unexpectedly secured, before they have time to prepare general resistance, it may extinguish the insurrection, without further expense to the United States, or call upon the patriotism or fortitude of our fellow citizens. That you may have sufficient assistance in your own family to meet the eventual business the service may impose upon you, it is permitted to you to appoint a volunteer aid-de-camp, (should you conceive one to be necessary,) in addition to the aid allowed you by law, and to draw for him and his servant rations and forage.

You will be able to judge accurately upon the spot when opposition to the laws, and the spirit of revolt and insurrection, are so far suppressed in the disaffected counties as to admit the whole or part of the volunteers and militia to return to their homes and civil occupations. This will be ascertained when the inhabitants shall quietly permit the commissioners and assessors of the tax on land and houses to perform their respective duties according to law. Until this shall be the state of those counties, it will be proper to continue the military force there in convenient positions to produce a perfect submission to the authority of the United States.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

JAMES MCHENRY.

Brigadier General.

Oration on the Death of General Washington.

ORATION ON THE DEATH OF GENERAL WASHINGTON.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Dec. 30, 1799.]

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27, 1799.

DEAR SIR: The enclosed resolutions, which unanimously passed the House of Representatives to-day, will make known to you how highly they have been gratified with the manner in which you have performed the service assigned to you, in preparing and delivering a funeral oration on the death of General WASHINGTON. That our constituents may participate in the gratification we have received, from your having so well expressed those sentiments of respect for the character, of gratitude for the services, and of grief for the death, of that illustrious personage, I flatter myself you will not hesitate to comply with the request of the House, by furnishing a copy of your oration, to be taken for publication.

Allow me, while performing this pleasing task of official duty, in communicating an act of the Representatives of the people, so just to you and so honorable to themselves, to embrace the opportunity to declare that I am, personally, with great esteem and sincere regard, dear sir, your friend and obedient servant,

THEODORE SEDGWICK.

Hon. Major Gen. LEE.

FRANKLIN COURT, Dec. 28, 1799.

DEAR SIR: I owe to the goodness of the House of Representatives the honor which their resolutions confer on my humble efforts to execute their wish.

I can never disobey their will, and therefore will furnish a copy of the oration delivered on the late afflicting occasion, much as I had flattered myself with a different disposition of it.

Sincerely reciprocating the personal considerations with which you honor me, I am, very respectfully, sir, your friend and obedient servant,

HENRY LEE.

The SPEAKER of the House of Reps.

In obedience to your* will, I rise, your humble organ, with the hope of executing a part of the system of public mourning which you have been pleased to adopt, commemorative of the death of the most illustrious and most beloved personage this country has ever produced; and which, while it transmits to posterity your sense of the awful event, faintly represents your knowledge of the consummate excellence you so cordially honor.

Desperate, indeed, is any attempt on earth to meet correspondently this dispensation of Heaven; for, while, with pious resignation, we submit to the will of an all-gracious Providence, we can never cease lamenting in our finite view of Omnipotent Wisdom, the heart-rending privation for which our nation weeps. When the civilized world shakes to its centre; when every moment gives birth to strange and momentous changes; when our peaceful quarter of the globe, exempt as it happily has been from any share in the slaughter of the human race, may yet be compelled to abandon her pacific policy, and to risk the doleful casualties of war, what limit is there to the extent of our loss? None within the reach of my words to express; none which your feelings will not disavow.

The founder of our federate Republic, our bulwark in war, our guide in peace, is no more. Oh that this was but questionable! Hope, the comforter of the wretched, would pour into our agonized hearts its balmy dew. But, alas! there is no hope for us; our WASHINGTON is removed forever. Possessing the stoutest frame, and purest mind, he had passed nearly to his sixty-eighth year, in the enjoyment of high health; when, habituated by his care of us to neglect himself, a slight cold, disregarded, became inconvenient on Friday, oppressive on Saturday, and defying every medical interposition, before the morning of Sunday put an end to the best of men. An end did I say? his fame survives! bounded only by the limits of earth, and by the extent of the human mind. He survives in our hearts, in the growing knowledge of our children, in the affection of the good throughout the world; and when our monuments shall be done away, when nations now existing shall be no more, when even our young and far-spreading empire shall have perished, still will our WASHINGTON's glory unfaded shine, and die not, until love of virtue cease on earth, or earth itself sink into chaos.

How, my fellow-citizens, shall I single to your grateful hearts his pre-eminent worth? Where shall I begin in opening to your view a character throughout sublime? Shall I speak of his warlike achievements, all springing in obedience to his country's will—all directed to his country's good?

Will you go with me to the banks of the Monongahela, to see your youthful WASHINGTON, supporting, in the dismal hour of Indian victory, the ill-fated Braddock, and saving, by his judgment and by his valor, the remains of a defeated army, pressed by the conquering savage foe? Or, when oppressed America, nobly resolving to risk her all in defence of her violated rights, he was elevated, by the unanimous voice of Congress, to the command of her armies? Will you follow him to the high grounds of Boston, where, to an undisciplined, courageous, and virtuous yeomanry, his presence gave the stability of system, and infused the invincibility of love of country? Or shall I carry you to the painful scenes of Long Island, York Island, and New Jersey; when, combatting superior and gallant armies, aided by powerful fleets, and led by chiefs high in the roll of fame, he stood the bulwark of our safety; undismayed by disaster; unchanged by change of fortune? Or will you view him in the precarious fields of Trenton, where deep gloom, unnerving every arm, reigned triumphant through our thinned, worn down, unaided ranks, himself unmoved? Dreadful was the night—it was about this time of

* The two Houses of Congress.

Oration on the Death of General Washington.

Winter; the storm raged; the Delaware rolling furiously with floating ice, forbade the approach of man. WASHINGTON, self-collected, viewed the tremendous scene; his country called; unappalled by surrounding dangers, he passed to the hostile shore; he fought; he conquered. The morning sun cheered the American world. Our country rose on the event; and her dauntless Chief, pursuing his blow, completed in the lawns of Princeton what his vast soul had conceived on the shores of Delaware.

Thence to the strong ground of Morristown he led his small but gallant band; and through an eventful Winter, by the high efforts of his genius, whose matchless force was measurable only by the growth of difficulties, he held in check formidable hostile legions, conducted by a chief experienced in the art of war, and famed for his valor on the ever-memorable Heights of Abraham, where fell Wolfe, Montcalm, and since our much-lamented Montgomery, all covered with glory. In this fortunate interval, produced by his masterly conduct, our fathers, ourselves, animated by his resistless example, rallied around our country's standard, and continued to follow her beloved Chief through the various and trying scenes to which the destinies of our Union led.

Who is there that has forgotten the vales of Brandywine, the fields of Germantown, or the plains of Monmouth? Everywhere present, wants of every kind obstructing, numerous and valiant armies encountering, himself a host, he assuaged our sufferings, limited our privations, and upheld our tottering Republic. Shall I display to you the spread of the fire of his soul, by rehearsing the praises of the hero of Saratoga, and his much-loved compeer of the Carolinas? No; our WASHINGTON wears not borrowed glory. To Gates—to Green—he gave without reserve the applause due to their eminent merit; and long may the Chiefs of Saratoga and of Eutaw receive the grateful respect of a grateful people.

Moving in his own orbit, he imparted heat and light to his most distant satellites; and combining the physical and moral force of all within his sphere, with irresistible weight he took his course, commiserating folly, disdaining vice, dismaying treason, and invigorating despondency, until the auspicious hour arrived; when, united with the intrepid forces of a potent and magnanimous ally, he brought to submission the since conqueror of India; thus finishing his long career of military glory with a lustre corresponding to his great name, and in his last act of war affixing the seal of fate to our nation's birth.

To the horrid din of battle sweet peace succeeded; and our virtuous Chief, mindful only of the common good, in a moment tempting personal aggrandizement, hushed the discontents of growing sedition, and surrendering his power into the hands from which he had received it, converted his sword into a ploughshare, teaching an admiring world that to be truly great you must be truly good.

Were I to stop here, the picture would be incomplete, and the task imposed unfinished. Great as was our WASHINGTON in war, and much as did that greatness contribute to produce the American Republic, it is not in war alone his pre-eminence stands conspicuous; his various talents, combining all the capacities of the statesman with those of the soldier, fitted him alike to guide the councils and the armies of the nation. Scarcely had he rested from his martial toils, while his invaluable parental advice was still sounding in our ears, when he, who had been our shield and our sword, was called forth to act a less splendid but a more important part.

Possessing a clear and penetrating mind, a strong and a sound judgment, calmness and temper for deliberation, with invincible firmness and perseverance in resolutions maturely formed, drawing information from all, acting from himself, with incorruptible integrity and unvarying patriotism; his own superiority and the public confidence alike marked him as the man designed by Heaven to lead in the great political as well as military events which have distinguished the era of his life.

The finger of an overruling Providence, pointing at WASHINGTON, was neither mistaken nor unobserved; when, to realize the vast hopes to which our Revolution had given birth, a change of political system became indispensable.

How novel—how grand the spectacle! independent States stretched over an immense territory, and known only by common difficulty, clinging to their Union as the rock of their safety, deciding, by frank comparison of their relative condition, to rear on that rock, under the guidance of reason, a common Government, through whose commanding protection, liberty and order, with their long train of blessings, should be safe to themselves, and the sure inheritance of their posterity.

This arduous task devolved on citizens selected by the people, from knowledge of their wisdom and confidence in their virtue. In this august assembly of sages and of patriots, WASHINGTON, of course, was found; and, as if acknowledged to be the most wise, where all were wise, with one voice he was declared their Chief. How well he merited this rare distinction, how faithful were the labors of himself and his compatriots, the work of their hands and our Union, strength and prosperity, the fruits of that work, best attest.

But to have essentially aided in presenting to his country this consummation of her hopes, neither satisfied the claims of his fellow-citizens on his talents, nor those duties which the possession of those talents imposed. Heaven had not infused into his mind such an uncommon share of its ethereal spirit to remain unemployed, nor bestowed on him his genius unaccompanied with the corresponding duty of devoting it to the common good. To have framed a Constitution, was showing only, without realizing the general happiness. This great work remained to be done, and America, steadfast in her preference, with one voice summoned her beloved WASHINGTON, unpractised as he was in the duties of civil administration, to execute this last act in the completion of the national felicity. Obedient to her call, he assumed the high office with that self-distrust peculiar to his innate modesty, the constant attendant of pre-eminent virtue. What was the burst of joy through our anxious land on this exhilarating event, is known to us all. The aged, the young, the brave, the fair, rivalled each other in demonstrations of their gratitude; and this high-wrought delightful scene was heightened in its effect by the singular contest between the zeal of the bestowers, and the avoidance of the receiver of the honors bestowed. Commencing his administration, what heart is not charmed with the recollection of the pure and wise principles announced by himself, as the basis of his political life. He best understood the indissoluble union between virtue and happiness, between duty and advantage, between the genuine maxims of an honest and magnanimous policy, and the solid rewards of public prosperity and individual felicity; watching with an equal and comprehensive eye over this great assemblage of communities and interests, he laid the foundation of our national policy in the unerring, immutable principles of morality, based on religion, exemplifying the pre-eminence of free Government, by all the attributes which win the affections of its citizens, or command the respect of the world:

Oration on the Death of General Washington.

"O fortunatos nimium, sua si bona norint!"

Leading through the complicated difficulties produced by previous obligations and conflicting interests, seconded by succeeding Houses of Congress, enlightened and patriotic, he surmounted all original obstructions, and brightened the path of our national felicity.

The Presidential term expiring, his solicitude to exchange exaltation for humility returned with a force increased with increase of age, and he had prepared his Farewell Address to his countrymen, proclaiming his intention, when the united interposition of all around him, enforced by the eventful prospects of the epoch, produced a further sacrifice of inclination to duty. The election of President followed; and WASHINGTON, by the unanimous vote of the nation, was called to resume the Chief Magistracy. What a wonderful fixture of confidence! Which attracts most our admiration—a people so correct, or a citizen combining an assemblage of talents forbidding rivalry, and stifling even envy itself? Such a nation ought to be happy; such a Chief must be forever revered.

War, long menaced by the Indian tribes, now broke out; and the terrible conflict, deluging Europe with blood, began to shed its baneful influence over our happy land. To the first, outstretching his invincible arm, under the orders of the gallant Wayne, the American eagle soared triumphant through distant forests. Peace followed victory, and the melioration of the condition of the enemy followed peace. Godlike virtue! which uplifts even the subdued savage.

To the second he opposed himself. New and delicate was the conjuncture, and great was the stake. Soon did his penetrating mind discern and seize the only course; continuing to us all the felicity enjoyed. He issued his proclamation of neutrality. This index to his whole subsequent conduct, was sanctioned by the approbation of both Houses of Congress, and by the approving voice of the people.

To this sublime policy he inviolably adhered, unmoved by foreign intrusion, unshaken by domestic turbulence.

"Justum et tenacem propositi virum,
"Non civium ardor prava jubentium,
"Non vultus instantis tyranni
"Mente quatinus solidâ."

Maintaining his pacific system at the expense of no duty, America, faithful to herself, and unstained in her honor, continued to enjoy the delights of peace, while afflicted Europe mourns in every quarter, under the accumulated miseries of an unexampled war; miseries in which our happy country must have shared, had not our pre-eminent WASHINGTON been as firm in the council as he was brave in the field.

Pursuing steadfastly his course, he held safe the public happiness, preventing foreign war, and quelling internal discord, till the revolving period of a third election approached, when he executed his interrupted but inextinguishable desire of returning to the humble walks of private life.

The promulgation of his fixed resolution stopped the anxious wishes of an affectionate people from adding a third unanimous testimonial of their unabated confidence in the man so long enthroned in their hearts. When, before, was affection like this exhibited on earth? Turn over the records of ancient Greece; review the annals of mighty Rome; examine the volumes of modern Europe—you search in vain. America and her WASHINGTON only afford the dignified exemplification.

The illustrious personage called by the national voice in succession to the arduous office of guiding a free people, had new difficulties to encounter; the amicable effort of settling our difficulties with France, begun by WASHINGTON, and pursued by his successor, in virtue as in station, proving abortive, America took measures of self-defence. No sooner was the public mind roused by prospect of danger, than every eye was turned to the friend of all, though secluded from public view, and grey in public service; the virtuous veteran, following his plough,* received the unexpected summons with mingled emotions of indignation at the unmerited ill-treatment of his country, and of a determination once more to risk his all in her defence.

The annunciation of these feelings, in his affecting letter to the President accepting the command of the army, concludes his official conduct.

First in war—first in peace—and first in the hearts of his countrymen, he was second to none in the humble and endearing scenes of private life; pious, just, humane, temperate, and sincere; uniform, dignified, and commanding; his example was as edifying to all around him, as were the effects of that example lasting.

* General WASHINGTON, though opulent, gave much of his time and attention to practical agriculture.

To his equals he was condescending, to his inferiors kind, and to the dear object of his affections exemplarily tender; correct throughout, vice shuddered in his presence, and virtue always felt his fostering hand; the purity of his private character gave effulgence to his private virtues.

His last scene comported with the whole tenor of his life. Although in extreme pain, not a sigh, not a groan escaped him; and with undisturbed serenity he closed his well-spent life. Such was the man America has lost; such was the man for whom our nation mourns.

Methinks I see his august image, and hear falling from his venerable lips these deep sinking words:

"Cease, sons of America, lamenting our separation; go on, and confirm by your wisdom the fruits of our joint councils, joint efforts, and common dangers; reverence religion; diffuse knowledge throughout your land; patronize the arts and sciences; let liberty and order be inseparable companions; control party spirit, the bane of free Governments; observe good faith to, and cultivate peace with, all nations; shut up every avenue to foreign influence; contract rather than extend national connexion; rely on yourselves only; be American in thought, word, and deed: thus will you give immortality to that Union, which was the constant object of my terrestrial labors; thus will you preserve, undisturbed, to the latest posterity, the felicity of a people to me most dear; and thus will you supply (if my happiness is now aught to you) the only vacancy in the round of pure bliss high Heaven bestows."

MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 18, 1800.]

Mr. CLAIBORNE, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of Cato West and others, styling themselves "a committee, regularly chosen by the inhabitants of the Mississippi Territory, for the purpose of petitioning for a redress of grievances," made, in part, the following report:

The petitioners state, that, from the vast interval which separates the Territory from the seat of the General Government, a knowledge of their interest and wishes being difficult to be ascertained, partial and inaccurate statements were too apt to acquire credit, and that of this stamp were the representations which have been made, in the name of the people, soliciting a Government similar to one which had been established in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio.

That the Government which Congress had enacted for the Mississippi Territory was bad in theory and still worse in practice; the Executive, Legislative and Judicial authorities, so carefully separated and limited by the constitutions of the elder States, are here mingled together in the hands of three or four individuals, who have but a partial interest in common with the people; and further, that the immense power thus conceded had neither been exercised with liberality nor beneficence, and that in some instances the provisions of the ordinance had been unattended to, and the Constitution of the United States violated.

To remedy these inconveniences, and to extend the fundamental principles of civil liberty, the petitioners solicit an amelioration of their present political system, and that Congress will enact that the ordinance of one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven may immediately operate in its second grade in the Mississippi Territory, meaning that the people thereof may be allowed a Legislative Assembly.

Upon mature consideration of the premises, the committee are of an opinion that an amelioration of the present existing Government is dictated by justice and policy.

That the political maxim, so generally practised upon in the United States, "that the citizen should have a voice, by himself or his representative, in the framing of laws, and imposing of taxes," ought to be extended to the Mississippi Territory.

The committee find that, by the act of Congress, passed on the seventh of April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, entitled "An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory," the boundaries of the said Territory were defined, and the President of the United States authorized to establish therein a Government in all respects similar to that now exercised in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, excepting and excluding the last article of the ordinance made for the government thereof, by the late Congress, on the thirteenth of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven.

That the President, soon after the passage of the act aforesaid, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, appointed a Governor, Secretary, and three Judges, for the Mississippi district, who have entered upon the duties of their respective offices, and proceeded to the organization of the Government.

That in the ordinance referred to, in the before-mentioned act of Congress, the committee find the following provisions:

"Be it ordained by the authority aforesaid, That there shall be appointed, from time to time, by Congress, a Governor, whose commission shall continue in force for the term of three years, unless sooner revoked by Congress; he shall reside in the district, and have a freehold estate therein, in one thousand acres of land, while in the exercise of his office."

"There shall be appointed, from time to time by Congress, a Secretary, whose commission shall continue in force for four years, unless sooner revoked; he shall reside in the district, and have a freehold estate therein, in five hundred acres of land, while in the exercise of his office; it shall be his duty to keep and preserve the acts and laws passed by the Legislature and the public records of the district, and the proceedings of the Governor in his executive department, and transmit authentic copies of such acts and proceedings, every six months, to the Secretary of Congress. There shall also be appointed a court, to consist of three Judges, any two of whom to form a court, who shall have a common law jurisdiction, and reside in the district, and have each therein a freehold estate in five hundred acres of land, while in the exercise of their offices; and their commissions shall continue in force during good behaviour. The Governor and Judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress, from time to time; which laws shall be in force in the district, until the organization of the General Assembly therein, unless disapproved of by Congress, but afterwards the Legislature shall have authority to alter them, as they shall think fit. The Governor for the time being shall be commander-in-chief of the militia, appoint and commission all officers in the same, below the rank of general officers; all general officers shall be appointed and commissioned by Congress, previous to the organization of the General Assembly; the Governor shall appoint such magistrates and other civil officers, in each county or township, as he shall find necessary for the preservation of the peace and good order in the same; after the General Assembly shall be organized, the powers and duties of magistrates and other civil officers shall be regulated and defined by the said Assembly, but all magistrates and other civil officers not herein otherwise directed shall, during the continuance of this temporary government, be appointed by the Governor. For the prevention of crimes and injuries, the laws to be adopted or made shall have force in all parts of the district; and for the execution of process, criminal and civil, the Governor shall make proper divisions thereof; and he shall proceed from time to time, as circumstances may require, to lay out the parts of the district in which Indian titles shall have been extinguished, into counties and townships; subject, however, to such alterations as may hereafter be made by the Legislature.

"So soon as there shall be five thousand free male inhabitants of full age in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the Governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships, to represent them in the General Assembly, provided that for every five hundred free male inhabitants there shall be one representative, and so on progressively with the number of free male inhabitants, shall the right of representation increase, until the number of representatives shall amount to twenty-five; after which the number and proportion of representatives shall be regulated by the Legislature: Provided, That no person be eligible or qualified to act as a representative unless he shall have been a citizen of one of the United States three years, and be a resident in the district, or unless he shall have resided in the district three years; and, in either case, shall likewise hold in his own right, in fee simple, two hundred acres of land within the same: Provided, also, That a freehold in fifty acres of land in the district, having been a citizen of one of the States, and being resident in the district, or the like freehold, and two years' residence in the district, shall be necessary to qualify a man as an elector of a representative.

"The representative thus elected shall serve for the term of two years; and in case of the death of a representative, or removal from office, the Governor shall issue a writ to the county or township for which he was a member, to elect another in his stead, to serve for the residue of the term.

"The General Assembly, or Legislature, shall consist of the Governor, Legislative Council, and a House of Representatives. The Legislative Council shall consist of five members, to continue in office five years, unless sooner removed by Congress; any three of whom to be a quorum; and the members of the Council shall be nominated and appointed in the following manner, to wit: As soon as representatives shall be elected, the Governor shall appoint a time and place for them to meet together, and, when met, they shall nominate ten persons, resident in the district, and each possessed of a freehold in five hundred acres of land, and return their names to Congress, five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as aforesaid; and whenever a vacancy shall happen in the council, by death or removal from office, the House of Representatives shall nominate two persons qualified as aforesaid for each vacancy, and return their names to Congress, one of whom Congress shall appoint and commission for the residue of the term. And every five years, four months at least before the expiration of the time of service of the members of Council, the said House shall nominate ten persons, qualified as aforesaid, and return their names to Congress; five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as members of the Council five years, unless sooner removed. And the Governor, Legislative Council, and House of Representatives, shall have authority to make laws, in all cases, for the good government of the district, not repugnant to the principles and articles in this ordinance established and declared. And all bills having passed by a majority in the House, and by a majority in the Council, shall be referred to the Governor for his assent; but no bill or Legislative act whatever shall be of any force without his assent. The Governor shall have power to convene, prorogue, and dissolve the General Assembly, when in his opinion it shall be expedient."

The committee further report, that they have not been enabled to ascertain with certainty the number of citizens residing within the limits of the Mississippi district, but there are supposed to be about six thousand free people of all descriptions; that the free male inhabitants of full age, not being sufficient in number (under the ordinance) to authorize a General Assembly, the Legislative authority (subject to certain prescribed restrictions) is at this time vested in and exercised by the Governor and Judges.

Mississippi Territory.

A Legislative Assembly organized upon the plan contemplated by the ordinance, when the number of free male inhabitants of full age amounted to five thousand, would, it is presumed, remove the principal cause of uneasiness, and be promotive of the general good.

For information as to the extent of population in the Mississippi Territory, the quality, quantity, and value of the exports, the wishes of the people for a change of government, and their supposed ability to meet the expense incident to a General Assembly, the committee beg leave to refer the House to two letters from Mr. N. Hunter hereto subjoined, (Nos. 1 and 2;) the petitioners prayed that Mr. Hunter might be accredited as their agent, and viewed as a character in whom entire confidence may be placed.

From a desire to attach the citizens of the Mississippi Territory permanently to the United States, to promote their political welfare and happiness, and to extend to them more ample security against political oppression, the committee submit the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That so much of the ordinance for the government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, as relates to the organization of a General Assembly therein, and prescribes the powers thereof, shall forthwith operate and be in force in the Mississippi Territory: Provided, That, until the number of free male inhabitants of full age, in the said Territory, shall amount to five thousand, there shall not be returned to the General Assembly more than nine representatives.

2. Resolved, That, until the number of free male inhabitants of full age in the Mississippi Territory shall amount to five thousand, the county of Adams shall be entitled to choose five representatives to the General Assembly, and the county of Pickering four.

3. Resolved, That the first election for Representatives to the General Assembly shall be on the — day of —, and that all subsequent elections shall be regulated by the Legislature.

4. Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Governor of the Mississippi Territory to cause the said election to be holden on the day aforesaid, at the most convenient place in the counties aforesaid, and to nominate a proper officer or officers to preside at and conduct the same, and to return to him the names of the persons who may have been duly elected.

5. Resolved, That the Representatives shall be convened by the Governor on the — day of —.

6. Resolved, That so soon as the number of free male inhabitants, of full age, shall amount to or exceed five thousand, the number of Representatives to the General Assembly shall be determined, and the apportionment made, in the way prescribed in the ordinance.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 4, 1800.

DEAR SIR: In your communication of the 26th of January, you inquire—

1st. "By what authority were Cato West and others chosen a committee? if by the people, at what period, in what manner, and for what purpose?"

A meeting was held by a number of the principal inhabitants, on the 6th day of July last, in order to confer upon the unhappy situation of the country, and, if possible, to devise a remedy. The result of this meeting was a circular letter drawn up by the conference, recommending to the several districts the scheme of a committee, which was to meet, with written instructions from their constituents, in order to inform the Governor of the true situation of the country, and petition for a redress of grievances. I have a copy of the circular letter, and the letters of instructions from the several districts.

2d. You inquire "what is the aggregate number of the free inhabitants of the Mississippi Territory, what proportion are natives of the United States, and what the number of our militia?"

Our Governor has never taken a census of the people, nor has he been able to organize the militia, so that we are much at a loss with respect to our numbers; I think, however, that we cannot have less than six thousand free inhabitants, and about two thousand capable of bearing arms: our people are mostly natives of the United States; there is not, perhaps, one-tenth of any other description.

3d. You inquire "whether the emigration to the Territory is great, and whether any of the citizens have lately removed to the Spanish dominions, and, if any, what seem to have been the inducements?"

The emigration to our country is at this time extremely limited; the impossibility of procuring lands by any other way than by purchase from individuals, and the facility with which lands are acquired in the Spanish dominions, forms an insuperable bar to the increase of our population; though men of property who have lately descended the river seem rather inclined to sacrifice a part of their property in the purchase of lands whereon to settle, than to avail themselves of the easy terms offered by the Spanish Government; but the poorer classes are impelled to go below.

An alarming depopulation took place last Winter under the patronage of Doctor White; we could never learn the exact number of families, but they were sufficiently numerous to form a considerable settlement below the line of which Doctor White is commandant. A number of the inhabitants have been selling out this Summer, and preparing to remove below at the end of the year. Various circumstances may have combined in producing this dereliction, but we do not hesitate to say that the morose, arbitrary contumacy of Governor Sargent are among the primary causes.

4th. You would know "the particular culture which occupies the attention of the planter of the Mississippi Territory, what are our articles of exportation, and what the supposed quantity and value?"

Cotton is at present the staple of the Territory, and is cultivated with singular advantage to the planter. We get one quarter of a dollar per pound for clean cotton, and an active planter will make from five to eight hundred pounds weight to a hand; and, as I conceive we have as many black as white inhabitants, we cannot make much less than three millions of pounds of merchantable cotton, equal to seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

We are able to raise, at a small expense, great quantities of pork; but the price, for three or four years' past, has not been more than three and a half dollars; consequently, little has been raised. Our soil and climate seems peculiarly adapted to the growth of indigo, as well as cotton; and the sugar-cane thrives well in the lower part of the Territory. I am, dear sir, with great esteem, yours,

N. HUNTER,
Agent Mississippi Territory.

No. 2.

FEBRUARY 6, 1800.

DEAR SIR: I received your obliging note of the 3d instant; and while you have my sincere and hearty thanks for your vigilance and attention to the business of the Natchez, I shall make every exertion in my power to elucidate such parts of our petition and documents as may appear vague or ambiguous.

The estimate annexed to the petition of Cato West and others (mentioned in your note) is not "the amount of the tax laid on the county of Adams by a law of the Territory;" but it appears to be the sum which the Governor thought necessary to be raised in that county for the service of the last year; and it was sent by him to the first court of general quarter sessions in order to receive the sanction of that court. This would give it immediate currency, and necessarily operate in aid of his future projects of taxation.

But such a manifest prodigality of the public resources appeared upon the face of it, together with so marked an opposition to the public opinion, with regard to the place whereon the public buildings were to be erected, that it received the immediate disapprobation of the court; and I believe a similar instrument was never presented to the county of Pickering.

I would here beg leave to call your attention to the first address of the committee, to Governor Sargent, of the 26th of August. It is there stated that he had adopted and pursued improper measures; that he had given an exclusive confidence to a party; that his measures were calculated to give confidence to the insolence of faction, and to suffocate the germ of public virtue in the upright citizen. He was also told that most of the perplexities which had embarrassed him in his administration had undoubtedly flowed from this source; but anxious for a general accommodation, and animated with a hope of inspiring a system of measures capable of embracing that object, the committee was ready to admit that the Governor had been surprised into those measures by partial or designing statements. To this address, however, the Governor avoided to return an answer; for the fact is, the charges were too true to be denied, and his conduct too improper to be justified.

I must also solicit the attention of the committee of the House of Representatives to the address of Cato West and others, to the Governor and Judges, upon the subject of the laws, and the answer to that address. The committee charges the Legislature with making laws in express contradiction to the letter of the ordinance of 1787, which authorizes them only to adopt laws already made in the original States. The Governor and Judges, in their answer, confess that they have made laws which have not been derived from any one of the State codes; but they say they have been in favor of the citizen, by lessening fines and penalties. But the committee, in their reply to that answer, which concludes their correspondence, assert that the lessening of fines and penalties was not the object of their Legislative efforts; and the code of laws which, it is presumed, has by this time been transmitted to Colonel Pickering's office, will, I am fully persuaded, justify the assertion.

At the time of my departure from the Territory the discontents of the people were great indeed; the whole country was influenced by an idea that the ordinance for our government had been wantonly abused, and the Constitution of the United States as wantonly violated, at a time, and under circumstances, which required no such sacrifice.

But the Governor's appointments, civil and military, as they stand at present, have been a more abundant source of discontent than any that has arisen under his administration. All the principal officers that possessed the confidence of the people have uniformly resigned their appointments, and it will be impossible that the Governor can ever be able to organize the militia, notwithstanding his extraordinary fines, in order to force his appointments upon the people.

Can it be possible that an administration, which, from its earliest operations, has proved so repugnant to the public will, and so fatal to the happiness of society, can ever be able to restore harmony, attach public confidence, and promote the general good? The thing is impossible.

There is yet another source of uneasiness, excited by the conduct of our Governor, which I feel it a duty incumbent on me to suggest to the committee of the House of Representatives. He has heretofore been in the habit of exacting and receiving fees for passports granted to citizens travelling from the Territory to the United States, and also for tavern and marriage licenses. It is believed that his perquisites in these instances have not been inconsiderable; and if the practice were forbidden by a law of Congress, it is presumed that the burdens of the people would be somewhat lessened, and a great incentive to abuse entirely removed.

My state of health will now admit of my personal attendance on the committee of the House of Representatives, and I shall take much pleasure in making such further explanation as may be desired.

The people of the Mississippi Territory are extremely anxious for a Legislative Assembly; and there is no doubt existing, in my mind, as to the entire competency of their resources.

Division of Northwest Territory.

The power of making laws, through their immediate Representatives, in whom they have a confidence, and who have a common interest with themselves, is a privilege which cannot but be grateful to every American, and produce the best effects in that country.

I am, dear sir, with all possible esteem, your very humble servant,
N. HUNTER,

Agent Mississippi Territory.

Hon. W. C. C. CLAIBORNE,
Chairman Mississippi Committee.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., March 13, 1800.]

Mr. CLAIBORNE made the following report: The committee to whom was recommitted the report upon the petition of Cato West and others, together with certain resolutions submitted to the House on the 10th instant, proposing an abridgment of the powers granted to the Governor of the Mississippi Territory, are of opinion that it would be expedient to adopt the said resolutions, for the following reasons:

1. That from the infancy of the Mississippi settlements, and their remote situation from the seat of the Federal Government, it is advisable that the Government of the United States should possess a control over the proceedings of the Territorial Legislature, which can alone be effected through the medium of the Territorial Governor, whose responsibility, it is presumed, will prevent an improper use of any powers granted.

2. That the Territorial Government will only be temporary; and if, in the progress of the administration thereof, the system should prove defective, the necessary alterations will, no doubt, be made by Congress.

3. That the petitioners solicited only the benefits of the ordinance in its second grade, which, in the report heretofore made on the petition of Cato West and others, the House was advised immediately to extend to the Mississippi Territory; this measure the committee still think is dictated by policy and justice, and again recommend the adoption of the resolutions contained in the said report.

Resolved, That, from and after the organization of the Territorial Assembly of the Mississippi Territory, the Governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall appoint all officers, both civil and military, of the Territory, whose appointments are not particularly vested in Congress by the ordinance: Provided, That the Governor shall have power to fill up all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Legislative Council, by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Resolved, That every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Legislative Council, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor of the Territory; if he approves it, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journals, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within six days (Sunday excepted,) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner, as if he had signed it, unless the General Assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return; in which case, it shall not be a law.

Resolved, That every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of the Legislative Council and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the Governor of the Territory, and, before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him; or, being disapproved by him, shall be re-passed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

Resolved, That the General Assembly meet at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the — day of — unless they shall by law appoint a different day; Provided, That the Governor shall have power, on extraordinary occasions, to convene both Houses of the General Assembly, or either of them.

Resolved, That neither House, during the session of the General Assembly, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

DIVISION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., March 3, 1800.]

The committee to whom it was referred to consider and report whether any, and, if any, what, alteration is necessary in the judiciary establishment of the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and who were directed to report their opinion of the expediency of dividing said Territory into two distinct and separate governments, do, in obedience to such direction, make the following report:

That parts of said Territory are subject to several serious inconveniences, which require redress from the General Government; most of the evils which they at present experience are, in the opinion of this committee, to be imputed to the very great extent of country at present comprised under their imperfect government. The Territory Northwest of the Ohio, from southeast to northwest, fifteen hundred miles, and the actual distance of travelling from the places of holding courts the most remote from each other, is thirteen hundred miles, and in a country so sparsely peopled, and so little reclaimed from its native wildness, this distance alone seems to present barriers almost insuperable against the exercise of the functions of government, which always presupposes a knowledge of the condition of the several parts and the practicability of seasonable communication among the several organs.

In the three western counties there has been but one court having cognizance of crimes in five years; and the immunity which offenders experience attracts, as to an asylum, the most vile and abandoned criminals, and at the same time deters useful and virtuous persons from making settlements in such society. The extreme necessity of judiciary attention and assistance is experienced in civil as well as in criminal cases. The supplying to vacant places such necessary officers as may be wanted, such as clerks, recorders, and others of like kind, is, from the impossibility of correct notice and information, utterly neglected. This Territory is exposed, as a frontier, to foreign nations, whose agents can find sufficient interest in exciting or fomenting insurrection or discontent, as thereby they can more easily divert a valuable trade in furs from the United States, and also have a part thereof on which they border, which feels so little the cherishing hand of their proper Government, or so little dread of its energy, as to render their attachment perfectly uncertain and ambiguous. The committee would further suggest that the law of the 3d of March, 1791, granting land to certain persons in the western part of said Territory, and directing the laying out of the same, remains inexecuted; that great discontent, in consequence of such neglect, is excited in those who were interested in the provision of said law, and which require the immediate attention of this Legislature. To administer a remedy to these evils, it occurs to this committee that it is expedient that a division of said Territory into two distinct and separate governments should be made; and that such division be made, by a line beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami river, running directly north, until it intersects the boundary between the United States and Canada.

In which case it is conceived that the western part may be permitted to go into the same stage of government as is now in use in said Territory, as the same is supposed to contain at the present time fifteen thousand inhabitants.

Your committee, therefore, recommend to the House the adoption of the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio be divided into two distinct and separate governments, by a line beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami river, and running through a north course, until it intersects the boundary line between the United States and Canada.

NATURALIZATION.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., March 14, 1800.]

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of sundry aliens residing at Mount Pleasant, in the State of New York, made the following report:

That these petitioners state, that they came into the United States before the passing of the law of June, 1798, respecting the naturalization of aliens, and might have made the declarations required by the law of January, 1795, and brought themselves within the proviso of the law first mentioned, and secured the right of naturalization after a residence of five years within the United States; but having omitted to make the declaration required, they are obliged to reside fourteen years within the United States before they can become citizens thereof. They request that the Legislature will pass an act which shall secure to them the same rights which they would have received had they made the declaration required by the law of January, 1795.

The committee can see nothing in this case which can warrant a deviation from the general rule.

They believe the law of June, 1798, to be founded on fair and just principles, and that a probation of fourteen years is not generally more than sufficient to conciliate the feelings of aliens to the manners, laws, and Government of a country into which they remove as strangers; and that the attachment which every honest mind feels to the country which gave him birth, and in which he has formed his early attachments, will not, probably, in the short space of five years, be so far obliterated as to make it safe or prudent for this Government to repose that confidence in him which it must place in its own citizens. The committee are therefore of opinion that the prayer of this petition ought not to be granted.

ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., March 25, 1800.]

Mr. S. SMITH, from the committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit any forfeitures which shall occur, or may have occurred, under the law of the United States prohibiting the exportation of arms and ammunition, on the same principles on which the Secretary is authorized to remit forfeitures incurred under the revenue laws, made the following report:

That the power heretofore vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to mitigate or remit fines, forfeitures, and penalties, incurred under the revenue laws of the United States, was, by the express tenor thereof, limited to objects of a fiscal nature only, the management and superintendence of which were committed to that Department of which he is the head.

That the act of the United States prohibiting, for a limited time, the exportation of arms and ammunition, though in that act it is declared to be the duty of the custom-house officers, and of all persons employed in the collection of the revenue, to attend to the execution thereof; and though all forfeitures and penalties incurred under the said act, and not otherwise directed to be prosecuted and recovered, were to be sued for, prosecuted, adjudged, and distributed, in like manner as is provided in the act entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships and vessels," was yet essentially a political, and not a fiscal measure and regulation.

That the object contemplated by said act was of great importance, both as it related to the supplies of arms and ammunition to the United States, and as it related to the deprivation of similar supplies to those who practised hostilities against the United States.

That the power of remitting fines, forfeitures, and penalties, incurred under the said act, seems to be involved in the general "power of granting pardons for offences against the United States," vested by the Constitution in the President of the United States, to whom alone, according to the nature of our Government, it must pertain to judge of the extent of the mischiefs flowing from the violations of such political measures and regulations, and how far considerations for the remission of fines, forfeitures, and penalties incurred by such violations may be listened to consistently with the public safety in relation to that power. If cases of unintentional violation have occurred, the inconvenience of making special application to the Executive (where, upon due representation, it is not to be doubted but that every attention would at all times be paid which reason and propriety could require) cannot justify a departure from the ordinary course to be observed on similar occasions.

Your committee are therefore of opinion that it is inexpedient "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit any forfeitures which shall occur, or may have occurred, under the law of the United States prohibiting the exportation of arms and ammunition, on the same principles on which the Secretary is authorized to remit forfeitures incurred under the revenue laws."

BREACH OF PRIVILEGES.

[Communicated to the Senate, May 10th, 1800.]

To the Senate of the United States: The remonstrance and petition of the undersigned, citizens of the Republic of America, resident in the city and county of Philadelphia, respectfully sheweth:

That we, the undersigned citizens of the American Republic, deeply impressed by the proceedings now pending before the Senate, on the subject of privileges, in the case of William Duane, are anxious to call the attention of this honorable House to what they deem the real and inevitable tendency of those proceedings.

We are fully persuaded that the surest safeguard of the rights and liberties of the people is the freedom of the press; and friends as we are to a republican Government, we cannot view, without strong emotions of surprise and regret, the doctrines and practices of the privileged bodies of Europe about to be adopted in this free country against that sacred bulwark of republican liberty.

Relying on the Constitution, we had thought that no law could be made by Congress abridging the freedom of the press. But we find, by the proceedings of the Senate, that the privileges of one House may effect what the Constitution has forbidden to the three branches of our Legislature united.

We had thought that the Constitution had secured to the citizens of the United States the right of a trial by jury; but the proceedings of the Senate have convinced us that we are liable to be tried and punished for new and unknown offences, without recourse to that Constitutional tribunal.

We have long viewed with silent horror the baneful progress of the Sedition law; but patiently submitted to evils we could not but feel, in hopes that the juries of our country might palliate, if not cure them; but with unfeigned sorrow and surprise we observe, in the proceedings of the Senate, another sedition law rising up to appal us; a sedition law that defies the counteraction of the laws of our land or the juries of our country.

We had thought that the Constitution provided against the dangerous intermixture of judicial, legislative, and executive authorities; but the proceedings of the Senate have shown us that the Constitution has not yet sufficiently guarded this most important principle, which the doctrine of privilege is so well calculated to destroy.

We had thought that the three branches of our Legislature were unitedly, but not severally, competent to the enactment of those laws which bind the persons and properties of the citizens; but we now find that penal ordinances may be enacted and enforced by the Senate alone! and we contemplate a speedy and alarming extension of our criminal code, if the present example should unhappily be pursued by similar claims of Representative privilege.

We had thought that the rights and authorities of the respective branches of our Federal Government had been expressly defined by the Federal Constitution, and that the Constitution itself was drawn up and sanctioned by the public voice for this express purpose; but we now see that rights may be claimed, and privileges assumed, which we seek for in vain among the declarations and provisions of that supreme law of our land.

We had thought that the Constitution had provided that, in every criminal case, an accused person should be confronted with his accusers, have process for his witnesses, and be fully heard by himself or counsel in his defence; but the proceedings in question have convinced us that these rights are very imperfectly secured, while an accusing Senate can dictate to a defendant the defence on which he must rely, and arbitrarily confine him to the weakest part of it.

We had thought that the plain and acknowledged principle of natural justice would have prevented the accusers from being also the judges, the jury, and the punishers; but the proceedings of the Senate have satisfied us that these inconsistent characters may be mingled, and this plain and acknowledged principle of natural justice be completely forgotten or boldly renounced.

City of Washington.

We dread the introduction of rights unlimited, and power unbounded, whether under the name of privilege, or prerogative, or implied authorities, or constructive powers; and we speak with solemn and profound regret that the late proceedings of the Senate have strongly excited in us this dread.

Our hearts are full upon this subject; we could accumulate our reasons of apprehension from these proceedings far beyond the common bounds of a petition and remonstrance; but we forbear. If the objections we have already assigned are unfelt and unnoticed, we must patiently contemplate the gloomy prospect before us, and calmly wait the approaching period when we shall no longer boast of being citizens of the American Republic.

We reverence the constituted authorities of our country too much to dictate to them the line of their duty, or to reflect improperly on their conduct, or to occupy unnecessarily their time. But on great public occasions, when our liberties are essentially involved, we will practice and maintain our acknowledged right to petition and remonstrate for redress of grievances; and therefore we do, with sincere deference for the honorable body we now address, but at the same time anxiously impressed with the danger of the present proceedings, respectfully call upon the Senate to reconsider the resolutions by them adopted on the subject of privilege, in the case of William Duane.

CITY OF WASHINGTON.

[Communicated to Congress, January 30, 1801.]

Gentlemen of the Senate, and

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives :

I transmit to Congress, for their consideration, a letter from William Thornton, Alexander White, and William Cranch, Esquires, Commissioners of the City of Washington; with a representation of the affairs of the city, made by them to the President of the United States, dated January 28, 1801, accompanied with a series of documents marked from A to H, inclusively.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, January 30, 1801.

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, Jan. 28, 1801.

SIR: We do ourselves the honor to present to you a state of the business under our care, and of the public property belonging to the Federal seat, with an estimate of its value, founded, not on mere supposition, but on the average of former sales.

This report would have been made at an earlier day, had it not been delayed by the unfortunate death of Mr. Scott.

We have the honor to be, with sentiments of the highest respect, sir, your most obedient servants,

WILLIAM THORNTON,
ALEXANDER WHITE,
W. CRANCH.

The President of the United States.

To the President of the United States:

The Commissioners appointed by virtue of the act of Congress entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States," respectfully represent :

That the business committed to their charge having so far proceeded as to enable the Government to remove to its permanent seat, they have judged it expedient to lay before the President such a statement as will enable him to determine on the measures proper to be pursued in future.

By the act of Congress abovementioned, the Commissioners appointed in the manner thereby prescribed, or any two of them, were authorized to purchase or accept such quantity of land on the eastern side of the river Potomac, within the District, in the said act mentioned, as the President should deem proper for the use of the United States; and, according to such plans as the President should approve, prior to the first Monday in December, 1800, provide suitable buildings for the accommodation of Congress, and of the President, and of the public officers of the Government of the United States. That the President, in compliance with the act abovementioned, and of an act to amend the same, passed at Philadelphia, on the 3d of March, 1791, did, by his proclamation, dated 30th of the same month, locate a district within the limits prescribed by the abovementioned acts, and which has now become the permanent seat of the Government of the United States. That the President, agreeably to the abovementioned acts, appointed, and by supplying vacancies which have happened by resignation and death, has kept in appointment, three Commissioners, for the purposes in the said acts declared. That the proprietors of the lands on which the City of Washington is laid out, by their several deeds, dated in or about the month of June, 1791, conveyed the said lands to Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, in trust, to be laid out in a Federal city, with such streets, squares, parcels, and lots, as the President of the United States for the time being should approve; and that the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor, should convey to the Commissioners, for the time being, and their successors, for the use of the United States, forever, all the streets, and such of the said squares, parcels, and lots, as the President should deem proper for the use of the United States, forever; and that as to the residue of the lots, into which the said lands should be laid off, that a fair and equal division should be made of them in the manner in the said deeds of trust specified, and that the part assigned to the public should be sold at such times and in such manner, and on such terms and conditions, as the President of the United States for the time being should direct; and that the said trustees, or the survivors of them, or the heirs of such survivors, should, on the order of the President, convey all the said lots, so sold and ordered to be conveyed, to the respective purchasers, in fee simple, according to the terms and conditions of such purchases; and the produce of the sales of the said lots, when sold as aforesaid, should in the first place be applied to the payment in money to the original proprietors for all the parts of their lands which should be laid off in lots, squares, or parcels, and appropriated to the use of the United States, at the rate of £25 per acre, not accounting streets any part thereof; and the surplus, whether in money or securities of any kind, should be paid, assigned, transferred, and delivered over to the President for the time being, as a grant of money to be applied to the purposes mentioned in the aforesaid act. In which deeds of trust, it is further provided, that the said Trustees should at any time, at the request of the President of the United States, convey all or any of the said lands, which shall not then have been conveyed in execution of the trusts aforesaid, to such person or persons as he shall appoint, in fee simple, subject to the trusts then remaining to be executed, and to the end that the same may be perfected, (A.) A very valuable property being thus placed at the disposal of the President, he pursued those measures which appeared most conducive to the great objects committed to his charge. He directed public sales of the property, and authorized, by a writing under his hand, dated 29th September, 1792, the Commissioners, or any two of them, to sell, or agree for the sale of any lot or lots in the said city at private sale, for such price and on such terms as they should think proper, (B.) But no sales took place deserving attention, until the 23d of December, 1793, when a contract was made with Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, for the sale of six thousand lots, averaging five thousand two hundred and sixty-five square feet each, at the rate of eighty dollars per lot, payable in several equal annual instalments, without interest, commencing the 1st of May, 1794, and with condition of building twenty brick houses annually, two stories high, and covering twelve hundred square feet each; and with further condition that they should not sell any lots previous to the 1st of January, 1796, but on condition of erecting on every third lot one such house within four years from the time of sale, (C.) This contract was afterwards modified by an agreement of the 24th of April, 1794, by which the payment of 80,000 dollars, and the erecting the first-mentioned houses, should rest on the joint bond of the said Morris and Greenleaf, and of John Nicholson; and that one thousand lots should be conveyed to the said Morris and Greenleaf, (D.) which was accordingly done. It is proper to observe, that on the day on which the first-mentioned contract was executed, the Assembly of Maryland passed a law enacting, "that on all sales of lots in the said city, by the said Commissioners, or any two of them, under terms or conditions of payment being made therefor, at any day or days after such contract entered into, if any sum of the purchase money or interest shall not be paid for the space of thirty days after the same ought to be paid, the said Commissioners, or any two of them, may sell the same lots at public vendue, in the City of Washington, at any time after sixty days' notice of such sale, in some of the public newspapers of Georgetown and Baltimore town, and retain in their hands sufficient of the money produced by such new sale, to satisfy all principal and interest due on the first contract, together with the expenses of advertisement and sale; and the original purchaser, or his assigns, shall be entitled to receive from the said Commissioners, at their treasury, on demand, the balance of the money which may have been actually received by them, or under their order, on the said second sale; and all lots so sold shall be freed and acquitted of all claim, legal, and equitable, of the first purchaser, his heirs and assigns."

Notwithstanding the favorable prospect which this transaction for a time afforded, the scene soon changed. The purchasers not only failed to pay the instalment which became due in May, 1795, but early in that year discontinued the buildings which they had commenced under their contract, and in which very little progress has since been made. The President, however, did not think it prudent to offer for sale so large a portion of the public property as would be necessary to raise the sums requisite for carrying on the public buildings; believing, on grounds sufficiently solid to authorize the declaration of his opinion in a message to Congress, accompanying the memorial of the Commissioners hereafter mentioned, that this property would be amply sufficient for the purpose, could it be reserved till after the removal of Government, or till it could be sold in small parcels to such as would purchase for their own use. It was therefore determined to solicit the patronage of Congress, which was done in the year 1796, by a memorial from the Commissioners, stating the affairs of the Federal seat in as clear a light as circumstances would then admit, and suggesting the propriety of authorizing a loan bottomed on the city property, and guaranteed by Congress, if that property should prove deficient. Congress approved of the measure, and authorized a loan, under their guaranty, to the amount of $300,000. It is needless to detail the fruitless attempts which were made to fill this loan with actual specie. The only loan which could be obtained was $200,000 in United States six per cent. stock, at par, from the State of Maryland, and for which the Commissioners were obliged, in addition to the guaranty of Congress, to give bonds, in their individual capacities, agreeably to the resolutions of the Assembly of that State, passed in the years 1796 and 1797. (E.)

The moneys arising from the sales of this stock, with the interest accrued thereon previous to the respective sales, amount to $169,873 41; and the interest paid thereon, up to the 30th of September last, inclusive, amounts to $39,000; so that the net sum of $130,873 41 remained applicable to the use of the public.

The extent of these loans being thus ascertained, and the purchasers of lots still failing to pay the amount of their purchases, it became obvious that the views of Government could not be accomplished without further aid.

City of Washington.

The Commissioners, therefore, prepared a second memorial to Congress, stating the situation of the Federal seat, and the resources which remained in their hands, which memorial was transmitted by the President to Congress on the 23d of February, 1798, and, in consequence, an act was passed authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to advance the sum of $100,000, at the times in the said act mentioned, which was declared to be in full of the sums previously guaranteed. From the difficulty of collecting outstanding debts, as well from purchasers at public sales held by the Commissioners for default of payment by the first purchasers, as from the first purchasers themselves, it became evident that the several objects considered as necessary previous to the removal of Government could not be accomplished with the means at the disposal of the Commissioners; application was therefore made to the Assembly of Maryland for a loan, and a resolution of that Legislature was obtained on the 23d of December, 1799, directing the trustee of the State to transfer to the Commissioners of the Federal buildings in the City of Washington the sum of $50,000 of the stock of the United States, bearing a present interest of six per cent. per annum, on their giving such real and personal security as the Governor and Council should approve, for the payment of the principal sum, on or before the 1st day of November, 1802, and the punctual payment of the interest quarter-yearly. Whereupon, Gustavus Scott and William Thornton, two of the Commissioners, together with Uriah Forrest and James M. Langan, entered into bond to the State of Maryland for payment of the principal sum of $50,000, and interest thereon; and the said Uriah Forrest executed a mortgage on 420 acres of land, for the same purpose, agreeably to the said resolution; the abovementioned Commissioners having agreed, by a letter dated 28th of February, 1800, and directed to the said Uriah Forrest and James M. Langan, in answer to their letter of the same date, that all the property in the City of Washington, before that time sold or contracted for, and where the payments had not been made, (except the property pledged by the act of Congress to secure the loan of $300,000,) should be held as security for the payment of the said sum of $50,000. (F.)

The Trustee of the State transferred the stock accordingly, which has been sold at different times, including the interest received thereon, for the sum of $42,738 36, and interest has been paid thereon up to the 30th of September last, inclusive, to the amount of $2,250, leaving the net sum of $40,488 96 to be applied to public use. The land which has been accepted, or purchased by the Commissioners for the use of the United States, and which yet remains unsold, (exclusive of lots forfeited for non-payment of the purchase money, and which for that cause are liable to be resold,) consists of 24,655,735 square feet of ground in the City of Washington, equal to 4,682 lots of 5,265 square feet each, exclusive of lots which bind on navigable water; these form fronts to the extent of 2,043 feet, and are generally sold by the foot front. It is impossible to ascertain with precision the value of this property; some idea may be formed of it by taking the average price at which similar property has heretofore been sold; in this case, a reference must be had to the different situations; 3,178½ of the city lots lie north-east of Massachusetts avenue, in which situation only five standard lots (except 1,500, part of Morris & Greenleaf's selection of 6,000 lots) have been sold by the Commissioners; but many lots (of private property) on the same side of that avenue have been sold. We have been able to ascertain the price of 355 of these, which, united with the price of the five lots sold by the Commissioners, make an average of upwards of $105 per standard lot, which rate would produce, by the sale of the whole number on that side of the avenue, the sum of $333,747. The remaining 1,504 lots are situated to the southwest of Massachusetts avenue; the average price of lots sold in that division of the city, since passing the guaranty law in May, 1796, is $343, at which rates the abovementioned 1,504 lots would produce $515,872. The average price of lots binding on navigable water, sold during the same period, is $12 71 per foot front. The property of this description, remaining to be sold at the same rate, would produce $25,979 24. It is to be observed that most of these lots were sold at periods remote from the time when profit could be expected to arise from them, and many of them at reduced prices, in consequence of covenants to build thereon. Although it may be admitted that the lots heretofore sold, are, on an average, better than those which remain for sale, yet the change of circumstances under which future sales may be made we hope will more than counterbalance the difference. In addition to this property, four wharves have been built, at the expense of thirty-two hundred and twenty-one dollars eighty-eight cents, which yet remain in a useful state.

An island in Aquia creek, in the State of Virginia, was purchased, in the year 1791, for the sum of $6,000, on account of the freestone quarries therein, which has been conveyed to the before-mentioned Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt for the use of the United States. Thus a real estate of the value of $884,819 88, according to the best estimate we are able to form, remains at the disposal of Government. (G.)

The measures to be pursued, with regard to this property, it is not for us to determine; but we think it necessary to state some other matters which require attention. The debts due, and shortly to become due, to the city fund, and which are considered as good, amount to $144,125 80; and the debts contracted on the credit of that fund, as nearly as can be ascertained, amount to $360,881 05. (G.)

Although it is believed that all the debts stated to be good may be ultimately recovered, (they being due for property sold and not conveyed, or secured by notes with sufficient endorsers,) yet the difficulty of enforcing payment is such that they cannot be relied on for the punctual payment of the interest on the several loans from the State of

City of Washington.

Maryland, of the sums due to individuals, and the expenses of the Commissioners' office.

We further observe, that only three squares remain undivided, owing to the original proprietors not having agreed on their respective proportions therein; and that the division of thirty-three squares has been agreed upon, but the papers respecting them are not yet signed by the parties; and that the accounts with some of the original proprietors for land appropriated for public use have not yet been settled, owing to a difference of opinion between the Commissioners and them with respect to small portions of land for which they claim payment.

Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt, the trustees before named, have, at the request of the President of the United States, conveyed the building lots in the city of Washington to Gustavus Scott, William Thornton, and Alexander White, subject to the trusts remaining to be executed. Gustavus Scott has since deceased. The said trustees have been required by the President to convey the streets and grounds appropriated to public use to the Commissioners, but have not complied.

Several acts of the Legislature of Maryland have vested certain powers in the Commissioners, which it may be proper to notice, particularly an act passed the 19th December, 1791, entitled "An act concerning the Territory of Columbia and City of Washington," a copy whereof is enclosed, (marked H;) and an act passed in December, 1793, being a further supplement to the act above mentioned; by the first paragraph of which it is enacted, "That the certificates granted, or which may be granted by the said Commissioners, or any two of them, to purchasers of lots in the said city, with acknowledgment of the payment of the whole purchase money and interest, if any shall have arisen thereon, and recorded agreeably to the directions of the act concerning the Territory of Columbia and City of Washington, shall be sufficient and effectual to vest the legal estate in the purchasers, their heirs, and assigns, according to the import of such certificate, without any deed or formal conveyance."

The second paragraph of the last mentioned act, empowering the Commissioners to resell lots for default in payment of the first purchase money, has been before recited.

The Commissioners having stated all the facts and observations which appear to them necessary for the information of Government respecting the business committed to their charge, with the greatest deference and respect submit the same to the consideration of the President of the United States.

WILLIAM THORNTON,

COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE, Jan. 28, 1801.

A.

Copy of a Deed of Trust for Land in the City of Washington.

This indenture, made this — day of June, in the year 1791, between Abraham Young, of the State of Maryland, of the one part, and Thomas Beall, of George, and John Mackall Gantt, of the State of Maryland, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said Abraham Young, for and in consideration of the sum of five shillings, to him in hand paid by the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, before the ensealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof he doth hereby acknowledge; and thereof doth, against the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, their executors and administrators, and also for and in consideration of the uses and trusts hereinafter mentioned, to be performed by the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of each survivor, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, hath granted, bargained, sold, aliened, released, and confirmed, and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, alien, release, and confirm, unto the said Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, all the lands of him, the said Abraham Young, lying and being within the following limits, boundaries, and lines, to wit: Beginning on the east side of Rock creek, at a stone standing in the middle of the road leading from Georgetown to Bladensburg; thence, along the middle of the said road, to a stone standing on the east side of the Reedy branch of Goose creek; thence, southeasterly, making an angle of sixty-one degrees and twenty minutes with the meridian, to a stone standing in the road leading from Bladensburg to the Eastern Branch ferry; then, south, to a stone eighty poles north of the east and west line already drawn from the mouth of Goose creek, to the Eastern Branch; thence, east, parallel to the said east and west line, to the Eastern Branch; thence, by and with the waters of the Eastern Branch, Potomac river, and Rock creek, to the beginning, with their appurtenances, except all and every lot or lots of which the said Abraham Young is seized, or to which he is entitled, lying in Carrollsburg or Hamburg; to have and to hold the hereby bargained and sold lands, with their appurtenances, to the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, forever, to and for the special trusts following, and no other, that is to say: that all the said lands hereby bargained and sold, or such part thereof as may be thought necessary and proper, to be laid out, together with other lands within the said limits, for a Federal city, with such streets, squares, parcels, and lots as the President of the United States, for the time being, shall approve; and that the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor, shall convey to the Commissioners for the time being, appointed by virtue of the act of Congress, entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States," and their successors, for the use of the United States, forever, all the said streets, and such of the said squares, parcels, and lots, as the President shall deem proper for the use of the United States; and that as to the residue of the lots, into which the lands hereby bargained and sold shall have been laid off and divided, that a fair and equal division of them shall be made; and if no other mode of division shall be agreed on by consent of the said A. Young, and the Commissioners for the time being, then such residue of the said lots shall be divided, every other lot alternate to the said A. Young; and it shall, in that event, be determined by lot whether the said A. Young shall begin by the lot of the lowest number laid out on the said land, or the following number; and all the said lots which may in any manner be divided or assigned to the said Abraham Young shall thereupon, together with any part of the said bargained and sold land, if any, which shall not have been laid out into the said city, be conveyed by the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor, to him, the said Abraham Young, his heirs or assigns; and that the said other lots shall and may be sold at such time or times, in such manner, and on such terms and conditions, as the President of the United States for the time being shall direct. And that the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, or the survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor, will, on the order or direction of the President, convey all the said lots so sold and ordered to be conveyed to the respective purchasers, in fee simple, according to the terms and conditions of such purchases; and the produce of the sales of the said lots, when sold as aforesaid, shall, in the first place, be applied to the payment in money to the said A. Young, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for all the part of the land, hereby bargained and sold, which shall have been laid off in lots, squares, or parcels, and appropriated as aforesaid to the use of the United States, at the rate of twenty-five pounds per acre, not accounting the said streets as part thereof; and the said twenty-five pounds per acre being so paid, or in any other manner satisfied, that then the produce of the same sales, or what part thereof may remain as aforesaid in money, or securities of any kind, shall be paid, assigned, transferred, and delivered over to the President for the time being, as a grant of money, and to be applied for the purposes and according to the act of Congress aforesaid. But the said conveyance to the said A. Young, his heirs or assigns, as well as the conveyance to the purchasers, shall be on and subject to such terms and conditions as shall be thought reasonable by the President for the time being, for regulating the materials and manner of the buildings and improvements on the lots generally in the said city, or in particular streets or parts thereof, for common convenience, safety, and order; provided such terms and conditions be declared before the sales of any of the said lots under the direction of the President. And in trust further, and on the agreement that the said A. Young, his heirs or assigns, shall and may continue his possession and occupation of the said land hereby bargained and sold, at his and their will and pleasure, until the same shall be occupied under the said appropriations for the use of the United States as aforesaid, or by purchasers. And when any lots or parcels shall be occupied under purchase or appropriations as aforesaid, then, and not till then, shall the said A. Young relinquish his occupation thereon. And in trust, also, as to the trees, timber, and wood on the premises, that he, the said A. Young, his heirs or assigns, may freely cut down, take, and use the same as his and their property, except such of the trees and wood growing as the President or Commissioners aforesaid may judge proper, and give notice, shall be left for ornament; for which the just and reasonable value shall be paid to the said A. Young, his executors, administrators, or assigns, exclusive of the twenty-five pounds per acre for the land. And in case the arrangements of the streets, lots, and the like, will conveniently admit of it, he, the said A. Young, his heirs and assigns, shall, if he so desire it, possess and retain the buildings and graveyards, if any, on the hereby bargained and sold lands, paying to the President at the rate of twelve pounds ten shillings per acre for the lands so retained, because of such buildings and graveyards to be applied as aforesaid; and the same shall be thereupon conveyed to the said A. Young, his heirs and assigns, with his lots; but if the arrangements of the streets, lots, and the like, will not conveniently admit of such retention, and it shall become necessary to remove such buildings, then the said A. Young, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be paid the reasonable value thereof, in the same manner as squares or other ground appropriated for the use of the United States are to be paid for. And because it may so happen that, by the deaths or removals of the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, and from other causes, difficulties may arise in fully perfecting the said trusts by executing all the said conveyances, if no eventual provision is made; it is therefore agreed and covenanted between all the said parties, that the said Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, or either of them, or the heirs of either of them, lawfully may, and that they at any time at the request of the President of the United States for the time being, will convey all or any of the said lands hereby bargained and sold, which shall not then have been conveyed in execution of the trusts aforesaid, to such person or persons as he shall appoint, in fee simple, subject to the trusts then remaining to be executed, and to the end that the same may be perfected. And it is further granted and agreed between all the said parties, and each of the said parties doth for himself respectively, and for his heirs, covenant and grant to and with the others of them, that he and they shall and will, if required by the President of the United States for the time being, join in and execute any further deed or deeds carrying into effect the trusts, purposes, and true intent of this present deed.

In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have interchangeably set their hands and affixed their seals, the day and year first above written.

Copy of the President's order to the Commissioners to sell at private sale.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1792.

The President of the United States doth hereby order and direct that any lot or lots in the City of Washington may, after the public sale, to commence on the 8th day of October, be sold and agreed for by the Commissioners, or any two of them, at private sale, for such price and on such terms as they may think proper.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

C.

Copy of Morris and Greenleaf's contract with the Commissioners, dated 24th December, 1793.

Articles of agreement made and indented this twenty-fourth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, between the Commissioners for the Federal Buildings in the City of Washington on the one part, and Robert Morris, of the city of Philadelphia, and James Greenleaf, of the city of New York, Esquires, of the other part.

Whereas the said Commissioners, on the twenty-third day of September last, did enter into an agreement, in writing, with the said James Greenleaf, for the sale of three thousand lots of ground in the City of Washington, at the price of twenty-five pounds, current money of Maryland, for each lot, to be ascertained in the mode specified in the said agreement; and the sale to be made upon the terms and conditions therein also specified, as by the said agreement, reference being thereto had, will more fully appear; and whereas the said James Greenleaf is empowered by the said Robert Morris to enter into a contract in his name and on his behalf, as his agent, for the purchase of a like number of lots in the said City of Washington, for such price and on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between him and the said Commissioners; and, in pursuance of such power, the said James Greenleaf hath agreed with the said Commissioners for the purchase of three thousand lots of ground in the said City of Washington, fifteen hundred of them to be designated on the southwest, and fifteen hundred of them to be designated on the northeast side of Massachusetts avenue, at the price of thirty-five pounds, current money aforesaid, for each of the said lots, payable yearly, in seven equal payments, without interest; the first of which payments to be made on the first day of May next ensuing the date of these presents, and so on the first day of May in each year succeeding thereto, until the whole of the seven payments shall have been made; and hath further agreed, in pursuance of the said power, that the said Robert Morris should build annually, for seven years next ensuing, ten brick houses, of two stories each, and each of them covering twelve hundred square feet, making, in the whole, seventy houses; and that the said Robert Morris, or his heirs, should not, before the first day of January, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six, sell or contract for the sale of any of the said lots, but under and upon the express condition that one such house, at the least, should be built and erected on every third lot, within four years next after such sale or contract for sale. But it is understood and hereby declared to be the meaning of the parties to these presents, that the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf may, at their pleasure, associate to them one or more persons in the whole purchase, without creating on any of them an obligation to erect on or for every third lot; and whereas it is agreed by and between the said Commissioners and the said James Greenleaf, that everything relating to a loan specified in the contract above mentioned, made between the said Commissioners and the said James Greenleaf on the twenty-third day of September last, to be hereafter made by the said James Greenleaf, shall be referred to a new contract, made and entered into this day by and between the said Commissioners and the said James Greenleaf, and shall have no other effect whatever than what such new contract specifies and ascertains; and whereas it is thought best, by the parties to these presents, to consolidate and join in one contract both the said agreements, and, further to prevent all disagreement concerning the size of the said lots, to fix and ascertain five thousand two hundred and sixty-five square feet as the average of the areas of the lots contracted for as aforesaid, as well as to ascertain and fix the general location of them, and to modify that part of the agreement with regard to the improvements to be made: Now, therefore, these articles witness, That the said Commissioners had sold and contracted for the sale and conveyance, and do hereby, for themselves and their successors, in consideration of the covenants of the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, hereinafter expressed, being fully executed and performed on their part, sell and contract for the sale and conveyance to them, the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, as tenants in common, and their heirs, in fee, six thousand lots of ground in the said City of Washington, upon the average of five thousand two hundred and sixty-five square feet to each lot, so that the aggregate in lots, reckoning in the ways to the squares, as the proportion thereof to the lots to be conveyed, shall amount to thirty-one million five hundred and ninety-thousand square feet, four thousand five hundred of which lots shall lie to the southwest of Massachusetts avenue, and the remaining fifteen hundred shall lie to the northeast of the said avenue. And that, of the said four thousand five hundred lots on the southwest of the said avenue, the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf shall have the part of the city on Notley Young's land, and in that part of Daniel Carroll's land which lies in the branches of the canal, clear of Carrollsburg. And that the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf shall have a right to choose, to satisfy the residue of the said four thousand five hundred lots lying to the southwest of the Massachusetts avenue aforesaid, on any part of the said southwest side of the avenue that they shall think proper, excepting such lots as shall lie in squares numbered as follow, to wit,

City of Washington.

&c. &c., and the lots lying in Carrollsburg; and also further excepting the water lots, including the water lots lying on the Eastern Branch, and also one-half of the lots lying in Hamburg; the lots in that part of the city, and belonging to it, other than water lots, being to be divided, by alternate choice, between the said Commissioners and the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf: Provided, however, and it is hereby agreed, by and between the parties to these presents, that the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf are entitled to the lots in Notley Young's land, and, of course, to the privileges of wharfing annexed thereto; and that lots adjoining the canal are not reckoned water lots; and that the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf shall have a right to choose the remaining fifteen hundred lots lying to the northeast of the said Massachusetts avenue, or any part thereof they shall think proper, excepting one-half of the squares which shall adjoin the spot that may be appropriated for a national university, which is expected to be fixed on the northeast side of the said avenue. And the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, do hereby, in consideration of the agreement on the part of the said Commissioners hereinbefore set forth, for themselves, their heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally agree to and with the said Commissioners to pay to them or their successors thirty pounds, current money of Maryland, for each of the said six thousand lots contracted to be sold as aforesaid, amounting to one hundred and thirty thousand pounds, current money aforesaid, in seven equal annual payments, without interest, and the first payment to be made on the first day of May next ensuing the date of these presents; and that they will build and erect yearly, on some parts of the said lots, twenty brick houses, of two stories each, and each house covering twelve hundred square feet, until the number of one hundred and forty houses shall be built and erected; and that all buildings and improvements to be made on any of the said lots shall conform to the general regulations published by the President of the United States; and that neither the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, nor their heirs, will sell or contract for the sale of any of the said lots before the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six, but upon the express condition that one such house, at least, as above described, shall be built and erected on every third lot, at the least, within four years after such sale or contract for sale. But, as it will promote the interest of the city that at least some of the said houses should be larger, and that all front houses of the size of those described should be of three stories in height, it is agreed by and between the parties aforesaid, and declared by them to be the meaning of these presents, that the area of all houses exceeding twelve hundred square feet shall be reckoned accordingly, and discount in proportion as they cover more than the twelve hundred square feet; and that all houses of three proper proportioned stories shall be reckoned and discounted at the rate of one-fourth part more than their area, so that the aggregate of houses of not less than twelve hundred square feet shall cover, with the allowance of one-fourth for three story houses, one hundred and sixty-eight thousand square feet. And it is hereby declared, that the covenants and agreements, on the part of the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf, and the true and faithful performance of them, are the terms and conditions of the sale of the said six thousand lots. And it is further agreed, by and between the parties aforesaid, that, in the division that is hereafter to be made between the said Commissioners and the present proprietors of the property of the said City of Washington, due regard shall be had by the said Commissioners that such divisions shall take place, as far as consistently may be, for the interest of the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf. And, further, it is understood and declared, that the lots already sold or contracted for by the Commissioners are not to be chosen by the said Robert Morris and James Greenleaf.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands the day and year first above written.

Copy of Minute of 24th April, 1794.

The Commissioners of the Federal District and Mr. Greenleaf entered on the subject of Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf's propositions, of the 7th of January last, communicated by the Commissioners to the Secretary of State, and being mutually disposed to accommodate in order to effect their common view of improvement of the city, have fallen on the following mode of carrying on and settling the contract of Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf:

1st. That an account shall be raised between the Commissioners and Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf, charging the lots which may from time to time be conveyed to them or their assigns, and giving credit for the payments, as made.

2d. That the Commissioners will grant a certificate or deed in fee for the public lots contracted for by Morris and Greenleaf, on Mr. Notley Young's land, and supposed to be about one thousand, as soon as those lots can be ascertained, or even before, if a general description will answer the purposes of Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf, on their giving bond, with Mr. John Nicholson, for the amount of the same, and for performing the contract made relative to improvements.

3d. And in order that Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf may have the advantage of disposing of any of their lots, amounting to six thousand, at their will, the Commissioners, on their assignment or order, will grant certificates or deeds in fee to such persons as they may from time to time require, acknowledging the payment of the consideration money, and subjoining thereto the condition of improvement, (if any is to be made,) according to the contract of Messrs. Morris and Greenleaf; the Commissioners being willing to rely on the condition to be inserted in the certificate, or in the responsibility of Morris, Greenleaf, and Nicholson, as the case may require, for the improvement of every third lot sold by them before the 1st day of January, 1796, agreeable to the tenor of their contract; and the Commissioners are willing to allow the amount of one thousand lots, and the improvements on the whole number of lots, to rest on the joint and several bonds of Morris, Greenleaf, and Nicholson; it being intended that a credit on their personal security may at any and at all times amount to the cost of one thousand lots, as before mentioned.

Acts passed by the General Assembly of Maryland concerning the Territory of Columbia and the City of Washington.

An Act for the cession of ten miles square, or any less quantity of territory within this State, to the United States, in Congress assembled, for the permanent seat of the General Government.—(Passed Dec. 3, 1789.)

Whereas the equal and common benefits resulting from the administration of the General Government will be best diffused, and its operations become more prompt and certain, by establishing such a situation for the seat of the said Government as will be most central and convenient to the citizens of the United States at large, having regard as well to population, extent of territory, and a free navigation to the Atlantic Ocean, through the Chesapeake Bay, as to the most direct and ready communication with our fellow-citizens in the western frontier: And whereas it appears to this Assembly, that a situation combining all the considerations and advantages before recited may be had on the banks of the river Potomac, above tide-water, in a country rich and fertile in soil, healthy and salubrious in climate, and abounding in all the necessities and conveniences of life, where, in a location of ten miles square, if the wisdom of Congress shall so direct, the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, may participate in such location:

Be it therefore enacted by the General Assembly,

City of Washington.

That a tract of country, not exceeding ten miles square, or any less quantity, to be located within the limits of this State, and in any part thereof as Congress may by law direct, shall be, and the same is hereby forever, ceded and relinquished to the Congress and the Government of the United States, in full and absolute right, and exclusive jurisdiction as well of soil as of persons residing or to reside thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of government of the United States.

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to vest in the United States any right of property in the soil, or to affect the rights of individuals therein, otherwise than the same shall or may be transferred by such individuals to the United States.

And provided, also, That the jurisdiction of the laws of this commonwealth over the persons and property of individuals residing within the limits of the cession aforesaid, shall not cease or determine, until Congress, having accepted the said cession, shall by law provide for the government thereof, under their jurisdiction, in manner provided by the article of the Constitution before recited.

An act concerning the Territory of Columbia, and the City of Washington.—(Passed Dec. 19, 1791.)

Whereas the President of the United States, by virtue of several acts of Congress, and acts of the Assemblies of Virginia and Maryland, by his proclamation dated at Georgetown, on the thirtieth day of March, seventeen hundred and ninety-one, did declare and make known, that the whole of the territory of ten miles square, for the permanent seat of Government of the United States, shall be located and included within the four lines following; that is to say, beginning at Jones's Point, being the upper point of Hunting creek, in Virginia, and at an angle in the outset of forty-five degrees west of the north, and running a direct line ten miles for the first line; then beginning again at the same Jones's Point, and running another direct line at a right angle with the first, across the Potomac, ten miles for the second line; then from the terminations of the said first and second lines, running two other direct lines, ten miles each, the one crossing the Eastern Branch and the other the Potomac, and meeting each other in a point; which has since been called the Territory of Columbia; and whereas Notley Young, Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and many others, proprietors of the greater part of the land hereinafter mentioned to have been laid out in a city, came into an agreement, and have conveyed their lands in trust to Thomas Beall, son of George, and John Mackall Gantt, whereby they have subjected their lands to be laid out as a city, given up part to the United States, and subjected other part to be sold to raise money as a donation to be employed according to the act of Congress for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States, under and upon the terms and conditions contained in each of the said deeds; and many of the proprietors of lots in Carrollsburg and Hamburg have also come into an agreement, subjecting their lots to be laid out anew, giving up one-half of the quantity thereof to be sold, and the money thence arising to be applied as a donation as aforesaid, and they to be reinstated in one half the quantity of their lots in the new location, or otherwise compensated in land in a different situation within the city, by agreement between the Commissioners aforesaid and them; and, in case of disagreement, that then a just and full compensation shall be made in money; yet some of the proprietors of lots in Carrollsburg and Hamburg, as well as some of the proprietors of other lands, have not, from imbecility and other causes, come into any agreement concerning their lands within the limits hereinafter mentioned, but a very great proportion of the landholders having agreed on the same terms, the President of the United States directed a city to be laid out, comprehending all the lands beginning on the east side of Rock creek, at a stone standing in the middle of the road leading from Georgetown to Bladensburg; thence along the middle of the said road, to a stone standing on the east side of the Reedy branch of Goose creek; then southeasterly, making an angle of sixty-one degrees and twenty minutes with the meridian, to a stone standing in the road leading from Bladensburg to the Eastern Branch ferry; thence south to a stone eighty poles north of the east and west line already drawn from the mouth of Goose creek to the Eastern Branch; then east, parallel to the said east and west lines, to the Eastern Branch; then with the waters of the Eastern Branch, Potomac river, and Rock creek, to the beginning, which has since been called the City of Washington: and whereas it appears to this General Assembly highly just and expedient that all the lands within the said city should contribute, in due proportion, in the means which have already very greatly enhanced the value of the whole; that an incontrovertible title ought to be made to the purchasers, under public sanction; that allowing foreigners to hold land within the said territory will greatly contribute to the improvement and population thereof; and that many temporary provisions will be necessary, till Congress exercise the jurisdiction and government over the said Territory: And whereas in the cession of this State, heretofore made, of Territory for the Government of the United States, the lines of such cession could not be particularly designated; and it being expedient and proper that the same should be recognised in the acts of this State:

2. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That all the part of the said Territory, called Columbia, which lies within the limits of this State, shall be, and the same is hereby acknowledged to be, forever ceded and relinquished to the Congress and Government of the United States, in full and absolute right, and exclusive jurisdiction, as well of soil as of persons residing or to reside thereon, pursuant to the tenor and effect of the eighth section of the first article of the constitution of Government of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed to vest in the United States any right of property in the soil, as to affect the rights of individuals therein, otherwise than the same shall or may be transferred by such individuals to the United States: And provided, Also, That the jurisdiction of the laws of this State, over the persons and property of individuals residing within the limits of the cession aforesaid, shall not cease or determine until Congress shall by law provide for the government thereof, under their jurisdiction, in manner provided by the article of the Constitution before recited.

3. And be it enacted, That all the lands belonging to minors, persons absent out of the State, married women, or persons non compos mentis, or lands the property of this State, within the limits of Carrollsburg and Hamburg, shall be and are hereby subjected to the terms and conditions hereinbefore recited, as to the lots where the proprietors thereof have agreed concerning the same; and all the other lands belonging as aforesaid, within the limits of the said City of Washington, shall be and are hereby subjected to the same terms and conditions as the said Notley Young, Daniel Carroll of Duddington, and others, have by their said agreements and deeds, subjected their lands to; and where no conveyances have been made, the legal estate and trust are hereby invested in the said Thomas Beall, son of George, and John Mackall Gantt, in the same manner as if each proprietor had been competent to make, and had made, a legal conveyance of his or her land, according to the form of those already mentioned, with proper acknowledgements of the execution thereof, and, where necessary, of release of dower; and in every case where the proprietor is an infant, a married woman, insane, absent out of this State, or shall not attend on three months' advertisement of notice in the Maryland Journal, and Baltimore Advertiser, the Maryland Herald, and in the Georgetown and Alexandria papers, so that allotment cannot take place by agreement, the Commissioners aforesaid, or any two of them, may allot and assign the portion or share of such proprietor, as near the old situation as may be, in Carrollsburg and Hamburg, and to the full value of what the party might claim under the terms before recited; and as to the other lands within the said city, the Commissioners aforesaid, or any two of them, shall make such allotment and assignment, within the lands belonging to the same person, in alternate lots, determining by lot or ballot whether the party shall begin with the lowest number: Provided, That in the cases of coverture and infancy, if the husband, guardian, or next friend, will agree with the Commissioners, or any two of them, then an effectual division may be made by consent; and in case of contrary claims, if the claimants will not jointly agree, the Commissioners may proceed as if the proprietor was absent; and all persons to whom allotments and assignments of lands shall be made by the Commissioners, or any two of them, on consent and agreement, or pursuant to this act without consent, shall hold the same in their former estate and interest, and in lieu of their former quantity, and subject in every respect to all such limitations, conditions, and incumbrances, as their former estate and interest, and in lieu of their former quantity, and subject in every respect to all such limitations, conditions, and incumbrances, as their former estate and interest were subject to, and as if the same had been actually reconveyed pursuant to the said deed in trust.

4. And be it enacted, That where the proprietor or proprietors, possessor or possessors, of any lands within the limits of the City of Washington, or within the limits of Carrollsburg and Hamburg, who have not already, or who shall not within three months after the passage of this act, execute deeds in trust to the aforesaid Thomas Beall, and John M. Gantt, of all their lands within the limits of the said City of Washington, and on the terms and conditions contained in the deeds already executed by Notley Young and others, and execute deeds in trust to the said Thomas Beall and John M. Gantt, of all their lots in the towns of Carrollsburg and Hamburg, on the same terms and conditions mentioned in the deeds already executed by the greater part of the proprietors of lots in the said towns, the said Commissioners, or any two of them, shall and may, at any time or times thereafter, issue a process directed to the Sheriff of Prince George's county, commanding him, in the name of the State, to summon five good substantial freeholders, who are not of kin to any proprietor or proprietors of the land aforesaid, and who are not proprietors themselves, to meet on a certain day, and at a certain place, within the limits of the said city, to inquire of the value of the estate of such proprietor or proprietors, possessor or possessors, on which day and place the said sheriff shall attend, with the freeholders by him summoned; which freeholders shall take the following oath or affirmation, on the land to be by them valued, to wit: "I A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm,) that I will, to the best of my judgment, value the lands of C. D. now to be valued, so as to do equal right and justice to the said C. D. and to the public, taking into consideration all circumstances," and shall then proceed to value the said lands; and such valuation, under their hands and seals, and under the hand and seal of the said sheriff, shall be annexed to the said process, and returned by the sheriff to the clerk appointed by virtue of this act, who shall make record of the same; and the said lands shall, on the payment of such valuation, be, and are hereby, vested in the said Commissioners, in trust, to be disposed of by them, or otherwise employed to the use of the said City of Washington; and the sheriff aforesaid and freeholders aforesaid shall be allowed the same fees for their trouble as are allowed to a sheriff and jurymen in executing a writ of inquiry; and in all cases where the proprietor or possessor is a tenant in right of dower, or by the courtesy, the freeholders aforesaid shall ascertain the annual value of the lands and the gross value of such estate therein; and, upon paying such gross value, or securing to the possessor the payment of the annual valuation, at the option of the proprietor or possessor, the Commissioners shall be, and are hereby, vested with the whole estate of such tenant, in manner and for the uses and purposes aforesaid.

5. And be it enacted, That all the squares, lots, pieces, and parcels of land, within the said city, which have been or shall be appropriated for the use of the United States, and also the streets, shall remain and be for the use of the United States; and all the lots and parcels which have been or shall be sold to raise money as a donation as aforesaid, shall remain and be to the purchasers, according to the terms and conditions of their respective purchases; and purchases and leases from private persons claiming to be proprietors, and having, or those under whom they claim having, been in possession of the lands purchased or leased, in their own right, five whole years next before the passing of this act, shall be good and effectual for the estate, and on the terms and conditions of such purchases and leases, respectively, without impeachment, and against any contrary title now existing; but if any person hath made a conveyance, or shall make a conveyance or lease, of any lands within the limits of the said city, not having right and title to do so, the person who might be entitled to recover the land under a contrary title now existing may, either by way of ejectment against the tenant, or in action for money had and received for his use against the bargainer or lessor, his heirs, executors, administrators, or devisees, as the case may require, recover all money received by him for the squares, pieces, or parcels, appropriated for the use of the United States, as well as for lots or parcels sold, and rents received, by the person not having title as aforesaid, with interest from the time of the receipt; and, on such recovery in ejectment, where the land is in lease, the tenant shall thereafter hold under, and pay the rent reserved to, the person making title to and recovering the land; but the possession bona fide acquired in none of the said cases shall be changed.

6. And be it enacted, That any foreigner may, by deed or will hereafter to be made, take and hold lands within that part of the said territory which lies within this State, in the same manner as if he was a citizen of this State, and the same lands may be conveyed by him, and transmitted to, and be inherited by, his heirs or relations, as if he and they were citizens of this State: Provided, That no foreigner shall, in virtue hereof, be entitled to any further or other privilege of a citizen.

7. And be it enacted, That the said Commissioners, or any two of them, may appoint a clerk for recording deeds of lands within the said Territory, who shall provide a proper book for the purpose, and therein record, in a strong legible hand, all deeds duly acknowledged, of lands in the said Territory, delivered to him to be recorded, and in the same book make due entries of all divisions and allotments of lands and lots made by the Commissioners in pursuance of this act, and certificates granted by them of sales, and the purchase money having been paid, with a proper alphabet in the same book of the deeds and entries aforesaid; and the same book shall carefully preserve, and deliver over to the Commissioners aforesaid, or their successors, or such person or persons as Congress shall hereafter appoint; which clerk shall continue such during good behaviour, and shall be removable only on conviction of misbehaviour in a court of law; but before he acts as such, he shall take an oath, or affirmation, well and truly to execute his office, and he shall be entitled to the same fees as are or may be allowed to the clerks of the county courts for searches, copying, and recording.

8. And be it enacted, That acknowledgments of deeds made before a person in the manner and certified as the laws of this State direct, or made before and certified by either of the Commissioners, shall be effectual; and that no deed hereafter to be made of or for lands within that part of the said territory which lies within this State, shall operate as a legal conveyance; nor shall any lease for more than seven years be effectual, unless the deed shall have been acknowledged as aforesaid, and delivered to the said clerk to be recorded within six calendar months from the date thereof.

9. And be it enacted, That the Commissioners aforesaid, or some two of them, shall direct an entry to be made in the said record book of every allotment and assignment to the respective proprietors, in pursuance of this act.

10. And, for the encouragement of master builders to undertake the building and finishing houses within the said city, by securing to them a just and effectual remedy for their advances and earnings, Be it enacted, That for all sums due and owing, on written contracts, for building any house in said city, or the brick work, or carpenters' or joiners' work thereon, the undertaker, or workman, employed by the person for whose use the house shall be built, shall have a lien on the house and the ground on which the same is erected, as well as for the materials found by him; provided the said written contract shall have been acknowledged before one of the Commissioners, a justice of the peace, or an alderman of the corporation of Georgetown, and recorded in the office of the clerk for recording deeds herein created, within six calendar months from the time of acknowledgment as aforesaid; and if, within two years after the last of the work is done, he proceeds in equity, he shall have remedy as upon a mortgage; or, if he proceeds at law within the same time, he may have execution against the house and land, in whose hands soever the same may be; but this remedy shall be considered as additional only, nor shall, as to the land, take place of any legal incumbrance made prior to the commencement of such claim.

11. And be it enacted, That the Treasurer of the Western Shore be empowered and required to pay the seventy-two thousand dollars agreed to be advanced to the President by resolutions of the last session of Assembly, in sums as the same may come to his hands, on the appointed funds, without waiting for the day appointed for the payment thereof.

12. And be it enacted, That the Commissioners aforesaid for the time being, or any two of them, shall, from time to time, until Congress shall exercise the jurisdiction and government within the said territory, have power to license the building of wharves in the waters of the Potomac and the Eastern Branch, adjoining the said city, of the materials, in the manner, and of the extent, they may judge durable, convenient, and agreeing with general order; but no license shall be granted to one to build a wharf before the land of another, nor shall any wharf be built in the said waters without license as aforesaid; and if any wharf shall be built without such license, or different therefrom, the same is hereby declared a common nuisance; they may also, from time to time, make regulations for the discharge and laying of ballast from ships or vessels lying in the Potomac river, above the lower line in said territory and Georgetown, and from ships and vessels lying in the Eastern Branch; they may also, from time to time, make regulations for landing and laying materials for building the said city, for disposing and laying earth which may be dug out of the wells, cellars, and foundations, and for ascertaining the thickness of the walls of houses, and to enforce the observance of all such regulations, by appointing penalties for a breach of any one of them, not exceeding ten pounds current money, which may be recovered in the name of the said Commissioners, by warrant, before a justice of the peace, as in case of small debts, and disposed of as a donation for the purposes of the said act of Congress; and the said Commissioners, or any two of them, may grant licenses for retailing distilled spirits within the limits of the said city, and suspend or declare the same void; and if any person shall retail or sell any distilled spirits, mixed or unmixed, in less quantity than ten gallons to the same person, or at the same time actually delivered, he or she shall forfeit for every such sale three pounds, to be recovered and applied as aforesaid.

13. And be it enacted, That an act of Assembly of this State, to condemn lands, if necessary, for the public buildings of the United States, be and is hereby repealed.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 27, 1801.]

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the committee who were appointed to inquire into the expenditure of money made by the Commissioners of the City of Washington, the disposition of public property made by them, and generally into all the transactions of the Commissioners which relate to the trust confided to them by the President of the United States, made the following report:

That the short period which has elapsed since they have been possessed of the documents relating to the transactions of the Commissioners, the imperfect situation of those documents in several particulars, and the complicated nature of the inquiry, will prevent the committee from presenting to the House that full view of the subject which was desired. They deem, it, however, their duty to submit the result of their inquiry, so far as the same has been made.

By the general account of receipts and expenditures, hereunto annexed, it appears that the Commissioners have expended more than one million of dollars on various subjects, which are partially detailed in that statement. Whether those expenditures have been made with economy, or not, it is not necessary for the committee to decide, as the House will possess the same information which the committee possess on this point. It may, however, be proper to remark that the principal objects of expense have been the Capitol, the President's house, and the two buildings erected for the accommodation of the Executive Departments; and that the situation of those buildings, being under the eye of every member of the Legislature, cannot want a particular description.

As large as these expenditures have been, it is understood that the accounts of the Commissioners have not been regularly audited by any public officer, but have rested on their own statements.

By the report made by the Commissioners to the President of the United States, and by him transmitted to Congress during the present session, it appears that the site of the City of Washington was conveyed by the original proprietors to certain confidential persons, in trust, for certain uses which were defined in the deeds delivered to the trustees, a copy of which is annexed to the Commissioners' report; that the trustees have conveyed to the Commissioners, for the use of the United States, agreeably to the provisions of those deeds, the building lots which belonged to the public, and were laid down on the plan of the city, but that the trustees have declined to convey the streets of the city and the public squares and other grounds designated and appropriated for public uses.

The committee have thought it their duty to ascertain the causes which induced the trustees to refuse their deeds of this part of the public property; and, without pronouncing whether the trustees have conducted correctly or not, they understand that the trustees claim that they held these lands as well for the benefit of the proprietors as for the public; that the price allowed to the proprietors for those squares and public grounds being comparatively small, it was expected that these grounds should forever remain unoccupied, except by necessary public buildings; that the areas which they furnished should remain open for general convenience, and thereby increase the value of the building lots, and particularly those lots which adjoined those public grounds; that, under these impressions, and after receiving a remonstrance from some of the proprietors, they deemed it proper, in faithfulness to the parties concerned, to require that, before they made a conveyance of this property, the principle should be settled that the public grounds should not, after the same were conveyed, be converted by the Commissioners into building lots; that the Commissioners, however, declined establishing that principle, and claimed the right of converting such parts of the public ground into building lots as should be afterwards judged proper.

City of Washington.

The trustees further state that the plan of the city has been varied more than once, and that some of the public grounds which are delineated upon a plan which was engraved and circulated by the Commissioners as a true plan of the city, and is now in the hands of the members of the Legislature, have since been surveyed by the Commissioners into building lots; that, under these circumstances, the trustees did not believe that, in justice to the proprietors, they could convey these public grounds.

The committee have likewise understood that, in consequence of the contracts entered into with Morris, Greenleaf, and Nicholson, for the sale of a large number of the building lots belonging to the public, and the failure of payment on their part, and the subsequent transactions which have grown out of that contract, some doubts have been entertained respecting the titles to a considerable part of those lots. These doubts, whether well or ill founded, must necessarily embarrass the sale of those lots, and ought, in the opinion of the committee, to be removed by a law of the National Legislature to establish titles both in law and chancery, where lands shall be resold, under proper regulations, to raise the purchase money which shall fall due from the first purchaser.

The Commissioners undoubtedly possess much better means of judging of the value of the building lots belonging to the public than the committee; but it could not escape the observation of the committee that the actual sales which have been made for cash since the Board of Commissioners was established cannot, in their opinion, support the estimate which the Commissioners have made of this property; and, whatever may be the product of sales hereafter, the committee believe that the Government cannot rely upon that fund for completing the objects which the Legislature may deem necessary for the accommodation of Government.

The view which the committee have taken of this subject has been necessarily imperfect, but it has satisfied them that, as the Executive Departments of the Government are now established at the City of Washington, the expense of the Board of Commissioners may very well be saved; that the business of that board may with propriety be transferred to the Treasury Department; and that it will be proper to require that the Commissioners account with the accounting officers of the Treasury for the moneys received and expended by them.

The committee likewise believe that a plan of the City of Washington ought to be prepared, and, at the next session of Congress, to receive the sanction of the Legislature, and means taken to obtain from the trustees a deed of the streets and public grounds, conformably to such plan, for the use of the United States; and that a law ought to pass for quieting titles in the District of Columbia, by authorizing the sale of lands contracted to be sold where the purchase money shall not be paid within the time limited for payment.

Conformably to the opinion herein expressed, the committee respectfully submit to the House the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to abolish the Board of Commissioners of the City of Washington, and to direct that the business of that board be transferred to the Department of the Treasury.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury, under direction of the President of the United States, to prepare a plan of the City of Washington, delineating the streets, squares, and public grounds therein, and to report the same to Congress, in December next.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to authorize the sale of lands in the District of Columbia, under proper regulations, to raise the moneys which may at any time be due and unpaid on contracts for the sale of such lands.

City of Washington.

Notes to the table on the preceding page.

City of Washington.—Includes commissions, discounts, recording squares in the district office, salary of a principal overseer, and all expenses of persons employed for general surveys.

Surveying Department.—Includes survey of the District and city, opening and ascertaining level of streets, purchasing and planting bound-stones, and registering and calculating squares, as divided into lots.

Rafting Account.—Expense of rafting the timber for the different buildings, and other public purposes indiscriminately.

Freestone Quarries at Aquia.—Six thousand dollars paid for the island containing these quarries, and balance for quarrying the stone and incidental expenses.

White-oak Swamp.—The Commissioners purchased the timber standing, had it cut down, and prepared for public use.

Brick-making Account.—The bricks were made and used for public purposes generally, and no particular account kept of the number used on the respective buildings.

Stone Bridge at the Mouth of Rock Creek.—Deducting the sums paid and secured to the public for ground ceded for the erection of this bridge twelve hundred dollars, refunded by the contractor for defective work, the real cost to the public will be only two thousand two hundred and eleven dollars and fifty-five cents.

*Books and Papers destroyed by fire in the War Department, in 1800.BOOKS AND PAPERS DESTROYED BY FIRE IN THE WAR OFFICE, IN 1800.

[Communicated to the House of Representatives, February 17, 1801.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, Feb. 12, 1801.

The acting Secretary for the Department of War, in obedience to the direction of the House of Representatives, expressed in their resolution of the 2d instant, that he "communicate to the House such information as may be in his power in relation to the destruction of the books and papers in that Department by fire; designating particularly what description of books and papers has been lost thereby, and what the probable effect of such loss will be in the adjustment of the unsettled accounts of the United States," respectfully reports:

That he has very little doubt that the fire which, on the evening of the 8th of November last, entirely destroyed the house then occupied by the Department of War, was communicated from the adjoining house, as it was first discovered in the library, which was arranged against the partition wall directly behind the fire-place of that house, and at the distance of the whole width of the house (twenty-five or twenty-six feet) from the only fire-place in the apartment; in which last fire-place a fire had not been made on that day or for upwards of three weeks immediately preceding.

That the rapidity with which a large library extended the flames, on the admission of fresh air into the room, entirely precluded the possibility of saving any books or papers that were deposited on the second or third floor; the whole of the former, and one apartment on the latter, then being occupied as the Secretary's office.

That not a book or paper of the office was saved, except one volume, in which the contracts and deeds for lands sold to the United States were recorded. This had been taken into the Accountant's apartments, on the ground floor, in the morning, for the adjustment of some accounts, and was saved, with his books and papers which were in those apartments.

That, immediately after the fire, measures were taken to secure a renewal of the most necessary and important documents in all possible cases. That the lists of invalid pensioners have already been renewed, and sundry communications of importance from the Department returned and copied. That additions to these are still making, and that the examination of the claims to land for services in the Virginia line on Continental establishment, as directed by law, though now suspended, is expected soon to be in the usual state of progression.

That the library, which was entirely destroyed, was extensive, and contained many military works of celebrity, which it is scarcely expected can be replaced. In order, however, to effect so desirable an object as far as may be, the Secretary has added a proportionate sum to the estimated appropriation for the present year for the purpose.

That of the claims for Continental military bounty lands, the entries of which were, by the act of 2d of March, 1799, limited to the 1st day of January, 1802, many still remain unsatisfied. That, from the manner in which the grants were made, the checks and books being all lost, a great difficulty will oppose the renewing issues of warrants for those lands. The Secretary has recommended to applicants that all claims be filed in the office before the day on which the above-mentioned limitation will take place, in order that the examination of them may thereafter be made under such regulations as may be judged most proper to secure to the claimants their lawful rights, and protect the United States as much as possible from fraud and imposition.

That it is not presumed that any consequences to effect the adjustment of unsettled accounts will follow from the loss of the papers of the Secretary's office, the original directions for expenditures being, it is supposed, to be obtained on the exhibition of the accounts growing from them; and it is not probable that any material injury will result from the losses sustained in the Accountant's office; the specification of which, with the remarks of the Accountant thereon, follows, viz:

Relating to the accounts of the old Army.

Several cases containing muster and pay-rolls; others containing accounts and vouchers of sundry paymasters and agents for paying troops; and one case containing individual settlements made by the late Paymaster General and Commissioner of Army Accounts.

These papers could only be of use in the examination of claims for services prior to the establishment of the present Government, which, if not already settled, are all barred and foreclosed by acts of limitation. The loss will, therefore, not materially affect the unsettled accounts of the United States.

Relating to services and supplies under the present Government.

William Colfax's accounts, as contractor for the State of New York, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, 1799.

Robert Ball's accounts, as contractor for North Carolina, for supplies furnished in 1799 and 1800.

These accounts had been examined, and the balances ascertained, but had not been entered on the principal books, owing to differences in the statements of the claimants and those made at this office, of which they had been informed, but had not finally removed the objections. No material inconvenience, it is thought, will arise from the loss of those accounts.

William Colfax & Co.'s accounts, as contractors for the States of New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Vermont, from the 1st of January to 31st of December, 1800.

This account had not been examined; the amounts are, therefore, only known from the claimants' own statements when they were rendered. It is therefore thought that no settlement can be made until a principle shall be fixed for the settlement of accounts in this situation.

Nathan Starr's accounts, as contractor for furnishing swords, belts, and scabbards, per contract in 1779.

Books, &c., destroyed by fire in the Treasury Department, in 1801.

This account had not been examined, owing to a want of vouchers. It is probable that duplicates of the accounts can be furnished, and that no inconvenience will arise in the settlement.

Part of the vouchers belonging to the Paymaster General's accounts.

Some of the muster and pay-rolls of this account were lost, but they can all be replaced. No inconvenience but that of having copies made from duplicates in the possession of the Paymaster General will arise.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL DEXTER,
Acting as Secretary of War.

BOOKS, &c., DESTROYED BY FIRE IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, IN 1801.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 23, 1801.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
February 23, 1801.

SIR: In obedience to the resolve of the House of Representatives of the 2d instant, I have the honor of transmitting herewith the best information it is in my power to obtain, in relation to the destruction of official books and papers by the fire in the building occupied by the Treasury Department. To the enclosed statements from the other officers of the Department, I have the pleasure to add, that the books and papers belonging immediately to my office, with the exception of a few official letters and documents which can be replaced, have been preserved. It is not probable that any great public inconvenience will be the consequence of the unfortunate accident which gave occasion to the inquiry.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL DEXTER.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Reps.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Comptroller's Office, Feb. 19, 1801.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 4th instant, I have the honor to inform you, that after a careful and diligent examination, it does not appear that any records or documents appertaining to this office are missing in consequence of the late fire, from which any loss can result to the public, or to individuals. One book, in which sundry forms prescribed by this Department are recorded, has not yet appeared, though, as its destruction is highly improbable, expectations are entertained that it will eventually be found: if it should not, it can be replaced with some labor.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN STEELE.

The Hon. SAMUEL DEXTER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

A list of books and papers destroyed or lost in the Auditor's office, in consequence of the fire which took place in the Treasury on Tuesday, the 20th of January 1801.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Auditor's Office, Feb. 19, 1801.

1. The books containing copies of reports on all the accounts which have been adjusted since the establishment of the present Government, excepting those on the public debt funded at the Treasury, which being entered in a distinct set of books and kept in another room, were preserved. With the aid and expense of an extra clerk, the lost copies may be replaced, as the originals, with the statements and vouchers belonging to them, are deposited in the Register's office.

2. The books containing copies of various statements made by the Auditor and Accountants under the late Government. The originals of these are also in the Register's office, and new copies may be made from them, if necessary.

3. The ledgers and journals in which were entered the accounts settled by the late commissioner with the officers of the old quartermaster and commissary departments. The loss of these books adds to the difficulty of adjusting such of the accounts in these departments as remained open; but from examination which had been made, the greater part were found so defective as to leave little hope of a satisfactory statement. Some of them, however, though not passed, have been stated as far as the materials would admit. It is believed that few, if any, of the papers are lost.

4. The books in which were entered the accounts of the late secret and commercial committee. The papers being safe, no great inconvenience will result from the loss of the books, as few, if any of the transactions of this committee remain unsettled.

5. A number of claims exhibited by individuals, for services or supplies during the late war. Most of these had been presented in the first instance to the State Commissioners, and turned over by them to the Treasury. They had been all examined many years ago, and judged inadmissible; but as the register or list is gone with them, it is impossible to state the particular nature of each, or the names of the respective claimants.

6. An account rendered by the Bank of the United States, for the sale of 8 per cent. stock, under the last act authorizing a loan. A duplicate of this may be obtained.

7. An account of Hazen Kimball for the contingent expenses of the Office of State, which had been examined and was ready for stating. The vouchers cannot be replaced, but the particulars may be had from a book in which they were regularly entered by Mr. Kimball.

8. An account of Thomas Claxton, as agent for furnishing the Capitol. The vouchers had been all examined and found right, but the statement suspended until he should also render his account for furnishing the President's house, with which it had some connexion.

Fires in the War and Treasury Departments.

9. The accounts and vouchers of Tench Francis, late Purveyor of Public Supplies, for purchases from July 1, 1797, to the month of September, 1798, accompanied by a general account current, stated by his executors; in which they claimed a balance. The examination of these accounts was nearly completed, but the final settlement of them suspended from a wish to bring into view the balances for or against him with the Departments of War and Navy, with which his accounts were also in a course of settlement. Duplicates of the abstracts and (it is understood) of the vouchers also, can be furnished.

10. Three partial or subordinate accounts of Israel Wheelen, the present purveyor. Duplicates of all these have been already furnished.

11. The accounts of the following gentlemen, acting as agents for the commissioners of the direct tax, in their respective States:

Joseph Israel, Delaware; Nathaniel Gilman, New Hampshire; James White, Tennessee; Stephen Bayard, New York; Paul Zantzing, Pennsylvania; Thomas Davis, Massachusetts.

All these accounts, except the last, had been examined, and some of them, particularly the two first, would have been stated and passed the next day. The others were suspended, either for want of warrants, or some further explanation on particular points. As the vouchers, though much injured, are not entirely destroyed, it is probable that when they can be more thoroughly examined and properly arranged, they may be yet found sufficiently perfect to admit of settlement with at least some of the agents.

A few other accounts were also somewhat injured; but being still, however, in a state to be settled, a detail of them is deemed superfluous.

In addition to the foregoing, it is possible, and even probable, that in the course of business some other papers may be found missing, which are not recollected at this time; but none, it is believed, of much consequence.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Register's Office, Feb. 19, 1801.

The Register of the Treasury, upon the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the 4th instant, transmitting a copy of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States, of Monday, the 2d of February, 1801, begs leave to report:

That upon the alarm of the late fire in the house occupied by the Treasury Department, all the books and records of the United States appertaining to his office, and which were deemed of primary importance, were removed from the fire-proof rooms occupied by the Register; and that, upon their being replaced, it does not appear, after a minute examination, that any of the books and records of the United States in his possession at the time of the late fire sustained either injury or loss, excepting statements Nos. 8,961, 10,919, and 11,349, with their respective vouchers, which were in a part of the building exposed to the fire. The official reports upon those three statements having been preserved, and the accounts thereof closed in the Treasury books, it is presumed no injury can possibly arise from the want of those destroyed documents. Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH NOURSE,
Register of the Treasury.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 19, 1801.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 4th instant, I can assure you that my office has not suffered any injury of the least consequence by the late fire.

I am, with respect, your most humble servant,
SAMUEL MEREDITH,
Treasurer of the United States.

SAMUEL DEXTER, Esq.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Revenue Office, Feb. 13, 1801.

SIR: I have paid due attention to a notice from, the House of Representatives, which you communicated to me on the 4th instant.

I have the satisfaction of assuring you that the books are all safe, and that I know of no paper missing from this office which can impede or in any manner affect the adjustment of the public accounts.

I am, with perfect respect, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM MILLER,
Commissioner of the Revenue.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

GENERAL STAMP OFFICE,
February 23, 1801.

SIR: In obedience to your request and the resolution of Congress on the 2d current, I have the honor to report, that I have been fortunate enough to reclaim all the papers belonging to the General Stamp Office, of any consideration, and that the public will sustain no material injury in this office by the unfortunate fire.

I am, with the most perfect respect and esteem, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

JOSHUA JOHNSON,
Superintendent of Stamps.

FIRES IN THE WAR AND TREASURY DEPARTMENTS.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 28, 1801.]

Mr. NICHOLAS, from the committee appointed to inquire into the causes of the late fires in the War and Treasury Departments, made the following report:

That they have taken the depositions of all the persons from whom they had reason to expect any information, and herewith report them: those marked A relate to the fire in the War Office, and those marked B to the fire in the Treasury Department.

Fires in the War and Treasury Departments.

The committee having seen an assertion in a paper called the Cabinet, that, during the fire in the Treasury Department, persons were discovered in one of the rooms of that Department, in circumstances which excited suspicion, the committee called on the editor of that paper, and requested to be informed whether he could mention the names of any persons who were witnesses of that fact, or any other relating to the fires. By him they were referred to Lawson Pearson and Salem Roe; from whose depositions, and the deposition of John Woodside, (among the papers marked B,) it appears that the persons thus discovered were clerks of the Department employed in taking care of the books and papers.

It having been mentioned in the depositions of some of the witnesses, from whom the committee were taught to expect material information, that Mr. Oliver Wolcott, late Secretary of the Treasury, was seen at one end of the Treasury Department, during the fire therein, loading a cart with boxes and papers, the committee considering it as a circumstance which might be made to excite suspicion, and believing it was due to Mr. Wolcott to investigate thoroughly a fact of this nature, which had been partially disclosed by their means, have taken several depositions on that subject, which are herewith reported, marked C. From these depositions no suspicion can remain that the boxes and cases were not Mr. Wolcott's private property.

The committee do not think it necessary to make a minute report of their opinion on the facts of these several cases, as the depositions themselves will afford more satisfactory information: they report, as the general result of their inquiries, that it is probable the fire in the War Department was communicated from the fire-place in the adjoining house, and that there is no evidence whatever on which to found a suspicion of its originating in negligence or design; that, as to the origin of the fire in the Treasury Department, they have obtained no evidence which enables them to form a conjecture satisfactory to themselves: it would only be in their power to make an abstract of the testimony; and, in doing this, they might add to or diminish its force: and therefore choose to report it only in the words of the witnesses themselves.

A.

Mr. Loring, a clerk in the War Department, states, that, on the day of the 8th of November, 1800, (the evening of which the office was burnt,) he was engaged in filing and arranging the papers of the office, (which were very much deranged in consequence of removing first from Philadelphia, and afterwards from the store, commonly known by the name of Lear's store, in the City of Washington,) a business in which he had employed all his hours which were not immediately necessary for the routine of business common in the office; that, having on that day nearly finished, he had determined to continue until he had completed the work, as he was anxious to have them arranged; that, in consequence, he remained an hour or an hour and a half after the other gentlemen of the Department had left it; that when he had finished the business he was engaged in, which was after three o'clock, he locked the door of the room, and carried the key thereof into the room of the messenger, which was in the kitchen; that the day having been uncommonly warm for the season, the fire had been reduced at about 11 o'clock in the morning, and that the door which led into the room usually occupied by the Secretary was ordered by the chief clerk to be opened in order to admit fresh air, (there having been no fire in that room on that day, or for three weeks and upwards prior to it;) that no more fire was made in the room in which he was employed that day; and that, when he left the room, he doubts whether there was fire enough on the hearth to have lighted a candle; that he went home to dine, and believed everything was perfectly secure in the office, as he looked into the Secretary's room to see if the windows were shut, and finding them to be so, he doubted not everything was safe; that, in the evening, about (he believes) six o'clock, or perhaps a little after, Mr. Brown, a clerk to the Accountant, came over to his lodgings and informed the gentlemen that the War Office was on fire; that Mr. Wolcott, and every other man in the house immediately ran over; that, when we approached the house, we observed the light very strong from the window over the door of the entrance of the house immediately adjoining the library, which was arranged along the partition wall of that building, and the adjoining house occupied by Mr. Jackson, and against which the chimney of Mr. Jackson's house stood; that he, with Mr. Wolcott, went immediately up stairs, and he, Mr. L., being first, opened the door of the room generally occupied by the chief clerk, viz: (the room immediately in the rear of the Secretary's, the one which was on fire;) that, when he opened the door, the force of the smoke was so great as to stagger him; he, however, recovered himself, and made a second attempt, but to no purpose; finding it impossible to save anything on that floor, he immediately left the house and went to the Treasury office for the engine, which, with assistance, he brought to the fire; but the house being in such a state, it proved ineffectual. That, on the morning after the fire, (Sunday,) he went over before breakfast to examine the partition wall; that he ventured as near as the walls, which were then tottering, would admit, and examined particularly as to the structure of the chimney; that, in viewing the partition wall, he did not doubt the fire was communicated from the chimney of the next house, as the partition wall was very thin, and the evident appearance of wooden blocks or bricks interspersed in it; and that it appeared to him that the wall was only the thickness of the length of a brick from the first floor to the second, and the thickness of the width of a brick from the second floor up to the roof; and knowing that a large library was extended along that wall; and upon the lower shelf of the library, about eight inches from the floor, stood a number of large volumes, behind which (for convenience) many pamphlets and loose papers were thrown; and he has no hesitation in saying, that he firmly believes it was from these causes that the fire was communicated.

With respect to the Treasury Department, Mr. L. has very little to say, which can give information or throw light on it; he has only to observe, that at about five o'clock in the evening of the — January, he, agreeably to an appointment he had made with Mr. Steele, left the hotel in which he lodged, directly opposite to the Treasury, to call for Mr. Steele, who was writing in his office; that, as he crossed the street, he saw large columns of smoke issuing from the two southeast chimneys of the office; he immediately entered the east door, which led to the centre of the building, through a narrow passage; that, in passing through this passage, he observed the smoke issuing from under the two first doors on the left side of the passage; that he did not stop to open either of them, his object being to get the engine out which stood in the hall; that not more than two or three persons were with him at the time, and that, with the assistance of one of them he broke open the front door and put the engine into the street. Immediately on doing this he returned into the passage, where he discovered several persons forcing the middle door, (or that which led to Mr. Ferrall's room,) which they immediately succeeded in. As soon as the door was opened, the flames and smoke rushed out in a diagonal line from the back of Mr. Ferrall's room, where his cases stood, which was the part of the room opposite to his fire-place. This is all he can say respecting it, as his whole attention and exertions were to check and conquer the flames; which, with great exertions, on all sides, was finally accomplished.

Sworn before me, the subscriber, one of the justices of the peace for Prince George's county, this 23d day of February, 1801,

RICHARD FORREST.

On the evening of 8th November last, about seven o'clock, P. M., I was alarmed with the cry of fire, and on inquiry it was the War Office; I immediately alarmed Mr. Hodgson and Mr. Wood, and desired them to bring with them buckets, and I unhung my garden gate, that free access might be had to my pump; I gave orders to fill all the buckets and tubs that were about the house, and took with me two buckets of water; when I got to the War Office the smoke was issuing out of the front windows like a cloud; soon afterwards the flames broke out of the front window over the front door; I was then asked by Mr. Watson, a clerk, to assist him in getting a ladder, but before we could procure the ladder the fire broke out of the back side of the house. I assisted about half an hour to save the papers, but on seeing that my own house was in danger, I left the fire and went home. The next day (Sunday) I went to see Mr.

Markward, to make inquiry how the fire originated, (Col. Burrows went with me;) he, Markward, could give us no satisfaction; we then went to the burnt house, and, on examining the walls, were of opinion that it had been communicated from the back of Mr. Jonathan Jackson's chimneys to the library; and, on further examination, we saw a number of places where wood had been let into the wall; and nearly at the back of the chimney of Mr. Jackson's house I saw a light through the wall, (and mentioned it to Col. Burrows,) which I suppose was the place that the fire got through to the library; and was further convinced, for the back part of the place is but four and a half inches thick. And further this deponent saith not.

WM. O'NEALE.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, Feb. 25, 1800.

The above deposition was taken by the committee, this 25th February, 1801; Wm. O'Neale being first sworn.

JOHN NICHOLAS, Chairman.

Thomas Y. Sprogel, being first sworn, deposes and saith that at about three o'clock, P. M., of the day on which the War Office was consumed, he assisted in laying out the corpse of a Mr. Jackson, who died in the room adjoining to the room occupied by the Secretary of War, in which the fire appeared to originate; that at that time there was so little fire in the hearth, that he, this deponent, could with difficulty burn vinegar enough to correct the effect of the body on the air of the room. That while the house was on fire, he returned into the room where the corpse was laid, and found the fire totally extinguished to all appearance; that he was informed a fire had been kindled in the interval of his two visits to the room, and that it had been extinguished because it had a bad effect on the corpse. THOS. Y. SPROGEL.

B.

The testimony of Patrick Ferrall, principal clerk in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury, relative to the fire that took place on the 20th January last.

Having received a letter by the mail of the 19th from a mercantile house in Philadelphia, that required an answer by the return of post, not being enabled from the official duties of the office to write the answer during office hours of the 20th; on leaving the office between two and three o'clock, and not seeing Fogel, the messenger, in the hall, I mentioned to one of the other messengers to inform him when he came in to leave the key, as I should be back after dinner to write a letter. I returned between three and four o'clock, and found the key of the Auditor's room, which I opened and went into the room usually occupied by me, and wrote my letter; after which I locked the door, and went to the house occupied by the messenger, delivered him the key and the letter, desiring him to leave it at the post office before five o'clock. At my going in, and during my stay in the office, I observed not the least appearance of fire, but what was in the fire-place of the room where I was writing, which at the time was very low, being the remainder of that made in the early part of the day. After delivering the key to the messenger, I went over to a house in the neighborhood where a billiard-table is kept, where I remained, until the cry of fire was heard; when the whole of the persons that were there ran over to the office. On my entrance, finding the doors locked, I called on the messenger by name, who immediately appeared and delivered me the key of the Auditor's room, which I unlocked, and made to the door that opened into the room in which I had been writing; on opening which the smoke and flames gushed out with such violence, that I had nearly been suffocated. On which I returned into the entry and requested some persons that were there to break open the door; on this being done, I clearly perceived that the great body of the fire proceeded from three large cases, which were placed back of the fire-place in the room occupied by the Auditor. How or by what means this unfortunate accident took place, I do not deem myself competent to decide; but this I will say, I had neither hand nor deed in it.

Fires in the War and Treasury Departments.

P. FERRALL.

Sworn to before me, this 23d day of February, 1801.

JOHN NICHOLAS,

Chairman of the Committee.

The representation of Albright Fogle, Messenger to the Auditor's Office, respecting the fire which took place in the Treasury Department on the 20th of January, 1801.

The Auditor left his room on that day a little before two o'clock, when the fire in his fire-place was reduced so low that the ashes covered it close up, over which I placed the fender.

Mr. P. Ferrall left his room at about half past two o'clock on the same day, when his fire was also low. I covered it immediately with the fender, and locked the doors. The key leading to Mr. Ferrall's room was then, by his request, put into a certain place where he could have access to it after dinner.

I returned to the room about half after four o'clock, and found Mr. Ferrall writing at his desk; I inquired of him if I should put a stick on the fire, which he refused. About twenty minutes before five o'clock he called on me at my house, delivered me the key of the room and a letter, requesting me to put it in the post office; I then hastened to the office, examined the fire in the Auditor's room, raked up the remains of that in Mr. Ferrall's, covered it with the fender, and secured the windows and doors; at which time everything appeared, as usual, very safe from fire. About dusk, and some time after my return from the post office, I heard the first cry of fire; and, on opening the door of the Auditor's room, I did not perceive any fire, but a vast quantity of smoke came out, which prevented an entry at that time; the door of Mr. Ferrall's room was then forced open, when the large cases and furniture in it, which stood close to the wall adjoining the Auditor's room, were all on fire; at that time I did not perceive anything on fire at the other end of the room, near the fire-place.

ALBRIGHT FOGLE.

Sworn to before me, this 23d of February, 1801.

JOHN WOODSIDE, clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, upon his oath, deposes: That on the 20th day of January, 1801, having left the office about half past four, P. M., and gone to his place of lodging, about one hundred paces west of the building occupied by the Treasury Department, it being between sundown and dusk, approaching nearer the latter, when the deponent heard the cry of fire; upon which he immediately ran to the Treasury, from whence he saw smoke proceeding; and, upon his nearer approach, saw the smoke and flame issuing from the windows or window of the room occupied by the principal clerk in the office of the Auditor, which room is adjoining to the Auditor's, the latter being in the southeast part of the building.

The weather for the season had been moderate, as to cold, for a day or two preceding; but in the afternoon of the said 20th day of January, the wind had changed, and blew, especially at the time of the fire, cold and violently from the north-west.

The deponent, finding that the apartment in which the fire had commenced was all in flames, seeing sundry persons engaged in getting the engine ready, and not doubting the immediate assistance of other citizens, considered it most for the interests of the people to endeavor to save the books and papers in the two apartments up stairs of the office to which he was more immediately attached, viz: the Comptroller's, and that of his principal clerk, the latter being immediately over the one in flames; and therefore proceeded to these apartments as soon as they could be opened.

Early in the morning of the 21st, the day after the fire, as soon as there was light, the deponent, living in the vicinity, attended at the Department with a view to collect what papers might be found in a scattered state; and, before sunrise, went to the apartment where the fire had begun, and found the fender in the fire-place, in such a state as to lead, from appearances, to the conclusion that the fire had been carefully covered; the fender being somewhat in the form of part of a circle, the one edge resting upon the hearth, the other edge touching the back of the fire-place.

Since the fire, it having been proposed to the deponent to take the superintendence of the building, so far as respects the prevention of accidents by fire, he undertook the business confided to him; and, having been of opinion that the fire might have been communicated by the mantel-pieces, the deponent had an examination of one of the fire-places, upon which, apprehension of the probability of fire being communicated to the building thereby was not lessened; but, from the blocks placed in the jambs, for nailing the surbase and wash-board, being exposed to the fire of the flues of the chimneys from below, by sparks passing through open joints one quarter of an inch in width between the bricks, and these open joints being only about three inches from the block to the inner part of the chimney, additional ground was given to apprehend danger; as likewise from the blocks placed in the walls, immediately back of the fire-places, in the rooms in the east and west ends of the building.

These apprehensions were communicated to the Register of the Treasury, upon which orders were given to have removed every block or piece of wood, with the mantel-pieces, which might possibly endanger the building. In the execution of these orders, it was found that the blocks back of the fire-places, in the apartment occupied by the Commissioner of the Revenue, have the appearance of being in a degree scorched. In the same room, that is, the one adjoining the Commissioner's, a wedge of pine wood was taken out of the chimney jamb, which had been driven into an open joint between the bricks, which led directly into the flue of the fire-place in the room below. To this wedge the wash-board was nailed. The wedge was found burnt to coal at the end next to the chimney, and was scorched on the under part, the board nailed thereto having been also touched with fire.

In the room occupied by the superintendent of stamps an open joint was found, which led to the block to which the wash-board was fastened into the chimney of the fire-place below; this block did not appear to be scorched, but a quantity of soot had made its way through this open joint to the board to which the wash-board was nailed. The whole of the circumstances, taken together, afford just ground for very serious apprehensions of the liability of the place being set on fire by sparks, especially if the chimney should have taken fire.

Similar facts occurred in breaking out the blocks in the jamb of the fire-place in the room occupied by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in another apartment belonging to the said officer, adjoining to that of his principal clerk. Here the danger appeared to be much greater, as it did not arise from open joints leading eight or nine inches into the flues of the chimneys below, but from openings immediately from the blocks to the flues. In one instance, a hole an inch and a half in diameter was discovered, the block, &c. very much dried and smoked, if not scorched. In the other instance, several openings leading directly to the flue from the block to which the surbase was nailed, two pieces of bats lying between the block and the flue, which, not being close to each other, and having no mortar, caused the last mentioned openings, opposite to which the block and other wood appeared to be scorched, and the turpentine to have been extracted by the heat from the chimney.

In relation to the state of the room where the fire originated, the deponent saith that he made a particular examination, and finds that the mantel-piece, except upon the south side, appears to have been burned or removed; that the blocks to which it was nailed appear to have been in part burnt on the outer surface next to the room, except one in a small degree scorched; that part of the mantel-piece on the south side of the fire-place, which remains standing, being burnt to coal upon the outside, which, if pulled down, the blocks to which it is nailed, it is supposed, will appear like those upon the other side of the fire-place, in some degree scorched or burnt.

In the said apartment, directly opposite the fire-place in the Auditor's room, there had been placed two blocks of wood, the uppermost fourteen inches in length, with two others upon a line, the right hand block four feet, the one on the left hand three feet and a quarter distant; these blocks were placed in the wall for the purpose of nailing the surbase thereto. The place where a block had been placed for nailing the wash-board is also back of the said fire-place, and nearly under the one already mentioned, and, like that, flanked upon the right and left with blocks, at the distances above mentioned; the block, from the opening in the wall, could not have been more than nine inches in length and five inches in width; the blocks upon the right and left of those back of the fire-place do not appear to have been burnt, except one upon the outside, next to the surbase, which appears to have been touched with fire.

The block behind the fire-place, to which the surbase was nailed, was burnt on the surface next to the room in which the fire originated, but that part of the said block which was within the wall had not any appearance of being scorched; the block immediately below, to which the wash-board had been nailed, the deponent did not see, as it was missing the first or second day after the fire, he having looked for it in the cellar, where he found the upper block.

The thickness of the wall back of the said fire-place is thirteen inches, by measurement, and deducting five inches, the width of the block, or rather depth of the place where it would appear a block had been, leaves eight inches brick between where the block had been and the fire in the Auditor's room; the joints between the bricks in the back of said fire-place appear to have been filled with mortar, except one joint about three-sixteenths of an inch wide, into which a piece of wood of that thickness can be inserted four inches, leaving, from the inner part of the joint, and the space which had been occupied by the block upon the opposite side, a thickness of four inches brick.

This deponent, on being asked, further saith, that he can discover no way in which the fire could have communicated from the fire-place in the Auditor's room to Mr. Ferrall's room, unless it was by the lower block to which the wash-board in Mr. Ferrall's room was nailed, which block was not to be found at the time this deponent examined the place.

JOHN WOODSIDE.

Sworn to before me, this 24th February, 1801.

JOHN NICHOLAS,
Chairman of the Committee.

Fires in the War and Treasury Departments.

On a further examination, the said John Woodside says that he was employed in the first room on the left-hand side of the passage, on the second floor of the Treasury Department, which leads to the east end, at the time the door was forced open; and that he was endeavoring to remove the books and papers into the fire-proof room adjoining; that he believes several other persons were also employed in the same way with him at the time.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, Feb. 24, 1801.

On the evening of the 20th January, 1801, as I was going to Dr. Cunningham's, on business, I saw a great smoke arising near the President's House. I directly called fire! Mr. Cunningham was in his yard, and asked where; I answered on the President's square. He replied that it was shavings; I said no; then we both ran. I got to the Treasury Office first, and found it on fire; (it was between sunset and dark,) and the alarm of fire was general, and the bells were ringing. I called for buckets, and to man the pump at the north end of the building, which was soon done, and water passed as long as there was any to be had. When the pump sucked, I went to the south side, and began to form a line to Mr. Blodget's pump; this being done, I returned to the north side, and proposed to convey water into the rooms where the fire was; after some time the fire began to abate, and I went to Mr. Ferrall's room door and began to throw water where the greatest appearance of fire was; and after some time the room got dark, I got a candle to see if I could discover where the fire originated. I felt on the floor near the fire-place, and it was not burnt; I then felt several other places, and, on feeling near the jamb of the door leading from Mr. Ferrall's room to the Auditor's, in the recess of the said door, I put my hand on a hickory chunk about twelve or fifteen inches long, and about three inches in diameter; it appeared to be burnt at one end to a coal; there was bark on one end. I think it was hickory; it might not have been hickory, but I think it was. I then said that the building was set on fire by some evil-disposed person. About this time it was said that the building was on fire up stairs; I ran to give my assistance, met Mr. Wolcott, and requested him to give some directions concerning the papers; Mr. Wolcott said he had nothing to do with them, that he was not the Secretary, and it was as much as he could do to take care of his own private property. I went up stairs, and Mr. Woodside gave me a quantity of books and papers to carry down stairs, which I delivered to Mr. Dawson, and told him that I was of opinion that the building was set on fire, and that I had found a chunk in the recess of the door of Mr. Ferrall's room. On my return up stairs I met Mr. Wolcott, and said for God's sake, Mr. Wolcott, give some directions; he told me he would introduce me to Mr. Dexter, who would give me the proper directions, which he did. Shortly afterwards, an alarm of fire took place in the cellar, and I got water carried down and put it out in a short time. On examination, it was found that the fire had found its way between the floor and the counter-ceiling, and it was proposed to tear up the floor, which was done, by Mr. Dexter's orders; and further this deponent saith not.

WILLIAM O'NEALE.

On being asked, the deponent saith that the floor was burnt through about the place where he found the piece of wood which he has before mentioned.

The above deposition was given by William O'Neale, before the committee; he being first sworn, this 25th February, 1801.

JOHN NICHOLAS, Chairman.

Thomas Y. Sprogel, being first sworn, deposeeth and saith, that, after the fire in the Treasury Department, he was employed by Mr. Nourse, the Register, to watch in the office: and that about twelve o'clock at night, he discovered a wooden block behind Mr. Harrison's fire-place, in Mr. Ferrall's room, to which the wash-board had been nailed, to be on fire; that he extinguished the fire with water, and that it appeared to him to be burning from Mr. Ferrall's room, and towards Mr. Harrison's fire-place; that the block appeared to be about half consumed; that soon after he understood, from the conversation of persons present, that they had taken out the block and found the end next Mr. Harrison's fire-place untouched by fire, but did not see the block himself; that the fire in Mr. Ferrall's room appeared to have been perfectly secured, and that he is very well satisfied that the fire did not proceed from that fire-place.

THOMAS Y. SPROGEL.

Sworn to before me, this 27th day of February, 1801.

JOHN NICHOLAS, Chairman.

I, Jonathan Freeman, testify, that I was at the Treasury Department about sunrise on the day after the fire happened at that place. In the room which was the most damaged I observed the strongest marks of fire, on the side of the room opposite to the fire-place, in the wall on this side, directly (as it appeared to me) opposite to the fire-place in the Auditor's room, near the floor, were two holes in the wall, in which had been placed wood for fastening; in the largest and lowest of those holes were some coals, and ashes, and such marks of fire as induced me to suppose that the wood had been consumed there; and the strongest marks of the fire were at the end of the hole next to the opposite room; from which I was led to believe that the fire was communicated from the fire-place in the Auditor's room, by means of a block or wooden brick, which appeared to have been in the lowest of the above-mentioned holes, and to which the wash-board or surbase of the room where the fire broke out had been fastened.

Fires in the War and Treasury Departments.

Lawson Pearson, being first sworn, deposeth and saith, that he came to the Treasury Department when the fire was at its height; that after assisting an acquaintance in emptying a room, which was in danger, of the things in it, he went up stairs, and turned into the passage running to the east, and he discovered a light through the key-hole of the door of the first room on the left hand; that, supposing the room was on fire, he forced the door open, and discovered three men with a number of papers before them; that the candle was extinguished either by the sudden opening of the door or some other cause; that, on his proposing to remove the furniture, he was advised by one of the persons to throw it out of the window, which he refused, as being likely to destroy it; that the persons in the room discovered no embarrassment on its being opened. He further saith that he laid the bricks in the east end of the Treasury Department, and that after the fire he examined the wall between the Auditor's room and the room which was on fire, and could find no reason to suppose that the fire had been communicated from the Auditor's fire-place; that there was the length of the brick between the fire-place and the wooden bricks in the opposite room, and that there was no appearance whatever on the brick or mortar of the wooden brick to which the wash-board was nailed having been burnt; that the wooden brick last mentioned had been removed when he examined, which was the day after the fire. He further saith that he assisted in the examination which has taken place of the fire-places in the Treasury Department, and that a number of blocks have been taken out which were touched by fire, but that none of them were as far from the fire-places as those behind the fire-place in the Auditor's room, and that none which were touched by fire, which he has seen taken out, were more than four inches from the fire.

Salem Roe, being first sworn, deposeth and saith, that he was in company with Lawson Pearson when he forced open the door mentioned in his deposition, and that he saw two or three persons sitting in the room; that they proposed to remove a case of papers, and were told they should not, unless they would throw it out of the window; that they, notwithstanding, took it up and carried it down stairs.

Having been in Georgetown at the time the fire was discovered in the Treasury Department, I did not arrive there until it had made some progress; my immediate concern was to see after the papers, as from the appearance of the flame I thought it impossible the building could be saved. On my going to the west end of the department, where the greatest number of boxes and cases of papers were placed, a carman came up and inquired for Captain Coyle, who, he said, had desired him to convey away a parcel of papers; not knowing what authority Coyle had to issue any directions concerning the removal of papers, my curiosity was excited to such a degree as to keep me on the spot where the records were; in a short time after Oliver Wolcott made his appearance, in company with Coyle, and began to load the cart which was there with chests of papers; being surprised at this conduct, and in order to aid any evidence which should in future be called for, I looked for and imparted my information to Mr. Kramer, who immediately repaired with me to the place, and expressed his astonishment at seeing Oliver Wolcott so extremely attentive to the carrying away of papers, when the department appeared in imminent danger of being destroyed.

The night on which the fire was discovered at the Treasury Department I was in Georgetown, in company with several friends, when a person came to the door of the house in which we were, and gave the alarm; on which we proceeded to the Treasury Department, and I joined the ranks to hand water. The night being somewhat cold I left said station, and went into the house to assist in getting out and securing the papers; when Mr. Waterman informed me that some persons were busy in taking from the department a number of cases, &c., with papers. I went with him to the place and saw two carts, one of which had a number of cases loaded up, and Mr. Wolcott, and Captain Coyle, a clerk to the Secretary of the Treasury, appeared to be busy in assisting to load one of the carts.

John Coyle, of the City of Washington, being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, doth depose and say, that on or about the 20th day of January, 1801, at about half past five o'clock, P. M., when the alarm was given that the Treasury Office was on fire; in going towards said office he overtook Oliver Wolcott, Esq., late Secretary of the Treasury, who observed to this deponent, that he was very much interested in saving his private papers, as the justification of all his official transactions depended on that circumstance, and requested his assistance to effect that purpose, if possible; that he went with Mr. Wolcott into the northwest room of the building, where Mr. W. pointed out a chest of about four feet by one foot six inches; a trunk of about three feet four inches by one foot six inches; two boxes of about two feet by thirteen inches, and a small writing desk, already packed and locked, as those containing his private papers: these this deponent assisted in removing out of the house. Mr. Wolcott also requested the removal of an iron chest, as he said it contained valuable public property and documents. He also requested me particularly to assist in removing Mr. Miller's books and papers generally, as they were very important; which I did, and observed Mr. Wolcott active in assisting, and appeared very anxious for their preservation.

He then observed that it was his intention to have his papers removed to his lodgings in the course of two or three days if the fire had not happened, and as they were then exposed, he wished to have them taken there.

This deponent then went to the sign of the Black Horse, where he knew carts were to be hired, and engaged one. As it did not arrive soon, he went to the front of the house and observed an empty cart, employed the owner, and brought him to where the trunks, &c., were. Mr. Wolcott then went into the house and cellar to observe the state of the fire, returned, and reported that the danger was apparently over.

Mr. O'Neale then came up and requested Mr. Wolcott's orders respecting the removal of papers. Mr. W. replied he would give no orders, but would introduce him to the Secretary of the Treasury, who was the proper person; this was done, and the orders given. Mr. O'Neale then demanded his assistance as Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. W. replied, I am not Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. O'Neale then said, you are a citizen, and I demand your assistance to save the public property. Mr. W. replied, I cannot; I must take care of my private property.

This deponent and Mr. Wolcott had previously examined the state of the fire, and concurred in opinion that the danger was all over; the fire appeared completely subdued, and any further removal we conceived to be superfluous. We then had loaded into a cart the before-mentioned chest, &c., with the addition of an iron box, which Mr. Wolcott said contained valuable public documents, and did it as a measure of safety.

The cart then drove to the house of said deponent and unloaded. The iron box was returned in safety to the Treasury Department in the course of a day or two following.

Bazil Wood, of the City of Washington, doth, upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, depose and say, that on the 20th of January last, and in the evening of the same day, during the fire which commenced in the evening aforesaid in the Auditor's office of the Treasury Department, he, this deponent, saw several chests and boxes containing books and papers belonging to Oliver Wolcott, Esq., late Secretary of the Treasury; that this deponent did not then, nor has he since seen the papers then contained in the said boxes; but for some time previous to Mr. Wolcott's resignation, he did prepare, and cause to be prepared, copies of various public documents and records in his office; that this deponent did several times assist the said Mr. Wolcott in removing these papers into Mr. Miller's room, which Mr. W. occupied for a few weeks, and from which the before-mentioned chests, &c., were, as before said, removed on the evening of the fire; that he verily believes there was not a single original document removed, or a paper which was not recorded taken away from the office by Mr. W. This deponent asserts that the space which the papers intended to be taken away by Mr. W. could not be less than four feet square at least, and the person (to wit, Robert Jones Heath, one of the clerks, who examined the rough draughts of letters and other documents, being sick,) this deponent can only further say, that he believes the said Heath could give particular information as to the papers, &c., which he examined and delivered to Mr. Wolcott. Mr. Wolcott received from this deponent no papers, or copies of books or papers, other than the weekly state of balances, of which the records are now in this deponent's possession. The kinds of papers which Mr. Wolcott intended, or said he intended to take were, the rough draughts of his own public letters and the copies of several reports to the various departments, printed journals of Congress, printed reports of the different departments to the President and Congress, copies of weekly statement of balances, the annual statements of receipts and expenditures of the United States: and further this deponent saith not.

OFFICIAL CONDUCT OF GOV. SARGENT.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Feb. 19, 1801.]

MR. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH, from the committee appointed to inquire into the official conduct of Winthrop Sargent, Governor of the Mississippi Territory; and to whom also was referred the petition of Cato West and others, made the following report:

In the above-mentioned petition, the administration of Governor Sargent is criminated on the ground of improper and arbitrary misbehaviour; of an unconstitutional exercise of the legislative authority by the Governor and Judges, and of unlawful exactions of office fees.

First. Of improper and arbitrary misbehaviour.

As the particular instances and acts of improper and arbitrary misconduct imputed to Governor Sargent are not specified, nor evidence adduced whereby to verify the general charges alleged against him, your committee have not been able to investigate them. Such papers relative thereto as have come to their possession accompany this report.

Second. Of an unconstitutional exercise of legislative authority by the Governor and Judges.

On this point it is alleged that the Governor and Judges have made and published laws not derived from the codes of the original States.

By Governor Sargent this fact is admitted.

The President of the United States, by the act entitled "An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia, and authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory," was empowered to establish there a Government, in all respects similar to that exercised in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, excepting and excluding the last article of the ordinance made for the government thereof by the late Congress, on the 13th of July, 1787.

In the ordinance referred to in the aforesaid act, are the following clauses:

"The Governor and Judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district, such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress from time to time: which laws shall be in force in the district until the organization of the General Assembly, unless disapproved by Congress; but afterwards, the Legislature shall have authority to alter them as they shall think fit. The Governor for the time being shall be commander-in-chief of the militia; appoint and commission all officers in the same, below the rank of general officers; all general officers shall be appointed and commissioned by Congress. Previous to the organization of the General Assembly, the Governor shall appoint such magistrates and other civil officers in each county or township, as he shall find necessary for the preservation of the peace and good order in the same. After the General Assembly shall be organized, the powers and duties of magistrates and other civil officers shall be regulated and defined by the said Assembly; but all magistrates and other civil officers not herein otherwise directed, shall, during the continuance of the temporary Government, be appointed by the Governor. For the prevention of crimes and injuries, the laws to be adopted or made shall have force in all parts of the district; and for the execution of process, criminal and civil, the Governor shall make proper divisions thereof; and he shall proceed, from time to time, as circumstances may require, to lay out the parts of the district in which the Indian titles shall have been extinguished, into counties and townships; subject, however, to such alterations as may thereafter be made by the Legislature."

Your committee are of opinion that the legislative power of the Governor and Judges, by virtue of the above mentioned ordinance, is restricted to the adopting of laws from the codes of the original States, and cannot be extended to the making or enacting of laws not derived from those codes.

It appears to your committee, that the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory misconceived the nature and extent of their authority in this particular. Justly to appreciate their motives, it is essential to state the principles on which they have acted. By them, the ordinance appears to have been understood as vesting in the Governor and Judges a plenary legislative authority. Governor Sargent justifies its exercise on the ground of construction, and of the principle being avowed and acted on by the Governor and Judges, in making laws in the Northwestern Territory; and its being impliedly if not directly sanctioned by Congress. In his letter of the 15th of June, 1800, to the Secretary of State, he observes, "upon the subject of making or adopting laws, I have written you largely heretofore. It is not necessary to repeat my own opinions; many letters in your office evince my anxiety to have possessed the codes of the original States. We began by legislating, however, with the laws of the Northwestern Territory; they had been long subject to the disapprobation of the honorable Congress; and daring not to doubt their intention, we believe them good. We have uniformly continued, however, to declare our willingness to receive and respect authenticated information for the quiet and interests of this people." In another letter, of the 25th of August, 1800, to the Secretary of State, (already communicated to the House) he observes, "the honorable Mr. Davis seems to have been at much trouble to establish what the Governor and Judges are very willing to admit, 'that they have made laws.' As Secretary of the Northwestern Territory, and vested with the powers of the Governor, I fully concurred with the Judges that we were a complete legislative body. We never hesitated to manifest this to Congress; and the laws by Governor St. Clair, the Judges Parsons, Symmes and Varnum, enacted as early as 1788, demonstrated that such also was their opinion. I solemnly deny to have acknowledged (as Mr. Davis asserts I have) a deviation from the ordinance of Congress in the thus enacting of laws; for the ordinance, in my acceptance thereof, tolerates so doing; in strong presumptive proof of which, I shall offer, as the honorable Mr. Davis and myself seem to have so differently read the same, that the laws which were regularly transmitted to the General Government, in one solitary instance only were disapproved; thus evidencing their perfect coincidence in sentiment with us upon this very important subject. As a further proof of their will and pleasure that we should 'make laws,' they have enacted, nearly in the words following, 'that the laws of the Territory that have been, or hereafter may be enacted by the Governor and Judges; &c.; and again, that the Governor and Judges shall be authorized to repeal their laws by them made, whenever the same may be found to be improper.'"

With respect to the practice which Governor Sargent alleges obtained with the Governor and Judges of the Northwestern Territory on this point, your committee are informed, that at their first meeting in 1788, a difference of sentiment arose between the Governor and Judges on this subject; they asserting and he denying, the power of the Legislature to make laws not derived from the codes of the States. After protesting against the assumption of that power, the Governor yielded to the opinion of the Judges. The subject was again resumed in 1795, when the Governor published his correspondence with the Judges, showing his disapprobation of the principle of making laws; on their part, the then Judges also published the reasons and grounds of their opinion and conduct in making laws. The Governor again yielded to that opinion, and from time to time, till the second grade of Government was established, the Legislature enacted laws not derived from the codes of the States.

The laws of that Territory being voluminous, a complete set whereof is to be had for examination only, in the office of the Secretary of State, your committee have not been able, from their own inspection, to ascertain how far the practice of making laws obtained, or how constantly it was adhered to in successive periods, as the judges have succeeded to each other. They find that several of the laws passed before the year 1795 were not taken from the statutes of either of the States. Mr. Wagner, clerk in the office of the Secretary of State, who, at the request of the committee, has examined the laws of the Territory in reference to this point, certifies, "that he has examined the laws of the Northwestern Territory from the commencement of its legislation, to the 1st of August, 1792, but it does not appear, from the face of them, which, or what parts of them have been adopted from the codes of the original States, or have been originally made by the Legislature of that Territory." How far, therefore, they have been mere adoptions from those codes, can only be established by comparison. That is not the case with respect to the printed laws of the Territory, published since May, 1795, in which they are invariably stated in their titles to be adopted laws, except in the instance of repealing laws; to pass which, the Governor and Judges were expressly authorized by the act of Congress of the 8th of May, 1792, and except a law in addition to a law, entitled a law ascertaining the fees of the several officers and persons therein named, published at Cincinnati on the first of May, 1793, by Winthrop Sargent, acting as Governor, and John Cleves Symmes, Joseph Gilman, and Return J. Meigs, Judges, which is not stated to have been adopted. Your committee further find, that on the 21st day of January, 1794, the President of the United States laid before the two Houses of Congress a copy of such laws of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, as had been passed from July to December, 1792, inclusive; that on the 21st day of April, 1794, they were, by order of the House of Representatives, referred to a special committee, who, on the 24th day of May, 1794, among other things, reported, that, on examination of the said laws, they found many of the provisions contained in them objectionable, but that they conceived it would be immaterial for them to detail the particular objections, as one applying to the whole of said laws afforded, in their opinion, sufficient reason for disapproving them. That those laws appeared to have been passed by the Secretary and Judges, on the idea, that they were possessed generally of legislative power, and have not, in whole or in part, been adopted from laws of the original States; that on the 12th of February, 1795, an engrossed resolution, in the form of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, disapproving all those laws except one, was agreed to by the House of Representatives and sent to the Senate. In the Senate, on report of a special committee, the resolution was disagreed to. The consideration of those particular laws does not appear to have been resumed.

In a letter of Governor Sargent's to the Secretary of State, dated Mississippi Territory, January 15, 1799, he writes: "the Judge's arrival enables us to legislate: it was most essential, and we will set about it without delay, though with much regret on my part at the want of the laws of the several States, as we must be compelled to form our code from the volumes of the Northwestern Territory, which I by no means can be induced to believe a very good basis."

And in another letter of the 13th of March, 1799, he writes to the Secretary of State: "I have already advised you of the arrival of Judge Tilton, and, in consequence, we are at length legislating; but destitute of the laws of the several States, we necessarily make instead of adopting them; the right to do which has heretofore been a question. Very diffident of my own law knowledge, I feel extremely anxious for the presence of Judge McGuire, who, I am taught to believe, is a great professional character."

Third. Of unlawful exactions of fees for official acts.

The fees alluded to are for passports to persons travelling from the Mississippi Territory to other parts of the United States, through the Indian country, and on marriage and tavern licenses.

Governor Sargent acknowledges his having received fees of the above description. He justifies the practice on the principle of those acts being extra from the duties of the Governor's office, and also of precedent in the Northwestern Territory, known, as he presumes, for a long time, to the General Government.

A law of the Mississippi Territory, entitled a law to regulate taverns and retailers of liquors, and concerning Indians, allows to the Governor a fee of eight dollars on a tavern license, which, with a like fee on marriage licenses, Governor Sargent has received. The amount of the fee on passports is unknown to the committee.

By a law of that Territory, fees are allowed to the Judges, on certain processes and official acts.

It is understood, that, for a course of years, the Governor of the Northwestern Territory has been in the practice of receiving four dollars on marriage licenses, and one guinea on tavern licenses. Laws have also been there passed, allowing to the judges fees on processes and official acts and compensation for travelling expenses; one of which was among the laws disapproved by the before mentioned resolution of the House of Representatives, which was disagreed to by the Senate; the other purports, on the face thereof, to have been adopted from the New York and Pennsylvania codes. Both of those laws were passed by Governor Sargent, when Secretary, and acting as Governor of the Territory.

Official Conduct of Governor Sargent.

The act of Congress, authorizing the establishment of a Government in the Mississippi Territory, provides that the officers therein shall receive the same compensation for their services, to be paid in the same manner, as is by law established for similar officers in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, and the powers, duties, and emoluments of a Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the southern department to be united with those of Governor.

To the Governor of the Northwestern Territory, for discharging the duties of that office and those of Superintendent of Indian Affairs, is allowed an annual salary of two thousand dollars, and to each of the Judges eight hundred dollars.

As the Governor and Judges of the Territorial Governments are officers of the United States, with annual salaries fixed by the laws of Congress, their exacting and receiving fees, as before stated, cannot be otherwise considered than as an abuse which ought to be corrected.

Although the committee find cause to notice as irregularities, in Governor Sargent's administration, the making laws not derived from the codes of the original States, and also his receiving fees for certain official acts, yet it appears satisfactory to them, from the circumstances under which they took place, that those irregularities originated from incorrect and misconceived opinions respecting the extent of his powers, and not from impure or criminal intentions.

They therefore respectfully submit to the consideration of the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That there does not appear cause for further proceedings on the matters of complaint for mal-administration against Winthrop Sargent, as Governor of the Mississippi Territory.

MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY,
August 25, 1800.

SIR: In consequence of proceedings in the National House of Representatives, tending to implicate the Governor and Judges of this Territory, unofficially communicated from the Department of State, I took leave to address the then Secretary, in a long letter, bearing date the 15th June, to exculpate, defend, and justify our aspersed conduct. Since that period there has come to my view, through the medium of the public prints, a resolution of the House of Representatives, for disapproving so much of two of our laws as authorizes certain fees to myself and their honors; with notice that the consideration thereof had been postponed by the wisdom and justice of the honorable Senate.

In a public paper styled the True American, and printed at Philadelphia upon the 15th of May, we observe an extraordinary motion, and a more extraordinary preamble, to have been made on the preceding day by the honorable Mr. T. T. Davis, and such as the most rigid justice should not have dictated, but upon fullest proof of foulest deeds. To the distinguished sympathies and candor of Messrs. Harper, Craik, Nott, and Griswold, we stand indebted for reminding gentlemen that "the accused had no opportunity of answering to the very serious charges contained in the honorable Mr. Davis's preamble; that, if the censure was just, impeachment ought to be obtained by other means," more equitable, more ingenuous, and less dishonorable, they might well have added; and for impeachment, conscious we have discharged our duties according to honor and to conscience, we stand prepared; persuaded always that the tenure of public commissions, under the American Government, rests not upon their forfeiture.

Whether we may be indulged with the privilege of being heard is yet a question. Upon most of the allegations so odiously blazoned in the preamble of the honorable Mr. Davis, I have, I fondly trust, so fully expressed myself as at least to suspend sentence of public condemnation; and, ere another session of Congress, gentlemen who may seek truth, shall find fullest conviction that we have been most barbarously abused and vilified; for my own part, I have already thrown the gauntlet, and defy the most insidious as well as active malice to establish—

That I have "acted under the influence of a faction, or pursued the principles of despotism, in excluding from my confidence a majority of the well disposed citizens."

Or that I have "indulged an unwarrantable distrust of the great body of this people, and appointed over them, to offices civil and military, persons obnoxious for their intrigues and foreign influence." I deny that I have "practised avarice, extortion, or any oppressive measure," as has been ascribed to me by the honorable Mr. Davis.

Fees warranted by a law predicated upon long-continued practice of the Northwestern Territory, and which had received the approbation of Congress, we have sometimes demanded, with this very essential difference, however, and as is in some measure stated in my last letter: that there the Governor and Judges have actually exacted fees for services expressly required by the ordinance under which they were appointed; whilst in this Territory (as it respects myself, this is most confidently asserted) they have been received for such only as seemed extra.

Judges in the Northwestern Territory are allowed by law a reimbursement of all expenses of themselves and servants in going the circuits to hold the courts. They have also fees for allowing writs of error, supersedeas, for taking bail, filing bail pieces, and all the et ceteras for which the honorable Mr. Davis has so zealously assayed to attach odium to the judicial character within this Government. The honorable Congress could not have been uninformed thereof, for the laws and records in point had been officially transmitted by myself, as secretary, consequently, long ere the practice of exacting fees could have been adopted into the United States' Mississippi Territory, granting then, sir, for a moment, the exacting of fees to be wrong, should not manly candor have dictated that the example of an older colony, so long and so strongly sanctioned by the very highest authority we under God can know, might in justice have been accepted as an apology, and we humanely spared the cruel mortification of suffering the hard, the intemperate language with which we have been assailed in the face of Congress, our friends, and the world?

The privilege of gentlemen tolerating full freedom of speech does not warrant indecorum, nor can any power, I humbly conceive, command my tacit acknowledgment of the "avarice and extortion" ascribed to me by the honorable Kentucky member. Though constrained always to rigid economy by the hard service of my country, I acknowledge not to have practised "avarice and extortion."

A soldier of the Revolutionary war, I retired not from the field till the close thereof; and it may be remembered by some of the veteran comrades in those days of peril, and who have witnessed the whelming calumny so unjustifiably attached to my humble name, that bread and fame were our sole reward.

In civil life, of the ten years that the Government of the Northwestern Territory had been established, ere I was commanded to this country, the arduous and complicated duties of Governor and Secretary, with the accumulated expenses of both offices, were mine to discharge, and without further public provision than the small stipend allowed the Secretary.

By statements made to the honorable Congress in 1796, for a compensation which is yet withheld, it will appear that my expenses were necessarily very considerable, the salary small, and that there were none of the operating motives for an avaricious man to have continued in office; that reputation, a good name, must have been the grand desideratum. Offices in your Western country were long acknowledgedly the posts of danger; hence, perhaps, their tenure undisturbed: but gentlemen read in the history of the sufferings and peril of those days, a just and a grateful country cannot hastily prostrate servants grown gray in hardihood and toil.

The honorable Mr. Davis seems to have been at much trouble to establish what the Governor and Judges are very willing to admit, "that they have made laws." As Secretary to the Northwestern Territory, and vested with the powers of the Governor, I fully concurred with the Judges that we were a complete legislative body. We never hesitated to manifest this to Congress, and the laws by Governor St. Clair, the Judges Parsons, Symmes, and Varnum, enacted as early as 1788, demonstrated that such was their opinion also; but I solemnly deny to have acknowledged (as Mr. Davis asserts I have) a deviation from the ordinance of Congress, in the thus enacting of laws; for the ordinance, in my acceptance thereof, tolerates so doing: in strong presumptive proof of which I shall offer, (as the honorable Mr. Davis and myself seem to have so differently read the same,) that the laws which were regularly transmitted to the General Government, in one solitary instance only, were never disapproved; thus evidencing their perfect coincidence in sentiment with us upon this very important subject. As a further proof of their will and pleasure that we should "make laws," they have enacted nearly in the words following:

"That the laws of the Territory that have been or hereafter may be enacted by the Governor and Judges," &c., and again, "that the Governor and Judges shall be authorized to repeal their laws by them made, whenever the same may be found to be improper."

Whence we certainly may take leave to infer our most incontestable right to the so very essential and salutary measure of enacting as well as adopting laws for common good; and further, that we shall stand exonerated, in the minds of the virtuous and the wise, from even the intention of exercising that "most dangerous assumption of power," so unadvisedly ascribed to us by the honorable Kentucky member.

Amongst the rolls in the office of the Territorial Secretary, we are ingenuously to acknowledge a law for the punishment of arson, that seems to have escaped the watchful eye of the honorable Mr. Davis, and which, together with the statute against treason, are, in our view, alike exceptionable. No legal decision or proceedings, however, have been had thereupon; nor will the Judges, I persuade myself, ever designedly transgress the sacred rules of our more respected Constitution. But so much has already been said upon this unpleasant theme, without anticipating opprobrious misconceptions of our intentions, and which appears in my address to the Legislature of the 5th of May, in your office, that no more explanation or comment can be now necessary. In any formal investigation, I hope to demonstrate that the original of the laws (our great anxiety to disseminate hastily sent to the printer) was unexceptionable in matter; but that we have been inadvertent in our signatures to the rolls cannot be denied; an act acknowledgedly hostile to the Constitution, though we have the consolation to believe it has operated no evil. For my own part, however, I claim no indulgence in official transactions, and will await, in respectful submission, such censure as may be deemed proportionate to the magnitude of my transgression; but, when it shall be mercifully considered that the law for the punishment of arson in the Northwestern Territory, subject to the same Constitutional objections with any of the statutes of this Government, had been ten years before Congress at the time we adopted it, (and never disapproved,) it must be received as an extenuation of our crime.

There has been transmitted to the Department of State the copy of an appeal to the justices of Adams county, made immediately upon my receiving the reports of the committee of Congress, to whom had been referred the petition of Cato West, and certain letters of Narsworthy Hunter. The only matter therein which I then deemed of consequence enough to engage my special attention, and publicly demonstrate to be false, was Mr. Hunter's so positive declaration of my usurping the powers of the court, (their duty to hold sacred,) and with most nefarious and dishonorable intention.

My appeal is annexed to the letter of the 15th of June, before mentioned, but it was not until the 4th instant that the justices were in session, which necessarily delayed their response herewith transmitted, and which I respectfully solicit may accompany the petitions of Cato West and others, "as the natural and legitimate relatives of those documents," which the honorable Mr. Davis has proposed to lay before the President.

Under any other circumstances than a base impeachment of almost all the territorial officers, I could not myself announce to Congress that the "accredited agent" of those persons, "styling themselves a committee regularly chosen by the inhabitants of the Mississippi Territory," &c., stands convicted, to every man of mind, of malice, mischief, and falsehood; and, if words have meaning, that he is recorded in the honorable court of general quarter sessions of the peace of Adams county, in their August term, to the present people and posterity, as a most infamous liar.

The character of the members of this court generally is, I believe, less exceptionable than that of any other equal number of men within the Government; but they are sufficiently known to reject or confirm my estimation by the most abundant testimony.

The presiding justice is respectable for integrity, science, and wealth; with very conciliating manners, and an independence of sentiment most happily adapted to his public station. I shall take leave to enclose unto you his charge to the grand jury, in this same August term, adding my request that it may be brought to the view of Government to illustrate the reputation of accusers and accused, and for other purposes important to this Territory, whenever proceedings shall be continued under the petition of Mr. West and committee. The name of Mr. Hugh Davis in the list of magistrates will also be found in the Mississippi committee; this, and the character which I have drawn of the former, may seem incompatible. The motives for my own appointments I can explain, but not always the conduct of officers.

This Mr. Davis is the same gentleman I have quoted in my address of the 15th of June, as the "well-meaning member of the committee, obtaining a copy of a letter of the 20th of December, 1798, to the Secretary of State," and which he believed to have been by them most basely perverted. He has since communicated to me that the representations made in that letter of the sufferings of the inhabitants from the Indians under Spanish and American government, then complained of by almost every man of my knowledge, and late presented as a grievance by the grand inquest, would have been stated to the General Government at that time as a wicked and abominable falsehood of the Governor; and that neither injury nor inconvenience from the Indians had ever been experienced by this people, but for his special opposition to the measure, made under the fullest impression of the justice and propriety of my statements, and which the committee had been constrained reluctantly to acknowledge. Facts, produced to them by Mr. Davis, had been too strong, and of too much publicity, to have escaped the notice of many of the members, and must induce a powerful presumption of more than want of candor upon the occasion.

The clerk, sheriff, and one of the justices, have transmitted to me some documents relative to the alarming depopulation said by Mr. Hunter to have taken place under Doctor White; the site of public buildings, "so marked by opposition to general opinion," and other matter, all which I take leave to submit as proper to be brought forward in future attention to the motion and preamble of the honorable Kentucky member.

My respected friend Colonel Clarke, deceased, whose eulogium and worth have been so long established, and whose situation as commanding the militia, and presiding in the courts of justice, rendered him more and better conversant in the administration of the Government than almost any other man within the Territory, sensibly impressed by the insults and injury offered to the Governor, and the country, devoted the last moments of a life, passed in honor, to the bearing strong testimony against that obloquy and odium which had been produced by the unprincipled clamors of malevolence.

Mr. D. Clark, a citizen of the Territory, nephew to the colonel, and inheriting his valuable possessions in this country, a gentleman long known and respected for his spirited and successful exertions in favor of our oppressed countrymen at Orleans, has obligingly committed to me his uncle's sentiments, addressed, and intended to have been directly communicated, it seems, to the honorable Mr. C. C. Claiborne, of Congress.

Testimony from characters so endowed as to command universal credibility, and so honorable to the administration of this Government, I shall certainly avail myself of. The letter, therefore, from Colonel Clark to Mr. Claiborne, and one from his nephew, (in connexion,) I respectfully solicit may be considered by the honorable Mr. Davis as true "relative documents" to the petition of Cato West, and transmitted to the President, or otherwise, as shall be deemed best for his so censorious motion and preamble.

The same reasons, sir, which induced my last long letter, have made me at this time thus immeasurably prolix, and I have again to pray your enduring patience. Once I would have deemed it an undue condescension to have brought forward voucher or collateral aid against more respectable men, than any enrolled in the list of those who are warring upon my fame; my own declaration I should have believed enough under any circumstances but formal impeachment. Wary, however, and apprehensive from late sufferings and persecution, I would guard against wiles, wickedness, and surprise.

The precedent of censure, and other uncommon proceedings upon "ex parte" evidence and statement, demand, on our part, more than ordinary circumspection. The attentions which have been bestowed upon the representations of the smallest and the least respectable part of this community, I will venture to say, has excited astonishment in the mind of almost every man within the Mississippi Territory. That Mr. West and signers of the petition to Congress were not even a moiety of the committee pretended to have been duly elected, is well known to themselves, and no secret within the Government.

The circular letter which Mr. Hunter states to Congress as originating this body, was an indecorous publication, dated upon the 6th of July, 1799, requesting meetings of the inhabitants in the several districts to elect members for a general convention. This letter, to use the language of respectable characters amongst us, was evidently intended to have been communicated to those only who had been loud in disaffection to the Government; "not general, but to be whispered to a few individuals only."

If the whole people of the Mississippi Territory could have been assembled, or a due proportion of character only, the late proceeding of Cato West, and others, would probably have been discountenanced in all its parts. This is not mere matter of opinion; for, in the January of 1799, the same was demonstrated by analogy. In a committee, who then petitioned Congress upon the subject of these lands, were some of the leading characters of Mr. West's party assembled, with the same views which they they have of late accomplished; but the members who generally had been elected upon fair and honest principles, that is, after due and diffused notice, whose names are with Congress, and who probably were a representation of the majority, curbed, with strong hand, the spirit of faction and intrigue.

Fourteen days only elapsed, from the notice contained in the letter before mentioned, to the time appointed for holding the election; a short period, indeed, considering the extent of our country, and the dispersed state of its inhabitants. Many respectable persons, indeed whole settlements, Tensaw and Tombigbee (now Washington county) not included, were without notice upon this important occasion; nor can I learn that in any one of the districts there was an assembly sufficient for much less interesting purposes than constituting delegates to a general convention.

In the town of Natchez, which comprehends an important part of a respectable population, forty persons only assembled; a moiety of them are represented destitute of all visible property; people of any country, but never acknowledged to have been enrolled within this Territory. They chose two delegates; in the certificate of the election, however, the qualifications of the electors are candidly stated to have been problematical. One of the delegates, it is said, never attended the committee, and that the other, after in vain combating the violence of its proceedings, withdrew himself altogether. This is certain, that neither of their names are found affixed to the representations which have been published from this committee. By unquestionable authority, I am informed that the principal inhabitants of the settlement of Big Black and Bayou Pierre, in the upper county, were without notice of the district meetings; and that out of one hundred and forty free male inhabitants, who should have voted for delegates to this committee, twenty-one attended; that their most weak and most abandoned characters were elected, amongst whom was one Robert Ashley, said to have fled from the justice of some of the Southern States, and who has been indicted within the Mississippi Territory for horse stealing.

All this, and much more anecdote, as well as public history of, and in relation to, Mr. West's committee, was known to the respectable citizens of the Mississippi Territory; and the natural inference, "so just, so wise and so wary a body as Congress, will not act upon such irregular, such partial proceeding," was the general sentiment, the general expression of the most worthy characters amongst us. Experience, however, has shown us, that conclusions, founded upon the intelligence of man, are too often fallacious. Abstract of all consideration merely personal, I must, sir, continue to view it as a very great misfortune that one party only should have been heard upon decisions so momentous to us all.

Information might have been had from sources disinterested, impartial, and of confidence; less intrusion and importunity upon the important time of Congress, (for the past, present, and to come,) with more tranquillity to this restive country, would probably have been the happy consequence.

General Wilkinson, it is believed, was in Philadelphia in time to have met inquiry; as an officer of rank and confidence, he was worthy to have been consulted; he had spoken and written honorably of the administration of this Government within my knowledge; he is conversant with men whom the people should have respected, and few of whose names are enrolled amongst our accusers. His testimony must have been favorable to the Mississippi Territorial officers.

He could have informed Congress that we are unprepared for any accumulation of expense; that the statement of Mr. Hunter, of the wealth and numbers in this Government, is exaggerated; that we were so involved in debt as to have rendered interposition of the Spanish Government, between us and bankruptcy, absolutely indispensable; and that in Pickering county, where discontent with the present administration had originated, there were not enough of informed men to fill the present necessary offices of Government. It is my duty, however, to endeavor to conciliate all this people to the change which has been commanded, and I shall most religiously perform it.

With the sensibilities of a man wounded in his better, his immortal part—reputation, I have, sir, written much, but I feel much more.

Assailed violently by a party in this country, from motives probably most impure, and in manner and language which, I persuade myself, no gentleman shall ever cease to abhor, some unbecoming wrath of expression, some undue consideration of self may have escaped me; but that no indecorum to characters in that honorable House, so much my duty to respect, may be found on those, or any of my future pages, is the object of my most devout prayers.

The honorable Mr. T. T. Davis, of Kentucky, seems to the Governor and Judges of the Mississippi Territory to have been unnecessarily severe. Towards the former he has practised most wanton and unwarrantable cruelty. He has given publicity to one of his letters seemingly intended only for his constituents, but which has circulated in the Northwestern Territory, where my very interesting concerns, where almost all my pecuniary affairs are afloat, calculated evidently to impress the people with such sentiments as may do me irreparable injury. He has added insult to injury, by addressing to me directly a copy of this letter, from which the following is a verbatim excerpt:

"A bill to authorize the Mississippi Territory to elect a Legislature of their own, and to take from their Governor the power of dissolving and proroguing them at pleasure, has passed the House of Representatives. The numbers in this Territory did not, according to the ordinance, entitle them to a Legislature, but to curb the usurpation of their Governor, to wit, Winthrop Sargent, Secretary to the Governor of the Northwestern Territory, Congress are inclined to grant them this extraordinary privilege; and much I fear this will not be sufficient to protect the people from the insolence of this Federal Governor, as he still retains the power of putting his veto on all their legislative acts."

I will conclude this long epistle, sir, in the words of a very celebrated poet—

"Durum! Sed levius fit patientiâ, Quicquid corrigere est nefas."

and subscribe myself, with every sentiment of most respectful consideration,

Your obedient, and Government's faithful and zealous servant,

WINTHROP SARGENT,

The Hon. SEC. OF STATE of the U. S.

The Charge delivered to the Grand Jury at the opening of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Adams, on the 4th instant, by the Hon. William Dunbar, presiding Justice:

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury: The court expresses great satisfaction at meeting a Grand Jury composed of such respectable persons now assembled for the discharge of its important duties towards our country.

It is with peculiar concern that this court has to lament, in the decease of its late able and worthy presiding magistrate, a loss which at this moment will be deeply felt. Gentlemen, you will undoubtedly mingle your griefs with ours in deploring a misfortune which this country was unprepared to sustain. Of all those gentlemen who have been honored with seats upon this bench, the late Colonel Clark was perhaps the only person who possessed, from the experience of his earlier years, treasured up in a mind replete with native energy, a sufficient fund of knowledge to enable him to preside over this court with conscious dignity. Long will the community have cause to lament the departure of this able magistrate, whose every moment, while he resided in this place, was dedicated not merely to the discharge of his official duty, but the ardor of his mind was perpetually occupied in seeking occasions to correct vice and repress immorality, whether of a public or private nature, and with a truly paternal care sedulously watching over the peace and happiness of this vicinity. The human mind is so constituted that, in order to discover the true value of an object, it would seem that it must first be lost; the public, therefore, will now begin to appreciate more justly the worth of this estimable character.

It has been said, with truth, that his brother associates relied on his perseverance, and would sensibly feel his loss; but, above all, this loss is most sensibly and severely felt by myself, who am now called upon, with inferior talents and very limited experience, to fulfil the important duties of his station in this court. If, in the infancy of our courts, this able magistrate thought it necessary to solicit the candor of his fellow-citizens, certainly I, whose whose education and pursuits of life have been altogether foreign to the modes of this court, have more abundant reason to entreat the indulgence of a generous public. The court is persuaded that if any deviation from technical rule should appear in the procedure of this court, it will be ascribed by our country to its true cause, and not to any deficiency in the virtuous wishes of its members to discharge with fidelity its duties in the public service.

Gentlemen, an important change has taken place in the form of our Government since the last meeting of this court. Congress, with great wisdom, considers all new colonies as in a state of infancy; and, as they are insufficient for their own protection, so also they are supposed to be unqualified for their own government. Protection and obedience must always go hand in hand. Congress, therefore, sends forth her chosen and approved servants with ample powers to guide the inexperience of her younger sons, who are not permitted to have a voice in their own Government, for the same reason that the infant is not permitted to oppose the will of the parent. The peculiarity of our situation, and our great distance from the seat of the General Government, have, no doubt, induced the honorable Congress to relax from the general rule established for the government of Territories; for it is to be recollected that the settlers of a British province, older than the Revolution, form the basis of the population of this Territory. It is true that accessions have been made to it by native Americans who have removed themselves during the war of the Revolution, and in a time of peace since the conquest by Spain; but the mass of our population not resembling any American colony, it is probable that this Territory has been considered as an ancient settlement, entitled to earlier privileges than young colonies just emigrating from the bosom of the United States. It would seem that, with a view to facilitate the obtaining the consent of Congress, it has been stated that our population cannot be less than 6,000 free inhabitants, and that our annual revenue in cotton, at one quarter dollar per pound, amounts to $750,000. I do not know that evil consequences can result from this exaggerated statement, excepting that, in the course of possible events, we may be called upon by Congress for a contribution towards the general defence of the Union; which probably would be demanded in the ratio of the above statement of $750,000. There are no data which have come to my knowledge, that would justify a calculation of half the above sum; and it ought, therefore, to be remembered that, at this early period, we refuse our assent to the above statement.

It may not be improper to say a few words upon the subject of another statement, in which it appears to me the honor of this court is implicated. This court has been called by the Governor of the Territory to declare whether it has been truly stated, that he, the Governor, did send to the first general court of quarter sessions of Adams county, for their sanction, an estimate of upwards of ten thousand dollars, which it is said the Governor thought necessary to be raised in that county. I answer, that no such statement was ever sent to this court by Governor Sargent. I have ever been astonished how such an absurd idea could get abroad. Those who affected to believe it, must previously have admitted the turpitude of this court; for certainly, as the law exists, it is not easy to conceive how the Governor could have hazarded issuing so extraordinary a mandate, unless he were well assured that this court was predisposed to be his obsequious and servile minions. I presume that I speak the general opinion, when I say that this court is composed of men possessing sound republican principles, and of independent fortunes, who court not the smiles, nor fear the frowns of any man, however exalted may be his rank in life. The more ample reply, with the statements requested by the Governor, will be referred to the consideration of my brother associates.

Let us hope, gentlemen, that, by the virtue of our citizens and the wisdom of our legislators, our new privileges will become a source of additional happiness and prosperity to this Territory. It is a pleasing presage of our improving manners and peaceful disposition, that the late elections for this county were conducted with so much order, harmony, and decency, greatly to the honor of both candidates and people; and I do most sincerely congratulate my country on this recent proof that party spirit is retreating from our land. It is a certain truth, that the interests of the citizens of this Territory, when properly understood, are one and the same, and ought to bind us to each other in a firm bond of union. It is grievous to all good men, when the demon of party spirit stalks over the land. It will be always found to originate with men of despicable talents, who despair, by other means, of raising themselves into popular estimation. Gentlemen, you cannot do a more acceptable office to your country than by carrying to your respective homes a spirit of conciliation, endeavoring to extinguish this pernicious principle which harasses the peace of society, and keeps asunder families whose mutual happiness and interest it is to live in harmony and the exchange of good offices. Those who take a pleasure in broils, dissensions, and tumults, will counteract your virtuous endeavors, because their importance would be destroyed by your success; but if the worthy characters of the community could at length resolve to use their exertions, the fomentors of this malignant spirit would be compelled to hide their heads in the darkness of their evil designs.

Gentlemen, you are specially returned the grand inquest of the county, to inquire of all crimes and misdemeanors committed therein, and which are within the jurisdiction of this court to determine and sentence.

A crime or misdemeanor is defined to be "an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it;" and this public law that is violated may be either the written statute or the common law of the land, which prohibits all offences of a public and evil example, and contrary to good morals. The jurisdiction of this court is limited by a statute of this Territory, and extends to all crimes and misdemeanors, of whatever nature and kind, committed within this county, the punishment whereof doth not extend to life, limb, imprisonment for more than one year, or forfeiture of goods and chattels, of lands and tenements, to the Government of the Territory. All offences punishable in less degree or in any other manner than by the punishments above enumerated, are within the jurisdiction of this court, and, therefore, proper objects of your inquiry. Offences against the penal statutes of the Territory come before this court through your presentments, such as perjury, larceny, forgery, making of fraudulent deeds, maiming or disfiguring, usurpation of office, assault and batteries, riots, routs, and unlawful assemblies, marrying persons contrary to law, offences against the statute regulating taverns and retailers of liquors and concerning Indians, also offences against the law regulating slaves, with others that might be enumerated from our penal code. Many offences against the common law might be noted as proper for your inquiry, such as challenging to fight or bearing a challenge, libels, nuisances, cheating, forcible entries and detainers, kidnapping, &c. In fine, every offence of a public and evil example, contrary to good morals, the punishment whereof this court can inflict, is within your duty to present.

Your presentments are made either by bill of indictments presented to you by the attorney for the Territory, or by a presentment, properly so called, which is the notice taken by you of any offence, from your own knowledge and observation, without any bill of indictment being laid before you, upon which, if the object admits of it, and is properly supported by evidence, an indictment is afterwards framed.

Official Conduct of Governor Sargent.

On the subject of offences, I find myself impelled to animadvert upon a crime of a heinous nature, which is too often resorted to upon very slight and trivial occasions; I mean the practice of duelling, where both parties meet avowedly with an intent to murder, presumptuously arrogating to themselves the right to wanton with their own lives and those of their fellow-creatures, in direct contradiction to the laws both of God and man.

Challenges to fight, either by word or letter, or to be the bearer of such challenge, are punishable, by fine and imprisonment, according to the circumstances of the offence.

Where two persons coolly and deliberately engage in a duel, this being attended with an apparent intention and danger of murder, and being a high contempt of the justice of the nation, is punishable as an affray of an aggravated nature, though no mischief has actually ensued.

Where killing has been the consequence of deliberate duelling, the law has justly fixed the crime and punishment of murder on both principals and seconds.

Hence, gentlemen, you perceive that the law has made ample provision for restraining this barbarous practice; and if it comes to your knowledge that any person has committed any one of the above-mentioned crimes or misdemeanors, you are bound by your oaths to present them.

Before you retire to your chamber, I have to request that, if you find your business likely to detain you a considerable time, you will be pleased to present to the court a few of the bills which may be first found, to enable us to proceed to try the traverses while the Grand Jury is occupied with the remainder of their business; the court having it greatly at heart to save as much as possible the precious time of the industrious inhabitants who are obliged to attend here at the present season.

The justices of the court of quarter sessions for the county of Adams, in court assembled, having taken into consideration an appeal made to them by his excellency the Governor of this Territory, on the subject of certain statements made to the committee of Congress by Mr. Narsworthy Hunter, as contained in Green's Impartial Observer of the 14th of June last, do declare in the most explicit manner, that the Governor did not send to this court, for their sanction, an estimate of $10,760, said to be for the current expenses of Adams county for the year 1799; nor did he ever send any other estimate to this court for that purpose; neither did he ever interfere, either directly or indirectly, with the proceedings of this court, in any manner contrary to the existing laws of this Territory.

Estimate of the probable expenses of a public nature for the county of Adams, for the year 1799, made by the justices of the court of quarter sessions, and approved by the Governor and Judges.

For building a jail, including all materials	$3,300
Timber for a kitchen for the same	80
Pickets for enclosing the jail	80
Sheriff's expenses, including fire-wood, water, and provisions for the prisoners for the present year	500
Carpenter's expenses in preparing the present court-house	50
For inquests held on the bodies of Ann Daugherty and Duncan, by L. Evans, before the appointment of Melling Woolley as coroner	10
For 3,000 days labor of one man, supposed to be necessary for repairing the highways	1,500
For contingencies	500
	$6,040

The above is the amount of the tax ordered to be collected from the county of Adams, for the last year, which is only received in part. From the returns made by the supervisors of the highways, which are not yet perfected, it is presumed there will be a surplus on that object of $500, and the tax on tavern licenses has amounted for the last year to $965, making the whole surplus $1,465; out of which an unforeseen expense of $360, for paupers' expenses, will be paid; which objects will be introduced into the following estimate for the present year, 1800, viz:

Court-house rent for the year 1800	$250
Sheriff's expenses, including fire-wood, water, &c. for the jail	250
Paupers' expenses for two years	600
Contingencies, including the treasurer's, commissioner's, assessor's, sheriff's, coroner's, (clerks and prothonotary extra charges,) attorney general's, and other accounts, and compensations for services rendered to the county, and not specially provided for	500
Deficiency of the contingent accounts for 1799	500
Making and repairing public highways	1,000
	$3,100

Ways and Means.

Surplus of the tax for highways for the year 1799	$500
Tax on tavern licenses for 1799	965
Tax on tavern licenses for 1800, estimated at	965
	$2,430
To be raised from the county of Adams, for 1800	$670

Official Conduct of Governor Sargent.

I, Peter Walker, Clerk of the Court of General Quarter Sessions for the county of Adams, do hereby certify, that the persons whose names are above written are justices of the peace, duly commissioned and qualified, in and for the county aforesaid; and that they signed their names unto the original, of which the foregoing is a copy, in open court, the day and year above mentioned.

In testimony whereof, I have undersigned my name, this fifteenth day of September, one thousand eight hundred.

PETER WALKER.

Presentment of a Grand Jury, at October term of the Supreme Court, Mississippi Territory, A. D. 1800.

At a court of oyer and terminer, held at Natchez, for the county of Adams, on the 13th of October, 1800. The grand jury for the said county present:

1st. That it will be highly expedient to make an application to the Territorial Legislature, praying them to frame or adopt laws for the more summary trial of slaves than can at present be effected by the existing statutes of this Territory; from which may result a considerable saving in expense and time to the owners, as well as the exercise of humanity towards the slaves, by the speedy termination of the trials.

2dly. We present Hugh Davis, Esquire, a magistrate of this county, for having committed a breach of the statutes of this Territory, in defacing a record of the court of quarter sessions of this county, to wit, the certification of the court in consequence of an appeal, made by his excellency the Governor of the Territory, on the subject of certain statements made to the committee of Congress, by Narsworthy Hunter, on the 8th February, 1800, and the estimate of the probable expenses of the county of Adams, for the years 1799 and 1800, by drawing a line through four words of said record, to wit, Hugh Davis, twice written, and ordering the printer not to insert said words, contrary to the instructions of the said court.

3dly. We present that Narsworthy Hunter has been guilty of composing and uttering a malicious, scandalous, and false libel against Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Governor of this Territory, as contained in a letter purporting to be addressed to the honorable W. C. C. Claiborne, chairman of Mississippi committee, dated 8th February, 1800, in the words following: "The estimate annexed to the petition of Cato West and others, mentioned in your note, is not the amount of the tax laid on the county of Adams by a law of the Territory; but it appears to be the sum which the Governor thought necessary to be raised in that county, for the service of the last year, and it was sent by him to the first court of general quarter sessions, in order to receive the sanction of the court. This would give it immediate currency, and necessarily operate in aid of his future projects of taxation; but such a manifest prodigality of the public resources appeared upon the face of it, together with so marked an opposition to the public opinion, with regard to the place whereupon the public buildings were to be erected, that it received the immediate disapprobation of the court; and, I believe, a similar instrument was never presented to the county of Pickering;" and, also, a malicious and scandalous libel against the Governor and Judges of this Territory, in their legislative capacity, contained in the aforesaid letter, in the words following, to wit: "The whole country were influenced by an idea that the ordinance for our government had been wantonly abused, and the Constitution of the United States as wantonly violated, at a time and under the circumstances which required no such sacrifice." Which said libels have direct tendency to expose them to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule, as also to disturb, in a violent degree, the peace and good order of society, by destroying that confidence so essential to the happiness of the people, which ought to subsist between them and their rulers; and by breaking down that respect which all ranks owe to those who are the guardians of our laws, may be productive of the worst of all human evils, the natural result of anarchy and unbridled licentiousness. The grand jury view, with horror, the late prevailing disorders, of a most alarming nature, which pervade the Territory, and which will all be the consequence of such crimes as have a manifest tendency to loosen the sacred bands that cement together the laws, the people, and their magistrates; for certainly, of all the most dreadful evils, that is the greatest which points out the means by which wicked men may resist and defeat the laws of their country, the consequences of which are too shocking to be here detailed. The grand jury expect, with confidence, that by the legal powers and influence of this honorable court, vigorous measures will be adopted to check the growing evils of our country, and, by the inflexible execution of the laws, we may be once more restored to peace, harmony, good order, and mutual confidence.

4thly. The grand jury are impressed with the fullest conviction that the second grade of Territorial Government is fraught with inconveniences which the good people of this Territory are not in a situation fully to encounter; they are persuaded, in particular, that the very considerable expense which will be occasioned by the new Legislature superadded to the county levies, already a subject of complaint, will be beyond the ability of our limited population to support, without very sensibly feeling its detrimental effects in the diminution of their small revenues; thereby procrastinating the time of extinguishing the remains of long standing debts, and of enabling their families of enjoying, at an earlier period, a few of the comforts of life. They earnestly recommend to their fellow-citizens to reflect, whether it will not meet the general wish of the Territory, that application be made to Congress to suspend the operation of the supplemental act for establishing the second grade of Territorial Government until it shall be fairly established to be the wish and desire of a majority of our citizens; this privilege will not be denied to our citizens, which has been conceded to the new Territory of Indiana, whose inhabitants, deriving wisdom from two years experience of the second grade of government, have found it their interest to repose entire confidence in the Legislature appointed by and under the control of the General Government, the people still retaining in their hands the power, which cannot fail to have a happy influence over their government, to wit, that of assuming the second grade whenever it shall be the will of the majority of their citizens. The grand jury have strong reasons to believe that the majority of our citizens will approve of postponing the operations of the second grade, under the above stated privilege of assuming it whenever they shall find it expedient. The grand jury think it, therefore, a duty to present, as a grievance, that the sudden and unexpected alteration in the government of the Territory, has been brought about by the industry of fifteen persons, part of a committee of thirty-five, irregularly chosen, at whose election not one-half of the inhabitants are supposed to have attended; and which election was held for the express purpose, as the people were informed by a hand-bill, not to demand a change of the former Government, but to obtain a redress of grievances; and consequently this important measure has been effected with the implied consent of less than one-quarter part of the citizens; or, more properly speaking, by the unauthorized agency of fifteen persons, composing the minority of the committee. The grand jury feel themselves forcibly compelled by their duty to add, that so great an alarm exists in the minds of the people, on the subject of taxation, that they are of opinion that, if the second grade of government is not arrested in its present stage, and postponed until the population and finances of the Territory become adequate to the increased expense of that grade, a very great depopulation will be the inevitable consequence.

The grand jury return their thanks to the court for their excellent charge; they presume to hope, that the just sentiments therein expressed will make a happy impression on the minds of the people, contributing, with other means, to attain the desirable end so much to be wished by all good men.

ROBERT STARK, C. S. C.

MILITARY ACADEMY—REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

[Communicated to Congress, January 14, 1800.]

Gentlemen of the Senate, and

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

A report made to me on the fifth of this month, by the Secretary of War, contains various matters, in which the honor and safety of the nation are deeply interested; I transmit it, therefore, to Congress, and recommend it to their serious consideration.

JOHN ADAMS.

UNITED STATES, Jan. 13, 1800.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Jan. 5, 1800.

The Secretary of War respectfully requests the attention of the President of the United States, to certain measures and arrangements, which appear to him to be indispensable to the improvement of our military system, and solicits, if it shall be thought proper, that the same may be submitted to Congress.

No sentiment is more just than this, that, in proportion as the circumstances and policy of a people are opposed to the maintenance of a large military force, it is important that as much perfection as possible be given to that which may at any time exist.

It is not, however, enough, that the troops it may be deemed proper to maintain be rendered as perfect as possible, in form, organization, and discipline; the dignity, the character to be supported, and the safety of the country, further require that it should have military institutions, should be capable of perpetuating the art of war, and of furnishing the means for forming a new and enlarged Army, fit for service, in the shortest time possible, and at the least practicable expense of the State.

Let it not be presumed, that a country, however distantly situated from other nations, or favored by the courage and genius of its inhabitants, can neglect, with impunity, military institutions, or that it may, safely, consider all regular force to be useless, except when there is an enemy present to employ it. A country which acts upon such a maxim will invariably attract injuries and enemies, and, sooner or later, sink by internal discords, or see its noble spirit broken down by repeated humiliations, and the whole people thus prepared for the last stage of national degradation.

If the farmer would secure his flocks, he must go to the expense of shepherds; if preserve his crops, he must enclose his fields. In like manner, to insure safety to the nation, it is necessary that the leading avenues into it be guarded by troops and fortifications. Before the invention of gunpowder, the smallest villages were invested with walls, so that a long siege was often requisite to reduce them. Since that epoch, the history of almost, if not every war, contains undeniable proofs of the utility of fortifications, and the necessity of disciplined troops, to the defence of a country. Would it be wise or expedient in us to pursue a different course, and shut our eyes against the innumerable facts on record, in favor of their essentiality? Are we without regular troops, we may soon lose the military art; are we without engineers, not a little of the money employed on fortifications will be always hazarded, if not actually thrown away, and generals of the most consummate genius forced to capitulate in the field, whose retreat might have been covered by a fortification, or the battle decided in his favor by a happily contrived intrenchment.

Since, however, it seems to be agreed, that we are not to keep on foot numerous forces, and it would be impossible, on a sudden to extend, to every essential point, our fortifications, military science, in its various branches, ought to be cultivated with peculiar care, in proper nurseries; so that a sufficient stock may always exist, ready to be imparted and diffused to any extent, and a competent number of persons be prepared and qualified to act as engineers, and others as instructors, to additional troops, which events may successively require to be raised. This will be to substitute the elements of an Army to the thing itself, and will greatly tend to enable the Government to dispense with a large body of standing forces, from the facility which it will give of procuring officers, and forming soldiers promptly in all emergencies.

No sound mind, after a fair view of the subject, can doubt the essentiality of military science in time of war, any more than the moral certainty that the most pacific policy on the part of Government, and the most solemn and well observed treaties, will not preserve a country from being engaged in war more or less frequently. To avoid great evils, we must either have a respectable force always ready for service, or the means of preparing such a force with certainty and expedition. The latter, as most agreeable to the genius of our Government and nation, is the object of the following propositions:

First—A Military Academy.

The object has repeatedly engaged the favorable attention of the Legislature, and some laws towards its consummation have been passed. These, however, being yet inadequate to afford the requisite instruction to officers, and others, in "the principles of war, the exercises it requires, and the sciences upon which they are founded," the adoption of a more perfect plan is conceived to be indispensable for these purposes. With this view, the following plan is respectfully suggested, formed upon those of institutions of a similar nature, from which the nations who have founded them derive the most decided advantages.

It is proposed that this Academy shall consist of four schools: one to be called "The Fundamental School;" another, "The School of Engineers and Artillerists;" another, "The School of Cavalry and Infantry;" and a fourth, "The School of the Navy;" and be provided with the following officers, professors, and teachers:

A Director General to superintend the three first schools.

A Director of the Fundamental School.

A Director of the School of Engineers and Artillerists.

A Director of the School of Cavalry and Infantry.

A Director of the School of the Navy.

Six Professors of Mathematics.

Four Professors of Geography and Natural Philosophy.

Two Professors of Chemistry, including Mineralogy.

Three Architects.

Four Designing and Drawing Masters.

One Riding Master.

One Fencing Master.

To be thus distributed among the several Schools:

To the Fundamental School.

One Director.

Four Professors of Mathematics.

Two Professors of Geography and Natural Philosophy.

One Designing and Drawing Master.

One Professor of Chemistry.

To the School of Engineers and Artillerists.

One Director.

Two Professors of Mathematics.

Two Professors of Geography and Natural Philosophy.

One Professor of Chemistry.

Two Architects.

Three Designing and Drawing Masters.

To the School of Cavalry and Infantry.

A Director.

A Riding Master.

A Fencing Master.

To the School of the Navy.

A Director.

A Professor of Mathematics.

A Professor of Geography and Natural Philosophy.

An Architect.

One Designing and Drawing Master.

The Fundamental School is designed to form Engineers, including Geographical Engineers, Miners, and officers for the Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, and Navy; consequently, in this school is to be taught all the sciences necessary to a perfect knowledge of the different branches of the military art.

The School of Engineers and Artillerists, to teach those admitted therein, and appointed or designed for Engineers, the application of the theoretic knowledge which they had acquired in the Fundamental School, to the construction of all sorts of fortifications and military buildings appertaining thereto, to mines, and counter mines, sieges, attack, and defence, to mineralogy, to the art of projecting and constructing bridges, roads, canals, and maritime posts, and all works relative thereto, to all geographic and topographic operations, the calculations relative to the same, to designing and drawing charts, &c.

To those appointed or designed for the Artillery service, the application of the theoretic knowledge, acquired in the Fundamental School, to the construction of gun-carriages, pontoons, the fabrication of cannon and fire-arms, and all the manœuvres of war which depend upon artillery.

The School of Cavalry and Infantry, to teach those admitted therein, and appointed to, or destined for, the cavalry, the tactics, exercise, and police of cavalry; those for the infantry, the tactics of infantry, and all that concerns the police of an army, in the field and in quarters.

The School of the Navy, to teach those appointed to, or destined for, this service, the application of the knowledge acquired in the Fundamental School in arithmetic, algebra, geometry, statics, and navigation. To this end, after having passed examination, they shall make voyages or cruises, under skilful officers, for certain periods, during which time they ought to be exercised in the manœuvres and observations most useful in service, and be instructed in whatever respects rigging of vessels of war, pilotage, and the management of cannon.

Functions of the principal officers.

The Director General to have the general superintendence of the schools, particularly of the Fundamental School; to occupy himself incessantly with the means of attaining the end of the institution, which is the greatest possible instruction to the pupils.

He will inform himself of their progress in the studies relative to the service to which they are destined, and collect all the facts proper to be laid before the President: to enable him to form an opinion of the fitness of any individual, who has not had one, for an appointment; or, in case he has, to judge how, and when, his talents can, upon occasion, be most beneficially employed.

He will attend, particularly, to the execution of whatever respects the admission of pupils; their transfer from the school of theory into that of practice; their passage from one class or division, in the same school, to another; and the examinations which they ought respectively to undergo.

He will propose a list of the officers of the Army, proper to be received into the schools, and will furnish the Secretary of War with information, from time to time, relative to their progress, conduct, and capacity to fill stations to which their genius and knowledge may particularly point.

He will give such certificates to the officers, cadets, or pupils, as they shall have merited.

The directors of each of the military schools will receive, from the Director General, instructions detailing their functions and powers; to him they will make their reports.

With respect to the School of the Navy, the director thereof will receive his instructions from the Secretary of the Navy.

The Director General, and the other directors, to be officers of the Army or Navy, according as the studies and exercises of the particular school shall be most intimately connected with either service.

These schools to be provided with proper apparatus and instruments, for philosophical and chemical experiments, for astronomical and nautical observations, for surveying, and such other processes as are requisite to the several topics and branches of instruction.

The site of schools of Engineers and Artillerists, and of the Navy, ought to be on navigable water. For this purpose, a piece of ground ought to be purchased, sufficient for experiments in tactics, gunnery, and fortification. The situation upon a navigable water is also requisite, to admit of specimens of naval construction and naval exercises.

It would also tend greatly to the perfection of the plan, if the academy of Artillerists and Engineers was situated in the neighborhood of foundries of cannon and manufactories of small arms.

Barracks and other proper buildings must be erected, for the accommodation of the directors, professors, and students, and for the laboratories and other works to be carried on at the respective schools.

The cadets of the Army, and a certain number of young persons, destined for military and naval service, ought to study at least two years in the Fundamental School; and if destined for the corps of Engineers or Artillerists, or for the Navy, two years more in the appropriate school; if for the Cavalry or Infantry, one year more in the appropriate school. But persons who, by previous instruction elsewhere, may have become acquainted with some or all of the branches taught in the Fundamental School, may, after due examination by the directors and professors of that school, be either received then for a shorter time, or pass immediately to one or other of the schools of practice, according to the nature and extent of their acquirements and intended destination.

In addition to these, detachments of officers and non-commissioned officers of the Army ought to attend one or other of the schools, in rotation, for the purposes of instruction and exercise, according to the nature of the corps to which they respectively belong.

It may be noticed also in this place, that it would be a wise addition if Government would authorize such a number of sergeants, supernumerary to those belonging to the regiments on the establishment, as would suffice with them for an army of fifty thousand men. All the supernumeraries to receive, according to their capacities, instruction at the academy, and occasionally sent to do duty with the Army.

This outline of a Military Academy, which is conformable to that of similar institutions in other countries, particularly in France, is not meant to imply anything conclusive; the plan may be modified, perhaps, to advantage. At all events, it ought to be left with the President to proportion the number of cadets, and others, to be admitted into the schools, and to prescribe, definitively, relative to the requisites to entitle to admission, the periods of novitiate, transfers from the schools to particular corps, and whatever respects organization, regulations, and police.

And here it may be proper to observe, that though provision should be made by law for the proposed establishment, in its full latitude, yet it may be left in the discretion of the President to appoint so many of the professors and masters only, as experience shall show to be necessary.

Will it be thought superfluous to remark, relative to the utility of this institution, that it is from the military schools of France have issued those general and other officers, whose skill and recent achievements in war have rendered them subjects for military history, and enabled the present governors of that nation, successively, and almost instantaneously, to form immense disciplined armies.

Is it not greatly desirable to be so provided and prepared for all emergencies?

An enemy who meditates invasion will naturally examine what he will have to encounter before he undertakes it. Acting with common prudence, he must proportion his military array to the obstacles in fortifications and disposable force it will have to overcome, and which may be so stationed and improved, as to require from him an army and apparatus, expensive beyond his resources to support. Our country, by a skillful application of very moderate means, may thus avert from its bosom the most expensive and calamitous wars.

In treating upon such an institution, it was encouraging to reflect, that, happily, it coincided with your uniform wish to see our country placed in a situation which would entitle the just maxims of its policy to be respected, and enable it to meet any adverse accidents it may be reserved to encounter.

The measure proposed has also the high sanction of our late venerated President, whose talents and services were devoted, not to produce personal results, but to render a whole people great, flourishing, and happy.

"The institution of a Military Academy," this great man observes, in his last impressive speech, "is also recommended by cogent reasons; however pacific the general policy of a nation may be, it ought never to be without an adequate stock of military knowledge for emergencies. The first would impair the energy of its character; and both would hazard its safety, or expose it to greater evils, when war could not be avoided. Besides, that war might not often depend upon its own choice. In proportion as the observance of pacific maxims might exempt a nation from the necessity of practising the rules of the military art, ought to be its care in preserving and transmitting, by proper establishments, the knowledge of that art. Whatever argument may be drawn from particular examples, superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince that the art of war is at once comprehensive and complicated; that it demands much previous study; and that the possession of it, in its most improved and perfect state, is always of great moment to the security of a nation. This, therefore, ought to be a serious care of every government; and, for this purpose, an academy, where a regular course of instruction is given, is an obvious expedient, which different nations have successfully employed."

Will not the patriotism and good sense of our country readily consent to found an institution, at a moderate expense, recommended by such authorities, and which must produce the happiest effects? And yet, it ought not to excite surprise, if, in a season of profound peace, the minds of a generality of a people, partaking of the public calm, should become inattentive to the storm that may be collecting at a distance. Are we in the midst of that profound calm, and can the eye perceive no cloud in the horizon? But, were the heavens without one threatening spot, and peace universal on earth, ought the watchmen of a nation to trust to such evanescent and deceptive appearances? And will not an intelligent people, instructed by the wisdom of ages, and having every reason to confide in those to whom they have assigned the direction of their affairs, gladly see establishments arise, and arrangements made, which shall render the thunder harmless when it shall burst over their heads. In such conjunctures, (and such must happen to the United States,) corps of well-instructed officers and troops are to a country, what anchors are to a ship driven by a tempest towards a rocky shore.

Second—A modification of the two Regiments of Artillerists and Engineers, so as to create, instead thereof, one Regiment of Foot Artillerists, another of Horse Artillerists, and a third of Engineers.

It is conceived, that the entire union of the officers of artillerists and engineers in one corps, as in our present establishment, is not advisable. The art of fortification, and the service of artillery, though touching each other in many points, are, in the main, distinct branches, and each so comprehensive, that their separation is essential to perfection in either. This has been ascertained by long experience. Among the Powers of Europe, there is not one recollected, which, at the present day, is not conscious of this truth. When any of them have attempted to unite these corps, the disadvantages which resulted were soon felt to be so momentous, as to produce conviction that each required a separate organization. Such an union was once attempted in France.

According to an ordinance of the 8th of December, 1755, the artillery and engineer corps of that nation, which had been separate, were combined into one. The experiment, however, was of short duration. In 1758, the engineer corps was disjoined from the corps of artillery, and called, as before, the corps of engineers, since which time these corps have remained separate.

The two regiments of artillerists and engineers consist of the following officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates; each of, viz:

- | | |
|----------------------------------|------------------------------|
| 1 Lieutenant Colonel-commandant, | |
| 4 Majors, | |

| 1 Surgeon, | |
| 2 Surgeon's Mates, | |

| 128 Artificers, | |
| 768 Privates. | |

Let the regiments of foot artillerists and horse artillerists consist each, as follows, viz:

- | | |
|----------------------------------|----------------------------|

Military Academy, &c.

- 1 Surgeon,
- 2 Surgeon's Mates,
- 12 Captains,
- 24 Lieutenants, besides the three above-mentioned.
- 24 Cadets,
- 3 Sergeant-Majors,
- 3 Quartermaster-Sergeants,
- 48 Sergeants,
- 48 Corporals,
- 1 Chief Musician,
- 12 Musicians,
- 780 Privates, including Artificers.

The artificers forming a part of each company in the regiments as they now exist, to form two companies of miners, and two companies of artificers, to be arranged as will be hereafter noticed.

It is also proposed: First, In the event of a war, that these two regiments shall be augmented to the complement of officers and men, composing the existing regiments of artillery and engineers. Second, That the regiment of horse-artillery shall perform their service on horseback during war only. Third, That provision be made to enable the President of the United States, in case war shall break out between the United States and a foreign European Power, or in case imminent danger of invasion of their territory, by any such Power shall, in his opinion, be discovered to exist, to organize, and cause to be organized, two additional regiments of horse-artillery. Fourth, That the officers which shall become supernumerary, by this aforesaid organization, shall, at the discretion of the President, be transferred to fill vacancies in other regiments, on the establishment, corresponding with their grades, or be retained to fill appropriate vacancies which shall happen in their respective regiments, by deaths, resignations, &c.

In addition to the economical effect of the latter arrangement, it may be mentioned, that the officers to one whole battalion of the second regiment of Artillerists and Engineers have not yet been appointed.

The regiment of engineers consisting entirely of officers, if we exclude the companies of miners, it remains to speak of its organization.

Let it consist of, viz:

- Two Lieutenant Colonels, one first and one second, as already provided by law,
- Three Majors,
- Twelve Captains,
- Twenty-four First Lieutenants,
- Twenty-four Second Lieutenants,
- Twenty-four Cadets.

The companies of miners and their laborers to be under the direction and immediate command of officers of this corps, and to make a part thereof.

It will be perceived, and it is observed with regret, that, the engineer regiment cannot be immediately formed, by the mere act of transferring into it officers from any of the existing regiments. In order to answer its high destination, it must be filled slowly, and under the exercise of great caution and responsibility.

For this purpose, selections may be made from among the officers of the army, and others who shall have passed through the military schools, and prescribed examinations, and obtain certificates of their possessing the requisite knowledge and qualifications.

It may also be permitted, in cases of uncommon urgency, requiring the completion of the corps, to choose officers among our citizens, whose professions or functions are most analogous to those of engineers, after an examination made by a special commission named by the President.

But let it be remembered, that this corps is too essential to the success of military operations, to be hurried in its formation, or composed of other than persons qualified to discharge its high and important functions. Is authority necessary to support this truth? A general, of the first reputation as a commander, observes on this subject, in speaking to his Government of an officer, who had been killed in action, "He was the best officer of engineers, a body on which so much of the success of campaigns and the fate of a country depend, and where the least fault may be attended with the most fatal consequences."

The horse-artillery being a subject that cannot fail to attract attention, it will not, it is conceived, be deemed superfluous to submit a few observations and facts, relative to its structure, advantages, and importance.

The Prussians were the first who employed horse-artillery, invented by the great Frederick, at a time when the league which was formed against him, called upon his genius to multiply his resources. It was then, that the same army, transported with a celerity and precision, till then unknown in war, was seen to triumph against superior forces during the same campaign, upon opposite frontiers, to the east and to the west of his States. It was then were seen horse-artillery accompanying strong advanced bodies of cavalry without embarrassing, or retarding, their rapid marches and evolutions.

Horse-artillery was introduced into the Austrian army during the reign of Joseph II., but it was not made a principal object, and remained in a state of imperfection. The cannoniers were transported upon the ridges of covered caissons, stuffed in the attitude of men on horseback. These carriages were called Wurst-wagen.

Some attempts were made in France to introduce the horse-artillery before the Revolution there; the subject, however, was not well understood; the general officers, who were present at the attempt, proposed to place the cannoniers, like the Austrians, on wursts.

In 1791, Mr. Duportail, Minister of War, authorized the commandant of the division of Mity to form two companies of horse-artillery. The success of this experiment was decisive, and answerable to the minister's expectations. The officers and men were in a few weeks in a condition to manoeuvre with light troops.

In 1792, Mr. Narbonne, who succeeded to Mr. Duportail, composed a committee of the most enlightened officers of the army, to examine and decide upon the means of improving and extending, in the French army, the use of horse-artillery.

As no better idea can be given of this new military arm, than what is reported of the result of this conference, the Secretary takes the liberty to introduce it.

These officers resolved, as fundamental points—

1. That a numerous horse-artillery well served, and kept complete in cannoniers and horses, was the most certain means to protect the evolutions of troops indifferently instructed, to support their attack with bayonets, and to render null, by positions seasonably taken and with celerity, the advantage which troops better disciplined, might confidently promise themselves from superiority in manœuvres.

2. That with respect to the employment of this arm, the rules of service, instruction, &c., the horse-artillery ought to differ from the field-artillery only, in having its pieces so managed, as to be drawn with the utmost celerity wherever they can produce the greatest effect, and in the cannoniers being able to follow their guns, and commence action as soon as they are placed.

3. That to fulfil this object, it is more convenient to have the cannoniers all mounted on horses, than a part of them on wursts, because on horses they are less subject to accidents, their movement more rapid, their retreat more secure, and the replacing of horses easy.

4. That without excluding any caliber, it appears pieces carrying balls of eight and twelve pounds, and howitzers, may be most advantageously employed.

5. That it is unnecessary to discipline a horse-artillerist in the manœuvres of cavalry; that this would be a departure, without utility, from the principal object; that it is enough for him to know to sit firm on his horse, to mount and descend quickly, and conduct him boldly; that it is not requisite to oblige him to preserve any order in following his piece, leaving it to his intelligence to learn, if he chooses, to execute the manœuvres of cavalry.

6. That the manœuvre, à la prolonge, ought to be employed in every case in which it is practicable to use it. That the horses remain attached while the pieces are firing; one gains thereby all the time which would be lost in removing or replacing the avant train, and thus one may pass fosses and rivers with the utmost celerity, and profit of positions.

7. That in order to form at once a requisite number of companies of horse-artillery, without weakening the artillery regiments, it is sufficient to employ for every piece two skilful cannoniers, and to draw upon the infantry for the rest.

On these principles the French have organized an establishment in their armies, from which they have derived the most important advantages in most, if not all their campaigns.

The decisive agency of horse-artillery in offensive war was manifested in the invasion of Belgium by General Dumouriez, at the end of his campaign in 1792. The affair of Waterloo is equally in point, as to its superiority in defensive operations.

Whilst General Pichegru commanded the army of Flanders, four thousand cavalry, manœuvring with his horse-artillery, sustained the immense effort of an army of thirty thousand men, supporting an artillery chiefly of a different kind, of at least triple the force of that opposed to it.

Bonaparte, at the battle of Castiglione, after raising the siege of Mantua, having re-assembled several divisions of his horse-artillery in a well-chosen position, under General Domartin, broke, by their means, the Austrian line, and thus decided a victory upon which depended the most important consequences in his favor.

It is also certain, that the horse-artillery contributed not a little to gain the battle of Ettingen, where General Moreau, very inferior in cavalry, maintained, by its means, his left wing against the whole cavalry of the Archduke. The application of the horse-artillery procured to General Hoche, upon the Rhine, in the late affair of Neuvied, like success.

The Archduke Charles, instructed by such events, has greatly augmented and improved this arm of the Austrian army. The English, also, have lately introduced horse-artillery into their service, but, it is supposed, too sparingly to derive therefrom its full effect.

Can an agent, so superior in all offensive and defensive operations, and so vastly important from its nature, as well as the use made of it by other nations, be dispensed with in the composition of our army, or neglected with impunity?

The author of a recent work, entitled "Précis des évènements militaires," published in numbers at Hamburg, from which most of the aforesaid facts respecting this powerful military agent have been taken, observes, "that it is become indispensable in all armies; it can accompany almost everywhere cavalry; it crosses rivers and morasses impassable to foot artillery; it thunders in mass and with great rapidity upon an unexpected point of attack; turns a body of the enemy; takes him in flank or rear; can perform the service of advance posts; of artillery position; of the rear guard, and, in fine, that of a corps of reserve, from which detachments may be made as wanted. It is free from the inconvenience ascribed to foot artillery, of retarding and restraining the manœuvres and marches of troops; the French have, therefore, already confined the use of foot artillery to the service of sieges, with the exception of four pounders, which they have yet left attached to battalions."

Horse artillery would seem to be peculiarly recommended to the United States, by the reflection that all attacks on the seaboard must be made by an enemy, water borne from a distant country, who will consequently be ill provided with horses, whereas the United States, having a knowledge of this agent, and resorting to their resources in horses, might be able to oppose a horse artillery so superior and so promptly, as to give decided advantages in attack or defence, and relieve their territory from being ravaged, or long possessed in any part of it. If the United States shall prevent an enemy from procuring the horses of the country, and shall maintain a superiority in this forcible arm, they will have little to fear from invaders, however powerful in infantry.

The two regiments of artillerists and engineers, as they now stand on the establishment, cost the United States four hundred and twenty-seven thousand five hundred and fifty-three dollars and eighty cents annually. There will result from the proposed arrangement of these regiments, as will appear by schedule A, a difference in time of peace of twenty thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars and thirty cents annually, which sum may be applied to the expenses of the Military Academy.

When the preceding propositions are respectfully submitted, as essential to the improvement of our Military Establishment, it would be improper to overlook such other measures as may occur, and, it is believed, would conduce to perfect our preparations for securing our rights.

The importance of the volunteer associations or companies, which may be accepted under "An act authorizing the President to raise a Provisional Army," passed the 28th May, 1798, has heretofore been presented by the Secretary. They may be considered as a reserve body, from which prompt and efficient reinforcements can be drawn to our regular army, and as rallying and supporting points, when completely organized into regiments, brigades, and divisions, for the militia, in all cases of great and comprehensive urgency or danger.

A revision of the law respecting these valuable associations is earnestly recommended. No other force being so economical, will it not be proper, in order to derive full and permanent utility from the volunteer companies in all hazardous conjunctures, that the power of the President to accept their patriotic offers of service should no longer be confined to a limited period, and that the duration only of their engagements, after acceptance, should be defined by law. Can a time be fairly presumed to arrive when we can have nothing to apprehend from either foreign or domestic enemies?

An omission in the law to provide the same compensation to the volunteer cavalry, for the use of their horses, that is allowed to militia cavalry, when in actual service, has been felt with some sensibility by the former, who were employed during the last insurrection in the same service with militia cavalry. It is, therefore, recommended that an appropriation be made for compensating the volunteer cavalry so employed, for the use of their horses during their service, at the same rates of allowance which have been paid to the militia cavalry on the same service; and that equal rates of compensation for the future shall be provided for both by law, for the use of their horses in actual service.

The militia of the United States ought to be considered as an essential arm of our defence, and a sure resource from which reinforcements may be drawn to supply deficiencies in the regular army, in the event of a sudden invasion, or the wasting progress of a long war.

To obtain their aid, however, with celerity and order in such cases, other provisions are necessary than are to be found at present in the laws.

The act of the 28th February, 1795, authorizes the President, whenever the United States shall be invaded, or in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, to call forth such numbers of militia of the State or States adjoining, most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders for the purpose to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper.

To give effect to this power, and enable the President to carry upon an enemy with promptitude the force nearest to, or best calculated to, annoy him, it is indispensable that he should know the number and species of militia in each county of a State, and the names and places of residence of their officers respectively.

If these particulars are not precisely known to the President at the time the force is wanted, the delay which must necessarily intervene in the circuitous course of orders and instructions, will often, if not always, be productive of disastrous consequences. To avoid these, the proper officer of the militia in each State should be obliged, by heavy penalties and high responsibility, to make quarterly returns to the Department of War, comprehending the aforesaid particulars.

The troops raised under, and conformably to the provisions of "An act to augment the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," passed the 16th July, 1798, demand at this time particular attention.

This additional force was to consist of twelve regiments of infantry and six troops of cavalry, the latter intended, with the troops of cavalry heretofore and now in service, to form one regiment of cavalry. For the infantry, the officers have been appointed, and the recruiting service some time in operation. For the cavalry, the officers have also been appointed; but, to avoid the expense of this kind of troops, which is always much greater than any species of foot, the recruiting service has not been ordered as yet into operation, nor have horses been purchased, although preparatory measures have been taken.

For the twelve regiments of infantry, the enlistments amount as follows, according to the last returns which have been received by the Department:

From the fifth regiment, which is the first of the twelve, there has been no returns.

Returned for the sixth regiment, enlisted in North Carolina, from August to December, 1799, viz: 134.

For the seventh, enlisted in Virginia, from May to the first Monday in November, 1799, viz: 258.

For the eighth, enlisted in Virginia, from May to October the 1st, 1799, viz: 424.

For the ninth, enlisted in Maryland, from May to September the 17th, 1799, viz: 314.

For the tenth, enlisted in Pennsylvania, from May to August the 1st, 1799, viz: 448.

For the eleventh, enlisted in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, from April to the first Monday in October, 1799, viz: 458.

Military Academy, &c.

For the twelfth, enlisted in New York, from May to the first Monday in September, 1799, viz: 287.

For the thirteenth, enlisted in Connecticut, from May to the first Monday in November, 1799, viz: 371.

For the fourteenth, enlisted in Massachusetts, from May to the first Monday in November, 1799, viz: 327.

For the fifteenth, enlisted in Massachusetts and Maine, from June to the first Monday in November, 1799, viz: 145.

For the sixteenth, enlisted in New Hampshire, from July to the first Monday in November, 1799, viz: 233.

Total enlisted, 3,399.

Agreeably to the provisions of the act of the 16th July, 1798, all these troops have, by the terms of their respective enlistments, engaged "for and during the continuance of the existing differences between the United States and the French Republic."

The Secretary thinks it necessary to mention that, immediately upon the accommodation of the existing differences aforesaid, the engagements of these troops will expire, and every man be entitled to demand his discharge. That, in consequence, if it shall be deemed expedient to keep up a Peace Establishment more extended than heretofore, or any events should intervene to render a larger army indispensable, it will not be practicable to apply one of these men to the same, who have already received a bounty, without a re-enlistment, and the expense of a new bounty.

It is, therefore, thought advisable that the terms of enlistment prescribed by the law be superseded by a provision in future to enlist for the term of five years, if not sooner discharged. This modification leaves with the President the power of reducing the numbers of the army at any time to a prescribed establishment; and if the negotiations of our Envoys to the French Republic shall be successful, it will procure a number of men who, without additional expense, can be retained, if necessary, in service for the period mentioned—a measure which appears equally recommended by its policy and economy.

The Secretary has before observed, that if the United States shall prevent an enemy from procuring the horses of the country, and maintain a superiority in horse artillery, they will have little to fear from an invading enemy, however powerful in infantry. It certainly would be an important addition to our system of defence, was an arrangement devised to deprive an enemy, as much as possible, after he had effected a landing upon our coast, of the means of subsistence, and especially to prevent him from possessing himself of horses, indispensable to the transportation of his baggage, stores, and provisions, and for his artillery and cavalry.

An operation promising to be so efficient, and sanctioned by experience in other countries, will perhaps require on the part of the Government a promise of indemnification to the individual for the value of all stock and horses which may be removed in consequence of invasion, if not restored to their respective owners.

Provisions and restrictions, it is conceived, may be made, calculated to secure the public against frauds, and to encourage, at the same time, the aid of proprietors themselves in the execution of such a law. It should explicitly provide that no compensation will ever be allowed for property of the kind described, destroyed either by the enemy or by our own army, to prevent its falling into the hands of an enemy; in all cases where it shall appear no previous preparation or exertion had been made use of to remove it, and authorize the destruction of all stock, and horses in particular, left in an exposed situation, when necessary, to prevent their being useful to an enemy, or employed against the armies of the United States.

The Government of a country blessed with every convenience for an extensive foreign trade, and peopled with inhabitants distinguished for their commercial spirit, will, from the natural operation of circumstances, and the impulse given by its citizens, consider it a duty to prepare either gradually or promptly, as policy, interest, or necessity, may dictate, the means of affording protection to its property on the ocean.

We find, accordingly, the foundation of a navy already laid, and its advantages so far felt as to induce a belief its progress will be permitted to keep pace with the purposes for which it was instituted. This navy, however, which is specially intended to protect trade, will in its turn require to be protected, when in harbor, by suitable fortifications. Without a place of safety to which it may retire from a superior fleet, the labors and resources of years may be destroyed in a single hour.

The fortifications erected for the defence of our cities and harbors cannot yet be considered competent to afford this security. Many new and extensive works, even at those places where the fortifications are advanced, will yet be required to render any of them a secure asylum for our navy.

Whenever, therefore, the harbors in which our dock yards and great naval deposits are to be established, and to which our navy may retire in time of war or danger, shall be determined upon, it will be indispensable to make them impregnable, if possible, to an enemy.

Schedule B will show the sums which have been appropriated and annually expended in fortifying our harbors since the "Act to provide for the defence of certain ports and harbors in the United States," passed the 20th March, 1794, and the balance remaining on the 1st October, 1799.

The Paymaster General of the Armies of the United States has been, agreeably to the provisions of the 15th section of "An act for the better organization of the troops of the United States, and for other purposes," quartered by direction of the late Commander-in-Chief, at the seat of Government, it being the station deemed most proper, to enable him to perform his functions with convenience, facility, and the least probable risk of the public moneys.

The functions of this office are, by law, highly important—his trust is eminently responsible. All moneys for the pay of the armies pass through his hands, including military bounties and the subsistence and forage of officers, and he is the auditor, in the first instance, of all accounts for such objects.

The compensation provided for him is eighty dollars per month, with the rations and forage of a major. This compensation the Secretary conceives, not merely inadequate to remunerate the duties and responsibilities attached to the office, but insufficient for the decent support of a respectable character, and certainly none other should fill it.

It is, therefore, respectfully suggested to increase the compensation to the Paymaster General of the Armies of the United States, and submitted whether it might not be attended with some beneficial effect to vest him with a suitable brevet rank in the army.

The regularity, discipline, and, of course, the efficiency of all armies have always depended very essentially upon the system provided for their government. Impressed with this conviction, the Secretary takes the liberty to bring into your view, "the rules and articles for the better government of the troops raised, or to be raised, and kept in pay, by and at the expense of the United States of America." This system contains many excellent provisions, but experience has produced a pretty general wish among military men, that it could be submitted to a complete revision, as in many particulars it is presumed to require amendments.

This revision would be a very serious work, and there is reason to fear could not be undertaken, with a prospect of being speedily finished. Some things, however, can be done, which would be important improvements.

A great obscurity envelopes the provisions of the existing articles, respecting the power to appoint or order general courts martial. One construction, by confining the power to the General or Commander-in-Chief only, is inconveniently narrow, and has occasioned too great delay, as well in instituting courts, as in giving effect to their sentences. Another construction, which has been practised upon, (commandants of posts, as such, of whatever grade, having assumed the power of constituting general courts martial,) is too much diffused, and would place in too many hands a trust no less delicate than important.

To attempt to attain the proper medium by a more exact legislative definition, of the characters who may exercise the power, would perhaps be attended with difficulty, and might often not meet the new situations which are constantly occurring in the infinite combinations of military service. The expedient which has appeared most proper, is to give a discretionary authority to the President, to empower other officers, (than those the soundest interpretation has decided to be designated by the articles of war, viz: Generals, or those on whom a General's command has devolved,) to appoint general courts martial, under such circumstances, and with such limitations, as he may deem advisable.

The provisions which refer the determination on sentences extending to the loss of life, or the dismissal of a commissioned officer in the time of peace, to the President, must no doubt have frequently been attended with perplexity to him, and are inconvenient, if not injurious to the service.

It is scarcely possible, for any but the military commander, to appreciate duly the motives which, in such cases, demand severity, or recommend clemency. To this, an accurate view of all the circumstances of the army, in detail, is often necessary. The efficacy of punishment, when requisite in an army, depends much on its celerity, and must be greatly weakened by the unavoidable delay of a resort to the Executive: during which delay, the mischief it was intended to remedy, may, and sometimes most probably will, have happened. The reasons mentioned induce an opinion, that it is expedient to empower the commanding general of an army, to decide upon, and command to be executed when proper, all sentences of general courts martial, except only such as respect a general officer. The responsibility of the commanding general to the President, and to his country, must insure a discreet exercise of the required authority, and its utility is manifest.

The best mode of treating the crime of desertion has been an embarrassing investigation in most countries. To fix upon a punishment, that gives the surest promise of checking or preventing the evil, or which, when it does happen, in its application will be most analogous to the generally received opinions of a country, and the habits of military life, is indeed difficult. The same punishment ought not, perhaps, to be applied to this crime, the most injurious to armies, and complicated in its nature, at all times and under all circumstances.

To punish it with death in time of peace in all cases, would, in this country, do violence to the popular habits of thinking. Whipping is found to be ineffectual. Confinement to hard labor, it is supposed, will produce more beneficial results, and courts martial have, in their discretion, been lately much influenced by this belief. As, however, our soldiers are enlisted for given periods, when an engagement is nearly expired, confinement would be an inadequate punishment, for it could not continue beyond the term of service, and although a soldier may be supposed to have fewer inducements to withdraw from an engagement which is near terminating, yet, it has sometimes happened, and may be expected in future, that men, under such circumstances, have been the authors of combinations, to revolt, desert, and commit other crimes, consequently have been the most atrocious offenders; and it is known that they frequently have themselves deserted. To make this punishment, then, in time of peace, in all cases, commensurate with, and proportioned to, the crime, an auxiliary provision to extend the confinement and labor beyond the period of service the criminal had engaged for, would appear necessary. Such a provision would have a tendency to render the sentences of the courts less sanguinary.

The Secretary by no means designs to suggest, that it would be proper to abolish the punishment of death for desertion, even in time of peace. He considers that in aggravated and complicated cases, it would always be proper, and that in time of war or civil commotion, it should always be applied to this crime. He also inclines to the opinion, that the power of pardoning ought never to be extended in any instance of desertion, or an attempt to desert to enemies or traitors.

Connected with the perfection of our military establishment, is a code of well digested rules for the formations, field exercise, movements, and police, of the different species of troops composing our army.

Major General Hamilton has, some time since, been specially charged with this work. As it was not, however, expected that so extensive an undertaking could be completed without a subdivision of labor, and the co-operation of various talents and experience, he informs, that he has assigned to Major General Pinckney an important portion of the task. The execution, it is also understood, will require the aid of other and subordinate officers, for whose extra service a special compensation is suggested, as being agreeable to usage, and essential to a cheerful and zealous performance of their duty. This, should it meet your approbation, demands no particular act of the Legislature.

There is another point relative to the army, which he has made the subject of a recent communication to the Department of War, to which it may be proper to request attention.

The General observes, that "the detaching from their corps soldiers asservants to the various officers of the general staff is productive of material inconvenience, by withdrawing altogether, from military service, a considerable number of persons; and occasioning dissatisfaction to the commandants of corps, who never see their men removed without uneasiness, and are sometimes much disgusted by the selection of those whom they are anxious to retain. There is no doubt, he adds, that it would operate beneficially, if, after fixing the number of servants to which the several characters of the general staff should be entitled, they were to be allowed an equivalent in money, regulated by the cost of a soldier to the public, and were to be required to provide their own servants."

Should this measure be adopted, which is agreeable to an obsolete regulation of the old Congress, penalties may be devised to secure a faithful execution, which, from the force of circumstances, would be very little liable to abuse.

When treating upon military subjects, it may not be improper to give a general view of the positions of the existing regular force, composing the armies of the United States, conformably to a disposition of the same by your approbation, and that of the late commander-in-chief.

The four regiments of infantry, and the two companies of cavalry, on the permanent establishment, are disposed of as follows:

One regiment is assigned to the frontiers of Tennessee and Georgia. There are also in that quarter the two companies of cavalry.

The three other regiments are distributed along the lakes from Niagara to Michillimackinac, upon the Miami, Ohio, Mississippi, and Tombigbee.

There is also one battalion of the artilleryists and engineers distributed with the aforesaid troops.

This entire force is manifestly inadequate to the purposes it is intended to answer on our Northern, Western, and Southern frontiers.

The twelve regiments of infantry now raising, have taken, or are to take, the following provisional positions, viz:

Three of the twelve regiments of infantry in the vicinity of Providence river, near Uxbridge, Massachusetts.

Three regiments in the vicinity of Brunswick, New Jersey.

Three regiments in the vicinity of Potomac near Harper's Ferry, Virginia.

Three regiments in the vicinity of Augusta, above the Falls of Savannah.

This disposition, it is conceived, combines considerations relative to the discipline and health of the troops with the economical supply of their wants. It has, also, some military aspects, in the first instance, towards the security of Boston and Newport; in the second, towards that of New York and Philadelphia; in the third and fourth, towards that of Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, and the Southern States generally, and in the third, particularly towards the reinforcement of the Western army.

The residue of the two regiments of artilleryists and engineers, except one battalion stated to be on our Northern, Western, and Southern frontiers, are stationed in our sea-board fortifications, from Portland, Massachusetts, to the St. Mary's, Georgia. From these are to be drawn two battalions in succession for the army, when in the field, with a view to a course of regular instruction.

Schedule C exhibits the actual force (according to the latest returns) of the four regiments of infantry, and two companies of cavalry on the old establishment, and the two regiments of artilleryists and engineers.

All which is respectfully submitted.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

[Communicated to the House, Feb. 13, 1800.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, Jan. 31, 1800.

SIR: I have the honor to submit, in compliance with your requisition, a few supplementary observations, and a view of the probable expense of the military schools respectfully recommended to consideration in my report, communicated to Congress by a Message dated the 13th instant from the President of the United States.

The report contemplates certain military schools as an essential means, in conjunction with a small

Military Establishment, to prepare for, and perpetuate to, the United States, at a very moderate expense, a body of scientific officers and engineers, adequate to any future exigency, qualified to discipline for the field, in the shortest time, the most extended armies, and to give the most decisive and useful effects to their operations.

It is not conceived that the United States will ever think it expedient to employ militia upon their frontiers, or to garrison their fortified places in time of peace, nor that they will be disposed to place their reliance, for defence, against a foreign invading enemy, upon militia alone, but that they will, at all times, maintain a body of regular troops commensurate with their ability to maintain them, and the necessity or policy that may demand such an establishment.

To qualify and keep our citizens, in general, of suitable bodily ability, prepared to take the field against regular forces, would demand the most radical changes in our militia system, and such an uninterrupted series of training, discipline, and instruction, to be applied as well to the officers as to the men, as comports with regular troops only, while in its results the measure would be found, on account of the loss to the community, occasioned by the abstraction from labor or occupation, and direct cost, greatly to exceed in expense what would be required to support a moderate Military Establishment. This position, which is thought to be a sound one, does not bring into view the effects of the measure upon the morals, industry, and habits of the citizens.

Practically considered, may we not as well calculate to be commodiously lodged, and have the science of building improved, by employing every man in the community in the construction of houses, and by exploding from society, as useless, architects, masons, and carpenters, as expect to be defended efficiently from an invading enemy, by causing every citizen to endeavor to make himself master of the several branches of the art of war, and excluding engineers, scientific officers, and regular troops?

There is certainly, however, a system, as it respects our militia, which, if resorted to, and persevered in, may secure the utility of their services in times of danger, without much injury to the morals, or materially affecting the general industry of the nation.

When the perfect order and exact discipline which are essential to regular troops are contemplated, and with what ease and precision they execute the different manœuvres indispensable to the success of offensive or defensive operations, the conviction cannot be resisted, that such troops will always have a decided advantage over more numerous forces composed of uninstructed militia or undisciplined recruits.

It cannot yet be forgotten, that, in our Revolutionary war, it was not until after several years' practice in arms, and the extension of the periods for which our soldiers were at first enlisted, that we found them at all qualified to meet in the field of battle those to whom they were opposed. The occasional brilliant and justly celebrated acts of some of our militia, during that eventful period, detract nothing from this dear bought truth. With all the enthusiasm which marked those days, it was perceived, and universally felt, that regular and disciplined troops were indispensable, and that it was utterly unsafe for us to trust to militia alone the issue of the war. The position, therefore, is illustrated, that, even in times of the greatest danger, we cannot give to our militia that degree of discipline, or to their officers that degree of military science upon which a nation may safely hazard its fate.

The great man who conducted the war of our Revolution was continually compelled to conform his conduct to the circumstances growing out of the experimental lessons just mentioned. What was the secret of his conduct? Must it be told? It may be, and without exciting a blush or uneasy sensation in any of his surviving companions in arms. He had an army of men, but he had few officers or soldiers in that army. Both were to be formed, which could not be effected in a single campaign, or while his regiments were continually returning home, and, like the waves of the sea, each in their turn lost in the abyss, and succeeded by new ones. It was not till after he was furnished with a less fluctuating and more stable kind of force that he could commence with a prospect of advantage, military instructions, or enforce the ordinances of discipline; and, even then, he felt that time and instructors were required to render his labors useful, and enable his army to meet the enemy upon anything like equal terms. Are we to profit by, or is this experience to be lost to our country?

The art of war, which gives to a small force the faculty to combat with advantage superior numbers indifferently instructed, is subjected to mechanical, geometrical, moral, and physical rules; it calls for profound study; its theory is immense; the details infinite; and its principles rendered useful only by a happy adaptation of them to all the circumstances of place and ground, variously combined, to which they may be applicable. Is it possible for an officer of militia to obtain a competent knowledge of these things in the short space his usual avocations will permit him to devote to their acquisition? Is it possible for any officer, having acquired a knowledge of these details, this theory, and these principles, to carry them into useful practice with a handful of militia, in the few days in each year allotted by law to trainings and exercises? Is that perfect subordination and obedience of men to their officers, and of each inferior to his superior officer, through all the grades of rank, from the corporal up to the commander-in-chief, which forms a vital principle essential to the energy and force of armies, to be acquired by, or communicated to, a body of militia organized and trained according to our laws? And does it consist with a humane and enlightened policy to march men so imperfectly instructed and disciplined, unless in cases of the last extremity, against veteran troops, (where this principle reigns in full activity,) commanded by skillful and scientific officers? Admitting, however, that militia officers, during the few months the law permits their corps to be retained in actual service, could render their men, by incessant instruction, capable of fulfilling the object of their destination; yet, as that advantage is but momentary, as these borrowed instruments must be quickly returned to the depot which furnished them, as new ones must be resorted to, and successively instructed, what can be expected from such a system, but perpetual incoherence between the means and the end, and certain shipwreck to the best connected and combined military projects? This, to be sure, is the old story; it cannot, however, be too often repeated, because it can never be refuted.

The secret of discipline, and the importance of military science, were well known to those ancient Governments whose Generals and troops have filled the world with the splendor of their victories. According to Scipio, nothing contributed to the success of enterprises so much as skill in the individual officers. The severity of the Roman discipline is well understood, and the estimation in which it was held by Cæsar. Livy has observed, that science does more in war than force. Vegetius, that it is neither numbers nor blind valor which insures victory, but that it generally follows capacity and science in war. Machiavel, who has written upon military affairs, placed so much dependence on an exact discipline and military science, as to efface from his list of great Generals all those who with small armies did not execute great things: but to the committee it is unnecessary to repeat the authorities of Generals and writers of the first reputation, to show the high importance attached to military science and discipline in all ages of the world, or resort to history for evidence of its effects. They must be well acquainted with the facts, and, no doubt, will give them their due weight in considering the subjects now before them.

There is, however, an authority, so much in point relative to the essentiality of the institution in question, that I cannot forbear to mention it.

The Marshal de Puisegur, who has left an excellent treatise on the art of war, the result of his experience, observes:

"I have been, perhaps, at as many sieges as any of those in service, and in all sorts of grades; as subaltern, I have commanded troops and working parties in a siege; as major I have conducted to the trenches and posts to which they were destined troops and laborers; I have been major of brigade, marshal de camp, and lieutenant general: however, as I have not learned fortification, my practice has not enabled me to acquit myself in conducting attacks, so that I should be obliged to suffer myself to be instructed in many things by the lights of engineers, their practice being founded upon principles which are known to them, an advantage I have not in this branch of war."

This is the candid acknowledgment of a man who had served sixty years in the army; who had learned the military art under a father; that, in forty years service, had been present at two hundred sieges; and who had himself passed through all the military grades, and arrived from an inferior to a superior rank, but after having deserved each successive promotion by some distinguished action.

A slight attention to circumstances, and the actual position of our country, must lead to the conviction, that a well-connected series of fortifications is an object of the highest importance to the United States, not only as these will be conducive to the general security, but as a means of lessening the necessity, and consequently the expense of a large Military Establishment.

By strongly fortifying our harbors and frontiers, we may reasonably expect, either to keep at a distance the calamities of war, or render it less injurious when it shall happen. It is behind these ponderous masses only that a small number of men can maintain themselves, for a length of time, against superior forces. Imposing, therefore, upon an enemy who may have everything to transport across the Atlantic, the necessity of undertaking long and hazardous sieges, increases the chances against his undertaking them at all, or, if he does, in despite of such circumstances, insures to us the time he must consume in his operations, to rally our means to a point, and unite our efforts to resist him.

We must not conclude, from these brief observations, that the services of the engineer is limited to constructing, connecting, consolidating, and keeping in repair fortifications. This is but a single branch of their profession, though indeed a most important one. Their utility extends to almost every department of war, and every description of general officers, besides embracing whatever respects public buildings, roads, bridges, canals, and all such works of a civil nature. I consider it, therefore, of vast consequence to the United States, that it should form in its own bosom, and out of its own native materials, men qualified to place the country in a proper posture of defence, to infuse science into our army, and give to our fortifications that degree of force, connexion, and perfection, which can alone counterbalance the superiority of attack over defence.

With these advantages in prospect, is it not incumbent upon us to hasten, with all reasonable diligence, the commencement and completion of an institution essential to realize them: and are expenditures, which give such valuable results, to be otherwise viewed than as real economy? It is a well known fact, that England had neither native artillerymen nor engineers before the time of the Duke of Cumberland, and till after she established military schools.

I shall now, having respectfully submitted these observations, present an estimate of the expense of the military schools, which it appears to me ought to be immediately instituted.

Agreeably to the plan of the Military Academy, the directors thereof are to be officers taken from the Army, consequently no expense will be incurred by such appointments.

The plan also contemplates that officers of the army, cadets, and non-commissioned officers, shall receive instruction in the academy. As the rations and fuel which these are entitled to in the Army, will suffice for them in the academy, no additional expense will be required for these objects of maintenance while there.

The Military Academy.

The expenses of servants, and certain incidental charges relative to the police and administration, may be defrayed by those who shall be admitted out of their pay and emoluments.

According to the plan contemplated, fifty officers, cadets, or non-commissioned officers, may be annually instructed in the Fundamental School, and an equal number in the School of Artillerists and Engineers, the only schools which it is deemed expedient to bring into operation.

To instruct these may require, when both schools are in full activity, the following professors, viz:

In the Fundamental School.

Two professors of mathematics, at $800 per annum, and two rations per day	-	-	1,848 20
Two professors of geography and natural philosophy	-	-	1,848 20
One professor of chemistry	-	-	824 10
One designing and drawing master	-	-	724 17
			5,344 60

In the School of Artillerists and Engineers.

One professor of mathematics, at $800 per annum, and two rations per day	-	-	924 10
One professor of geography and natural philosophy	-	-	924 10
One professor of chemistry	-	-	924 10
One professor of architecture	-	-	924 10
Two designing and drawing masters, at $600 per annum, and two rations per day	-	-	1,448 20
			5,144 60

Total - - - $10,489 20

The cost of the buildings for these two schools, as the one or the other of the annexed plans shall be adopted will be, viz:

Plan by John Foncin, Engineer.

For the Fundamental School	-	$19,423 00
The School of Artillerists and Engineers, supposed to cost an equal sum	19,423 00
		$38,846 00

Plan by B. H. Latrobe, Civil Architect and Engineer.

For the Fundamental School	-	$40,000 00
The School of Artillerists and Engineers, supposed to cost an equal sum	40,000 00
		$80,000 00

It may be proper to remind the committee, that no appropriation for the School of Engineers and Artillerists will be required perhaps these two years, or till after the completion of the Fundamental School.

The Secretary takes occasion also to mention, that the laws have already made provision for four teachers or professors to the artillerists and engineers, at a salary of eighty dollars per month, and two rations per day, which may be considered equivalent to four thousand three hundred and thirty-six dollars and forty-six cents per annum; and that the act providing for raising and organizing a corps of artillerists and engineers, passed the 9th May, 1794, makes it "the duty of the Secretary of War to provide, at the public expense, under such regulations as shall be directed by the President of the United States, the necessary books, instruments, and apparatus, for the use and benefit of the said corps."

According to the plan and estimate of the buildings by Mr. Foncin, the two schools will cost thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and forty-six dollars.

According to the plan and estimate by Mr. Latrobe, the two schools will cost eighty thousand dollars.

The modification of the two regiments of artillerists and engineers will liberate twenty thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars annually.

The establishment of the two schools will liberate the salaries of the four teachers before mentioned, or four thousand three hundred and thirty-six dollars annually.

The books, apparatus, and instruments, directed to be provided for the use of the artillerists and engineers, are considered as an adequate offset for the books, apparatus, and instruments, required for the use of the schools; consequently, no charge has been stated in the estimate for these objects.

If, therefore, we oppose the sums thus annually liberated to the annual salary of the professors and original cost of the buildings, whichever of the plans is adopted, we shall find the measure proposed, viewed merely in the light of an operation of finance, to result in a considerable saving to the United States.

An individual would think it a good bargain to receive twenty-five thousand two hundred and ninety-one dollars, annually, the sum liberated, and to give, in lieu thereof, ten thousand four hundred and sixty-six dollars, annually, the salary of the professors, and a principal sum, equal to the cost of the buildings. In other words, he would receive fourteen thousand seven hundred and twenty-five dollars, annually, which is equivalent, at six per cent., to a capital, or principal, of two hundred and forty-five thousand four hundred and sixteen dollars; a sum greatly exceeding the estimated cost of the buildings upon either estimate.

The committee, while they perceive that the seed, which it is now proposed to sow, is to yield a future harvest, will, at the same time, justly appreciate the various beneficial consequences which must result from the immediate adoption, and the striking inconveniences, and danger to be apprehended from a postponement of the measure.

Whether our country is to be plunged into a war, or enjoy, for a length of time, the blessings of peace and interior tranquillity; whether the portentous events which have afflicted Europe, and, in their progress, threatened the United States, are to subside into a settled state of things; whether the blessings of peace, and the customary relations, among the transatlantic Powers, are to take place, or hostilities shall be continued, protracted, and extended, beyond their present limits; in either view, it is equally a suggestion of policy and wisdom to improve our means of defence, and give as much perfection as possible to such establishments as may be conceived essential to the maintenance of our rights, and security from insults.

The unavoidable collisions growing out of trade, and the reciprocal restrictions of great commercial States; the apprehensions and jealousies natural to Powers possessing contiguous territory; the inefficacy of religion and morality to control the passions of men, or the interest and ambition of nations; the impossibility, at times, for governments to adjust their differences or preserve their rights, without making sacrifices more to be dreaded than the hazards and calamities of war: all these considerations, illustrated by volumes of examples, teach the soundness of the axiom, si vis pacem para bellum. And what time more proper to prepare the materials for war than a time of peace, or more urgent, than that in which a nation is threatened with war?

I have the honor to be, with the greatest respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

JAMES MCHENRY,
Secretary of War.

HARRISON G. OTIS, Esq.,
Chairman of the Committee of Defence.

ACTION BETWEEN THE CONSTELLATION AND LA VENGEANCE.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., March 21, 1800.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 20, 1800.

In obedience to the order of the House of Representatives of the United States, of the 18th instant, the Secretary of the Navy has the honor to lay before the House a copy of Captain Truxtun's letter of the 3d of February, together with a copy of the extract from his journal, referred to in the said letter, detailing the particulars of the engagement between the Constellation, under his command, and a heavy French ship, mounting, as he supposed, fifty-four guns.

The Secretary has received a number of letters too voluminous to trouble the House with, of dates both prior and subsequent to the action, which leave no doubt on his mind that the French ship, so gallantly defended against the bravery and superior skill of Captain Truxtun, is the same that arrived at Guadaloupe from France, in the month of December last, called La Vengeance, mounting fifty guns or upwards.

In confirmation of this opinion, the Secretary takes the liberty of stating the substance of letter received from Captain Baker, of the Delaware sloop of war, from B. H. Phillips, Esq., American Consul at Curaçoa, and from D. M. Clarkson, Esq., Navy Agent at St. Kitts.

Captain Baker, in a letter dated Curaçoa, 8th of February, mentions that a French ship, called La Vengeance, of fifty-four guns, had left Guadaloupe on her return to France, about the 1st of February, had a very severe action with the Constellation the following night, and arrived at Curaçoa on the 6th, in a most shattered condition; that he had understood she had lost one hundred and forty men in the action, and when she escaped from the Constellation had eight feet water in her hold.

Mr. Phillips, in a letter dated Curaçoa, 9th of February, to the Secretary of State, announces the arrival there of the French ship La Vengeance, of fifty-six guns, bound from Guadaloupe to France, with a valuable cargo, and a large sum of specie, in a very distressed situation, having lost one hundred and sixty men, killed and wounded, and her masts and rigging nearly all shot away, in an engagement of five hours, within pistol shot, with the Constellation.

Mr. Clarkson, at St. Kitts, in a letter dated 16th of February states "we are certain Captain Truxtun's gallant action was fought with La Vengeance, a French man of war of fifty-four guns, and five hundred picked men, from Guadaloupe to France."

As to the conduct of any particular officer, or other persons on board the Constellation, the Secretary has no information, except what is to be found in the communications from Captain Truxtun, by which, but still more by the result of this heroic action, it appears that all the officers and men on board the Constellation must have nobly performed their duty.

The praise of having pursued, for many hours, a ship known to be of force so greatly superior to his own, to bring her to action, and of conducting that action with so much skill as to compensate for his great inferiority of force, belongs exclusively to their gallant commander.

It cannot be necessary for the Secretary to add to the eulogium bestowed by Captain Truxtun, on the brave young midshipman, James Jarvis, who gloriously preferred certain death to an abandonment of his post.

All which is respectfully submitted.

BENJAMIN STODDERT,

Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Reps.

UNITED STATES' SHIP CONSTELLATION,
AT SEA, February 3, 1800.

SIR: I had the honor to address you the day after my arrival at St. Christopher's, the 21st ult., as per copy annexed; after which I made every exertion in my power to get the squadron, as well as my own ship, to sea, in the shortest time possible; and gave all the commanders of the different vessels orders to cruise separately, in certain situations, agreeably to the copies enclosed.

On the 30th I left St. Christopher's with the Constellation, in an excellent trim for sailing, and stood to windward in order to occupy the station I had allotted for myself, before the road of the enemy at Guadaloupe, where I was informed a very large and heavy frigate, of upwards of fifty guns, was then lying, and early on the next day I fell in with L'Insurgent, Captain Murray, and the prize brig Conquest, of Italy, that had been fitted out to cruise with him in those seas. After a short interview with Captain Murray, I requested him to proceed to St. Christopher's without loss of time, and call on our agent there, Mr. Clarkson, for letters that I had lodged for him, which pointed out his further destination. On our parting he immediately made sail to leeward, and I continued plying to windward. At half past seven, A. M., of the following day, I discovered a sail to the southeast, to which I gave chase; and, for the further particulars of that chase, and the action after it, I must beg leave to refer you to the extracts of my journal, which is also enclosed, as being the best mode of exhibiting a just, fair, and candid account of all our transactions in the late business, which has ended in the complete dismantlement of the Constellation, though, I trust, to the high reputation of the American flag.

I have just fell in with the Enterprise, Lieutenant Shaw, returning from Curaçoa, who I send off to you with my despatches, and I shall be obliged by your sending him again to meet me at Port Royal, Jamaica, as early as possible, as I shall be impatient to hear from you, especially as we are now in want of everything, being a mere wreck.

If I had met Captain Morris, of the Adams, I should have taken the command of that ship and kept the station to windward, leaving him in charge of the Constellation to be refitted at Jamaica; but I have not been so fortunate.

I have the honor to be, with great respect and esteem, your very obedient humble servant,

THOMAS TRUXTUN.

BENJAMIN STODDERT, Esq.,

Secretary of the Navy, Philadelphia.

A circumstantial account of the engagement between the United States frigate Constellation, of thirty-eight guns, and a French national frigate, of fifty-four guns, on the 1st of February, 1800; taken from Commodore Truxtun's Journal, viz:

SATURDAY, February 1, 1800.

At half-past seven, A. M., the road of Bassatterre, Guadaloupe, bearing east, five leagues distance, saw a sail in the southeast standing to the westward, which, from her situation, I at first took for a large ship from Martinico, and hoisted English colors, on giving chase, by way of inducement for her to come down and speak me, which would have saved a long chase to leeward of my intended cruising ground; but finding she did not attempt to alter her course, I examined her more attentively as we approached her, and discovered her to be a heavy French frigate, mounting at least fifty-four guns. I immediately gave orders for the yards to be slung with chains, topsail sheets, &c., stoppered, and the ship cleared, ready for action, and hauled down the English colors. At noon the wind became light, and I observed the chase, that we had before been gaining on fast, held way with us, but I was determined to continue the pursuit, though the running to leeward, I was convinced, would be attended with many serious disadvantages, especially if the object of my wishes was not gratified.

SUNDAY, February 2.

At one o'clock, P. M., the wind being somewhat fresher than the noon preceding, and an appearance of its continuance, our prospect of bringing the enemy to action began to brighten, as I perceived we were coming up with the chase fast, and every inch of canvass being set that could be of service, except the bag reefs, which I kept in the topsails, in case of the enemy, finding escape from our thunder impracticable, should haul on a wind, and give us fair battle; but this did not prove to be her commander's intention; I, however, got within hail of him at eight P. M.; hoisted our ensign, and had the candles in the battle lanterns all lighted, and was in the lee gangway, ready to speak him, and to demand a surrender of his ship to the United States of America, when, at that instant, he commenced a fire from his stern and quarter guns, directed at our rigging and spars. No parley being then necessary, I sent my principal aid-de-camp, Mr. Vandyke, to the different officers commanding divisions on the main battery, to repeat strictly my orders before given, not to throw away a single charge of powder and shot, but to take good aim, and to fire directly into the hull of the enemy, and load principally with two round shot, and, now and then, with a round shot and a stand of grape, &c.; to encourage the men at their quarters, and to cause or suffer no noise or confusion whatever, but to load and fire as fast as possible, when it could be done with certain effect.

These orders being given, in a few moments I gained a position on his weather quarter, that enabled us to return, effectually, his salute, and thus as close and as sharp an action as ever was fought between two frigates, commenced, and continued until within a few minutes of one, A. M., when the enemy's fire was completely silenced, and he was again sheering off. It was at this moment that I considered him as my prize, and was trimming, in the best manner I could, my much shattered sails, when I found the mainmast was totally unsupported with rigging, every shroud being shot away, and some of them, in many places, so as to render stoppers useless, which in fact could not be applied with effect. I then gave orders for all the men to be sent up from the gun deck, to endeavor to secure the mast, in order that we might get alongside of the enemy again as soon as possible; but every effort was in vain, for it went over the side in a few moments after, and carried with it the topmen, among whom was an amiable young gentleman, who commanded the main top, Mr. James Jarvis, son of James Jarvis, Esq., of Naval Establishment and its Expenses.

New York. This young gentleman, it seems, was apprized of his danger by an old seaman, but he had already so much the principle of an officer engrafted on his mind, not to leave his quarters, that he replied, if the mast went, they must go with it; which was the case, and only one of them was saved. I regret much his loss, as a promising young officer, and amiable young man, as well as on account of a long intimacy that had subsisted between his father and myself, but have great satisfaction in finding that I have lost no other, and only two or three were slightly wounded; out of thirty-nine of the crew killed and wounded, fourteen of the former, and twenty-five of the latter. As soon as the mainmast went, every effort was made to clear the wreck from the ship as soon as possible, which was effected in about an hour; and, as her security was then the great object, it being impossible to pursue the enemy, I immediately bore away for Jamaica, for repairs, &c., finding it impracticable to reach a friendly port in any of the islands to windward.

I should be wanting in common justice was I to omit here to journalize the steady attention to order, and the great exertion and bravery shown by all my officers, seamen, and marines, in the action, many of whom I had sufficiently tried before on a similar occasion, (the capture of the Insurgent,) and all their names are recorded in the muster-roll I sent to the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 19th of December last, signed by myself.

THOMAS TRUXTUN.

THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT, AND ITS EXPENSES.

[Communicated to the House of Reps., Jan. 15, 1801.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Jan. 12, 1801.

SIR: The report of the Secretary of the Treasury containing a statement of the appropriations necessary for the year 1801, includes the estimates of the expense of maintaining the Navy for the same year. It is unnecessary, therefore, for me to repeat them here.

But it will be observed that these estimates were formed on the idea of employing our whole force in cruising, as heretofore, for the protection of our commerce. Should the United States be so fortunate as to terminate, by an honorable treaty, the differences with France, it would be good economy to sell all the public vessels, except the following frigates:

The United States,	The New York,
President,	Constellation,
Constitution;	Congress,
Chesapeake,	Essex,
Philadelphia,	Boston,
John Adams,	Adams, and
General Greene.

The rest were either built of materials which do not promise long duration, or are too small to form a part of the national defence. In future wars, the United States will probably be influenced by the example of all other nations, to suffer the capture of vessels merely commercial from their enemy; and, in this event, the enterprising spirit of our citizens will quickly furnish, for private emolument, nearly all the small vessels necessary to be employed; and will thus add to the national means of annoyance, without adding to the national expense. In this view, it may be sufficient for the United States to attend principally to a provision for ships of the line and frigates.

The expense of maintaining the thirteen frigates herein enumerated, in constant service, and on the present establishment of numbers, pay, and rations, would amount, annually, to the sum of one million two hundred and twenty-five thousand and forty-eight dollars and seventy-three cents, as will be seen in paper No. 1. But, on a peace establishment, the ration, which is too large, ought to be reduced; seamen's wages will undoubtedly fall, on a general peace; and, in such a state of things, it would be unnecessary to employ, in each ship, more than two-thirds of the present number of able and ordinary seamen. The paper No. 2 contains an estimate of the annual expense of these ships on a peace establishment, and on the principle of keeping the whole of them in constant service, amounting to seven hundred and twelve thousand seven hundred and twenty-four dollars and thirty-five cents. The paper, No. 3, shows the expense of keeping only six of the frigates in constant service; the others remaining in port, but allowing half-pay to a sufficient number of commissioned officers and midshipmen for the ships so laid up, amounting to three hundred and eighty-seven thousand two hundred and fifty-seven dollars. In the paper, No. 4, there is added to the estimate, No. 3, the expense of allowing half-pay to all the commissioned officers and midshipmen at present in the service, making the whole amount to the annual sum of four hundred and forty-four thousand six hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

The act establishing and organizing the Marine Corps considers that corps as part of the Military Establishment, but subject to perform duty on ship-board, as well as in posts and garrisons on the seacoast, and elsewhere on shore. It is questionable, therefore, whether the expense of this corps ought to be provided for in the estimates of the War or the Navy Department. It is certainly, one of the most useful corps belonging to the United States; and is particularly advantageous in facilitating the means, and lessening the expense, of manning our ships; and affords to every vessel a body of experienced and disciplined men, always prepared for action. The war expense of this corps is two hundred and seventy thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven dollars and ninety-eight cents, per annum; in peace, the expense might be reduced to two hundred and seven thousand three hundred and ten dollars, per estimate No. 5, which, being added to the estimate No. 4, would make the whole amount to six hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven dollars.

Naval Establishment and its Expenses.

The acts of Congress have appropriated one million of dollars towards building six seventy-four gun ships, and for procuring, arming, &c., six sloops of war, leaving about seven hundred thousand dollars to be applied towards the six seventy-four gun ships; also, two hundred thousand dollars for the purchase of growing or other timber, or of timbered lands, for the Navy, and for preparing proper places for securing the timber procured; and fifty thousand dollars for the erection of two docks, for repairing the public ships.

Under these acts, contracts have been made for eight frames for seventy-four gun ships; two of them under the appropriation of two hundred thousand dollars, and the execution of them, as far as six frames, will, it is believed, be completed this Winter. A considerable part of the other timber, necessary for six ships, has been procured. Ground has been purchased at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Charlestown, (near Boston,) Philadelphia, the City of Washington, and Norfolk; and measures have been taken to procure ground at New York, for capacious buildings and dock-yards; and progress is making in preparing docks for receiving the timber, and wharves for building the ships. Contracts have also been made for cannon, and for the copper bolts and spikes, and for sheathing copper, for the seventy-four gun ships; but it is impossible to say how far those which respect copper will be executed, the works for manufacturing sheathing copper being very expensive, and, it is to be feared, beyond the reach of individual capital and enterprise.

The sums already advanced and expended on these different objects cannot be precisely ascertained; but they are not materially different from the following estimate:

For ground and improvements	$186,800 00
Timber	210,070 00
Copper purchased, and advances on contracts for sheathing copper	76,913 00
Cannon	33,000 00
Purchase of Grover's Island and Black Beard	22,516 75
	$929,299 75

The agents for disbursing this money are also agents for all other purposes of the Navy; and it can only be seen what has been expended, under each head of appropriation, on settlement of their accounts. To remit money to them under each head of appropriation, allowing them to expend on that particular object only the sum remitted, would be to create the necessity of keeping, in each agent's hands, four or five times as much public money as necessary; hence, the practice has arisen in the Navy Department of drawing on one appropriation, for all Navy purposes, until that appropriation is exhausted; leaving until the settlement of the agent's accounts the charges against each appropriation for which the money has been expended.

The expense of building six seventy-four gun ships, and fitting them for sea, with guns and military stores, and every other article except men and provisions, has heretofore been estimated at two millions four hundred and three thousand eight hundred dollars and ninety-four cents; to complete the wharves and docks, for seasoning timber at the six places, where ground has been purchased, and to erect suitable houses, for the reception of public stores, will cost, including what has already been expended, six hundred thousand dollars; and to make, at two of these places, proper docks for repairing of ships, may cost one hundred thousand dollars, amounting, in the whole, to - - - - - $3,103,800 00

From which is to be deducted the sums already expended - - - 529,299 75

Leaving a balance still to be appropriated, of - - - - - $2,574,500 25

If this balance should be divided into four equal parts, and one part should be appropriated in the present, and one in each of the three succeeding years, the money will be furnished as fast as it will be proper to build the ships, to give them every chance of long duration.

The timber alone of a seventy-four gun ship will cost, delivered at the ship yard:
For the frame, consisting of twenty-seven thousand three hundred and eighty-seven cubic feet,
If of live oak, cut to the moulds - $54,774 00
If partly of live oak, or other timber as valuable, and partly of white oak - 41,080 00
If of white oak alone - $27,387 00
All the other timber - 40,000 00
67,387 00

All the timber for a frigate, to mount forty-four guns, has been estimated to cost fifty thousand dollars.

It will be impracticable to get more live oak from Georgia, after the frames already contracted for are completed, except from the islands belonging to the United States, and these are too small to furnish more than a few of the most material pieces for many ships. It will, also, soon be impracticable to obtain, in the United States, any other kind of timber superior to white oak; but there is reason to believe that, when our timber is as well seasoned, our white oak ships will last as long as those of most other countries. The experiment has never yet been fairly made.

When the United States own twelve ships of seventy-four guns, and double the number of strong frigates, and it is known that they possess the means of increasing, with facility, their naval strength, confidence may be indulged that we may then avoid those wars in which we have no interest, and without submitting to be plundered. An annual sum of one hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred and eighty-seven dollars, (over and above the appropriation for the six seventy-four gun ships already authorized,) for the purchase of timber, to be laid up in docks for seventy-four gun ships and frigates, and the adoption of efficient arrangements to secure the manufacture of copper, the culture of hemp, and the manufacture of canvass, would, in a few years, raise us to this desirable state of security.

Thus, then, it appears that, for the small sum of six hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven dollars thirty-four cents, the United States may keep in constant service six frigates; seven others in port, but always ready for service; the corps of marines, consisting of more than eleven hundred officers and men; and may remunerate the past, and secure the future, services of a meritorious class of men, who, in general, either sacrificed more profitable and less hazardous private employment, to devote themselves to their country, in a season of peril; or who, being qualified by education for any pursuits, have entered into the Navy, as a profession, at that time of life when professions are usually chosen.

All great maritime nations retain in peace the commissioned Navy officers necessary to be employed in war, by allowing them a portion of their monthly pay, on the condition of their holding themselves in readiness, at all times, to be called into active service. The same provision is not so generally extended to the midshipmen; but the discrimination is no where just, and, in the United States, in the present instance, it would be extremely impolitic: for the midshipmen are among the most promising young men of our country, possess all the materials to make officers equal to any in the world, and well merit the fostering care of their Government. But it would be injurious to themselves and to their country to pay them for remaining in idleness at home. No midshipman ought to receive half-pay, without exhibiting satisfactory proof that at least four months of the year for which he demanded it had been employed by him in acquiring a better knowledge of his profession; if not in foreign service, at least in the merchant ships of his own country.

It also appears that, for the further sum of six hundred and forty-three thousand six hundred and twenty-five dollars and six cents, appropriated for the present, and for each of the three succeeding years, six seventy-four gun ships may be added to the Navy; two frames for two other seventy-four gun ships may be placed in dock for seasoning; six capacious building yards, with docks for receiving large quantities of timber, may be prepared; and suitable houses, which are indispensable for the security of the naval stores, may be erected at each of the building yards.

And that, for the further appropriation of one hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred and eighty-seven dollars, for the timber of a seventy-four and a forty-four gun ship, to be repeated annually, until an adequate quantity of timber shall be obtained, the United States may acquire the means of suddenly raising their Navy to any size which the exigency of their affairs may demand.

It will require years to cut the timber from the woods and to build a ship of seventy-four guns, and, after she is built, of green timber, she will not last longer than the time consumed in building her. A ship of the same size, besides the immense advantage in point of duration, may be built and sent to sea in less than a year, if all the materials are on the spot. Timber may be preserved for ages in docks, and at little expense; and the knowledge that we possess it in that state will inspire nearly as much respect for our flag, as if the ships were built and on the ocean.

In a pecuniary point of view, there can be no comparison between the expense of creating a sufficient Navy, and the loss a commerce, so great as ours, will too certainly sustain for the want of such protection. But the loss of property is but a paltry consideration, compared with all the humiliating and destructive consequences which must flow from that debasement of mind which a system of eternal submission to injury and injustice cannot fail to produce.

Before I conclude, I will take the liberty of observing, that the business of the Navy Department embraces too many objects for the superintendence of one person, however gifted. The public interest, I am very sensible, has already suffered from this cause; and I have no doubt that the establishment of a Board, to consist of three or five experienced Navy officers, to superintend, in subordination to the Head of the Department, such parts of the duties as nautical men are best qualified to understand and to direct, would produce a saving to the public far beyond the expense of such an establishment. Their full pay as officers, indeed, and full rations, might be deemed sufficient compensation for such duty, as it would be proper that the members of the Board should retain their rank in the Navy.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

BEN. STODDERT.

HARRISON GRAY OTIS, Esq.,

Chairman of the Committee of Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC ACTS OF CONGRESS;

PASSED AT THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SIXTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AND HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 2, 1799.

AN ACT for reviving and continuing suits and proceedings in the Circuit Court for the district of Pennsylvania.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That all suits, process, and proceedings, of what nature or kind soever, which were pending in the circuit court of the United States, for the district of Pennsylvania, at the time appointed by law for holding a session thereof, in October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, and which were discontinued by failure to hold the said court, shall be, and they are hereby, revived and continued, and the same proceedings may and shall be had in the same court, in all suits and process aforesaid, and in all things relating to the same, as by law might have been had in the same court, had it been regularly holden, at the time aforesaid.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all writs, and other process, which may have been, and which shall be issued, by the clerk of the said court, bearing teste of April session or October session, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, shall be held and deemed of the same validity and effect, as if the same court had been regularly held on the eleventh day of October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the judge of the district court of the district of Pennsylvania, to direct the clerk of the said circuit court to issue such process, for the purpose of causing jurors to be summoned to attend at the session of the said circuit court, on the eleventh day of April next, as hath heretofore been issued for the like purposes, returnable to any preceding session thereof; and the persons so summoned shall, in case of non-attendance, be liable to the same penalties as if such process had been issued in the ordinary course of proceeding.

THEODORE SEDGWICK,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SAMUEL LIVERMORE,

President of the Senate, pro tempore.

Approved, December 24, 1799.

JOHN ADAMS,

President of the United States.

An Act extending the privilege of franking to William Henry Harrison, the delegate from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio; and making provision for his compensation.

Be it enacted, &c., That William Henry Harrison, the delegate to Congress from the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, be entitled to the privilege of sending and receiving letters free of postage, on the same terms, and under the same restrictions, as are provided for the members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the United States, by the act, entitled "An act to establish the post office and post roads within the United States."

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said William Henry Harrison shall receive for his travelling expenses, and attendance in Congress, the same compensation as is or may be allowed by law, to the members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be certified and paid in like manner.

Approved, January 2, 1800.

An Act supplementary to the act, entitled "An Act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners appointed under the act to which this is a supplement, shall have power, on consideration and examination of the lists, returns, valuation, and abstracts, rendered by the assessors, to revise, adjust and vary the valuations of lands and dwelling houses in each and every sub-division of the several assessment districts, by adding thereto, or deducting therefrom, such a rate per centum as shall appear to be just and reasonable; Provided, That the relative valuations of the different lots or tracts of land, or dwelling houses in the same sub-division, shall not be changed or affected.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners may direct the additions or deductions, as aforesaid, to be made out and completed by the several principal assessors, or, if they shall deem it more advisable, by their clerk, and such assistants as they shall find necessary and appoint for that purpose; Provided, That the compensation to be made to the said assistants shall not exceed the pay allowed to the assistant assessors, by the act to which this is a supplement.

Approved, January 2, 1800.

An Act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt.

Be it enacted, &c., That persons imprisoned on process issuing from any court of the United States, as well at the suit of the United States, as at the suit of any person or persons in civil actions, shall be entitled to like privileges of the yards or limits of the respective jails, as persons confined in like cases on process from the courts of the respective States, are entitled to, and under the like regulations and restrictions.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person imprisoned on process of execution issuing from any court of the United States in civil actions, except at the suit of the United States, may have the oath or affirmation, hereinafter expressed, administered to him by the judge of the district court of the United States, within whose jurisdiction the debtor may be confined; and in case there shall be no district judge residing within twenty miles of the jail wherein such debtor may be confined, such oath or affirmation may be administered by any two persons who may be commissioned for that purpose by the district judge: The creditor, his agent or attorney, if either live within one hundred miles of the place of imprisonment, or within the district in which the judgment was rendered, having had at least thirty days previous notice by a citation served on him, issued by the district judge, to appear at the time and place therein mentioned, if he see fit, to show cause why the said oath or affirmation should not be so administered: At which time and place, if no sufficient cause, in the opinion of the judge (or the commissioners appointed as aforesaid) be shown, or doth from examination appear to the contrary, he or they may, at the request of the debtor, proceed to administer to him the following oath or affirmation, as the case may be, viz. "You ——— solemnly swear (or affirm) that you have no estate, real or personal, in possession, reversion, or remainder, to the amount or value of thirty dollars, other than necessary wearing apparel; and that you have not directly or indirectly, given, sold, leased, or otherwise conveyed to, or intrusted any person or persons with all or any part of the estate, real or personal, whereof you have been the lawful owner or possessor, with any intent to secure the same, or to receive or expect any profit or advantage therefrom, or to defraud your creditors, or have caused or suffered to be done anything else whatsoever, whereby any of your creditors may be defrauded." Which oath or affirmation being administered, the judge or commissioners shall certify the same under his or their hands to the prison-keeper, and the debtor shall be discharged from his imprisonment on such judgment, and shall not be liable to be imprisoned again for the said debt, but the judgment shall remain good and sufficient in law, and may be satisfied out of any estate which may then, or at any time afterwards, belong to the debtor. And the judge or commissioners, in addition to the certificate by them made and delivered to the prison-keeper, shall make return of their doings to the district court, with the commission, in cases where a commission has been issued, to be kept upon the files and record of the same court. And the said judge, or commissioners, may send for books and papers, and have the same authority as a court of record, to compel the appearance of witnesses, and administer to them, as well as to the debtor, the oaths or affirmations necessary for the inquiry into, and discovery of the true state of the debtor's property, transactions and affairs.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when the examination and proceedings aforesaid, in the opinion of the said judge or commissioners, cannot be had with safety or convenience in the prison wherein the debtor is confined, it shall be lawful for him or them, by warrant under his or their hand and seals, to order the marshal or prison-keeper, to remove the debtor to such other place, convenient and near to the prison, as he or they may see fit; and to remand the debtor to the same prison, if, upon examination or cause shown by the creditor, it shall appear that the debtor ought not to be admitted to take the above recited oath or affirmation, or that he is holden for any other cause.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely take any oath or affirmation, authorized by this act, such person shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, upon conviction thereof, shall suffer the pains and penalties in that case provided: and, in case any false oath or affirmation be so taken by the debtor, the court, upon the motion of the creditor, shall recommit the debtor to the prison from whence he was liberated, there to be detained for the said debt, in the same manner as if such oath or affirmation had not been taken.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That any person imprisoned upon process issuing from any court of the United States, except at the suit of the United States, in any civil action, against whom judgment has been or shall be recovered, shall be entitled to the privileges and relief provided by this act, after the expiration of thirty days from the time such judgment has been or shall be recovered, though the creditor should not, within that time, sue out his execution, and charge the debtor therewith.

Approved, January 6, 1800.

An Act for the preservation of peace with the Indian tribes.

Be it enacted, &c., That if any citizen or other person residing within the United States, or the territory thereof, shall send any talk, speech, message, or letter, to any Indian nation, tribe, or chief, with an intent to produce a contravention or infraction of any treaty or other law of the United States, or to disturb the peace and tranquillity of the United States, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding two thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any citizen or other person shall carry or deliver any such talk, speech, message, or letter, to or from any Indian nation, tribe, or chief, from or to any person or persons whatsoever, residing within the United States, or from or to any subject, citizen, or agent of any foreign Power or State, knowing the contents thereof, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any citizen or other person, residing or being among the Indians, or elsewhere within the territory of the United States, shall carry on a correspondence, by letter or otherwise, with any foreign nation or power, with an intent to induce such foreign nation or power, to excite any Indian nation, tribe, or chief, to war against the United States, or to the violation of any existing treaty; or in case any citizen or other person shall alienate, or attempt to alienate, the confidence of the Indians from the Government of the United States, or from any such person or persons as are or may be employed and intrusted by the President of the United States as a commissioner or commissioners, agent or agents, or in any capacity whatever, for facilitating or preserving a friendly intercourse with the Indians, or for managing the concerns of the United States with them, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act, entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," passed the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, be, and the same are hereby extended to carry into effect this act, and for the trial and punishment of offences against it, in the same manner as if they were herein specially recited.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force until the third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and two, and no longer.

Approved, January 17, 1800.

An Act to repeal part of an act, entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures, penalties, and disabilities, accruing in certain cases therein mentioned, and to continue in force the residue of the same."

Be it enacted, &c., That the fourth section of an act, entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures, penalties, and disabilities, accruing in certain cases therein mentioned," passed on the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, shall be, and the same is hereby repealed, and the residue of the said act shall be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force without limitation of time.

Approved, February 11, 1800.

An Act giving further time to the holders of military warrants, to register and locate the same.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for the space of fourteen days after the expiration of the nine months heretofore allowed for that purpose, by the act, entitled "An act regulating the grants of land, appropriated for military services, and for the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen," register warrants for military services in the form and manner as is prescribed by the said recited act; and the priority of location of said warrants, and the warrants registered under the said recited act, shall be determined by lot, immediately after the expiration of the said fourteen days, and a day for the location shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in a public notice given in one of the gazettes of the city of Philadelphia.

Approved, February 11, 1800.

An Act to suspend in part, an act, entitled "An act to augment the army of the United States; and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, &c., That all further enlistments under the second section of an act, entitled "An act to augment the army of the United States, and for other purposes," shall be suspended until the further order of Congress, unless in the recess of Congress, and during the continuance of the existing differences between the United States and the French Republic, war shall break out between the United States and the French Republic, or imminent danger of invasion of their territory by the said Republic, shall, in the opinion of the President of the United States, be discovered to exist.

Approved, February 20, 1800.

An Act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof.

Be it enacted, &c., That all commercial intercourse between any persons resident within the United States or under their protection, and any person or persons resident within the territories of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof, shall be, and, from and after the second day of March next, is hereby prohibited and farther suspended, excepting only in the cases hereinafter provided. And any ship or vessel, owned, hired, or employed, wholly or in part, by any person or persons resident within the United States, or any citizen or citizens thereof resident elsewhere, and sailing therefrom after that day, which, contrary to the intent hereof, shall be voluntarily carried, or shall be destined or permitted to proceed, or shall be sold, bartered, intrusted, or transferred, for the purpose that she may proceed, whether directly or from any intermediate port or place within the territories of that Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof; or shall be engaged in any traffic or commerce, by or for any person resident within the territories of that Republic, or within any of the dependencies thereof; and also any cargo which shall be found on board such ship or vessel, when detected and interrupted in such unlawful purpose, or at her return from such voyage to the United States, shall be wholly forfeited, and may be seized and condemned in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That excepting for foreign ships or vessels owned, hired, and employed by persons permanently residing in Europe, and commanded and wholly navigated by foreigners, no clearance for a foreign voyage shall be granted to any ship or vessel whatever, until the owner or employer for the voyage, or if not resident within the district where the clearance shall be required, his factor or agent, with the master and one or more sufficient surety or sureties to the satisfaction of the collector of the district, shall give bond to the United States, such owner, employer, or factor, with the master, in a sum equal to the value of the vessel, and of one-third of her cargo; and such surety or sureties in a like sum, when it shall not exceed ten thousand dollars; and if it shall exceed, then in that sum, with condition that the ship or vessel for which a clearance shall be required, is actually destined, and shall proceed to some port or place without the limits or jurisdiction of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof, and during the intended voyage shall not be voluntarily carried, or permitted to proceed or sold, intrusted or transferred, with the purpose that she may proceed, whether directly or from any intermediate port or place, to any port or place within the territories of that Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof; and shall not, at any such port or place, voluntarily deliver or unlade any part of such cargo; and, if compelled by distress of weather, or taken by force into any such port or place, will not there receive on board of such ship or vessel, any goods, produce, or merchandise, other than necessary sea-stores; and generally, that such ship or vessel shall not be employed in any traffic or commerce, with or for any person resident within the territory of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof.

SEC. 3. Provided, and be it further enacted, That when any ship or vessel which shall obtain a clearance for a foreign voyage, after a bond shall be given as aforesaid, shall be compelled by distress of weather, or other casualty endangering the safety of such ship or vessel, or of the mariners on board the same, or shall be taken by any armed vessel, or other superior force, into any port or place within the territories of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof, and shall there necessarily unlade and deliver, or shall be deprived of any cargo then on board, then, and in such case, the master or other person having charge of such ship or vessel, may receive compensation or payment in bills of exchange, or in money or bullion, for such cargo, but not otherwise, and shall not be understood thereby to contravene this law, or to incur a forfeiture of the said bond.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That no ship or vessel coming from any port or place within the territories of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof, whether with or without a cargo, or from any other port or place, with a cargo on board obtained for, or laden on board of such vessel at any port or place within the said territories or dependencies, which shall arrive within the limits of the United States, after the second day of March next, shall be admitted to entry with the collector of any district; and each and every such ship or vessel which shall arrive as aforesaid, having on board any goods, wares, or merchandise, destined to be delivered within the United States, contrary to the intent of this act, or which shall have otherwise contravened the same, together with the cargo which shall be found on board, shall be forfeited, and may be seized and condemned in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the entry of any vessel having a passport granted under the authority of the French Republic, and solely employed for purposes of political or national intercourse with the Government of the United States, and not in any commercial intercourse, and which shall be received, and permitted by the President of the United States to remain within the same: And provided, also, that until the first day of August next, and no longer, any ship or vessel, wholly owned or employed by a foreigner, other than any person resident in France, or in any of the dependencies of the French Republic, and which coming therefrom shall be destined to the United States, and shall arrive within the same, not having otherwise contravened this act, shall be required and permitted to depart therefrom; and in case she shall accordingly depart without any unreasonable delay, and without delivery, or attempting to deliver, any cargo or lading within the United States, such ship or vessel, or any cargo which may be on board the same, shall not be liable to the forfeiture aforesaid.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if any ship or vessel, coming from any port or place within the territories of the French Republic, or any of the dependencies thereof, or with any cargo there obtained on board, but not destined to any port or place within the United States, shall be compelled by distress of weather, or other necessity, to put into any port or place within the limits of the United States, such ship or vessel shall be there hospitably received in the manner prescribed by the act, entitled, "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage;" and shall be permitted to make such repairs, and to obtain such supplies, as shall be necessary to enable her to proceed according to her destination; and such repairs and supplies being obtained, shall be thereafter required and permitted to depart. But if such ship or vessel shall not conform to the regulations prescribed by the act last mentioned, or shall unlade any part of her cargo, or shall take on board any cargo or supplies whatever, without the permit of the collector of the district previously obtained therefor, or shall refuse, or unreasonably delay to depart from and out of the United States, after having received a written notice to depart, which such collector may, and shall give as soon as such ship or vessel shall be fit for sea; or having departed shall return to the United States, not being compelled thereto by further distress or necessity, in each and every such case, such ship or vessel and her cargo shall be forfeited, and may be seized and condemned in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That at any time after the passing of this act, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, by his order, to remit and discontinue for the time being, whenever he shall deem it expedient, and for the interest of the United States, all, or any of the restraints and prohibitions imposed by this act, in respect to the territories of the French Republic, or to any island, port or place belonging to the said republic, with which in his opinion a commercial intercourse may be safely renewed; and also it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, whenever he shall afterwards deem it expedient, to revoke such order, and hereby to re-establish such restraints and prohibitions: And the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to make proclamation thereof accordingly.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the whole of the island of Hispaniola shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered as a dependency of the French Republic: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to repeal or annul, in any part, the order or proclamation of the President of the United States, heretofore issued for permitting commercial, intercourse with certain ports of that island.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, to give instructions to the public armed vessels of the United States, to stop and examine any ship or vessel of the United States on the high sea, which there may be reason to suspect to be engaged in any traffic or commerce contrary to this act, and if, upon examination, it shall appear that such ship or vessel is bound or sailing to or from any port or place, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, it shall be the duty of the commander of such public armed vessel, to seize every ship or vessel engaged in such illicit commerce, and send the same to the nearest convenient port of the United States, to be there prosecuted in due course of law, and held liable to the penalties and forfeitures provided by this act.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of this act, shall and may be examined, mitigated, and remitted, in like manner, and under the like conditions, regulations, and restrictions, as are prescribed, authorized, and directed by the act, entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures, penalties, and disabilities accruing in certain cases therein mentioned;" and all penalties and forfeitures, which may be recovered, in pursuance of this act, in consequence of any seizure made by the commander of any public armed vessel of the United States, shall be distributed according to the rules prescribed by the act, entitled "An act for the government of the navy of the United States;" and all other penalties arising under this act, and which may be recovered, shall be distributed and accounted for in the manner prescribed by the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage."

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this act shall extend to any ship or vessel to which the President of the United States shall grant a permission to enter and clear; provided such ship or vessel shall be solely employed, pursuant to such permission, for purposes of national intercourse; and shall not be permitted to proceed with, or to bring to the United States, any cargo or lading whatever, other than necessary sea-stores.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act further to suspend the commercial intercourse between the United States and France, and the dependencies thereof," shall be, and is hereby continued, and shall be taken to be in force in respect to all offences, which shall have been committed against the same, before the expiration thereof; and to the intent that all seizures, forfeitures, and penalties, arising upon such offences, may be had, sued for, prosecuted, and recovered, any limitation of the said act to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be and remain in force until the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one: Provided, however, the expiration thereof shall not prevent or defeat any seizure, or prosecution for a forfeiture, incurred under this act, and during the continuance thereof.

Approved, February 27, 1800.

An Act providing for the second Census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the marshals of the several districts of the United States and the secretaries of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, and of the Mississippi Territory, respectively, shall be, and they are hereby authorized and required, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and according to such instructions as he shall give pursuant to this act, to cause the number of the inhabitants within their respective districts and territories to be taken; omitting in such enumeration Indians not taxed, and distinguishing free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years from all others; distinguishing also the sexes, and colors of free persons, and the free males under ten years of age; those of ten years and under sixteen, those of sixteen and under twenty-six, those of twenty-six and under forty-five, those of forty-five and upwards. And distinguishing free females under ten years of age, those of ten years and under sixteen, those of sixteen and under twenty-six, those of twenty-six and under forty-five, those of forty-five and upwards; for effecting which purpose, the marshals and secretaries aforesaid shall have power to appoint as many assistants within their respective districts and territories, as aforesaid, as to them shall appear necessary; assigning to each assistant a certain division of his district or territory, which division shall consist of one or more counties, cities, towns, townships, hundreds, or parishes, or of a territory plainly and distinctly bounded by water courses, mountains, or public roads: The marshals or secretaries, as the case may be, and their assistants, shall, respectively, take an oath or affirmation, before some judge or justice of the peace, resident within their respective districts or territories, previous to their entering on the discharge of the duties by this act required. The oath or affirmation of the marshal or secretary shall be: "I, A. B. marshal of the district of —, (or secretary of the territory of —, as the case may be,) do solemnly swear or affirm, that I will well and truly cause to be made a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within my district or territory, and return the same to the Secretary of State, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled 'An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my ability." The oath or affirmation of an assistant shall be: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will make a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within the division assigned to me by the marshal of the district of —, (or the secretary of the territory of —, as the case may be,) and make due return thereof to the said marshal, or secretary, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled 'An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my abilities." The enumeration shall commence on the first Monday of August next, and shall close within nine calendar months thereafter. The several assistants shall, within the said nine months, transmit to the marshal or secretaries, by whom they shall be respectively appointed, accurate returns of all persons, except Indians, not taxed, within their respective divisions; which returns shall be made in a schedule, distinguishing in each county, parish, township, town or city, the several families, by the names of their master, mistress, steward, overseer, or other principal person therein, in the manner following, that is to say: The number of persons within my division, consisting of —, appears in a schedule hereto annexed, subscribed by me this — day of —, A. B. assistant to the marshal of — or to the secretary of —.

Acts of Congress.

	Name of county, parish, township, town, or city, where the family resides.

king a false return of the enumeration to the marshal or secretary (as the case may be) within the time by this act limited, shall forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the marshal and secretaries shall file the several returns aforesaid, with the clerks of their respective districts or superior courts, (as the case may be,) who are hereby directed to receive and carefully preserve the same. And the marshals or secretaries, respectively, shall, on or before the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and one, transmit to the Secretary of State the aggregate amount of each description of persons within their respective districts or territories. And every marshal or secretary failing to file the returns of his assistants, or any of them, with the clerks of their respective courts as aforesaid, or failing to return the aggregate amount of each description of persons in their respective districts or territories, as the same shall appear, from said returns, to the Secretary of State, within the time limited by this act, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of eight hundred dollars; all which forfeitures shall be recoverable in the courts of the districts or territories where the offences shall be committed, or in the circuit courts to be held within the same, by action of debt, information, or indictment; the one half thereof to the use of the United States, and the other half to the informer; but where the prosecution shall be first instituted on behalf of the United States, the whole shall accrue to their use. And for the more effectual discovery of offences, the judges of the several districts, and of the supreme courts, in the territories of the United States, as aforesaid, at their next sessions, to be held after the expiration of the time allowed for making the returns of the enumeration hereby directed, to the Secretary of State, shall give this act in charge to the grand juries, in their respective courts, and shall cause the returns of the several assistants to be laid before them for their inspection.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every hundred persons by him returned, where such persons reside in the country, and where such persons reside in a city or town containing more than three thousand persons, such assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every three hundred persons, but where, from the dispersed situation of the inhabitants in some divisions, one dollar for every one hundred persons shall be insufficient, the marshal or secretaries, with the approbation of the judges of their respective districts or territories, may make such further allowance to the assistants in such divisions, as shall be deemed an adequate compensation: Provided, The same does not exceed one dollar for every fifty persons by them returned. The several marshals and secretaries shall receive as follows: The marshal of the district of Maine, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Hampshire, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Massachusetts, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Rhode Island, one hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of Connecticut, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Vermont, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New York, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Jersey, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Pennsylvania, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Delaware, one hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Maryland, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Virginia, five hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Kentucky, two hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of North Carolina, three hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of South Carolina, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Georgia, two hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of Tennessee, two hundred dollars; the secretary of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, two hundred dollars; the secretary of the Mississippi Territory, one hundred dollars.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That every person whose usual place of abode shall be in any family on the aforesaid first Monday in August next, shall be returned as of such family, and the name of every person who shall be an inhabitant of any district or territory, but without a settled place of residence, shall be inserted in the column of the aforesaid schedule, which is allotted for the heads of families in that division where he or she shall be, on the said first Monday in August next, and every person occasionally absent at the time of the enumeration, as belonging to that place in which he or she usually resides in the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That each and every free person, more than sixteen years of age, whether heads of families or not, belonging to any family, within any division, district, or territory made or established within the United States, shall be, and hereby is, obliged to render to such assistant of the division, a true account, if required, to the best of his or her knowledge, of all and every person belonging to such family, respectively, according to the several descriptions aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting twenty dollars, to be sued for and recovered by such assistant, the one half for his own use, and the other half to the use of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That each assistant shall, previous to making his returns to the marshal or secretary, (as the case may be,) cause a correct copy, signed by himself, of the schedule containing the number of inhabitants within his division, to be set up at two of the most public places within the same, there to remain for the inspection of all concerned, for each of which copies the said assistant shall be entitled to receive two dollars; provided, proof of the schedule having been so set up and suffered to remain, shall be transmitted to the marshal or secretary, (as the case may be,) with the return of the number of the persons; and in case any assistant shall fail to make such proof to the marshal or secretary, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit the compensation by this act allowed him.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of State shall be, and hereby is, authorized and required to transmit to the marshals of the several States, and to the secretaries aforesaid, regulations and instructions pursuant to this act, for carrying the same into effect; and, also, the forms contained therein of schedule to be returned, and proper interrogatories to be administered by the several persons who shall be employed therein.

Approved, February 28, 1800.

An Act in addition to an act, entitled "An act regulating the grants of land appropriated for military services, and for the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen."

Be it enacted, &c., That the respective points of intersection of the lines actually run, as the boundaries of the several townships surveyed by virtue of the act entitled "An act regulating the grants of land appropriated for military services, and for the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen," accordingly as the said lines have been marked and ascertained at the time when the same were run, notwithstanding the same are not in conformity to the act aforesaid, or shall not appear to correspond with the plat of the survey which has been returned by the surveyor general, shall be considered, and they are hereby declared, to be the corners of the said townships; that, in regard to every such township as by the plat and survey returned by the surveyor general is stated to contain four thousand acres in each quarter thereof, the points on each of the boundary lines of such township, which are at equal distance from those two corners of the same township, which stand on the same boundary line, shall be considered, and they are hereby declared, to be corners of the respective quarters of such township; that the other boundary lines of the said quarter townships shall be straight lines, run from each of the last-mentioned corners of quarter townships to the corner of quarter townships on the opposite boundary line of the same township; and that in regard to every such township as by the said return is stated to contain, in any of the quarters thereof, more or less than the quantity of four thousand acres, the corners marked in the boundary lines of such township to designate the quarters thereof, shall be considered, and they are hereby declared, to be the corners of the quarter townships thereof, although the same may be found at unequal distances from the respective corners of such townships. And such townships shall be divided by running lines through the same from the corners of the quarter townships actually marked, whether the interior lines thus extended shall be parallel to the exterior lines of the said township or not; and that each of the said quarter townships thus bounded, shall, in every proceeding to be had under the above-mentioned or this act, be considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in the plat and survey thereof returned by the surveyor general.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the proprietors or holders of warrants for military services, which have been, or shall be, registered at the Treasury, in pursuance of the act entitled "An act regulating the grants of land appropriated for military services, and for the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen," during the time, in the manner, and according to the rights of priority, which may be acquired in pursuance of said act, to locate the quantities of land mentioned in the warrants by them, respectively, registered, as aforesaid, on any quarter township or fractional part of a quarter township, in the general tract mentioned and described in said act: Provided, always, That the fractional quarter townships upon the river Sciota and those upon the river Muskingum, adjoining the grant made to Ebenezer Zane, or the towns Salem, Gnadenhutten, or Shoenbrun, or the Indian boundary line, shall in every case be accepted and taken in full satisfaction for four thousand acres.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever locations shall be made on any quarter township, which, according to the actual survey and plat thereof, returned by the surveyor general, is stated to contain less than the quantity of four thousand acres, except in the case of fractions provided for in the preceding section, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, or cause to be issued, certificates expressing the number of acres remaining unsatisfied of any registry of warrants for the quantity of four thousand acres, made in pursuance of the act before recited, which certificates shall have the same validity and effect, and be liable to be barred in like manner as warrants granted for military services, but no certificate shall be granted, nor any claim allowed for less than fifty acres, nor for the navigable water contained within the limits of any quarter township or fractional quarter township.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever a location shall be made on any quarter township, which, according to the actual survey and plat thereof, returned by the surveyor general, is stated to exceed the quantity of four thousand acres, no patent shall be issued in pursuance thereof, until the person making such location shall deposit at the Treasury warrants for military services, or certificates issued by virtue of the preceding section, equal to the excess above four thousand acres, contained in such quarter township, or shall pay into the Treasury of the United States two dollars per acre, in the certificates of the six per cent. funded debt of the United States, or money, for each acre of the excess above four thousand acres as aforesaid.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That after the priority of location shall have been determined, and after the proprietors or holders of warrants for military services shall have designated the tracts by them respectively elected, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to designate by lot, in the presence of the Secretary of War, fifty quarter townships, of the lands remaining unlocated, which quarter townships, together with the fractional parts of townships remaining unlocated, shall be reserved for satisfying warrants granted to individuals for their military services, in the manner hereafter provided.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the land in each of the quarter townships designated as aforesaid, and in such of the fractional parts of quarter townships, as may then remain unlocated, shall be divided by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the respective plats thereof, as returned by the surveyor general, into as many lots, of one hundred acres each, as shall be equal, as nearly as may be, to the quantity such quarter township or fraction is stated to contain; each of which lots shall be included, where practicable, between parallel lines, one hundred and sixty perches in length, and one hundred perches in width, and shall be designated, by progressive numbers, upon the plat or survey of every such quarter township and fraction respectively.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the sixteenth day of March, it shall be lawful for the holder of any warrant granted for military services, to locate at any time before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and two, the number of hundred acres expressed in such warrant, on any lot or lots, from time to time, remaining unlocated within the tracts reserved as aforesaid, and upon surrendering such warrant to the Treasury, the holder thereof shall be entitled to receive a patent, in the manner and upon the conditions heretofore prescribed by law; which patent shall, in every case, express the range, township, quarter township, or fraction, and number of the lot located as aforesaid; but no location shall be allowed, nor shall any patent be issued for any lot or lots of one hundred acres, except in the name of the person originally entitled to such warrant, or the heir or heirs of the person so entitled; nor shall any land so located and patented to a person originally entitled to such warrant, be considered as in trust for any purchaser, or be subject to any contract made before the date of such patent, and the title to lands acquired, in consequence of patents issued as aforesaid, shall and may be alienated in pursuance of the laws, which have been, or shall be, passed in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, for regulating the transfer of real property, and not otherwise.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in all cases, after the sixteenth of March next, where more than one application is made for the same tract, at the same time, under this act, or under the act to which this is in addition, the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the priority of location by lot.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to advertise the tracts which may be reserved for location, in lots of one hundred acres, in one newspaper in each of the States, and in the territory aforesaid, for and during the term of three months.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the

An Act providing for salvage in cases of recapture.

Be it enacted, &c., That when any vessel other than a vessel of war or privateer, or when any goods which shall hereafter be taken as prize by any vessel, acting under authority from the Government of the United States, shall appear to have before belonged to any person or persons, resident within or under the protection of the United States, and to have been taken by an enemy of the United States, or under authority, or pretence of authority, from any Prince, Government, or State, against which the United States have authorized, or shall authorize defence or reprisals, such vessel or goods not having been condemned as prize by competent authority before the recapture thereof, the same shall be restored to the former owner or owners thereof, he or they paying for and in lieu of salvage, if retaken by a public vessel of the United States, one-eighth part, and if retaken by a private vessel of the United States, one-sixth part of the true value of the vessel or goods so to be restored, allowing and excepting all imposts and public duties to which the same may be liable. And if the vessel so retaken shall appear to have been set forth and armed as a vessel of war, before such capture or afterwards, and before the retaking thereof as aforesaid, the former owner or owners, on the restoration thereof, shall be adjudged to pay, for and in lieu of salvage, one moiety of the true value of such vessel of war or privateer.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That when any vessel or goods, which shall hereafter be taken as prize, by any vessel acting under authority from the Government of the United States, shall appear to have before belonged to the United States, and to have been taken by an enemy of the United States, or under authority, or pretence of authority, from any Prince, Government, or State, against which the United States have authorized, or shall authorize defence or reprisals, such public vessel not having been condemned as prize by competent authority before the recapture thereof, the same shall be restored to the United States. And for and in lieu of salvage, there shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to the final decree which shall be made in such case by any court of the United States, having competent jurisdiction thereof, to the parties who shall be thereby entitled to receive the same, for the recapture as aforesaid, of an unarmed vessel, or any goods therein, one-sixth part of the true value thereof, when made by a private vessel of the United States, and one-twelfth part of such value when the recapture shall be made by a public armed vessel of the United States; and for the recapture as aforesaid of a public armed vessel, or any goods therein, one moiety of the true value thereof, when made by a private vessel of the United States, and one-fourth part of such value, when such recapture shall be made by a public armed vessel of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when any vessel or goods which shall be taken as prize as aforesaid, shall appear to have belonged to any person or persons permanently resident within the territory, and under the protection of any foreign Prince, Government, or State, in amity with the United States, and to have been taken by an enemy of the United States, or by authority or pretence of authority from any Prince, Government, or State, against which the United States have authorized, or shall authorize, defence or reprisals, then such vessel or goods shall be adjudged to be restored to the former owner or owners thereof, he or they paying, for and in lieu of salvage, such proportion of the true value of the vessel or goods so to be restored, as by the law or usage of such Prince, Government, or State, within whose territory such former owner or owners shall be so resident, shall be required on the restoration of any vessel or goods of a citizen of the United States, under like circumstances of recapture, made by the authority of such foreign Prince, Government, or State; and where no such law or usage shall be known, the same salvage shall be allowed as is provided by the first section of this act: Provided, That no such vessel or goods shall be adjudged to be restored to such former owner or owners, in any case where the same shall have been, before the recapture thereof, condemned as prize by competent authority, nor in any case whereby the law or usage of the Prince, Government, or State, within whose territory such former owner or owners shall be resident as aforesaid, the vessel or goods of a citizen of the United States, under like circumstances of recapture, would not be restored to such citizen of the United States: Provided, also, That nothing herein shall be construed to contravene or alter the terms of restoration in cases of recapture, which are or shall be agreed on in any treaty between the United States and any foreign Prince, Government, or State.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all sums of money which may be paid for salvage, as aforesaid, when accruing to any public armed vessel, shall be divided to and among the commanders, officers, and crew thereof, in such proportions as are or may be provided by law, respecting the distribution of prize money: And when accruing to any private armed vessel, shall be distributed to and among the owners and company concerned in such recapture according to their agreements, if any such there be; and in case there be no such agreement, then to and among such persons, and in such proportions, as the court having jurisdiction thereof shall appoint.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That such parts of any acts of Congress of the United States, as respect the salvage to be allowed in cases of recapture, shall be, and are hereby, repealed, except as to cases of recapture made before the passing of this act.

Approved, March 3, 1800.

An Act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland and Georgia.

Be it enacted, &c., That the consent of Congress be, and hereby is, granted to the operation of an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, passed on the twenty-sixth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, entitled "An act empowering the wardens of the port of Baltimore to levy and collect the duty therein mentioned," and also to so much of an act of the State of Georgia, passed February the tenth, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, entitled "An act for regulating the trade, laying duties on all goods, wares, liquors, merchandise, and negroes, imported into this State; and, also, an impost on the tonnage of shipping, and for other purposes therein mentioned," as authorizes a duty of three pence per ton on all shipping entering the port of Savannah, to be set apart as a fund for clearing the river Savannah.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be, and continue in force until the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and eight, and no longer.

Approved, March 17, 1800.

An Act to alter the times of holding the District Court in North Carolina.

Be it enacted, &c., That the sessions of the district court for the district of North Carolina shall hereafter be holden on the first Monday in February, May, August, and November, annually.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all process which shall have been issued, and all recognizances returnable, and all suits and other proceeding, which have been continued to the said district court on the first Monday in April next, shall be returned and held continued to the said court on the first Monday of May next.

Approved, March 19, 1800.

An Act to extend the privilege of franking letters and packages to Martha Washington.

Be it enacted, &c., That all letters and packages to and from Martha Washington, relict of the late General George Washington, shall be received and conveyed by post free of postage, for and during her life.

Approved, April 3, 1800.

An Act to establish a uniform system of Bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the first day of June next, if any merchant, or other person, residing within the United States, actually using the trade of merchandise, by buying and selling in gross, or by retail, or dealing in exchange, or as a banker, broker, factor, underwriter, or marine insurer, shall, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his or their creditors, depart from the State in which such person usually resides, or remain absent therefrom, or conceal him or herself therein, or keep his or her house, so that he or she cannot be taken, or served with process, or willingly or fraudulently procure him or herself to be arrested, or his or her lands, goods, money or chattels to be attached, sequestered, or taken in execution, or shall secretly convey his or her goods out of his or her house, or conceal them to prevent their being taken in execution, or make, or cause to be made, any fraudulent conveyance of his or her lands, or chattels, or make or admit any false or fraudulent security, or evidence of debt, or being arrested for debt, or having surrendered him or herself in discharge of bail, shall remain in prison two months, or more, or escape therefrom, or whose lands or effects being attached by process issuing out of, or returnable to, any court of common law, shall not, within two months after written notice thereof, enter special bail and dissolve the same, or in districts in which attachments are not dissolved by the entry of special bail, being arrested for debt after his or her lands and effects, or any part thereof, have been attached for a debt or debts amounting to one thousand dollars or upwards, shall not, upon notice of such attachment, give sufficient security for the payment of what may be recovered in the suit in which he or she shall be arrested, at or before the return day of the same, to be approved by the judge of the district, or some judge of the court out of which the process issued upon which he is arrested, or to which the same shall be returnable, every such person shall be deemed and adjudged a bankrupt: Provided, That no person shall be liable to a commission of bankruptcy, if the petition be not preferred, in manner hereinafter directed, within six months after the act of bankruptcy committed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district where the debtor resides, or usually resided at the time of committing the act of bankruptcy, upon petition, in writing, against such person or persons being bankrupt, to him to be exhibited by any one creditor, or by a greater number, being partners, whose single debt shall amount to one thousand dollars, or by two creditors, whose debts shall amount to one thousand five hundred dollars, or by more than two creditors, whose debts shall amount to two thousand dollars, shall have power, by commission under his hand and seal, to appoint such good and substantial persons, being citizens of the United States, and resident in such district, as such judge shall deem proper, not exceeding three, to be commissioners of the said bankruptcy, and in case of vacancy or refusal to act, to appoint others, from time to time, as occasion may require: Provided always, That, before any commission shall issue, the creditor or creditors petitioning shall make affidavit or solemn affirmation, before the said judge, of the truth of his, her, or their debts, and give bond, to be taken by the said judge, in the name, and for the benefit of the said party so charged as a bankrupt, and in such penalty, and with such surety as he shall require, to be conditioned for the proving of his, her, or their debts, as well before the commissioners as upon a trial at law, in case the due issuing forth of the said commission shall be contested, and also for proving the party a bankrupt, and to proceed on such commission, in the manner herein prescribed. And if such debt shall not be really due, or after such commission taken out it cannot be proved that the party was a bankrupt, then the said judge shall, upon the petition of the party aggrieved, in case there be occasion, deliver such bond to the said party, who may sue thereon, and recover such damages, under the penalty of the same, as, upon trial at law, he shall make appear he has sustained, by reason of any breach of the condition thereof.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, before the commissioners shall be capable of acting, they shall respectively take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the judge issuing the commission, or by any of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, or any judge, justice, or chancellor of any State court, and filed in the office of the clerk of the district court: "I, A B, do swear, or affirm, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my skill and knowledge, execute the several powers and trusts reposed in me, as a commissioner in a commission of bankruptcy against —, and that without favor or affection, prejudice or malice." And the commissioners, who shall be sworn as aforesaid, shall proceed, as soon as may be, to execute the same; and, upon due examination, and sufficient cause appearing against the party charged, shall and may declare him or her to be a bankrupt: Provided, That before such examination be had, reasonable notice thereof, in writing, shall be delivered to the person charged as a bankrupt; or if he, or she, be not found at his or her usual place of abode, to some person of the family above the age of twelve years, or, if no such person appear, shall be fixed at the front or other public door of the house, in which he or she usually resides, and thereupon it shall be in the power of such person, so charged as aforesaid, to demand before, or at the time appointed for such examination, that a jury be empanelled to inquire into the fact or facts alleged as the causes for issuing the commission, and on such demand being made, the inquiry shall be had before the judge granting the commission, at such time as he may direct, and in that case such person shall not be declared bankrupt, unless, by the verdict of the jury, he or she shall be found to be within the description of this act, and shall be convicted of some one of the acts described in the first section of this act: Provided, also, That any commission which shall be taken out as aforesaid, and which shall not be proceeded in as aforesaid, within thirty days thereafter, may be superseded by the said judge, who shall have granted the same, upon the application of the party thereby charged as a bankrupt, or of any creditor of such person, unless the delay shall have been unavoidable, or upon a just occasion.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners so to be appointed, shall have power forthwith, after they have declared such person a bankrupt, to cause to be apprehended, by warrant under their hands and seals, the body of such bankrupt, wheresoever to be found, within the United States: Provided, They shall think that there is reason to apprehend that the said bankrupt intends to abscond or conceal him or herself, and in case it be necessary, in order to take the body of the said bankrupt, shall have power to cause the doors of the dwelling-house of such bankrupt to be broken, or the doors of any other house in which he or she shall be found.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the commissioners so to be appointed, forthwith after they have declared such person a bankrupt, and they shall have power to take into their possession, all the estate, real and personal, of every nature and description, to which the said bankrupt may be entitled, either in law or equity, in any manner whatsoever, and cause the same to be inventoried and appraised to the best value, (his or her necessary wearing apparel, and the necessary wearing apparel of the wife and children, and necessary beds and bedding of such bankrupt, only excepted,) and, also, to take into their possession, and secure, all deeds and books of account, papers, and writings, belonging to such bankrupt; and shall cause the same to be safely kept, until assignees shall be chosen or appointed, in manner hereafter provided.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall, forthwith after they have declared such person a bankrupt, cause due and sufficient public notice thereof to be given, and in such notice shall appoint some convenient time and place for the creditors to meet, in order to choose an assignee or assignees of the said bankrupt's estate and effects; at which meeting the said commissioners shall admit the creditors of such bankrupt to prove their debts; and where any creditor shall reside at a distance from the place of such meeting, shall allow the debt of such creditor to be proved by oath or affirmation, made before some competent authority, and duly certified, and shall permit any person duly authorized by letter of attorney from such creditor, due proof of the execution of such letter of attorney being first made, to vote in the choice of an assignee or assignees of such bankrupt's estate and effects, in the place and stead of such creditor: And the said commissioners shall assign, transfer, or deliver over, all and singular the said bankrupt's estate and effects aforesaid, with all muniments and evidences thereof, to such person or persons as the major part, in value, of such creditors, according to the several debts then proved, shall choose as aforesaid: Provided always, That in such choice, no vote shall be given by, or in behalf of, any creditor whose debt shall not amount to two hundred dollars.

SEC. 7. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as often as they shall see cause, for the better preserving and securing the bankrupt's estate, before assignees shall be chosen as aforesaid, immediately to appoint one or more assignee or assignees of the estate and effects aforesaid, or any part thereof; which assignee or assignees aforesaid, or any of them, may be removed at the meeting of the creditors, so to be appointed as aforesaid, for the choice of assignees, if such creditors, entitled to vote as aforesaid, or the major part, in value, of them, shall think fit; and such assignee or assignees as shall be so removed, shall deliver up all the estate and effects of such bankrupt, which shall have come to his or their hands or possession, unto such other assignee or assignees as shall be chosen by the creditors as aforesaid; and all such estate and effects shall be, to all intents and purposes, as effectually and legally vested in such new assignee or assignees, as if the first assignment had been made to him or them, by the said commissioners; and if such first assignee or assignees shall refuse or neglect, for the space of ten days next after notice, in writing, from such new assignee or assignees, of their appointment, as aforesaid, to deliver over as aforesaid, all the estate and effects as aforesaid, every such assignee or assignees, shall, respectively, forfeit a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, for the use of the creditors, and shall moreover be liable for the property so detained.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That at any time, previous to the closing of the accounts of the said assignee or assignees so chosen as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such creditors of the bankrupt, as are hereby authorized to vote in the choice of assignees, or the major part of them, in value, at a regular meeting of the said creditors, to be called for that purpose, by the said commissioners, or by one-fourth, in value, of such creditors, to remove all or any of the assignees chosen as aforesaid, and to choose one or more in his or their place and stead; and such assignee or assignees as shall be so removed, shall deliver up all the estate and effects of such bankrupt, which shall have come into his or their hands or possession, unto such new assignee or assignees as shall be chosen by the creditors at such meeting; and all such estate and effects shall be, to all intents and purposes, as effectually and legally vested in such new assignee or assignees, as if the first assignment had been made to him or them, by the said commissioners: And if such former assignee or assignees shall refuse or neglect, for the space of ten days next after notice, in writing, from such new assignee or assignees, of their appointment, as aforesaid, to deliver over, as aforesaid, all the estate and effects aforesaid, every such former assignee or assignees, shall, respectively, forfeit a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, for the use of the creditors, and shall moreover be liable for the property so detained.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever a new assignee or assignees shall be chosen, as aforesaid, no suit at law or in equity shall be thereby abated; but it shall and may be lawful for the court in which any suit may depend, upon the suggestion of a removal of a former assignee or assignees, and of the appointment of a new assignee or assignees; to allow the name of such new assignee or assignees to be substituted in place of the name or names of the former assignee or assignees, and thereupon the suit shall be prosecuted in the name or names of the new assignee or assignees, in the same manner as if he or they had originally commenced the suit in his or their own names.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the assignment or assignments of the commissioners of the bankrupt's estate and effects as aforesaid, made as aforesaid, shall be good at law or in equity, against the bankrupt; and all persons claiming by, from, or under, such bankrupt, by any act done at the time, or after he shall have committed the act of bankruptcy, upon which the commission issued: Provided always, That in case of a bona fide purchase made before the issuing of the commission from or under such bankrupt, for a valuable consideration, by any person having no knowledge, information, or notice, of any act of bankruptcy committed, such purchase shall not be invalidated or impeached.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall have power, by deed or deeds, under their hands and seals, to assign and convey to the assignee or assignees, to be appointed or chosen as aforesaid, any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which such bankrupt shall be seized of, or entitled to, in fee tail, at law, or in equity, in possession, remainder, or reversion, for the benefit of the creditors; and all such deeds, being duly executed and recorded, according to the laws of the State within which such lands, tenements, or hereditaments may be situate, shall be good and effectual against all persons whom the said bankrupt, by common recovery, or other means, might or could bar of any estate, right, title, or possibility, of or in the said lands, tenements, or hereditaments.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That if any bankrupt shall have conveyed or assured any lands, goods, or estate, unto any person, upon condition or power of redemption, by payment of money or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, or for any person by them duly authorized for that purpose, by writing, under their hands and seals, to make tender of money or other performance, according to the nature of such condition, as fully as the bankrupt might have done; and the commissioners, after such performance or tender, shall have power to assign such lands, goods, and estate, for the benefit of the creditors, as fully and effectually as any other part of the estate of such bankrupt.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners aforesaid shall have power to assign, for the use aforesaid, all the debts due to such bankrupt, or to any other person for his or her use or benefit; which assignment shall vest the property and right thereof in the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt, as fully as if the bond, judgment, contract, or claim, had originally belonged or been made to the said assignees; and after the said assignment, neither the said bankrupt, nor any person acting as trustee for him or her, shall have power to recover or discharge the same, nor shall the same be attached as the debt of the said bankrupt; but the assignee or assignees aforesaid shall have such remedy to recover the same, in his or their own name or names, as such bankrupt might or could have had, if no commission of bankruptcy had issued: And when any action in the name of such bankrupt shall have been commenced, and shall be pending, for the recovery of any debt or effects of such bankrupt, which shall be assigned, or shall, or might become vested in the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt as aforesaid, then such assignee or assignees may claim to be, and shall be thereupon, admitted to prosecute such action in his or their name, for the use and benefit of the creditors of such bankrupt; and the same judgment shall be rendered in such action, and all attachments or other security taken therein, shall be in like manner holden and liable, as if the said action had been originally commenced in the name of such assignee or assignees, after the original plaintiff therein had become a bankrupt as aforesaid: Provided, That where a debtor shall have, bona fide, paid his debt to any bankrupt, without notice that such person was bankrupt, he or she shall not be liable to pay the same to the assignee or assignees.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That if complaint shall be made or information given to the commissioners, or if they shall have good reason to believe or suspect, that any of the property, goods, chattels, or debts, of the bankrupt, are in the possession of any other person, or that any person is indebted to, or for the use of the bankrupt, then the said commissioners shall have power to summon, or cause to be summoned, by their attorney or other person duly authorized by them, all such persons before them, or the judge of a district where such persons shall reside, by such process, or other means, as they shall think convenient, and, upon their appearance, to examine them by parole, or by interrogatories, in writing, on oath or affirmation, which oath or affirmation they are hereby empowered to administer, respecting the knowledge of all such property, goods, chattels, and debts; and if such person shall refuse to be sworn or affirmed, and to make answers to such questions or interrogatories as shall be administered, and to subscribe the said answers, or upon examination shall not declare the whole truth, touching the subject-matter of such examination, then it shall be lawful for the commissioners, or judge, to commit such person to prison, there to be detained until they shall submit themselves to be examined in manner aforesaid, and they shall, moreover, forfeit double the value of all the property, goods, chattels, and debts, by them concealed.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That if any of the aforesaid persons shall, after legal summons to appear before the commissioners or judge, to be examined, refuse to attend, or shall not attend at the time appointed, having no such impediment as shall be allowed of by the commissioner or judge, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners or judge to direct their warrants to such person or persons as by them shall be thought proper, to apprehend such persons as shall refuse to appear, and to bring them before the commissioners or judge, to be examined, and upon their refusal to come, to commit them to prison, until they shall submit themselves to be examined, according to the directions of this act: Provided, That such witnesses as shall be sent for, shall be allowed such compensation as the commissioners, or judge, shall think fit, to be rateably borne by the creditors; and if any person, other than the bankrupt, either by subornation of others, or by his or her own act, shall wilfully or corruptly commit perjury on such examination, to be taken before the commissioners as aforesaid, the party so offending, and all persons who shall procure any person to commit such perjury, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined, not exceeding four thousand dollars, and imprisoned, not exceeding two years, and moreover shall, in either case, be rendered incapable of being a witness in any court of record.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall fraudulently, or collusively claim any debts, or claim or detain any real or personal estate of the bankrupt, every such person shall forfeit double the value thereof, to and for the use of the creditors.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That if any person, prior to his or her becoming a bankrupt, shall convey to any of his or her children, or other persons, any lands or goods, or transfer his or [her] debts or demands into other person's names, with intent to defraud his or her creditors, the commissioners shall have power to assign the same, in as effectual a manner as if the bankrupt had been actually seized or possessed thereof.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons who shall become bankrupt within the intent and meaning of this act, and against whom a commission of bankruptcy shall be duly issued, upon which commission such person or persons shall be declared bankrupt, shall not, within forty-two days after notice thereof, in writing, to be left at the usual place of abode of such person or persons, or personal notice in case such person or persons be then in prison, and notice given in some gazette, that such commission hath been issued, and of the time and place of meeting of the commissioners, surrender him or herself to the said commissioners, and sign or subscribe such surrender, and submit to be examined, from time to time, upon oath or solemn affirmation, by and before such commissioners, and in all things conform to the provisions of this act, and also upon such his or her examination, fully and truly disclose and discover all his or her effects and estate, real and personal, and how and in what manner, to whom and upon what consideration, and at what time or times he or she hath disposed of, assigned or transferred, any of his or her goods, wares, or merchandise, moneys, or other effects and estate, and of all books, papers, and writings, relating thereunto, of which he or she was possessed, or in or to which he or she was any ways interested or entitled, or which any person or persons shall then have, or shall have had in trust for him or her, or for his or her use, at any time before or after the issuing of the said commission, or whereby such bankrupt, or his or her family, then hath, or may have or expect any profit, possibility of profit, benefit or advantage whatsoever, except only such part of his or her estate and effects as shall have been really and bona fide before sold and disposed of, in the way of his or her trade and dealings, and except such sums of money as shall have been laid out in the ordinary expenses of his or her family, and also, upon such examination, execute in due form of law, such conveyance, assurance, and assignment of his or her estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, as shall be devised and directed by the commissioners, to vest the same in the assignees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever, in trust, for the use of all and every the creditors of such bankrupt, who shall come in and prove their debts under the commission; and deliver up unto the commissioners, all such part of his or her, the said bankrupt's, goods, wares, merchandise, money, effects, and estate, and all books, papers, and writings, relating thereunto, as at the time of such examination shall be in his or her possession, custody, or power, his or her necessary wearing apparel, and the necessary wearing apparel of the wife and children, and necessary beds and bedding, of such bankrupt only excepted, then he or she, the said bankrupt, upon the conviction of any wilful default, or omission in any of the matters or things aforesaid, shall be adjudged a fraudulent bankrupt, and shall suffer imprisonment for a term not less than twelve months, nor exceeding ten years, and shall not, at any time after, be entitled to the benefits of this act: Provided always, That in case any bankrupt shall be in prison or custody at the time of issuing such commission, and is willing to surrender and submit to be examined, according to the directions of this act, and can be brought before the said commissioners and creditors for that purpose, the expense thereof shall be paid out of the said bankrupt's effects, and in case such bankrupt is in execution, or cannot be brought before the commissioners, that then the said commissioners, or some one of them, shall, from time to time, attend the said bankrupt in prison or custody, and take his or her discovery as in other cases, and the assignees, or one of them, or some person appointed by them, shall attend such bankrupt in prison or custody, and produce his or her books, papers, and writings, in order to enable him or her to prepare his or her discovery; a copy whereof the said assignees shall apply for, and the said bankrupt shall deliver to them or their order, within a reasonable time after the same shall have been required.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall appoint, within the said forty-two days, so limited as aforesaid, for the bankrupt to surrender and conform as aforesaid, not less than three several meetings for the purposes aforesaid, the third of which meetings shall be on the last of the said forty-two days: Provided always, That the judge of the district within which such commission issues, shall have power to enlarge the time so limited as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid, as he shall think fit, not exceeding fifty days, to be computed from the end of the said forty-two days, so as such order for enlarging the time be made at least six days before the expiration of said term.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the commissioners, or any other person or officers, by them to be appointed by their warrant, under their hands and seals, to break open in the day-time the houses, chambers, shops, warehouses, doors, trunks, or chests, of the bankrupt, where any of his or her goods or estate, deeds, books of account, or writings, shall be, and to take possession of the goods, money, and other estate, deeds, books of account, or writings, of such bankrupt.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That if the bankrupt shall refuse to be examined, or to answer fully, or to subscribe his or her examination, as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to commit the offender to close imprisonment, until he or she shall conform him or herself; and if the said bankrupt shall submit to be examined, and upon his or her examination, it shall appear that he or she hath committed wilful or corrupt perjury, he or she may be indicted therefor, and, being thereof convicted, shall suffer imprisonment for a term not less than two years, nor exceeding ten years.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That every bankrupt, having surrendered, shall, at all seasonable times before the expiration of the said forty-two days, as aforesaid, or of such further time as shall be allowed to finish his or her examination, be at liberty to inspect his or her books and writings, in the presence of some person to be appointed by the commissioners, and to bring with him or her, for his or her assistance, such persons as he or she shall think fit, not exceeding two at one time, and to make extracts and copies, to enable him or her to make a full discovery of his or her effects; and the said bankrupt shall be free from arrests, in coming to surrender, and, after having surrendered to the said commissioners, for the said forty-two days, or such further time as shall be allowed for the finishing his or her examination; and in case such bankrupt shall be arrested for debt, or taken on any escape warrant or execution, coming to surrender, or after his surrender, within the time before mentioned, then on producing such summons or notice under the hand of the commissioners, and giving the officer a copy thereof, he or she shall be discharged; and in case any officer shall afterwards detain such bankrupt, such officers shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his or her own use, ten dollars for every day he shall detain the bankrupt.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall, knowingly, or wilfully, receive or keep concealed any bankrupt, so as aforesaid summoned to appear, or who shall assist such bankrupt in concealing him or herself, or in absconding, shall suffer such imprisonment, not exceeding twelve months, or pay such fine to the United States, not exceeding one thousand dollars, as upon conviction thereof shall be adjudged.

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall have power to examine, upon oath or affirmation, the wife of any person lawfully declared a bankrupt, for the discovery of such part of his estate as may be concealed or disposed of by such wife, or by any other person; and the said wife shall incur such penalties for not appearing before the said commissioners, or refusing to be sworn or affirmed, or examined, and to subscribe her examination, or for not disclosing the truth, as by this act is provided against any other person in like cases.

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That in case any person shall be committed by the commissioners for refusing to answer, or for not fully answering, any question, or for any other cause, the commissioners shall, in their warrant, specify such question or other cause of commitment.

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That if after the bankrupt shall have finished his or her final examination, any other person or persons shall voluntarily make discovery of any part of such bankrupt's estate, before unknown to the commissioners, such person or persons shall be entitled to five per cent. out of the effects so discovered, and such further reward as the commissioners shall think proper; and any trustee, having notice of the bankruptcy, wilfully concealing the estate of any bankrupt, for the space of ten days after the bankrupt shall have finished his final examination, as aforesaid, shall forfeit double the value of the estate so concealed, for the benefit of the creditors.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall become bankrupt, and at such time, by consent of the owner, have in his or her possession and disposition, any goods whereof he or she shall be reputed owner, and take upon him or herself, the sale, alteration, or disposition thereof, as owner, the commissioners shall have power to assign the same, for the benefit of the creditors, as fully as any other part of the estate of the bankrupt.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That if any bankrupt, after the issuing any commission against him or her, pay to the person who sued out the same, or give or deliver to such person, goods, or any other satisfaction or security, for his or her debt, whereby such person shall privately have and receive a greater proportion of his or her debt than the other creditors, such preference shall be a new act of bankruptcy, and, on good proof thereof, such commission shall and may be superseded, and it shall and may be lawful for either of the judges, having authority to grant the commission as aforesaid, to award any creditor petitioning another commission; and such person, so taking such undue satisfaction as aforesaid, shall forfeit and lose, as well his or her whole debts, as the whole he or she shall have taken and received, and shall pay back, or deliver up the same, or the full value thereof, to the assignee or assignees who shall be appointed or chosen under such commission, in manner aforesaid, in trust for, and to be divided among the other creditors of the said bankrupt, in proportion to their respective debts.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall be chosen assignee of the estate and effects of a bankrupt, shall, at some time after the expiration of four months, and within twelve months from the time of issuing the commission, cause at least thirty days public notice to be given, of the time and place the commissioners and assignees intend to meet, to make a dividend or distribution of the bankrupt's estate and effects; at which time the creditors, who have not before proved their debts, shall be at liberty to prove the same; and, upon every such meeting, the assignee or assignees shall produce to the commissioners and creditors, then present, fair and just accounts of all his or their receipts and payments, touching the bankrupt's estate and effects, and of what shall remain outstanding, and the particulars thereof, and shall, if the creditors then present, or a major part of them, require the same, be examined upon oath or solemn affirmation, before the same commissioners, touching the truth of such accounts; and in such accounts the said assignee or assignees shall be allowed and retain all such sums of money, as they shall have paid or expended in suing out and prosecuting the commission, and all other just allowances on account of, or by reason or means of their being assignee or assignees; and the said commissioners shall order such part of the net produce of the said bankrupt's estate, as by such accounts or otherwise shall appear to be in the hands of the said assignees, as they shall think fit, to be forthwith divided among such of the bankrupt's creditors as have duly proved their debts under such commission, in proportion to their several and respective debts; and the commissioners shall make such their order for a dividend in writing, under their hands, and shall cause one part of such order to be filed amongst the proceedings under the said commission, and shall deliver unto each of the assignees, under such commission, a duplicate of such their order, which order of distribution shall contain an account of the time and place of making such order, and the sum total or quantum of all the debts proved under the commission, and the sum total of the money remaining in the hands of the assignee or assignees to be divided, and how many per cent. in particular is there ordered to be paid to every creditor of his debt; the said assignee or assignees in pursuance of such order, and without any deed or deeds of distribution, to be made for the purpose, shall forthwith make such dividend and distribution accordingly, and shall take receipts, in a book to be kept for the purpose, from each creditor, for the part or share of such dividend or distribution, which he or they shall make, and pay to each creditor respectively; and such order and receipt shall be a full and effectual discharge to such assignee for so much as he shall fairly pay, pursuant to such order as aforesaid.

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That, within eighteen months next after the issuing of the commission, the assignee or assignees shall make a second dividend of the bankrupt's estate and effects, in case the same were not wholly divided upon the first dividend, and shall cause due public notice to be given of the time and place the said commissioners intend to meet, to make a second distribution of the bankrupt's estate and effects, and for the creditors who shall not before have proved their debts, to come in and prove the same; and at such meeting, the said assignees shall produce, on oath or solemn affirmation, as aforesaid, their accounts of the bankrupt's estate and effects, and what, upon the balance thereof, shall appear to be in their hands, shall, by like order of the commissioners, be forthwith divided amongst such of the bankrupt's creditors as shall have made due proof of their debts, in proportion to their several and respective debts; which second dividend shall be final, unless any suit at law, or equity, be depending, or any part of the estate standing out, that could not have been disposed of, or that the major part of the creditors shall not have agreed to be sold or disposed of, or unless some other or future estate or effects of the bankrupt shall afterwards come to, or rest in the said assignees, in which cases the said assignees shall, as soon as may be, convert such future or other estate and effects into money, and shall, within two months after the same be converted into money, by like order of the commissioners, divide the same among such bankrupt's creditors as shall have made due proof of their debt under such commission.

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That, in the distribution of the bankrupt's effects, there shall be paid to every of the creditors a portion rate, according to the amount of their respective debts, so that every creditor having security for his debt by judgment, statute, recognizance, or specialty, or having an attachment under any of the laws of the individual States, or of the United States, on the estate of such bankrupt, (Provided, there be no execution executed upon any of the real or personal estate of such bankrupt, before the time he or she became bankrupts,) shall not be relieved upon any such judgment, statute, recognizance, specialty, or attachment, for more than a rateable part of his debt, with the other creditors of the bankrupt.

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That the assignees shall keep one or more distinct book or books of account, wherein he or they shall duly enter all sums of money or effects, which he or they shall have received, or got into his or their possession, of the said bankrupt's estate, to which books of account, every creditor, who shall have proved his or her debt, shall, at all reasonable times, have free resort, and inspect the same as often as he or she shall think fit.

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted. That every bankrupt, not being in prison or custody, shall, at all times after his surrender, be bound to attend the assignees, upon every reasonable notice, in writing, for that purpose, given or left at the usual place of his or her abode, in order to assist in making out the accounts of the said bankrupt's estate and effects, and to attend any court of record, to be examined touching the same, or such other business as the said assignees shall judge necessary, for which he shall receive three dollars per day.

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That all and every person and persons who shall become bankrupt as aforesaid, and who shall, within the time limited by this act, surrender him or herself to the commissioners, and in all things conform as in and by this act is directed, shall be allowed five per cent. upon the net produce of all the estate that shall be recovered in and received, which shall be paid unto him or her by the assignee or assignees, in case the net produce of such estate, after such allowance made, shall be sufficient to pay the creditors of said bankrupt, who shall have proved their debts under such commission, the amount of fifty per cent. on their said debts, respectively, and so as the said five per cent. shall not exceed in the whole the sum of five hundred dollars; and in case the net produce of the said estate shall, over and above the allowance hereafter mentioned, be sufficient to pay the said creditors seventy-five per cent. on the amount of their said debts, respectively, that then the said bankrupt shall be allowed ten per cent. on the amount of such net produce, to be paid as aforesaid, so as such ten per cent. shall not in the whole, exceed the sum of eight hundred dollars; and every such bankrupt shall be discharged from all debts by him or her due or owing, at the time he or she became bankrupt, and all which were or might have been proved under the said commission; and in case any such bankrupt shall afterwards be arrested, prosecuted or impleaded, for or on account of any of the said debts, such bankrupt may appear without bail, and may plead the general issue, and give this act, and the special matter in evidence: And the certificate of such bankrupt's conforming, and the allowance thereof, according to the directions of this act, shall be, and shall be allowed to be, sufficient evidence, prima facie, of the party's being a bankrupt within the meaning of this act, and of the commission and other proceedings precedent to the obtaining such certificate, and a verdict shall thereupon pass for the defendant, unless the plaintiff in such action can prove the said certificate was obtained unfairly, and by fraud, or unless he can make appear any concealment of estate or effects, by such bankrupt, to the value of one hundred dollars: Provided, That no such discharge of a bankrupt shall release or discharge any person who was a partner with such bankrupt, at the time he or she became bankrupt, or who was then jointly held or bound with such bankrupt, for the same debt or debts from which such bankrupt was discharged as aforesaid.

SEC. 35. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if the net proceeds of the bankrupt's estate, so to be discovered, recovered, and received, shall not amount to so much as will pay all and every of the creditors of the said bankrupt, who shall have proved their debts under the said commission, the amount of fifty per cent. on their debts respectively, after all charges first deducted, that then, and in such case, the bankrupt shall not be allowed five per centum on such estate as shall be recovered in, but shall have and be paid by the assignees so much money as the commissioners shall think fit to allow, not more than three hundred dollars, nor exceeding two per centum on the net proceeds of the said bankrupt's estate.

SEC. 36. Provided also, and be it further enacted, That no person becoming a bankrupt according to the intent and provisions of this act, shall be entitled to a certificate of discharge, or to any of the benefits of the act, unless the commissioners shall certify under their hands, to the judge of the district within which such commission issues, that such bankrupt hath made a full discovery of his or her estate and effects, and in all things conformed him or herself to the directions of this act, and that there doth not appear to them any reason to doubt of the truth of such discovery, or that the same was not a full discovery of the said bankrupt's estate and effects; or unless the said judge should be of opinion that the said certificate was unreasonably denied by the commissioners; and unless two-thirds in number and in value of the creditors of the bankrupt, who shall be creditors for not less than fifty dollars respectively, and who shall have duly proved their debts under the said commission, shall sign such certificate to the judge, and testify their consent to the allowance of a certificate of discharge, in pursuance of this act; which signing and consent shall be also certified by the commissioners; but the said commissioners shall not certify the same till they have proof by affidavit or information, in writing, of such creditors, or of the persons respectively authorized for that purpose, signing the said certificate; which affidavit or information, together with the letter or power of attorney to sign, shall be laid before the judge of the district within which such commission issues, in order for the allowing the certificate of discharge, and the said certificate shall not be allowed unless the bankrupt make oath or affirmation, in writing, that the certificate of the commissioners, and consent of the creditors thereunto were obtained fairly and without fraud; and any of the creditors of the said bankrupt are allowed to be heard, if they shall think fit, before the respective persons aforesaid, against the making or allowing of such certificates by the commissioners or judge.

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That if any creditor, or pretended creditor, of any bankrupt, shall exhibit to the commissioners any fictitious or false debt or demand, with intent to defraud the real creditors of such bankrupt, and the bankrupt shall refuse to make discovery thereof, and suffer the fair creditors to be imposed upon, he shall lose all title to the allowance upon the amount of his effects, and to a certificate of discharge as aforesaid, nor shall he be entitled to the said allowance or certificate, if he has lost at any one time fifty dollars, or in the whole three hundred dollars, after the passing of this act, and within twelve months before he became a bankrupt, by any manner of gaming or wagering whatever.

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That if any bankrupt, who shall have obtained his certificate, shall be taken in execution or detained in prison, on account of any debts owing before he became a bankrupt, by reason that judgment was obtained before such certificate was allowed, it shall be lawful for any of the judges of the court wherein judgment was obtained, or for any court, judge, or justice, within the district in which such bankrupt shall be detained, having powers to award or allow the writ of habeas corpus, on such bankrupt producing his certificate so as aforesaid allowed, to order any sheriff or jailer who shall have such bankrupt in custody, to discharge such bankrupt without fee or charge, first giving reasonable notice to the plaintiff, or his attorney, of the motion for such discharge.

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall have bona fide given credit to or taken securities, payable at future days, from persons who are or shall become bankrupts, not due at the time of such persons becoming bankrupt, shall be admitted to prove their debts and contracts, as if they were payable presently, and shall have a dividend in proportion to the other creditors, discounting, where no interest is payable, at the rate of so much per centum per annum, as is equal to the lawful interest of the State where the debt was payable; and the obligee of any bottomry or respondentia bond, and the assured in any policy of insurance, shall be admitted to claim, and after the contingency or loss, to prove the debt thereon, in like manner as if the same had happened before issuing the commission; and the bankrupt shall be discharged from such securities, as if such money had been due and payable before the time of his or her becoming bankrupt; and such creditors may petition for a commission, or join in petitioning.

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That in case any person, committed by the commissioners' warrant, shall obtain a habeas corpus, in order to be discharged, and there shall appear any insufficiency in the form of the warrant, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom such party shall be brought by habeas corpus, by rule or warrant, to commit such person to the same prison, there to remain until he shall conform as aforesaid, unless it shall be made to appear that he had fully answered all lawful questions put to him by the commissioners; or in case such person was committed for not signing his examination, unless it shall appear that the party had good reason for refusing to sign the same, or that the commissioners had exceeded their authority in making such commitment; and in case the jailer to whom such person shall be committed shall wilfully or negligently suffer such person to escape, or to go without the doors or walls of the prison, such jailer shall, for such offence, being convicted thereof, forfeit a sum not exceeding three thousand dollars for the use of the creditors.

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That the jailer shall, upon the request of any creditor, having proved his debt, and showing a certificate thereof, under the hands of the commissioners, which the commissioners shall give without fee or reward, produce the person so committed; and in case such jailer shall refuse to show such person to such creditor requesting the same, such person shall be considered as having escaped, and the jailer or sheriff so refusing shall be liable as for a wilful escape.

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That where it shall appear to the said commissioners that there hath been mutual credit given by the bankrupt, and any other person, or mutual debts between them at any time before such person became bankrupt, the assignee or assignees of the estate shall state the account between them, and one debt may be set off against the other, and what shall appear to be due on either side on the balance of such account after such set-off, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side, respectively.

SEC. 43. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful to and for the assignee or assignees of any bankrupt's estate and effects, under the direction of the commissioners, and by and with the consent of the major part in value of such of the said bankrupt's creditors as shall have duly proved their debts under the commission, and shall be present at any meeting of the said creditors, to be held in pursuance of due and public notice for that purpose given, to submit any difference or dispute for, on account of, or by reason or means of, any matter, cause, or thing whatsoever, relating to such bankrupt, or to his or her estate or effects, to the final end and determination of arbitrators to be chosen by the said commissioners, and the major part in value of such creditors as shall be present at such meeting as aforesaid, and the party or parties with whom they shall have had such difference or dispute, and to perform the award of such arbitrators, or otherwise to compound and agree the matter in difference and dispute aforesaid, in such manner as the said assignee or assignees, under the direction and with the consent aforesaid, shall think fit and can agree; and the same shall be binding on the several creditors of the said bankrupt, and the said assignee or assignees are hereby indemnified for what they shall fairly do, according to the directions aforesaid.

SEC. 44. And be it further enacted, That the assignees shall be, and hereby are, vested with full power to dispose of all the bankrupt's estate, real and personal, at public auction or vendue, without being subject to any tax, duty, imposition, or restriction, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 45. And be it further enacted, That if after any commission of bankruptcy, sued forth, the bankrupt happen to die before the commissioners shall have distributed the effects, or any part thereof, the commissioners shall, nevertheless, proceed to execute the commission, as fully as they might have done if the party were living.

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That where any commission of bankruptcy shall be delivered to the commissioners therein named, to be executed, it shall and may be lawful for them, before they take the oath or affirmation of qualification, to demand and take from the creditor or creditors prosecuting such commission, a bond with one good security, if required, in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses, which shall arise and accrue upon the prosecution of the said commission: Provided, always, That the expenses so as aforesaid to be secured and paid by the petitioning creditor or creditors, shall be repaid to him or them by the commissioners or assignees, out of the first moneys arising from the bankrupt's estate or effects, if so much be received therefrom.

SEC. 47. And be it further enacted, That the district judges, in each district, respectively, shall fix a rate of allowance to be made to the commissioners of bankruptcy, as compensation of services to be rendered under the commission, and it shall be lawful for any creditor, by petition to the district judge, to except to any charge contained in the account of the commissioners; and the said judge, after hearing the commissioners, may in a summary way decide upon the validity of such exception.

SEC. 48. And be it further enacted, That all penalties given by this act for the benefit of the creditors, shall be recovered by the assignee or assignees by action of debt, and the money so recovered, the charges of suit being deducted, shall be distributed towards payment of the creditors.

SEC. 49. And be it further enacted, That if any action shall be brought against any commissioner, or assignee, or other person, having authority under the commission, for anything done or performed by force of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence; and in case of a non-suit, discontinuance, or verdict or judgment for him, he shall recover double costs.

SEC. 50. And be it further enacted, That if any estate, real or personal, shall descend, revert to, or become vested in, any person, after he or she shall be declared a bankrupt, and before he or she shall obtain a certificate, signed by the judge as aforesaid, all such estate shall, by virtue of this act, be vested in the said commissioners, and shall be by them assigned and conveyed to the assignee or assignees in fee simple, or otherwise, in like manner as above directed, with the estate of the said bankrupt, at the time of the bankruptcy, and the proceeds thereof shall be divided among the creditors.

SEC. 51. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall, once in every year, carefully file, in the clerk's office of the district court, all the proceedings had in every case before them, and which shall have been finished, including the commissions, examinations, dividends, entries, and other determinations, of the said commissioners, in which office the final certificate of the said bankrupt may also be recorded; all which proceedings shall remain of record in the said office, and certified copies thereof shall be admitted as evidence in all courts, in like manner as the copies of the proceedings of the said district court are admitted in other cases.

SEC. 52. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for any creditor of such bankrupt, to attend all or any of the examinations of said bankrupt, and the allowance of the final certificate, if he shall think proper, and then and there to propose interrogatories, to be put by the judge or commissioners, to the said bankrupt and others, and also to produce and examine witnesses and documents, before such judge or commissioners, relative to the subject-matter before them. And in case either the bankrupt or creditor shall think him or herself aggrieved by the determination of the said judge or commissioners, relative to any material fact, in the commencement or progress of the said proceedings, or in the allowance of the certificate aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for either party to petition the said judge, setting forth such facts and the determination thereon, with the complaint of the party, and a prayer for trial by a jury to determine the same, and the said judge shall, in his discretion, make order thereon, and award a venire facias to the marshal of the district, returnable within fifteen days before him, for the trial of the facts mentioned in the said petition, notice whereof shall be given to the commissioners and creditors concerned in the same; at which time the said trial shall be had, unless, on good cause shown, the judge shall give farther time; and judgment being entered on the verdict of the jury, shall be final, on the said facts, and the judge or commissioners shall proceed agreeably thereto.

SEC. 53. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners, before the appointment of assignees, and the assignees after such appointment, may, from time to time, make such allowance out of the bankrupt's estate, until he shall have obtained his final discharge, as in their opinion may be requisite for the necessary support of the said bankrupt and his family.

SEC. 54. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the major part in value of the creditors, before they proceed to the choice of assignees, to direct in what manner, with whom, and where, the moneys arising by, and to be received from time to time out of, the bankrupt's estate, shall be lodged until the same shall be divided among the creditors, as herein provided; to which direction every such assignee and assignees shall conform as often as three hundred dollars shall be received.

SEC. 55. And be it further enacted, That every matter and thing, by this act required to be done by the commissioners of any bankrupt, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, if performed by a majority of them.

SEC. 56. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the assignees shall prosecute any debtor of the bankrupt, for any debt, duty, or demand, the commission, or a certified copy thereof, and the assignment of the commissioners of the bankrupt's estate, shall be conclusive evidence of the issuing the commission, and of the person named therein being a trader and bankrupt, at the time mentioned therein.

SEC. 57. And be it further enacted, That every person obtaining a discharge from his debts, by certificate as aforesaid, granted under a commission of bankruptcy, shall not, on any future commission, be entitled to any other certificate than a discharge of his person only; unless the net proceeds of the estate and effects of such person, so becoming bankrupt a second time, shall be sufficient to pay seventy-five per cent. to his or her creditors on the amount of their debts respectively.

SEC. 58. And be it further enacted, That any creditor of a person, against whom a commission of bankruptcy shall have been sued forth, and who shall lay his claim before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of this act, may at the same time declare his unwillingness to submit the same to the judgment of the said commissioners, and his wish that a jury may be impaneled to decide thereon: And in like manner the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt may object to the consideration of any particular claim by the commissioners, and require that the same should be referred to a jury. In either case, such objection and request shall be entered on the books of the commissioners, and thereupon an issue shall be made up between the parties, and a jury shall be impaneled, as in other cases, to try the same in the circuit court for the district in which such bankrupt has usually resided. The verdict of such jury shall be subject to the control of the court, as in suits originally instituted in the said court, and when rendered, if not set aside by the court, shall be certified to the commissioners, and shall ascertain the amount of any such claim, and such creditor or creditors shall be considered in all respects as having proved their debts under the commission.

SEC. 59. And be it further enacted, That the lands and effects of any person becoming bankrupt may be sold on such credit, and on such security, as a major part in value of the creditors may direct: Provided, nothing herein contained shall be allowed so to operate, as to retard the granting the bankrupt's certificate.

SEC. 60. And be it further enacted, That if any person becoming bankrupt shall be in prison, it shall be lawful for any creditor or creditors, at whose suit he or she shall be in execution, to discharge him or her from custody, or if such creditor or creditors shall refuse to do so, the prisoner may petition the commissioners, to liberate him or her, and thereupon, if, in the opinion of the commissioners, the conduct of such bankrupt shall have been fair, so as to entitle him or her in their opinion, to a certificate, when by law such certificate might be given, it shall be lawful for them to direct the discharge of such prisoner, and to enter the same in their books, which being notified to the keeper of the jail in which such prisoner may be confined, shall be a sufficient authority for his or her discharge: Provided, That in either case, such discharge shall be no bar to another execution, if a certificate shall be refused to such bankrupt: And provided also, that it shall be no bar to a subsequent imprisonment of such bankrupt by order of the commissioners, in conformity with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 61. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not repeal or annul, or be construed to repeal or annul, the laws of any State now in force, or which may be hereafter enacted, for the relief of insolvent debtors, except so far as the same may respect persons who are, or may be, clearly within the purview of this act, and whose debts shall amount, in the cases specified in the second section thereof, to the sums therein mentioned. And if any person within the purview of this act, shall be imprisoned for the space of three months, for any debt, or upon any contract, unless the creditors of such prisoner shall proceed to prosecute a commission of bankruptcy against him or her, agreeably to the provisions of this act, such debtor may and shall be entitled to relief, under any such laws for the relief of insolvent debtors, this act notwithstanding.

SEC. 62. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this law shall, in any manner, affect the right of preference to prior satisfaction of debts due to the United States, as secured or provided by any law heretofore passed, nor shall be construed to lessen or impair any right to, or security for, money due to the United States, or to any of them.

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed to invalidate or impair any lien, existing at the date of this act, upon the lands or chattels of any person who may have become a bankrupt.

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force during the term of five years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer: Provided, that the expiration of this act shall not prevent the complete execution of any commission which may have been previously thereto issued.

An Act to allow a drawback of duties on goods exported to New Orleans, and therein to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage."

Be it enacted, &c., That any goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be exported from the United States, after the tenth day of April current, in the manner prescribed by law, to the port of New Orleans, on the river Mississippi, shall be deemed and taken to be entitled to such drawbacks of duties as would be allowable thereon when exported to any other foreign port or place, anything in the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

Approved, April 5, 1800.

An Act to continue in force "An act concerning certain fisheries of the United States, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," and for other purposes therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act concerning certain fisheries of the United States, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," shall be in force, and is hereby continued, for the term of ten years, from the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred, and until the end of the session of Congress next ensuing the expiration of that term, any thing in the ninth section of the said act to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the additional allowances which were, by the sixth section of the act, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned," and by the second section of the act, entitled "An act laying an additional duty on salt, and for other purposes," respectively granted to ships or vessels employed in the bank and other cod fisheries, shall be continued to the ships and vessels, respectively, which shall be so employed, in the terms and according to the intent of the said first mentioned act, for and during the further continuance thereof, as aforesaid: Provided, That the said allowances shall not be understood to be continued for a longer time than the correspondent duties, respectively, for which the said additional allowances were granted, shall be payable.

Approved, April 12, 1800.

An Act to alter the form of certain oaths and affirmations directed to be taken by the act, entitled "An act providing for the second census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the first section of the act passed during the present session of Congress, entitled "An act providing for the second census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," as relates to the form of the oaths or affirmations thereby directed to be taken by the marshals, secretaries, and assistants, therein mentioned, respectively, shall be, and hereby is, repealed, and that the said oaths or affirmations shall be in the following form; that is to say, the marshals and secretaries' oath or affirmation in the form following: "I, A. B., marshal of the district of —, (or the secretary of the territory of —, as the case may be,) do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will well and truly cause to be made a just and perfect enumeration and description of the persons resident within my district, (or within the territory of —, as the case may be,) and will return the same to the Secretary of State, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act providing for the second census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," according to the best of my ability: and the assistants' oath or affirmation in the form following: I, A. B., do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will make a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within the division assigned to me by the marshal of the district of —, (or the secretary of the territory of —, as the case may be,) and make due return thereof to the said marshal, or secretary, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act providing for the second census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," according to the best of my ability.

An Act for the relief of the Corporation of Rhode Island College.

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to liquidate and settle the claims of the Corporation of Rhode Island College, for compensation for the use and occupation of the edifice of the said college, and for injuries done to the same, from the tenth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six, to the twentieth day of April, one thousand seven hundred and eighty, by the troops of the United States; and that the sum which may be found due to the said corporation, for damages done to and occupation of the said edifice, as aforesaid, be paid them out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Approved, April 16, 1800.

An Act to extend the privilege of obtaining patents for useful discoveries and inventions to certain persons therein mentioned, and to enlarge and define the penalties for violating the rights of patentees.

Be it enacted, &c., That all and singular the rights and privileges given, intended, or provided, to citizens of the United States, respecting patents for new inventions, discoveries, and improvements, by the act, entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts, and to repeal the act heretofore made for that purpose," shall be, and hereby are, extended and given to all aliens who, at the time of petitioning in the manner prescribed by the said act, shall have resided for two years within the United States, which privileges shall be obtained, used, and enjoyed, by such persons, in as full and ample manner, and under the same conditions, limitations, and restrictions, as by the said act is provided and directed in the case of citizens of the United States: Provided always, That every person petitioning for a patent for any invention, art or discovery, pursuant to this act, shall make oath or affirmation, before some person duly authorized to administer oaths, before such patent shall be granted, that such invention, art, or discovery, hath not to the best of his or her knowledge or belief, been known or used either in this or any foreign country; and that every patent which shall be obtained pursuant to this act, for any invention, art, or discovery, which it shall afterwards appear had been known or used previous to such application for a patent, shall be utterly void.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That where any person hath made, or shall have made, any new invention, discovery, or improvement, on account of which a patent might, by virtue of this or the above-mentioned act, be granted to such person, as shall die before any patent shall be granted therefor, the right of applying for and obtaining such patent, shall devolve on the legal representatives of such person in trust for the heirs at law of the deceased, in case he shall have died intestate; but if otherwise, then in trust for his devisees, in as full and ample manner, and under the same conditions, limitations, and restrictions, as the same was held or might have been claimed or enjoyed by such person, in his or her life time; and when application for a patent shall be made by such legal representatives, the oath or affirmation provided in the third section of the before-mentioned act, shall be so varied as to be applicable to them.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That where any patent shall be, or shall have been, granted, pursuant to this or the above-mentioned act, and any person, without the consent of the patentee, his or her executors, administrators, or assigns, first obtained in writing, shall make, devise, use, or sell the thing whereof the exclusive right is secured to the said patentee by such patent, such person so offending shall forfeit and pay to the said patentee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, a sum equal to three times the actual damage sustained by such patentee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, from or by reason of such offence, which sum shall and may be recovered by action on the case founded on this and the abovementioned act, in the circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the fifth section of the abovementioned act, entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts, and to repeal the act heretofore made for that purpose," shall be, and hereby is, repealed.

Approved, April 17, 1800.

An Act to fix the compensation of the Paymaster General, and Assistant to the Adjutant General.

Acts of Congress.

An Act to continue in force the act, entitled "An act to authorize the defence of the merchant vessels of the United States against French depredations."

Be it enacted, &c., That the act passed on the twenty-fifth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, entitled "An act to authorize the defence of the merchant vessels of the United States against French depredations," excepting such parts of the said act as relate to salvage in cases of recapture, shall continue and be in force for and during the term of one year, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer.

Approved, April 22, 1800.

An Act to continue in force, for a limited time, an act, entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of taking evidence in cases of contested elections for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to compel the attendance of witnesses."

Be it enacted, &c., That an act passed on the twenty-third day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of taking evidence in cases of contested elections for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to compel the attendance of witnesses," shall be and continue in force for the term of four years, and no longer.

Approved, April 22, 1800.

An Act supplementary to the act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the passing of this act, it shall be lawful for any military officer, who may have charge or custody of any person or persons, who may have been, or shall be, apprehended in the Indian country, over and beyond the boundary line between the United States and the said Indian tribes, in violation of any of the provisions or regulations of the act, entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," to conduct him or them to some one of the justices of the inferior or county court of any county nearest to the place of his arrest, who, if the offence is bailable, is hereby authorized to take proper bail, if offered, in like manner as the judge of the superior court of any State is authorized to do, in and by the act above recited; unless such person, holden in custody as aforesaid, shall be charged upon oath with murder, or any other offence punishable with death, in which case such justice of any inferior or county court shall not have authority to take bail for such person.

Approved, April 22, 1800.

An Act to establish a General Stamp Office.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be appointed an officer, to be denominated Superintendent of Stamps, whose duty it shall be to superintend the stamping and marking of all vellum, parchment, and paper; to distribute the same among the officers who are, or shall be, authorized to secure and collect the duties thereupon, and to keep fair and true records and accounts of his proceedings; which said officer, so to be appointed, shall be subject to the superintendence, control, and direction of the Treasury Department, according to the respective authorities and duties of the officers thereof; and shall, for the better execution of the duties and trusts in him reposed, observe and execute such directions as he shall, from time to time, receive from said department.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said superintendent shall hold his office at the seat of the Government of the United States, and shall be allowed, as a compensation for his services, the sum of two thousand dollars, annually, to be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States; and shall also be allowed the necessary expenses of office rent, fuel, printing, and packing, and of procuring books and stationery for the use of his office, and that all letters and packages to and from him shall be free of postage.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said superintendent shall, with the approbation of the principal officer of the Treasury Department, employ such number of clerks and other assistants in his office as shall be found necessary; and shall apportion and vary the compensation to each, in such manner as the services rendered by each shall in his judgment require: Provided, That the whole amount of the compensations to said clerks and assistants shall not exceed two thousand five hundred dollars annually.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said superintendent shall, within three months after entering upon his office, give bond, with sureties, for the true and faithful execution thereof, and for the settlement of his accounts at the periods which shall be prescribed by the proper officers at the Treasury Department, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, which bond shall be approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and kept in his office, to be by him put in suit for the benefit of the United States, upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That from and after the establishment of the office aforesaid at the seat of Government, and after six months' notice of the new stamps hereby directed to be prepared and issued; which notice shall be given by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the manner directed by the tenth section of the act entitled "An act laying duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper;" so much of the act or acts, heretofore passed, as empower and require the supervisors of the revenue to stamp or mark any vellum, parchment, or paper, shall cease and determine.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any deed, instrument, or writing, whatever, charged by law with the payment of duty, shall have been, or shall be, written or printed, by any person or persons whomsoever, upon vellum, parchment, or paper, not stamped or marked according to law, or upon vellum, parchment, or paper, stamped or marked at a lower rate of duty than is by law required for such deed, instrument, or writing; then, and in every such case, it shall be lawful for the person or persons holding such deed, instrument, or writing, within twelve calendar months after the time of giving notice as aforesaid, or within six calendar months after the execution of such deed, instrument, or writing, to pay to the collector of the revenue, within whose collection district such person or persons shall reside, the duty chargeable by law on such deed, instrument, or writing, together with ten dollars in addition to such duty, which duty and additional sum of ten dollars, such collector is hereby authorized and required to receive, and without fee or reward to endorse a receipt therefor, under his hand and seal, upon some part of such deed, instrument, or writing, which deed, instrument, or writing, so endorsed, it shall then be lawful for such person or persons to produce to the surveyor of the revenue within whose assessment district such person or persons shall reside, which surveyor thereupon shall certify under his hand and seal, and upon some part of the said deed, instrument, or writing, that the same so endorsed as aforesaid has been produced to him, and that the said endorsement is in his belief genuine; after which said endorsement and certificate, and not otherwise, such deed, instrument, or writing, shall be to all intents and purposes as valid and available, as if the same had been or were stamped, counter-stamped, or marked, as by law required, anything in any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That every collector of the revenue shall keep a separate account of all moneys by him received in manner last aforesaid, and shall, at such times as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, transmit the said account together with such moneys, and a memorandum of all receipts by him endorsed in manner aforesaid, to the supervisor of the district, or the inspector of the survey, as the case may be; and that every surveyor of the revenue shall, at such time as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, transmit to the said supervisor or inspector, as the case may be, a true copy of all certificates given by him as aforesaid, and of the receipts respectively certified, and thereupon such surveyor shall be entitled to receive from the supervisor or inspector fifty cents for every such certificate by him signed as aforesaid.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That if any person, with intent to defraud the United States of any sum of moneys directed to be paid by this act, or of any of the duties or duty laid by the act, entitled "An act laying duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper," shall counterfeit or forge, or cause or procure to be counterfeited or forged, any of the certificates, receipts, or endorsements, provided for and directed by the sixth section of this act, or shall utter, pass away, vend, or offer in evidence, in any court of justice, any such forged or counterfeit receipt, certificate, or endorsement, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeit, then every such person so offending, and being thereof convicted in due form of law, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to be fined in any sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding seven years.

SEC. 9. And for the convenience of those persons who may be inclined to have their own vellum, parchment, and paper, stamped or marked, Be it further enacted, That when any person or persons shall deposit any vellum, parchment or paper, at the office of any supervisor, accompanying the same with a list, which shall specify the number and denomination of the stamps or marks which are to be thereto affixed, it shall be the duty of the said supervisor to transmit the same to the stamp-office at the seat of Government, where such paper, parchment, and vellum shall be properly marked or stamped, and forthwith sent back to the said supervisor, who shall thereupon collect the duties and deliver the vellum, parchment, and paper, pursuant to the order of the person from whom it was received.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That all vellum, parchment, and paper, to be stamped or marked at the said office, shall, before it is delivered for sale, use, or distribution, be carried from the said office to the office of the commissioner of the revenue, and be there counter-stamped or marked, under the direction of the said commissioner, and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall devise and direct; and after being so counter-stamped, or marked, shall be returned to the office of the Superintendent of Stamps, to be by him distributed according to the true intent and meaning of this act; of all which vellum, parchment, and paper, so sent to be counter-stamped or marked, and so returned to the office of the superintendent aforesaid, an account shall be kept by the commissioner of the revenue, and from time to time returned to the proper officers of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons, with intent to defraud the United States of any of the duties or duty laid by the act, entitled "An act laying duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper," or by any act or acts for amending the same, shall counterfeit or forge, or shall cause or procure to be counterfeited or forged, or shall knowingly or wilfully aid or assist in counterfeiting or forging any stamp, counter-stamp, or mark, which shall be provided or made in pursuance of this act, or shall counterfeit or resemble, or shall knowingly and wilfully aid or assist in counterfeiting or resembling, or shall cause to be counterfeited or resembled, the impression of any such stamp, counter-stamp, or mark, upon any vellum, parchment, or paper, or shall knowingly or wilfully utter, vend, or sell, or offer in evidence in any court of justice, any vellum, parchment, or paper, with such counterfeit mark or impression thereon, or shall privately or fraudulently use any stamp, counter-stamp, or mark, directed or allowed to be used by this act, then every such person so offending, and being thereof convicted in due form of law, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be subject to be fined in any sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned for any time not exceeding seven years.

Approved, April 23, 1800.

An Act for the better government of the Navy of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the first day of June next, the following rules and regulations be adopted and put in force, for the government of the navy of the United States.

ART. 1. The commanders of all ships and vessels of war belonging to the navy, are strictly enjoined and required to show in themselves a good example of virtue, honor, patriotism, and subordination; and be vigilant in inspecting the conduct of all such as are placed under their command; and to guard against, and suppress, all dissolute and immoral practices, and to correct all such as are guilty of them, according to the usage of the sea service.

ART. 2. The commanders of all ships and vessels in the navy, having chaplains on board, shall take care that divine service be performed in a solemn, orderly, and reverent manner twice a day, and a sermon preached on Sunday, unless bad weather, or other extraordinary accidents prevent it; and that they cause all, or as many of the ship's company as can be spared from duty, to attend at every performance of the worship of Almighty God.

ART. 3. Any officer, or other person in the navy, who shall be guilty of oppression, cruelty, fraud, profane swearing, drunkenness, or any other scandalous conduct, tending to the destruction of good morals, shall, if an officer, be cashiered, or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial shall adjudge; if a private, shall be put in irons, or flogged, at the discretion of the captain, not exceeding twelve lashes; but if the offence require severer punishment, he shall be tried by a court-martial, and suffer such punishment as said court shall inflict.

ART. 4. Every commander or other officer who shall, upon signal for battle, or on the probability of an engagement, neglect to clear his ship for action, or shall not use his utmost exertions to bring his ship to battle, or shall fail to encourage, in his own person, his inferior officers and men to fight courageously, such offender shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall adjudge; or any officer neglecting, on sight of any vessel or vessels of an enemy, to clear his ship for action, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge: and if any person in the navy shall treacherously yield, or pusillanimously cry for quarters, he shall suffer death, on conviction thereof, by a general court martial.

ART. 5. Every officer or private who shall not properly observe the orders of his commanding officer, or shall not use his utmost exertions to carry them into execution, when ordered to prepare for, join in, or when actually engaged in battle; or shall, at such time, basely desert his duty or station, either then, or while in sight of an enemy, or shall induce others to do so, every person so offending shall, on conviction thereof by a general court martial, suffer death or such other punishment as the said court shall adjudge.

ART. 6. Every officer or private who shall, through cowardice, negligence, or disaffection in time of action, withdraw from, or keep out of battle, or shall not do his utmost to take or destroy every vessel which it is his duty to encounter, or shall not do his utmost endeavor to afford relief to ships belonging to the United States, every such offender shall, on conviction thereof by a general court martial, suffer death, or such other punishment as the said court shall adjudge.

ART. 7. The commanding officer of every ship or vessel in the navy, who shall capture or seize upon any vessel as a prize, shall carefully preserve all the papers and writings found on board, and transmit the whole of the originals un mutilated to the judge of the district to which such prize is ordered to proceed, and shall transmit to the Navy Department, and to the agent appointed to pay the prize money, complete lists of the officers and men entitled to a share of the capture, inserting therein the quality of every person rating, on pain of forfeiting his whole share of the prize money resulting from such capture, and suffering such further punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 8. No person in the navy shall take out of a prize, or vessel seized as a prize, any money, plate, goods, or any part of her rigging, unless it be for the better preservation thereof, or absolutely necessary for the use of any of the vessels of the United States, before the same shall be adjudged lawful prize by a competent court; but the whole, without fraud, concealment, or embezzlement, shall be brought in and judgment passed thereon, upon pain that every person offending herein shall forfeit his share of the capture, and suffer such further punishment as a court martial, or the court of admiralty in which the prize is adjudged, shall impose.

ART. 9. No person in the navy shall strip of their clothes, or pillage, or in any manner maltreat persons taken on board a prize, on pain of such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 10. No person in the navy shall give, hold, or entertain any intercourse or intelligence to or with any enemy or rebel, without leave from the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the commander-in-chief of the fleet, or the commander of a squadron; or, in case of a vessel acting singly, from his commanding officer, on pain of death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 11. If any letter or message from an enemy or rebel, be conveyed to any officer or private of the navy, and he shall not, within twelve hours, make the same known, having opportunity so to do, to his superior or commanding officer; or if any officer commanding a ship or vessel, being acquainted therewith, shall not, with all convenient speed, reveal the same to the commander-in-chief of the fleet, commander of a squadron, or other proper officer whose duty it may be to take cognizance thereof, every such offender shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 12. Spies, and all persons who shall come or be found in the capacity of spies, or who shall bring or deliver any seducing letter or message from an enemy or rebel, or endeavor to corrupt any person in the navy to betray his trust, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 13. If any person in the navy shall make or attempt to make any mutinous assembly, he shall, on conviction thereof by a court martial, suffer death; and if any person as aforesaid shall utter any seditious or mutinous words, or shall conceal or connive at any mutinous or seditious practices, or shall treat with contempt his superior, being in the execution of his office; or, being witness to any mutiny or sedition, should not do his utmost to suppress it, he shall be punished at the discretion of a court martial.

ART. 14. No officer or private in the navy shall disobey the lawful orders of his superior officer, or strike him, or draw, or offer to draw, or raise any weapon against him, while in the execution of the duties of his office, on pain of death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall inflict.

ART. 15. No person in the navy shall quarrel with any other person in the navy, nor use provoking or reproachful words, gestures, or menaces, on pain of such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 16. If any person in the navy shall desert to an enemy, or rebel, he shall suffer death.

ART. 17. If any person in the navy shall desert, or shall entice others to desert, he shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court martial shall adjudge; and if any officer, or other person belonging to the navy, shall receive or entertain any deserter from any other vessel of the navy, knowing him to be such, and shall not, with all convenient speed, give notice of such deserter to the commander of the vessel to which he belongs, or to the commander-in-chief, or to the commander of the squadron, he shall, on conviction thereof, be cashiered, or be punished at the discretion of a court martial. All offences committed by persons belonging to the navy while on shore, shall be punished in the same manner as if they had been committed at sea.

ART. 18. If any person in the navy shall knowingly make or sign, or shall aid, abet, direct, or procure the making or signing of any false muster, or shall execute, or attempt, or countenance any fraud against the United States, he shall, on conviction, be cashiered, and rendered forever incapable of any future employment in the service of the United States, and shall forfeit all the pay and subsistence due him, and suffer such other punishment as a court martial shall inflict.

ART. 19. If any officer, or other person in the navy, shall, through inattention, negligence, or any other fault, suffer any vessel of the navy to be stranded, or run upon rocks or shoals, or hazarded, he shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 20. If any person in the navy shall sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform the duty assigned him, or leave his station before regularly relieved, he shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge; or, if the offender be a private, he may, at the discretion of the captain, be put in irons, or flogged, not exceeding twelve lashes.

ART. 21. The crime of murder, when committed by any officer, seaman, or marine, belonging to any public ship or vessel of the United States, without the territorial jurisdiction of the same, may be punished with death by the sentence of a court martial.

ART. 22. The officers and privates of every ship or vessel, appointed as convoy to merchant or other vessels, shall diligently and faithfully discharge the duties of their appointment, nor shall they demand or exact any compensation for their services, nor maltreat any of the officers or crews of such merchant or other vessels, on pain of making such reparation as a court of admiralty may award, and of suffering such further punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 23. If any commander or other officer shall receive or permit to be received, on board his vessel, any goods or merchandise, other than for the sole use of his vessel, except gold, silver, or jewels, and except the goods or merchandise of vessels which may be in distress, or shipwrecked, or in imminent danger of being shipwrecked, in order to preserve them for their owner, without orders from the President of the United States or the Navy Department, he shall, on conviction thereof, be cashiered, and be incapacitated forever afterwards, for any place or office in the navy.

ART. 24. If any person in the navy shall waste, embezzle, or fraudulently buy, sell, or receive any ammunition, provisions, or other public stores; or if any officer or other person shall, knowingly, permit, through design, negligence, or inattention, any such waste, embezzlement, sale or receipt, every such person shall forfeit all the pay and subsistence then due him, and suffer such other punishment as a court martial shall direct.

ART. 25. If any person in the navy shall unlawfully set fire to, or burn, any kind of public property, not then in the possession of an enemy, pirate, or rebel, he shall suffer death: And if any person shall, in any other manner, destroy such property, or shall not use his best exertions to prevent the destruction thereof by others, he shall be punished at the discretion of a court martial.

ART. 26. Any theft not exceeding twenty dollars may be punished at the discretion of the captain, and above that sum, as a court martial shall direct.

ART. 27. If any person in the navy shall, when on shore, plunder, abuse, or maltreat, any inhabitant, or injure his property in any way, he shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 28. Every person in the navy shall use his utmost exertions to detect, apprehend, and bring to punishment, all offenders, and shall at all times aid and assist all persons appointed for this purpose, on pain of such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

ART. 29. Each commanding officer shall, whenever a seaman enters on board, cause an accurate entry to be made in the ship's books, of his name, time, and term of service; and, before sailing, transmit to the Secretary of the Navy a complete list or muster roll of the officers and men under his command, with the date of their entering, time and terms of their service, annexed; and shall cause similar lists to be made out on the first day of every second month, to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy, as opportunities shall occur; accounting, in such lists or muster rolls, for any casualties which may have taken place since the last list or muster roll. He shall cause to be accurately minuted, on the ship's books, the names of, and times at which any death or desertion may occur; and in case of death, shall take care that the purser secure all the property of the deceased for the benefit of his legal representative or representatives. He shall cause frequent inspections to be made into the condition of the provision, and use every precaution for its preservation. He shall, whenever he orders officers and men to take charge of a prize, and proceed to the United States, and whenever officers and men are sent from his ship for whatever cause, take care that each man be furnished with a complete statement of his account, specifying the date of his enlistment, and the period and terms of his service; which account shall be signed by the commanding officer and purser. He shall cause the rules for the government of the navy to be hung up in some public part of the ship, and read once a month to his ship's company. He shall cause a convenient place to be set apart for sick or disabled men, to which he shall have them removed, with their

hammocks and bedding, when the surgeon shall so advise, and shall direct that some of the crew attend them and keep the place clean; and, if necessary, shall direct that cradles, and buckets with covers, be made for their use: And when his crew is finally paid off, he shall attend in person, or appoint a proper officer, to see that justice be done to the men, and to the United States, in the settlement of the accounts: Any commanding officer offending herein, shall be punished at the discretion of a court martial.

ART. 30. No commanding officer shall, of his own authority, discharge a commissioned or warrant officer, nor strike, nor punish him otherwise than by suspension or confinement, nor shall he, of his own authority, inflict a punishment on any private beyond twelve lashes with a cat-of-nine tails, nor shall he suffer any wired, or other than a plain, cat-of-nine tails, to be used on board his ship; nor shall any officer who may command by accident, or in the absence of the commanding officer (except such commander be absent for a time by leave) order or inflict any other punishment than confinement, for which he shall account on the return of such absent commanding officer. Nor shall any commanding officer receive on board any petty officers or men turned over from any other vessel to him, unless each of such officers and men produce to him an account, signed by the captain and purser of the vessel from which they came, specifying the date of such officer's or man's entry, the period and terms of service, the sums paid, and the balance due him, and the quality in which he was rated on board such ship. Nor shall any commanding officer, having received any petty officer or man as aforesaid, rate him in a lower or worse station than that in which he formerly served: Any commanding officer offending herein, shall be punished at the discretion of a court martial.

ART. 31. Any master-at-arms, or other person of whom the duty of master-at-arms is required, who shall refuse to receive such prisoners as shall be committed to his charge, or, having received them, shall suffer them to escape, or dismiss them without orders from proper authority, shall suffer in such prisoners' stead, or be punished otherwise, at the discretion of a court martial.

ART. 32. All crimes committed by persons belonging to the navy, which are not specified in the foregoing articles shall be punished according to the laws and customs in such cases at sea.

ART. 33. All officers not holding commissions or warrants, or who are not entitled to them, except such as are temporarily appointed to the duties of a commissioned or warrant officer, are deemed petty officers.

ART. 34. Any person entitled to wages or prize money, may have the same paid to his assignee, provided the assignment be attested by the captain and purser; and in case of the assignment of wages, the power shall specify the precise time they commence. But the commander of every vessel is required to discourage his crew from selling any part of their wages or prize money, and never to attest any power of attorney, until he is satisfied that the same is not granted in consideration of money given for the purchase of wages or prize money.

NAVAL GENERAL COURTS MARTIAL.

ART. 35. General courts martial may be convened as often as the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander-in-chief of the fleet, or commander of a squadron, while acting out of the United States, shall deem it necessary: Provided, That no general court martial shall consist of more than thirteen, nor less than five members; and as many officers shall be summoned on every such court as can be convened without injury to the service, so as not to exceed thirteen, and the senior officer shall always preside, the others ranking agreeably to the date of their commissions; and in no case, where it can be avoided without injury to the service, shall more than one-half the members, exclusive of the President, be junior to the officer to be tried.

ART. 36. Each member of the court, before proceeding to the trial, shall take the following oath, or affirmation, which the judge advocate, or person officiating as such, is hereby authorized to administer:

"I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will truly try, without prejudice or partiality, the case now depending, according to the evidence which shall come before the court, the rules for the government of the navy, and my own conscience; and that I will not by any means divulge or disclose the sentence of the court, until it shall have been approved by the proper authority, nor will I at any time divulge or disclose the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court, unless required so to do before a court of justice in due course of law."

This oath or affirmation being duly administered, the President is authorized and required to administer the following oath or affirmation to the judge advocate, or person officiating as such:

"I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will keep a true record of the evidence given to, and the proceedings of, this court; nor will I divulge or by any means disclose the sentence of the court until it shall have been approved by the proper authority; nor will I at any time divulge or disclose the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court, unless required so to do before a court of justice in due course of law."

ART. 37. All testimony given to a general court martial shall be on oath or affirmation, which the President of the court is hereby authorized to administer, and if any person shall refuse to give his evidence as aforesaid, or shall prevaricate, or shall behave with contempt to the court, it shall and may be lawful for the court to imprison such offender at their discretion; provided that the imprisonment in no case shall exceed two months: And every person who shall commit wilful perjury, on examination on oath or affirmation before such court, or who shall corruptly procure, or suborn any person to commit such wilful perjury, shall and may be prosecuted by indictment or information in any court of justice of the United States, and shall suffer such penalties as are authorized by the laws of the United States in case of perjury or the subornation thereof. And in every prosecution for perjury or the subornation thereof, under this act, it shall be sufficient to set forth the offence charged on the defendant, without setting forth the authority by which the court was held, or the particular matters brought or intended to be brought before the said court.

ART. 38. All charges, on which an application for a general court martial is founded, shall be exhibited in writing to the proper officer, and the person demanding the court shall take care that the person accused be furnished with a true copy of the charges, with the specifications, at the time he is put under arrest, nor shall any other charge or charges, than those so exhibited, be urged against the person to be tried before the court, unless it appear to the court that intelligence of such charge had not reached the person demanding the court, when the person so to be tried was put under arrest, or that some witness material to the support of such charge, who was at that time absent, can be produced; in which case, reasonable time shall be given to the person to be tried to make his defence against such new charge. Every officer so arrested is to deliver up his sword to his commanding officer, and to confine himself to the limits assigned him, under pain of dismission from service.

ART. 39. When the proceedings of any general court martial shall have commenced, they shall not be suspended or delayed on account of the absence of any of the members, provided five or more be assembled; but the court is enjoined to sit from day to day, Sundays excepted, until sentence be given: And no member of the said court shall, after the proceedings are begun, absent himself therefrom, unless in case of sickness, or orders to go on duty from a superior officer, on pain of being cashiered.

ART. 40. Whenever a court martial shall sentence any officer to be suspended, the court shall have power to suspend his pay and emoluments for the whole, or any part of the time of his suspension.

ART. 41. All sentences of courts martial, which shall extend to the loss of life, shall require the concurrence of two thirds of the members present; and no such sentence shall be carried into execution, until confirmed by the President of the United States; or, if the trial take place out of the United States, until it be confirmed by the commander of the fleet or squadron: All other sentences may be determined by a majority of votes, and carried into execution on confirmation of the commander of the fleet, or officer ordering the court, except such as go to the dismission of a commissioned or warrant officer, which are first to be approved by the President of the United States.

A court martial shall not, for any one offence not capital, inflict a punishment beyond one hundred lashes.

ART. 42. The President of the United States, or, when the trial takes place out of the United States, the commander of the fleet or squadron, shall possess full power to pardon any offence committed against these articles, after conviction, or to mitigate the punishment decreed by a court martial.

SEC. 2. ARTICLE 1. And be it further enacted, That courts of inquiry may be ordered by the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander of a fleet or squadron, provided such court shall consist of not more than three members who shall be commissioned officers, and a judge advocate, or person to do duty as such; and such courts shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and punish contempt, in the same manner as courts martial. But such court shall merely state facts, and not give their opinion, unless expressly required so to do in the order for convening; and the party, whose conduct shall be the subject of inquiry, shall have permission to cross-examine all the witnesses.

ART. 2. The proceedings of courts of inquiry shall be authenticated by the signature of the president of the court and judge advocate, and shall in all cases not capital, or extending to the dismission of a commissioned or warrant officer, be evidence before a court martial, provided oral testimony cannot be obtained.

ART. 3. The judge advocate, or person officiating as such, shall administer to the members the following oath or affirmation:

"You do swear (or affirm) well and truly to examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you, without partiality or prejudice."

After which, the president shall administer to the judge advocate, or person officiating as such, the following oath or affirmation:

"You do swear (or affirm) truly to record the proceedings of this court, and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing."

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in all cases, where the crews of the ships or vessels of the United States shall be separated from their vessels, by the latter being wrecked, lost, or destroyed, all the command, power, and authority, given to the officers of such ships or vessels, shall remain and be in full force, as effectually as if such ship or vessel were not so wrecked, lost, or destroyed, until such ship's company be regularly discharged from, or ordered again into, the service, or until a court martial shall be held to inquire into the loss of such ship or vessel; and if by the sentence of such court, or other satisfactory evidence, it shall appear that all or any of the officers and men of such ship's company did their utmost to preserve her, and after the loss thereof behaved themselves agreeably to the discipline of the navy, then the pay and emoluments of such officers and men, or such of them as shall have done their duty as aforesaid, shall go on until their discharge or death; and every officer or private who shall, after the loss of such vessel, act contrary to the discipline of the navy, shall be punished at the discretion of a court martial, in the same manner as if such vessel had not been so lost.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the pay and emoluments of such officers and men, of any of the ships or vessels of the United States, taken by an enemy, who shall appear by the sentence of a court martial, or otherwise, to have done their utmost to preserve and defend their ship or vessel, and, after the taking thereof, have behaved themselves obediently to their superiors, agreeably to the discipline of the navy, shall go on and be paid them until their death, exchange, or discharge.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the proceeds of all ships and vessels, and the goods taken on board of them, which shall be adjudged good prize, shall, when of equal or superior force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, be the sole property of the captors; and when of inferior force, shall be divided equally between the United States and the officers and men making the capture.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That the prize money belonging to the officers and men, shall be distributed in the following manner:

1. To the commanding officers of fleets, squadrons, or single ships, three-twentieths, of which the commanding officer of the fleet or squadron shall have one twentieth, if the prize be taken by a ship or vessel acting under his command, and the commander of single ships, two twentieths; but where the prize is taken by a ship acting independently of such superior officer, the three-twentieths shall belong to her commander.

2. To sea lieutenants, captains of marines, and sailing masters, two twentieths; but where there is a captain, without a lieutenant of marines, these officers shall be entitled to two-twentieths and one-third of a twentieth, which third, in such case, shall be deducted from the share of the officers mentioned in article No. 3, of this section.

3. To chaplains, lieutenants of marines, surgeons, pursers, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and master's mates, two-twentieths.

4. To midshipmen, surgeon's mates, captain's mates, clerk, schoolmasters, boatswain's mates, gunner's mates, carpenter's mates, ships' stewards, sailmakers, masters at arms, armorers, cockswains, and coopers, three-twentieths and an half.

5. To gunner's yeomen, boatswain's yeomen, quarter masters, quarter gunners, sailmaker's mates, sergeants and corporals of marines, drummers, fifers and extra petty officers, two-twentieths and an half.

6. To seamen, ordinary seamen, marines, and all other persons doing duty on board, seven-twentieths.

7. Whenever one or more public ships or vessels are in sight at the time any one or more ships are taking a prize or prizes, they shall all share equally in the prize or prizes, according to the number of men and guns on board each ship in sight.

No commander of a fleet or squadron shall be entitled to receive any share of prizes taken by vessels not under his immediate command; nor of such prizes as may have been taken by ships or vessels intended to be placed under his command, before they have acted under his immediate orders; nor shall a commander of a fleet or squadron, leaving the station where he had the command, have any share in the prizes taken by ships left on such station, after he has gone out of the limits of his said command.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That a bounty shall be paid by the United States, of twenty dollars for each person on board any ship of an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That every officer, seamen, or marine, disabled in the line of his duty, shall be entitled to receive for life, or during his disability, a pension from the United States, according to the nature and degree of his disability, not exceeding one-half his monthly pay.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all money accruing, or which has already accrued to the United States from the sale of prizes, shall be and remain for ever a fund for the payment of pensions and half pay, should the same be hereafter granted, to the officers and seamen who may be entitled to receive the same, and if the said fund shall be insufficient for the purpose, the public faith is hereby pledged to make up the deficiency; but if it should be more than sufficient, the surplus shall be applied to the making of further provision for the comfort of the disabled officers, seamen, and marines, and for such as, though not disabled, may merit by their bravery, or long and faithful services, the gratitude of their country.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the said fund shall be under the management and direction of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, for the time being, who are hereby authorized to receive any sums to which the United States may be entitled from the sale of prizes, and employ and invest the same, and the interest arising therefrom, in any manner which a majority of them may deem most advantageous: And it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to lay before Congress, annually, in the first week of their session, a minute statement of their proceedings relative to the management of said fund.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the act passed the second day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, entitled "An act for the government of the navy of the United States," from and after the first day of June next, shall be, and hereby is, repealed.

Approved, April 23, 1800.

An Act respecting the Mint.

Be it enacted, &c., That a sum equal to the amount of the cents and half cents, which shall have been coined at the Mint, and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States, subsequent to the third day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, shall be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purchase of copper, for the further coinage of cents and half cents; and that a sum equal to the amount of cents and half cents, which shall be hereafter coined at the Mint, and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States in any one year, shall be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the annual purchase of copper, for the coinage of cents and half cents, which sums shall be payable out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be retained from every deposit in the Mint, of gold or silver bullion below the standard of the United States, such sum as shall be equivalent to the expense incurred in refining the same, and an accurate account of such expense on every such deposit shall be kept, and of the sums retained on account of the same, which shall be accounted for by the Treasurer of the Mint, with the Treasury of the United States.

Approved, April 24, 1800.

An Act to continue in force the act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That an act passed on the fifth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four, entitled "An act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States," and which by the tenth section thereof was limited to continue in force for and during the term of two years from passing the same, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer; and which said act was, by an act passed on the second day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, entitled "An act to continue in force for a limited time, the act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States," further continued in force for two years from the said second day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, shall continue and be in force without limitation of time, anything in any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Approved, April 24, 1800.

An Act to make further provision for the removal and accommodation of the Government of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to direct the various offices belonging to the Executive departments of the United States, to be removed to the City of Washington, at any time that he shall judge proper, after the adjournment of the present session of Congress, and before the time heretofore appointed by law for such removal.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of providing furniture for the house erected in the City of Washington, for the accommodation of the President of the United States, a sum not exceeding fifteen thousand dollars be expended, under the direction of the Heads of the several departments of State, of the Treasury, of War, and of the Navy.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That for the suitable accommodation of Congress, at the City of Washington, the Secretaries of the four Executive departments, or any three of them, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and directed to cause suitable furniture to be forthwith provided for the apartments, which are to be occupied in the Capitol, at the said city, by the two Houses, respectively, and for the offices and committee rooms of each; and to cause the said apartments, offices, and committee rooms, to be furnished in a suitable manner, so as to be ready for the reception of Congress on the day fixed by law for the removal of the Government to the said city; and that for defraying the expenses incident to the furnishing of the said apartments, offices, and committee rooms, and to the removal of the books, papers, and records, belonging to the said offices, respectively, there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated a sum not exceeding nine thousand dollars.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That for the greater convenience of the members of both Houses of Congress in attending their duty in the said City of Washington, and the greater facility of communication between the various Departments and offices of the Government, there shall be made footways in the said city, in suitable places and directions; and that the said footways shall be made by the commissioners of the said city, under the direction of the Secretaries of the four Executive departments of the United States, who, or any three of whom, shall forthwith take order therefor, and in such manner, at such places, and in such directions, as they or any three of them shall judge most proper for the purposes aforesaid, and shall appoint; and that if the said Secretaries, or any three of them, shall find, on examination, that there is not in the hands of the said commissioners a sum sufficient for making the said footways, over and above what may have been destined by the said commissioners, or may, in the opinion of the said Secretaries, or any three of them, be necessary for the accomplishment of other objects necessary for the accommodation of the Government, or its removal as aforesaid, then the said Secretaries, or any three of them, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and required to draw out of the Treasury of the United States, and apply to the purpose of making the said footways, any sum which may be necessary therefor, not exceeding ten thousand dollars; which sum is hereby appropriated for the said purpose. And all the lots in the City of Washington, now vested in the said commissioners, or in trustees, in any manner for the use of the United States, and now remaining unsold, excepting those set apart for public purposes, shall be, and are hereby, declared and made chargeable with the repayment of the said sum of ten thousand dollars, which shall be advanced in pursuance of this act, and the interest accruing thereon.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of Congress at the said City of Washington, and for fitting up a suitable apartment for containing them and for placing them therein, the sum of five thousand dollars shall be, and hereby is, appropriated; and that the said purchase shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, pursuant to such directions as shall be given, and such catalogue as shall be furnished by a joint committee of both Houses of Congress to be appointed for that purpose; and that the said books shall be placed in one suitable apartment in the Capitol in the said city, for the use of both Houses of Congress and the members thereof, according to such regulations as the committee aforesaid shall devise and establish.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the several appropriations aforesaid shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Approved, April 24, 1800.

An Act to repeal the act laying duties on mills and implements employed in the manufacture of snuff.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the act, entitled "An act to alter and amend the act, entitled 'An act laying certain duties upon snuff and refined sugar,'" passed on the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, as imposes a duty upon mills and implements employed in the manufacture of snuff, or allows a drawback upon the exportation of snuff manufactured within the United States, shall be, and the same hereby is repealed.

Approved, April 24, 1800.

An Act to authorize the President of the United States to accept, for the United States, a cession of jurisdiction of the territory west of Pennsylvania, commonly called the Western Reserve of Connecticut.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to execute and deliver letters patent, in the name and behalf of the United States, to the Governor of the State of Connecticut, for the time being, for the use and benefit of the persons holding and claiming under the State of Connecticut, their heirs and assigns, forever, whereby all the right, title, interest, and estate, of the United States to the soil of that tract of land lying west of the west line of Pennsylvania, as claimed by the State of Pennsylvania, and as the same has been actually settled, ascertained, and run, in conformity to an agreement between the said State of Pennsylvania and the State of Virginia, and extending from said line westward one hundred and twenty statute miles in length, and in breadth throughout the said limits in length, from the completion of the forty-first degree of north latitude, until it comes to forty-two degrees and two minutes north latitude, including all that territory, commonly called the Western Reserve of Connecticut, and which was excepted by said State of Connecticut out of the cession by the said State heretofore made to the United States, and accepted by a resolution of Congress of the fourteenth of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six, shall be released and conveyed as aforesaid to the said Governor of Connecticut, and his successors in said office, forever, for the purpose of quieting the grantees and purchasers under said State of Connecticut, and confirming their titles to the soil of the said tract of land.

Provided, however, That such letters patent shall not be executed and delivered, unless the State of Connecticut shall, within eight months from passing this act, by a legislative act, renounce forever, for the use and benefit of the United States, and of the several individual States who may be therein concerned, respectively, and of all those deriving claims or titles from them or any of them, all territorial and jurisdictional claims whatever, under any grant, charter, or charters, whatever, to the soil and jurisdiction of any and all lands whatever, lying westward, northward, and southward of those counties, in the State of Connecticut, which are bounded westwardly by the eastern line of the State of New York, as ascertained by agreement between Connecticut and New York, in the year one thousand seven hundred and thirty-three, excepting only from such renunciation the claim of said State of Connecticut, and of those claiming from or under the said State, to the soil of said tract of land herein described under the name of the Western Reserve of Connecticut.

And provided, also, That the said State of Connecticut shall, within the said eight months from and after passing this act, by the agent or agents of said State, duly authorized by the Legislature thereof, execute and deliver, to the acceptance of the President of the United States, a deed expressly releasing to the United States the jurisdictional claim of the said State of Connecticut to the said tract of land herein described under the name of the Western Reserve of Connecticut, and shall deposit an exemplification of said act of renunciation, under the seal of the said State of Connecticut, together with the said deed releasing said jurisdiction, in the office of the Department of State of the United States, which deed of cession when so deposited shall vest the jurisdiction of said territory in the United States: Provided, That neither this act, nor anything contained therein, shall be construed so as in any manner to draw into question the conclusive settlement of the dispute between Pennsylvania and Connecticut, by the decree of the federal court at Trenton, nor to impair the right of Pennsylvania or any other State, or of any person or persons claiming under that or any other State, in any existing dispute concerning the right, either of soil or jurisdiction, with the State of Connecticut, or with any person or persons claiming under the State of Connecticut: And provided, also, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any manner to pledge the United States for the extinguishment of the Indian title to the said lands, or further than merely to pass the title of the United States thereto.

Approved, April 28, 1800.

Acts of Congress.

An Act to provide for rebuilding the Light-house at New London; for the support of a Light-house at Clark's Point; for the erection and support of a Light-house at Wigwam Point, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, there shall be purchased, for the use of the United States, so much land contiguous to their territory, now occupied for the light-house at New London, as shall be sufficient for vaults, and any other purpose, necessary for the better support of said light-house: Provided, That the Legislature of the State of Connecticut shall cede to the United States the jurisdiction of such additional territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to procure a new lantern, with suitable distinctions, and to cause convenient vaults to be erected, and the said light-house at New London to be rebuilt.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the light-house lately erected at Clark's Point, so called, at the entrance of Accushnet river, within the town of New Bedford, in the State of Massachusetts, shall and may be supported at the expense of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall and may appoint a keeper thereof, and take further order respecting the same, as in other cases: Provided, That the property and jurisdiction of the said light-house, and sufficient territory for the accommodation thereof, shall be fully ceded and legally vested in the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, there shall be provided and maintained at the expense of the United States, not exceeding six buoys, to be placed within Buzzard's Bay, upon the most dangerous ledges there, in such manner as the safety of navigation in that bay requires.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a sufficient light-house to be erected on Wigwam Point, so called, within the town of Gloucester, in the State of Massachusetts, where it will best serve the purpose of discovering the entrance of Anesquam harbor, and to appoint a keeper, and otherwise to provide for the support of such light-house, at the expense of the United States. Provided, That sufficient land for the accommodation of such light-house, together with the jurisdiction thereof, shall be duly and legally granted to and vested in the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, and hereby are, appropriated, for providing the said buoys, a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars, and for the erection of the said light-house at Wigwam Point, a sum, not exceeding two thousand dollars, to be paid out of any moneys which may be in the Treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated.

Approved, April 29, 1800.

An Act supplementary to the laws now in force, fixing the compensations of the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Be it enacted, &c. That from and after the thirty-first day of December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, hereinafter mentioned, shall be, and hereby are, entitled to receive, in addition to their compensations as now fixed by law, the following sums, that is to say: The Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, two hundred and fifty dollars each, in addition to their salaries as at present established by law; and each of their principal and engrossing clerks, in addition to their per diem allowance as established by law, two hundred dollars per annum.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, who also performs the duty of doorkeeper, the sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives, and the doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, shall be, and hereby are, entitled to receive five hundred dollars per annum each, and two dollars a day during the session; and the assistant doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives four hundred and fifty dollars per annum each, and two dollars per day during the session, in lieu of the compensations heretofore established by law, which compensations shall commence from the commencement of the present session.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force for and during the term of two years, and no longer.

Approved, May 2, 1800.

An Act to continue in force "An act laying an additional duty on salt imported into the United States, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, &c., That an act passed on the eighth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, entitled "An act laying an additional duty on salt imported into the United States, and for other purposes, shall be, and the same is hereby, continued in force for and during the term of ten years, from the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer.

Approved, May 7, 1800.

An Act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, into two separate Governments.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the fourth day of July next, all that part of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio river, which lies to the westward of a line beginning at the Ohio, opposite to the mouth of Kentucky river, and running thence to Fort Recovery, and thence north until it shall intersect the territorial line between the United States and Canada, shall, for the purposes of temporary government, constitute a separate territory, and be called the Indiana Territory.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be established within the said Territory a Government in all respects similar to that provided by the ordinance of Congress, passed on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, for the government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio; and the inhabitants thereof shall be entitled to, and enjoy all and singular, the rights, privileges, and advantages, granted and secured to the people by the said ordinance.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the officers for the said Territory, who, by virtue of this act, shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall respectively exercise the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive for their services the same compensations, as by the ordinance aforesaid and the laws of the United States, have been provided and established for similar officers in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio: And the duties and emoluments of Superintendent of Indian Affairs shall be united with those of Governor: Provided, That the President of the United States shall have full power, in the recess of Congress, to appoint and commission all officers herein authorized; and their commissions shall continue in force until the end of the next session of Congress.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the ordinance for the government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio river, as relates to the organization of a General Assembly therein, and prescribes the powers thereof, shall be in force and operate in the Indiana Territory, whenever satisfactory evidence shall be given to the Governor thereof that such is the wish of a majority of the freeholders, notwithstanding there may not be therein five thousand free male inhabitants of the age of twenty-one years and upwards: Provided, That, until there shall be five thousand free male inhabitants of twenty-one years and upwards in said Territory, the whole number of representatives to the General Assembly shall not be less than seven, nor more than nine, to be apportioned by the Governor to the several counties in the said Territory, agreeably to the number of free males of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, which they may respectively contain.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed so as in any manner to affect the Government now in force in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio river, further than to prohibit the exercise thereof within the Indiana Territory, from and after the aforesaid fourth day of July next: Provided, That, whenever that part of the Territory of the United States which lies to the eastward of a line beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami river, and running thence due north to the territorial line between the United States and Canada, shall be erected into an independent State, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, thenceforth said line shall become and remain permanently the boundary line between such State and the Indiana Territory, anything in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That, until it shall be otherwise ordered by the Legislatures of the said Territories, respectively, Chillicothe, on Scioto river, shall be the seat of the Government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio river; and that Saint Vincennes, on the Wabash river, shall be the seat of the Government for the Indiana Territory.

Approved, May 7, 1800.

An Act to enable the President of the United States to borrow money for the public service.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States shall be, and hereby is, authorized to borrow, on behalf of the United States, from the Bank of the United States, which is hereby authorized to lend the same, or from any other body or bodies politic or corporate, or from any person or persons, and upon such terms and conditions as he shall judge most advantageous for the United States, a sum not exceeding three millions five hundred thousand dollars, in addition to the moneys to be received into the Treasury of the United States from taxes, for making up any deficiency in any appropriation heretofore made by law, or to be made, during the present session of Congress, and defraying the expenses which may be incurred by calling into actual service any part of the militia of the United States, or by arming, equipping, and calling into actual service any regular troops or volunteers, pursuant to authorities vested, or to be vested, in the President of the United States by law: Provided, That no engagement nor contract shall be entered into, which shall preclude the United States from reimbursing any sum or sums borrowed, at any time after the expiration of fifteen years from the date of such loan.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much as may be necessary of the surplus of the duties on imports and tonnage, beyond the permanent appropriations heretofore charged upon them by law, shall be, and hereby is, pledged and appropriated for paying the interest of all such moneys as may be borrowed pursuant to this act, according to the terms and conditions on which the loan or loans, respectively, may be effected; and also for paying and discharging the principal sum or sums of any such loan or loans, according to the terms and conditions to be fixed as aforesaid: And the faith of the United States shall be, and hereby is, pledged to establish sufficient permanent revenues for making up any deficiency that may hereafter appear in the provisions for paying the said interest and principal sums, or any of them, in manner aforesaid.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the sums to be borrowed, pursuant to this act, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and there separately accounted for; and that the same shall be, and hereby are, appropriated in the manner following:

Acts of Congress.

First, to make up any deficiency in any appropriation heretofore made by law, or to be made, during the present session of Congress; and, secondly, to defray the expenses which may be incurred before the end of the next session of Congress, by calling into actual service any part of the militia of the United States, or by raising, equipping, and calling into actual service any regular troops or volunteers, pursuant to authorities vested or to be vested in the President of the United States by law.

Approved, May 7, 1800.

An Act to authorize the sale and conveyance of lands, in certain cases, by the Marshals of the United States, and to confirm former sales.

Be it enacted, &c., That where the United States shall have obtained judgment in civil actions, brought in those States wherein, by the laws and practice of such States, lands or other real estate belonging to the debtor are delivered to the creditor in satisfaction of such judgment, and shall have received seizin and possession of lands so delivered, it shall be lawful for the marshal of the district wherein such lands or other real estate are situated, under the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury, to expose the same to sale at public auction, and to execute a grant thereof to the highest bidder, on receiving payment of the full purchase money; which grant, so made, shall vest in such purchaser all the right, estate, and interest, of the United States in and to such lands, or other real estate.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sales heretofore made by collectors of certain districts of the United States, of lands or other real estate delivered as aforesaid to the United States, shall be, and they are hereby, confirmed: Provided, That this confirmation shall not extend to any sale, unless the condition of such sale has been complied with by the purchaser.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever a marshal shall sell any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, by virtue of process from a court of the United States, and shall die, or be removed from office, or the term of his commission expire, before a deed shall be executed for the same by him to the purchaser; in every such case the purchaser or plaintiff, at whose suit the sale was made, may apply to the court from which the process issued, and set forth the case, assigning the reason why the title was not perfected by the marshal who sold the same; and thereupon the court may order the marshal for the time being to perfect the title, and execute a deed to the purchaser, he paying the purchase money and costs remaining unpaid: and where a marshal shall take in execution any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and shall die, or be removed from office, or the term of his commission expire before sale, or other final disposition made of the same; in every such case, the like process shall issue to the succeeding marshal, and the same proceedings shall be had, as if such former marshal had not died or been removed, or the term of his commission had not expired: And the provisions in this section contained shall be, and they are hereby, extended to all the cases, respectively, which may have happened before the passing of this act.

Approved, May 7, 1800.

An act for the regulation of public arsenals and magazines.

Be it enacted, &c., That the several officers who now are, or hereafter may be, employed in the armories of the United States shall be entitled to, and shall receive, the following compensations, in addition to their pay as established by law, to wit: A superintendent of such armory, three rations per day, or an equivalent in money; and a master armorer, two rations per day, or an equivalent in money.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall procure, or entice, any artificer or workman, retained or employed in any arsenal or armory of the United States, to depart from the same during the continuance of his engagement, or avoid or break his contract with the United States, or who after due notice of the engagement of any such workman or armorer, in any arsenal or armory, shall, during the continuance of such engagement, retain, hire, or in any wise employ, harbor, or conceal, such artificer or workman, the person so offending, shall, upon conviction, be fined, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding fifty dollars, or be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any artificer or workman, hired, retained, or employed, in any public arsenal or armory, shall wantonly and carelessly break, impair, or destroy any implements, tools, or utensils, or any stock or materials for making guns, the property of the United States; or shall wilfully and obstinately refuse to perform the services lawfully assigned to him, pursuant to his contract, every such person shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty dollars for every such act of disobedience or breach of contract, to be recovered in any court having competent jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all artificers and workmen, who are or shall be employed in the said armories, shall be, and they are hereby, exempted, during their term of service, from all military service, and service as jurors in any court.

An Act to establish the district of Kennebunk, and to annex Lyme to New London; and to alter the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point; and therein to amend the act, entitled, "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage."

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, the towns of Wells and Arundel, in the State of Massachusetts, and all the shores and waters thereof, shall be a district, to be called the district of Kennebunk, of which the port of Kennebunk shall be the sole port of entry; and the ports of Wells and Cape Porpoise shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Kennebunk.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That ships and vessels, owned in whole or in part in the towns of Edgecomb and Newcastle, in the district of Maine, having entered in due form of law at the port of Wiscasset, and taken on board an officer, shall be permitted to unlade in the ports of the said towns which adjoin Sheepscut river.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, the town of Lyme, in the State of Connecticut, and the shores and waters thereof, shall be annexed, as a port of delivery only, to the district of New London, and all vessels bound to or from the said port of Lyme, shall first come to, enter, and clear, at the said port of New London: Provided, however, That the surveyor appointed to reside at Saybrook shall be authorized to visit and inspect ships or vessels arriving at said port of Lyme, and, generally, to perform the duties of a surveyor, as may be requisite within said port.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point, as at present constituted, in the State of Virginia, shall be called the district of Petersburg, to comprehend Petersburg, City Point, and all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, of James river, from Hood's and the junction of Chicahoming, to the junction of the James and Appamattox rivers, and from thence to the highest tide-water of Appamattox, and also the Chicahoming to its highest tide-water mark; and the port for the said district shall extend from Petersburg to City Point. And another district shall be formed, to be called the district of Richmond, to comprehend Richmond, Manchester, and Bermuda Hundred, and all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, of James river, from Bermuda Hundred, including the harbor thereof, to the highest tide-waters of James river; and the port shall extend from Richmond and Manchester to Bermuda Hundred. The office of collector for the district of Petersburg shall be kept in the town of Petersburg; and a collector shall be appointed for the Richmond district, whose office shall be kept in the city of Richmond; and the surveyors within those two districts shall continue to reside at the places at present established by law.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the master of any ship or vessel, bound to any district of James river above Sewall's Point, shall, before he pass by the said Point, and immediately after his arrival either at the same or at Hampton Road, deposit with the collector of the port of Norfolk and Portsmouth, or of Hampton, a true manifest of the cargo on board such ship or vessel; and the said collector shall, after registering the manifest, transmit the same, duly certified to have been so deposited, to the officer with whom the entries are to be made: And the said collector may, whenever he shall judge it to be necessary for the security of the revenue, put an inspector of the customs on board any such ship or vessel, to accompany the same until her arrival at the first port of entry or delivery, in the district, to which such ship or vessel may be destined: And if the master or commander of any such ship or vessel shall neglect or omit to deposit a manifest in manner as aforesaid, or shall refuse to receive an inspector of customs on board, as the case shall require, he shall forfeit and pay five hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, one-half for the use of the officer with whom such manifest ought to have been deposited, and the other half to the use of the collector of the district to which the said ship or vessel may be bound.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That such part and so much of the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," as comes within the purview of this act, being contrary hereto, shall be and hereby is repealed.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

Acts of Congress.

An Act supplemental to the act, entitled "An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia; and authorizing the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory."

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the ordinance of Congress of the thirteenth of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, and of the act of Congress of the seventh of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, providing for the government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the river Ohio, as relates to the organization of a General Assembly therein, and prescribes the powers thereof, shall forthwith operate, and be in force in the Mississippi Territory: Provided, That until the number of free male inhabitants of full age, in the said Territory, shall amount to five thousand, there shall not be returned to the General Assembly more than nine representatives.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the number of free male inhabitants of full age in the Mississippi Territory, shall amount to five thousand, the county of Adams shall be entitled to choose four representatives to the General Assembly, the county of Pickering four, and the Tensaw and Tombigbee settlements one.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the first election, for representatives to the General Assembly, shall be on the fourth Monday in July next, and that all subsequent elections shall be regulated by the Legislature.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Governor of the Mississippi Territory, to cause the said election to be holden on the day aforesaid, at the most convenient place in the counties and settlements aforesaid, and to nominate a proper officer or officers to preside at and conduct the same, and to return to him the names of the persons who may have been duly elected.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the representatives shall be convened by the Governor at the town of Natchez, on the fourth Monday in September next.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That so soon as the number of free male inhabitants of full age shall amount to, or exceed five thousand, the number of representatives to the General Assembly shall be determined, and the apportionment made in the way prescribed in the ordinance.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall in any respect impair the right of the State of Georgia to the jurisdiction, or of the said State, or of any person or persons to the soil of the said Territory, but the rights and claims of the said State, and all persons interested, are hereby declared to be as firm and available as if this act had never been made.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the General Assembly shall meet at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday of December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day: Provided, That the Governor shall have power on extraordinary occasions to convene the General Assembly.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That neither

House during the session of the General Assembly shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the commissioners appointed, or who may hereafter be appointed on the part of the United States, in pursuance of the act, entitled "An act for an amicable settlement of limits with the State of Georgia; and authorizing the establishment of a government in the Mississippi Territory," or any two of them, finally to settle by compromise with the commissioners, which have been or may be appointed by the State of Georgia, any claims mentioned in said act, and to receive in behalf of the United States a cession of any lands therein mentioned, or of the jurisdiction thereof, on such terms as to them shall appear reasonable: And also, that the said commissioners on the part of the United States, or any two of them, be authorized to inquire into the claims which are or shall be made by settlers or any other persons whatsoever, to any part of the aforesaid lands, and to receive from such settlers and claimants any propositions of compromise which may be made by them, and lay a full statement of the claims and the propositions which may be made to them by the settlers or claimants to any part of the said lands, together with their opinion thereon, before Congress, for their decision thereon, as soon as may be: Provided, That the settlement shall be made and completed before the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and three: And provided, also, That the said commissioners shall not contract for the payment of any money from the Treasury of the United States to the State of Georgia, other than the proceeds of the same lands.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

An Act in addition to the act, entitled "An act to prohibit the carrying on the slave trade from the United States to any foreign place or country."

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or other person residing within the United States, directly or indirectly, to hold or have any right or property in any vessel employed or made use of in the transportation or carrying of slaves from one foreign country or place to another, and any right or property, belonging as aforesaid, shall be forfeited, and may be libelled and condemned for the use of the person who shall sue for the same; and such person, transgressing the prohibition aforesaid, shall also forfeit and pay a sum of money equal to double the value of the right of property in such vessel, which he held as aforesaid; and shall also forfeit a sum of money equal to double the value of the interest which he may have had in the slaves, which at any time may have been transported or carried in such vessel, after the passing of this act, and against the form thereof.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or other person residing therein, to serve on board any vessel of the United States employed or made use of in the transportation or carrying of slaves, from one foreign country or place to another; and any such citizen or other person, voluntarily serving as aforesaid, shall be liable to be indicted therefor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any citizen of the United States shall voluntarily serve on board of any foreign ship or vessel, which shall hereafter be employed in the slave trade, he shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to, and suffer the like forfeitures, pains, disabilities, and penalties, as he would have incurred, had such ship or vessel been owned or employed, in whole or in part, by any person or persons residing within the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any of the commissioned vessels of the United States, to seize and take any vessel employed in carrying on trade, business, or traffic, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this or the said act to which this is in addition; and such vessel, together with her tackle, apparel, and guns, and the goods or effects, other than slaves, which shall be found on board, shall be forfeited, and may be proceeded against in any of the district or circuit courts, and shall be condemned for the use of the officers and crew of the vessel making the seizure, and be divided in the proportion directed in the case of prize: And all persons interested in such vessel, or in the enterprise or voyage in which such vessel shall be employed at the time of such capture, shall be precluded from all right or claim to the slaves found on board such vessel as aforesaid, and from all damages or retribution on account thereof: And it shall moreover be the duty of the commanders of such commissioned vessels, to apprehend and take into custody every person found on board of such vessel so seized and taken, being of the officers or crew thereof, and him or them convey, as soon as conveniently may be, to the civil authority of the United States, in some one of the districts thereof, to be proceeded against in due course of law.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the district and circuit courts of the United States shall have cognizance of all acts and offences against the prohibitions herein contained.

SEC. 6. Provided, nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to authorize the bringing into either of the United States, any person or persons, the importation of whom is, by the existing laws of such State, prohibited.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the forfeitures which shall hereafter be incurred under this, or the said act to which this is in addition, not otherwise disposed of, shall accrue, and be, one moiety thereof to the use of the informer, and the other moiety to the use of the United States, except where the prosecution shall be first instituted on behalf of the United States, in which case the whole shall be to their use.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

An Act to provide for equalizing the valuations of unseated lands.

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners appointed under the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States," in those States the valuations and enumerations whereof are not yet closed and returned to the Treasury Department, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and empowered, on examination and consideration, at some general meeting to be convened pursuant to law, of the lists, returns, valuations and abstracts, rendered to them by the assessors within their respective States, to revise the valuations of unseated lands in each and every assessment district of their respective States, and in each and every sub-division of such districts, respectively, and to vary and adjust the said valuations, by adding thereto or deducting therefrom such rate per centum as to them shall appear just and reasonable: Provided always, That the relative valuations of different tracts of unseated land in the same sub-division shall not be changed or affected.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners may direct the deductions and additions aforesaid to be made out and completed by the principal assessors of the aforesaid assessment district, respectively, or, if they shall deem it more proper, by their own clerk and by such assistants as they shall find necessary and appoint for that purpose: Provided, always, That the compensation to be made to the said assistants shall not exceed the pay allowed to the assistant assessors by the act aforesaid.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

An Act supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to establish the compensation of the officers employed in the collection of the duties on impost and tonnage."

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, there shall be allowed and paid annually, to and for the use of the several collectors and surveyors appointed, and to be appointed pursuant to law, and employed in the collection of the duties of imports and tonnage, in the districts hereinafter mentioned, in addition to their fees and emoluments otherwise allowed by law, the sums following, respectively, that is to say: The collectors of Passamaquoddy, Waldoborough, and St. Mary's, two hundred and fifty dollars each: To the collectors of Machias, Great Egg Harbor, Little Egg Harbor, Perth Amboy, Bridgetown, Sunbury, and Georgetown, in Maryland, one hundred dollars each; and to the collectors of Sagg Harbor, Brunswick, in Georgia, and Dumfries, fifty dollars each: To the surveyor of Bermuda Hundred, one hundred and fifty dollars; and to the surveyors of Newport, Providence, Port Royal, Alexandria, and Saybrook, one hundred dollars each.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the commissions heretofore allowed by law, there shall, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, be allowed to the collectors for the districts of Alexandria, Petersburg, and Richmond, respectively, two and a half per centum, on all moneys which shall be collected and received by them: To the collector for the district of Boston and Charlestown, and to the collectors of Baltimore and Philadelphia, three-eighths of one per centum: To the collectors of Charleston, South Carolina, Salem, and Norfolk, and Portsmouth, three-quarters of one per centum: To the collector of the district of Portland, one per centum; for and on account of the duties arising on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships and vessels.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the collectors of the several districts of Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Charleston, and they are hereby respectively directed, to deposit for collection in the Bank of the United States, or at an office of discount and deposit of the said bank, all the bonds taken, or to be taken by them, for duties, by virtue of any law of the United States; but on all money collected by the said banks the commissions aforesaid are to be allowed the said collectors, in like manner as if received by them.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

An Act to amend the act, entitled "An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States, in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river."

Be it enacted, &c., That, for the disposal of the lands of the United States, directed to be sold by the act, entitled "An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States, in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river," there shall be four land offices established in the said territory: One at Cincinnati, for lands below the Little Miami, which have not heretofore been granted; one at Chillicothe, for lands east of the Sciota, south of the lands appropriated for satisfying military bounties to the late army of the United States, and west of the fifteenth range of townships; one at Marietta, for the lands east of the sixteenth range of townships, south of the beforementioned military lands, and south of a line drawn due west from the northwest corner of the first township of the second range, to the said military lands; and one at Steubenville, for the lands north of the last mentioned line, and east or north of the said military lands: Each of the said offices shall be under the direction of an officer, to be called "The Register of the Land Office," who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall give bond to the United States, with approved security, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office; and shall reside at the place where the land-office is directed to be kept.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, and he is hereby expressly enjoined, to prepare and transmit to the registers of the several land offices, before the days herein appointed for commencing sales, general plats of the lands hereby directed to be sold at the said offices, respectively, and also to forward copies of each of the said plats to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the surveyor general shall cause the townships west of the Muskingum, which by the above mentioned act are directed to be sold in quarter townships, to be subdivided into half sections of three hundred and twenty acres each, as nearly as may be, by running parallel lines through the same from east to west, and from south to north, at the distance of one mile from each other, and marking corners, at the distance of each half mile on the lines running from east to west, and at the distance of each mile on those running from south to north, and making the marks, notes, and descriptions, prescribed to surveyors by the abovementioned act: And the interior lines of townships intersected by the Muskingum, and of all the townships lying east of that river, which have not been heretofore actually subdivided into sections, shall also be run and marked in the manner prescribed by the said act, for running and marking the interior lines of townships directed to be sold in sections of six hundred and forty acres each: And in all cases where the exterior lines of the townships, thus to be subdivided into sections or half sections, shall exceed or shall not extend six miles, the excess or deficiency shall be specially noted, and added to or deducted from the western and northern ranges of sections or half sections in such township, according as the error may be in running the lines from east to west, or from south to north. The sections and half sections bounded on the northern and western lines of such townships shall be sold as containing only the quantity expressed in the returns and plats, respectively, and all others as containing the complete legal quantity: And the President of the United States shall fix the compensation of the deputy surveyors, chain-carriers, and axe-men: Provided, The whole expense of surveying and marking the lines shall not exceed three dollars for every mile that shall be actually run, surveyed, and marked.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the lands thus subdivided (excluding the sections reserved by the abovementioned act) shall be offered for sale in sections and half sections, subdivided as before directed, at the following places and times, that is to say: those below the Little Miami shall be offered at public vendue, in the town of Cincinnati, on the first Monday of April, one thousand eight hundred and one, under the direction of the register of the land office there established, and of either the Governor or Secretary of the Northwestern Territory: The lands east of Sciota, south of the military lands, and west of the fifteenth range of townships, shall be offered in like manner for sale at Chillicothe, on the first Monday of May, one thousand eight hundred and one, under the direction of the register of the land office there established, and of either the Governor or Secretary of the said territory: The lands east of the sixteenth range of townships, south of the military lands, and west of the Muskingum, including all the townships intersected by that river, shall be offered for sale in like manner at Marietta, on the last Monday of May, one thousand eight hundred and one, under the direction of the Governor or Secretary, or surveyor general of the said territory. The sales shall remain open at each place for three weeks and no longer. The superintendents shall observe the rules and regulations of the abovementioned act, in classing and selling fractional with entire sections, and in keeping and transmitting accounts of the sales. All lands, remaining unsold, at the closing of either of the public sales, may be disposed of at private sale by the registers of these respective land offices, in the manner hereinafter prescribed. And the register of the land office at Steubenville, after the first day of July next, may proceed to sell at private sale the lands situate within the district assigned to his direction as herein before described, disposing of the same in sections, and classing fractional with entire sections, according to the provisions and regulations of the abovementioned act and of this act: And the register of the land office at Marietta, after the said first day of July next, may proceed to sell, at private sale, any of the lands within the district assigned to his direction as aforesaid, which are east of the river Muskingum, excluding the townships intersected by that river, disposing of the same in sections, and classing fractional with entire sections as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no lands shall be sold by virtue of this act, at either public or private sale, for less than two dollars per acre, and payment may be made for the same by all purchasers, either in specie, or in evidences of the public debt of the United States, at the rates prescribed by the act, entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of evidences of the public debt in payment for the lands of the United States;" and shall be made in the following manner, and under the following conditions, to wit:

1. At the time of purchase, every purchaser shall, exclusively of the fees hereafter mentioned, pay six dollars for every section, and three dollars for every half section, he may have purchased, for surveying expenses, and deposit one-twentieth part of the amount of the purchase money, to be forfeited, if within forty days one-fourth part of the purchase money, including the said twentieth part, is not paid.

2. One-fourth part of the purchase money shall be paid within forty days after the day of sale as aforesaid; another fourth part shall be paid within two years; another fourth part within three years; and another fourth part within four years after the day of sale.

3. Interest, at the rate of six per cent. a year, from the day of sale, shall be charged upon each of the three last payments, payable as they respectively become due.

4. A discount, at the rate of eight per cent. a year, shall be allowed on any of the three last payments, which shall be paid before the same shall become due, reckoning this discount always upon the sum, which would have been demandable by the United States, on the day appointed for such payment.

5. If the first payment of one-fourth part of the purchase money shall not be made within forty days after the sale, the deposit, payment, and fees, paid and made by the purchaser, shall be forfeited, and the lands shall and may, from and after the day when the payment of one fourth part of the purchase money should have been made, be disposed of at private sale, on the same terms and conditions, and in the same manner as the other lands directed by this act to be disposed of at private sale. Provided, That the lands which shall have been sold at public sale, and which shall, on account of such failure of payment, revert to the United States, shall not be sold at private sale, for a price less than the price that shall have been offered for the same at public sale.

6. If any tract shall not be completely paid for within one year after the date of the last payment, the tract shall be advertised for sale by the register of the land office within whose district it may lie, in at least five of the most public places in the said district, for at least thirty days before the time of sale; and he shall sell the same at public vendue, during the sitting of the court of quarter sessions of the county in which the land office is kept, for a price not less than the whole arrears due thereon, with the expenses of sale; the surplus, if any, shall be returned to the original purchaser, or to his legal representative; but if the sum due, with interest, be not bidden and paid, then the land shall revert to the United States. All moneys paid therefor shall be forfeited, and the register of the land office may proceed to dispose of the same to any purchaser, as in case of other lands at private sale.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all and every the payments, to be made by virtue of the preceding section, shall be made either to the Treasurer of the United States, or to such person or officer as shall be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate, receiver of public moneys for lands of the United States, at each of the places respectively where the public and private sales of the said lands are to be made; and the said receiver of public moneys shall, before he enters upon the duties of his office, give bond, with approved security, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of his trust; and it shall be the duty of the said Treasurer and receiver of public moneys to give receipts for the moneys by them received, to the persons respectively paying the same; to transmit within thirty days in case of public sale, and quarterly in case of private sale, an account of all the public moneys by them received, specifying the amount received from each person, and distinguishing the sums received for surveying expenses, and those received for purchase money, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the registers of the land office, as the case may be. The said receivers of public moneys shall, within three months after receiving the same, transmit the moneys by them received to the Treasurer of the United States; and the receivers of public moneys for the said sales, and also the receivers of public moneys for the sales which have taken place at Pittsburg under the act, entitled "An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the Ohio and above the mouth of Kentucky river," shall receive one per cent. on the money received, as a compensation for clerk hire, receiving, safe-keeping, and transmitting it to the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the registers of the land offices, respectively, to receive and enter in books kept for that purpose only, and on which no blank leaves or space shall be left between the different entries, the applications of any person or persons who may apply for the purchase of any section or half section, and who shall pay him the fee hereafter mentioned, and produce a receipt from the Treasurer of the United States, or from the receiver of public moneys appointed for that purpose, for three dollars for each half section such person or persons may apply for, and for at least one-twentieth part of the purchase money, stating carefully in each entry the date of the application, the date of the receipt to him produced, the amount of moneys specified in the said receipt, and the number of the section or half section, township, and range, applied for. If two or more persons shall apply at the same time for the said tract, the register shall immediately determine by lot, in presence of the parties, which of them shall have preference. He shall file the receipt for moneys produced by the party, and give him a copy of his entry, and, if required, a copy of the description of the tract, and a copy of the plat of the same, or either of them; and it shall be his duty to inform the party applying for any one tract, whether the same has already been entered, purchased, or paid for, and at his request to give him a copy of the entry or entries concerning the same. He shall, three months after the date of each application, if the party shall not have within that time produced to him a receipt of the payment of one-fourth part of the purchase money, including the twentieth part above mentioned, enter under its proper date, in the said book of entries, that the payment has not been made, and that the land has reverted to the United States, and he shall make a note of the same in the margin of the book opposite to the original entry. And if the party shall, either at the time of making the original entry, or at any time within three months thereafter, produce a receipt to him, for the fourth part of the purchase money, including the twentieth part aforesaid, he shall file the receipt, make an entry of the same, under its proper date, in the said book of entries, make a note of the same in the margin of the book, opposite to the original entry, and give to the party a certificate, describing the land sold, the sum paid on account, the balance remaining due, the time and times when such balance shall become due, and that if it shall be duly discharged the purchaser, or his assignee or other legal representative, shall be entitled to a patent for the said lands; he shall also upon any subsequent payment being made, and a receipt from the receiver being produced to him, file the original receipt, give a receipt for the same to the party, and enter the same to the credit of the party, in a book kept for that purpose, in which he shall open an account, in the name of each purchaser, for each section or half section that may be sold either at public or private sale, and in which he shall charge the party for the whole purchase money, and give him credit for all his payments; making the proper charges and allowances for interest or discount, as the case may be, according to the provisions of the fourth section of this act; and upon the payment being completed, and the account finally settled, he shall give a certificate of the same to the party; and, on producing to the Secretary of the Treasury the same final certificate, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to grant a patent for the lands to the said purchaser, his heirs or assigns; and all patents shall be countersigned by the Secretary of State, and recorded in his office.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the registers, of the land offices, respectively, shall also note on the book of surveys, or original plat transmitted to them, every tract which may be sold, by inserting the letter A on the day when the same is applied for, and the letter P on the day when a receipt for one-fourth part of the purchase money is produced to them, and by crossing the said letter A on the day when the land shall revert to the United States, on failure of the payment of one-fourth part of the purchase money within three months after the date of application. And the said book of surveys or original plat shall be open at all times, in presence of the register, for the inspection of any individual, applying for the same and paying the proper fee.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted That it shall be the duty of the registers of the land offices to transmit quarterly to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the surveyor general, an account of the several tracts applied for, of the several tracts for which the payment of one-fourth part of the purchase money has been made, of the several tracts which have reverted to the United States on failure of the said payment; and also an account of all the payments of moneys by them entered, according to the receipts produced to them, specifying the sums of money, the names of the persons paying the same, the names of the officers who have received the same, and the tracts for which the same have been paid.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the registers aforesaid shall be precluded from entering on their books any application for lands in their own name, and in the name of any other person in trust for them; and if any register shall wish to purchase any tract of land, he may do it by application in writing to the surveyor general, who shall enter the same on books kept for that purpose by him, who shall proceed in respect to such applications, and to any payments made for the same, in the same manner which the registers by this act are directed to follow, in respect to applications made to them for lands by other persons. The registers shall, nevertheless, note on the book of surveys, or original plat, the applications and payments thus by them made, and their right to the pre-emption of any tract shall bear date from the day, when their application for the same shall have been entered by the surveyor general in his own book. And if any person applying for any tract shall, notwithstanding he shall have received information from the register, that the same has already been applied for by the said register, or by any other person, insist to make the application, it shall be the duty of the register to enter the same, noting in the margin that the same tract is already purchased; but upon application of the party made in writing, and which he shall file, he may and shall at any future time enter under its proper date, that the party withdraws his former application, and applies in lieu thereof for any other tract: Provided, always, That the party shall never be allowed thus to withdraw his former application, and to apply in lieu thereof for another tract, except when the tract described in his former application shall have been applied for previous to the date of that his former application.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall and may prescribe such further regulations, in the manner of keeping books and accounts, by the several officers in this act mentioned, as to him may appear necessary and proper, in order fully to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the registers of the land offices, respectively, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States, one-half per cent. on all the moneys expressed in the receipts by them filed and entered, and of which they shall have transmitted an account to the Secretary of the Treasury, as directed by this act; and they shall further be entitled to receive, for their own use, from the respective parties, the following fees for services rendered, that is to say: for every original application for land, and a copy of the same, for a section, three dollars; for a half section, two dollars; for every certificate stating that the first fourth part of the purchase-money is paid, twenty-five cents; for every subsequent receipt for moneys paid, twenty-five cents; for the final settlement of account, and giving the final certificate of the same, one dollar; for every copy, either of an application or of the description of any section or half section, or of the plat of the same, or of any entry made on their books, or of any certificate heretofore given by them, twenty-five cents for each; and for any general inspection of the book of surveys, or general plat, made in their presence, twenty-five cents.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the superintendents of the public sales, to be made by virtue of this act, and the superintendents of the sales which have taken place by virtue of the act, entitled "An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river," shall receive five dollars a day whilst engaged in that business; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow a reasonable compensation for books, stationery, and clerk hire, in settling the accounts of the said superintendents.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the fee to be paid for each patent for half a section shall be four dollars, and for every section five dollars, to be accounted for by the receiver of the same.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the lands of the United States reserved for future disposition, may be let upon leases by the surveyor general, in sections or half sections, for terms not exceeding seven years, on condition of making such improvement as he shall deem reasonable.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That each person who, before the passing of this act, shall have erected, or begun to erect, a grist-mill or saw-mill upon any of the lands herein directed to be sold, shall be entitled to the pre-emption of the section including such mill, at the rate of two dollars per acre: Provided, The person or his heirs, claiming such right of pre-emption, shall produce to the register of the land office satisfactory evidence that he or they are entitled thereto, and shall be subject to and comply with the regulations and provisions by this act prescribed for other purchasers.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That so much of the "act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory Northwest of the river Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river," as comes within the purview of this act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

An Act supplementary to the act, entitled "An act to establish the Treasury Department."

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to digest, prepare, and lay before Congress, at the commencement of every session, a report on the subject of finance, containing estimates of the public revenue and public expenditures, and plans for improving or increasing the revenues, from time to time, for the purpose of giving information to Congress in adopting modes of raising the money requisite to meet the public expenditures.

Approved, May 10, 1800.

An Act to authorize the issuing certain Patents.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful, and the proper officer is hereby authorized, to issue patents or surveys, which have been, or may be made within the territory reserved by the State of Virginia, northwest of the river Ohio, and being part of her cession to Congress, on warrants for military services, issued in pursuance of any resolution of the Legislature of that State, previous to the passing of this act, in favor of persons who had served in the Virginia line on the Continental establishment: Provided, That the whole quantity of land, for which patents shall issue by virtue of this act, shall not exceed sixty thousand acres; and that the surveys aforesaid shall be completed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of War, on or before the first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and three: And provided, also, That this act shall not give any force or validity to the entries, locations, or surveys, heretofore made in pursuance of these warrants, so far as such entries, locations, or surveys, interfere in any manner with those of persons claiming the same lands under entries, locations, or surveys, heretofore made, in pursuance of warrants granted by the State of Virginia to the officers and soldiers in the line of that State on Continental establishment.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in every case of interfering claims under military warrants, to lands within the territory so reserved by the State of Virginia, when either party to such claims shall lose, or be evicted from the land, every such party shall have a right, and hereby is authorized, to withdraw his, her, or their warrant, respectively, to the amount of such loss or eviction, and to enter, survey, and patent the same, on any vacant land within the bounds aforesaid, and in the same manner as other warrants may be entered, surveyed, and patented.

Approved, May 13, 1800.

An Act to enlarge the powers of Surveyors of the Revenue.

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever it shall appear to the surveyors of the revenue, appointed or to be appointed in any assessment district within the United States, under the act, entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States," that any tract of land or dwelling-house, situated within his district, and directed by the said act to be included in the lists, thereby required to be rendered and kept, hath been omitted

in the said lists, then, and in every such case, it shall be the duty of such surveyor, and he hereby is authorized and required, to inform himself of the value of such tract of land or dwelling-house, by entry, view, or other lawful ways and means, and to make a list and valuation thereof, in the form and manner prescribed in and by the said act, and to enter and record the said lists and valuation with and among the lists and valuations by him to be kept and recorded pursuant to the said act; and to charge the amount of the said valuation to the person or persons to whom the same ought to be charged, pursuant to the said act and to the act, entitled, "An act to lay and collect a direct tax within the United States;" and that where any assessor, no list having been rendered, shall have estimated any tract of unseated land to contain a greater number of acres than the said tract shall, by the patent or survey of the same, actually appear to contain, it shall appear to the surveyor of the assessment district in which the said land shall be situate, by the production of the said patent or survey thereof, that there has been a mistake in estimating the said number of acres, it shall be lawful for such surveyor to credit the proprietor or proprietors thereof with the number of acres so over-charged: Provided, That the said credit shall not operate to lessen the sum directed to be collected by virtue of the present law to lay and collect a direct tax: And provided also, That no credit shall be valid until the same shall have been approved by the inspector of the survey, or the supervisor of the district, if comprehending but one survey of inspection; and if any error has happened, by charging any person with being the proprietor of any tract or parcel of unseated land, who was not the owner thereof, on the first day of October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, or by assessing to any person any tract or parcel of unseated land more than once as proprietor thereof, it shall be lawful in all or any of these cases, for the surveyor of the district in which the said error shall have happened, to correct the same by giving the person so charged such credit in his account respecting the said land as may be just and equitable.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, for the services aforesaid, the surveyors of the revenue shall respectively be entitled to, and receive from the United States, the following compensations, that is to say: For every tract of land or dwelling-house, valued and recorded as aforesaid without entry and view, seventy-five cents; for every tract of land or dwelling-house so valued and recorded with entry and view, two dollars; for every mile of necessary travel in going to make such entry and view and returning, five cents; and that the accounts for the said compensations shall be presented to the supervisors of the districts respectively, and if allowed by them, shall be paid by them and credited to their accounts respectively, in the settlement thereof with the Treasury Department.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person shall have been charged, pursuant to the above mentioned acts or either of them, or to this act, with the amount of the valuation of any tract of land or dwelling-house; and such person, or his or her legal representatives or assigns, shall afterwards in due course of law have been ejected from such land or dwelling-house, or have had a decision against him, her, or them, upon the title thereof, then, and in every such case, it shall be the duty of the surveyor of the revenue within whose assessment district the said land or dwelling-house shall be situated, and he is hereby authorized and required, on the application of such person, or of his or her legal representatives or assigns, as the case may be, and on the payment or tender by them, or any of them, of the sum of one dollar for every such tract of land or dwelling-house, which sum the said surveyor is hereby authorized to demand and receive in such case, to cancel the valuation on such land or dwelling-house, so far as respects the persons so applying, and to discharge him or her therefrom.

Approved May 13, 1800.

An Act to amend an act, entitled "An act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That jurors to serve in the courts of the United States shall be designated by lot, or otherwise, in each State or district respectively, according to the mode of forming juries to serve in the highest courts of law therein now practised; so far as the same shall render such designation practicable by the courts and marshals of the United States.

Approved, May 13, 1800.

An Act to appropriate a certain sum of money to defray the expense of holding a treaty or treaties with the Indians.

Be it enacted, &c., That a sum not exceeding fifteen thousand dollars be appropriated, to defray the expense of such treaty or treaties, as the President of the United States shall deem it expedient to hold with the Indians south of the river Ohio: Provided, nothing in this act contained shall be construed to admit an obligation on the part of the United States to extinguish, for the benefit of any State or individual citizen, Indian claims to any lands lying within the limits of the United States; and that the compensation to be allowed to any of the commissioners who may be appointed for negotiating such treaty or treaties, shall not exceed, exclusive of travelling expenses the rate of eight dollars per day during the time of actual service of such commissioner.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum aforesaid shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated.

An Act to retain a further sum on drawbacks, for the expenses incident to the allowance and payment thereof, and in lieu of stamp duties on debentures.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, two and one-half per centum on the amount of all drawbacks, allowed or to be allowed by law, upon and for the re-exportation from the United States of goods, wares, or merchandise, imported thereinto, shall be retained for the use of the United States, by the collectors paying such drawbacks, respectively; and in addition to the sum of one and one quarter per centum, heretofore directed by law to be so retained.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the re-exportation from the United States of goods, wares, and merchandise, imported thereinto in foreign ships or vessels, no part of the additional duty imposed by law on such goods, wares, and merchandise, on account of their importation in such ships or vessels, shall be allowed to be drawback; but that the whole of the said additional duty shall be retained, in manner aforesaid, in addition to the rate per centum by this and former acts directed to be retained.

Approved, May 13, 1800.

An Act to authorize certain expenditures, and to make certain appropriations for the year one thousand eight hundred.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, shall have allowed to them, in the settlement of their accounts with the Treasury Department, the expenses by them respectively incurred, pursuant to the directions of the joint committee of the two Houses, in the various measures adopted by the said committee for doing honor to the memory of George Washington, late President of the United States; and that a sum not exceeding three thousand two hundred dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated for defraying the said expenses.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to cause to be given, during the present year, to the Choctaw nation of Indians, such presents, not exceeding the value of two thousand dollars, as he shall judge most suitable; and that the sum of two thousand dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated for that purpose.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to cause to be expended a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, for the reimbursement of such reasonable advances of money as have heretofore been, or before the first day of September next may be, made by consuls of the United States, in making and supporting the claims of American citizens for captured property, before the tribunals of foreign countries; and that the sum of five thousand dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated for that purpose.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of forty-four thousand dollars shall be, and hereby is, appropriated for defraying the expense that has been, or during the present year may be, incurred by the payment of costs, in prize causes before the court of admiralty and court of appeals in England.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That for defraying the expense incident to the visits of Indians to the seat of Government, the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That for defraying, during the present year, the additional compensations granted in the present session to the Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to the clerks in their respective offices, the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That for defraying the expenses incident, during the present year, to the establishment of the general stamp-office, including the salary of the superintendent of stamps, clerk hire, office rent, and all contingent expenses, the sum of four thousand dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That for defraying, during the present year, the expense incident to the establishment of the government of the Indiana Territory, including the salary of the governor, judges and secretary, and all contingent expenses, the sum of four thousand dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That for defraying the expense incident to the exploring of copper mines on Lake Superior, the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars shall be and hereby is appropriated.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated for the present year, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the fortification of the ports and harbors of the United States, in aid of the sums heretofore appropriated for that purpose and remaining unexpended.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid appropriations shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Approved, May 13, 1800.

An Act to lay additional duties on certain articles imported.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the thirtieth day of June next, the following duties, in addition to those now in force, and payable on the several articles hereinafter enumerated, shall be laid, levied, and collected upon those articles respectively, at their importation into the United States from any foreign country or place; that is to say: upon all brown sugar, one-half cent per pound; upon all sugar candy, two cents and one-half per pound; upon all molasses, one cent per gallon; and upon all goods, wares, and merchandises, now paying a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem, two and one-half per centum ad valorem.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the thirtieth day of June next, the duties now imposed and payable on wines, imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, shall cease and be abolished; and that in lieu thereof the following duties shall thenceforth be laid, levied, and collected upon all wines so imported in casks, bottles, or other vessels; that is to say: Upon all Malmsey, Madeira, and London Particular Madeira wine, fifty-eight cents per gallon; upon all other Madeira wine, fifty cents per gallon; upon all Burgundy, Champaign, Rhenish, and Tokay wine, forty-five cents per gallon; upon all Sherry wine, forty cents per gallon; upon all Saint Lucar wine, forty cents per gallon; upon all Claret and other wines not enumerated, when imported in bottles or cases, thirty-five cents per gallon; upon all Lisbon, Oporto, and other Portugal wines, thirty cents per gallon; upon all Teneriffe, Fayal, Malaga, Saint George, and other Western Island wine, twenty cents per gallon; and upon all other wines when imported, otherwise than in bottles or cases, twenty-three cents per gallon.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That an addition of ten per centum shall be made to the several rates of duties above specified and imposed, in respect to all such goods, wares, and merchandises as aforesaid, as shall after the said thirtieth day of June be imported in ships or vessels not of the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the duties laid by this act shall be levied and collected in the same manner, and under the same regulations and allowances as to drawbacks, mode of security, and time of payment, respectively, with the several duties now in force on the respective articles hereinbefore enumerated.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That on account of the additional duties laid on brown sugar and molasses by this act, the following sums respectively shall, from and after the thirty-first day of December next, be added to the drawbacks now allowed by law, on sugar refined within the United States and exported therefrom, and on spirits distilled from molasses within the United States and exported therefrom, that is to say: On all sugar so refined and exported, one cent per pound; and on all spirits so distilled and exported, one cent per gallon; which additional drawbacks shall be allowed and paid according to the regulations now established by law, respecting the present drawbacks allowed on the said articles.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the proceeds of the duties, laid by this act, shall be solely appropriated and applied for the discharge of the interest and principal of the debts of the strued to authorize any reduction of the first four regiments of infantry, the two regiments of artillery and engineers, the two troops of light dragoons, or of the general and other staff, authorized by the several laws for the establishing and organizing of the aforesaid corps.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That to each officer, non-commissioned officer, and private, who shall be discharged from service by virtue of this act, there shall be allowed and paid, in addition to the pay and allowances to which they are now entitled by law, a sum of money equal to three months' pay of such officer, non-commissioned officer, and private, respectively.

Approved, May 14, 1800.

An Act supplementary to the act establishing the Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That until the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one, the Mint shall remain in the city of Philadelphia, and be carried on as heretofore under the laws now in force; any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Approved, May 14, 1800.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That a marble monument be erected by the United States, in the Capitol, at the City of Washington, and that the family of General Washington be requested to permit his body to be deposited under it; and that the monument be so designed as to commemorate the great events of his military and political life.

And be it further resolved, That there be a funeral procession from Congress Hall to the German Lutheran Church, in honor of the memory of General George Washington, on Thursday the twenty-sixth instant, and that an oration be prepared at the request of Congress to be delivered before both Houses on that day; and that the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, be desired to request one of the members of Congress to prepare and deliver the same.

And be it further resolved, That it be recommended to the people of the United States to wear crape on the left arm, as mourning, for thirty days.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to direct a copy of these resolutions to be transmitted to Mrs. Washington, assuring her of the profound respect Congress will ever bear to her person and character; of their condolence on the late afflicting dispensation of Providence; and intreating her assent to the interment of the remains of General George Washington, in the manner expressed in the first resolution.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to issue a proclamation, notifying to the people throughout the United States the recommendation contained in the third resolution.

Approved, December 24, 1799.

Resolution on the death of General Washington.

Resolved, &c., That it be recommended to the people of the United States to assemble on the twenty-second day of February next, in such numbers and manner as may be convenient, publicly to testify their grief for the death of General George Washington, by suitable eulogies, orations, and discourses, or by public prayers.

And it is further resolved, That the President be requested to issue a proclamation for the purpose of carrying the foregoing resolution into effect

Approved, January 6, 1800.

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure and transmit to the Governor of the State of North Carolina, a number of the copies of the laws of the United States, equal to the number which the Secretary was heretofore authorized to transmit to the Governor of the said State, by an act, entitled "An act for the more general promulgation of the laws of the United States," to be deposited and distributed agreeably to the provisions of the said act, for the use and information of the citizens of the United States within the said State.

Approved, February 3, 1800.

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be requested to present to Captain Thomas Truxtun, a golden medal, emblematical of the late action between the United States' frigate Constellation, of thirty-eight guns, and the French ship of war La Vengeance, of fifty-four; in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallantry and good conduct in the above engagement, wherein an example was exhibited by the captain, officers, sailors, and marines, honorable to the American name, and instructive to its rising navy.

And it is further resolved, That the conduct of James Jarvis, a midshipman in said frigate, who gloriously preferred certain death to an abandonment of his post, is deserving of the highest praise, and that the loss of so promising an officer is a subject of national regret.

Approved, March 29, 1800.

Resolution respecting the copper mines on the south side of Lake Superior.

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be authorized to employ an agent, who shall be instructed to collect all material information relative to the copper mines on the south side of Lake Superior, and to ascertain whether the Indian title to such lands as might be required for the use of the United States, in case they should deem it expedient to work the said mines, be yet subsisting, and, if so, the terms on which the same can be extinguished: And that the said agent be instructed to make report to the President in such time as the information he may collect may be laid before Congress at their next session.

Approved, April 16, 1800.

one to consist of the remaining part of the State of New York, and to be called the district of New York; one to consist of the State of New Jersey and to be called the district of Jersey; one to consist of that part of the State of Pennsylvania which lies east of the river Susquehanna, and the north-east branch thereof, to the line betwixt Northumberland and Luzerne counties; thence westwardly along said line, betwixt Northumberland and Luzerne, and between Luzerne and Lycoming counties, until the same strikes the line of the State of New York, and to be called the eastern district of Pennsylvania; one to consist of the remaining part of the State of Pennsylvania, and to be called the western district of Pennsylvania; one to consist of the State of Delaware, and to be called the district of Delaware; one to consist of the State of Maryland, and to be called the district of Maryland; one to consist of that part of the State of Virginia, which lies to the eastward of a line to be drawn from the river Potomac at Harper's Ferry, along the Blue Ridge, with the line which divides the counties on the east side thereof from those on the west side thereof, to the North Carolina line, to be called the eastern district of Virginia; one to consist of the remaining part of the said State of Virginia, to be called the western district of Virginia; one to consist of the State of North Carolina, and to be called the district of North Carolina; one to consist of the State of South Carolina, and to be called the district of South Carolina; one to consist of the State of Georgia, and to be called the district of Georgia; one to consist of that part of the State of Tennessee which lies on the east side of Cumberland mountain, and to be called the district of East Tennessee; one to consist of the remaining part of said State, and to be called the district of West Tennessee; one to consist of the State of Kentucky, and to be called the district of Kentucky; and one to consist of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, and the Indiana Territory, and to be called the district of Ohio.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That where any two adjoining districts of the United States shall be divided from each other, in whole or in part, by any river, bay, water, water-course, or mountain, the whole width of such river, bay, water, water-course, or mountain, as the case may be, shall be taken and deemed, to all intents and purposes, to be within both of the districts so to be divided thereby.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said districts shall be classed into six circuits, in manner following; that is to say: the first circuit shall consist of the districts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode-Island; the second, of the districts of Connecticut, Vermont, Albany, and New York; the third, of the districts of Jersey, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania and Delaware; the fourth, of the district of Maryland, and the eastern and western districts of Virginia; the fifth, of the districts of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia; and the sixth, of the districts of East Tennessee, West Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That there shall be in each of the aforesaid circuits, except the sixth circuit, three judges of the United States, to be called circuit judges, one of whom shall be commissioned as chief judge; and that there shall be a circuit court of the United States, in and for each of the aforesaid circuits, to be composed of the circuit judges within the five first circuits respectively, and in the sixth circuit, by a circuit judge, and the judges of the district courts of Kentucky and Tennessee; the duty of all of whom it shall be to attend, but any two of whom shall form a quorum; and that each and every of the said circuit courts shall hold two sessions annually, at the times and places following, in and for each district contained within their several circuits respectively: that is to say, the circuit court of the first circuit, at Providence, on the eighth day of May, and at Newport, on the first day of November, in and for the district of Rhode Island; at Boston, in and for the district of Massachusetts, on the twenty-second day of May and the fifteenth day of October; at Portsmouth on the eighth day of June, and at Exeter on the twenty-ninth day of September, in and for the district of New Hampshire; in and for the district of Maine, at Portland on the fifteenth day of June, and at Wiscasset on the twenty-second day of September. The circuit court of the second circuit, at New Haven on the fifteenth day of April; and at Hartford, on the twenty-fifth day of September, in and for the district of Connecticut; at Windsor, on the fifth day of May, and at Rutland on the fifteenth day of October, in and for the district of Vermont; at the city of Albany, in and for the district of Albany, on the twentieth day of May and twenty-fifth day of October; at the city of New York, in and for the district of New York, on the fifth day of June and the tenth day of November. The circuit court of the third circuit, at Trenton, in and for the district of Jersey, on the second days of May and October; at the city of Philadelphia, in and for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania, on the eleventh day of May and eleventh day of October; at Bedford, in and for the Western district of Pennsylvania, on the twenty-fifth day of June and twenty-fifth day of November; and at Dover, in and for the district of Delaware, on the third day of June and twenty-seventh day of October. The circuit court of the fourth circuit at Baltimore, in and for the district of Maryland, on the twentieth day of March and fifth day of November; at Lexington in Rockbridge county, in and for the Western district of Virginia, on the fifth day of April and twentieth day of November; and at the city of Richmond, in and for the eastern district of Virginia, on the twenty-fifth day of April, and fifth day of December. The circuit court of the fifth circuit, at Raleigh, in and for the district of North Carolina, on the first day of June and the first day of November; at Charleston on the sixth day of May, and at Columbia on the thirtieth day of November, in and for the district of South Carolina; at Savannah on the tenth day of April, and at Augusta on the fifteenth day of December, in and for the district of Georgia; and the circuit court of the sixth circuit at Knoxville, in and for the district of East Tennessee, on the twenty-fifth day of March and twenty-fifth day of September; at Nashville, in and for the district of West Tennessee, on the twentieth day of April and twentieth day of October; and at Bairdstown, in and for the district of Kentucky, on the fifteenth day of May and fifteenth day of November; and at Cincinnati in and for the district of Ohio, on the tenth day of June and on the tenth day of December; and so on the several days and at the several places aforesaid, in each and every year afterwards: Provided always, That when any of the said days shall happen on Sunday, then the said court hereby directed to be holden on such day, shall be holden on the next day thereafter; and provided also, that there shall be appointed, in the sixth circuit, a judge of the United States, to be called a circuit judge, who together with the district judges of Tennessee and Kentucky, shall hold the circuit courts, hereby directed to be holden, within the said circuit; and that whenever the office of district judge, in the districts of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively, shall become vacant, such vacancies shall respectively be supplied by the appointment of two additional circuit judges, in the said circuit, who, together with the circuit judge first aforesaid, shall compose the circuit court of the said circuit.

SEC. 8. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That the said circuit courts hereby established shall have power, and hereby are authorized, to hold special sessions, for the trial of criminal causes, at any other time or times than is hereby directed, at their discretion.

SEC. 9. And provided also, and be it further enacted, That if, in the opinion of any judge of any of the said circuit courts, it shall be dangerous to hold the next stated session of such court, for any district within the circuit to which such judge shall belong, at the place by law appointed for holding the same; it shall be lawful for such judge to issue his order, under his hand and seal, to the marshal of such court, directing him to adjourn the said session, to such other place within the same district as the said judge shall deem convenient; which said marshal, thereupon, shall adjourn the said court pursuant to such order, by making, in one or more public papers, printed within the said district, publication of such order and adjournment, from the time when he shall receive such order, to the time appointed by law for commencing such stated session; and that the court so to be held, according to, and by virtue of such adjournment, shall have the same powers and authorities, and shall proceed in the same manner, as if the same had been held at the place appointed by law for that purpose.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the circuit courts shall have, and hereby are invested with, all the powers heretofore granted by law to the circuit courts of the United States, unless where otherwise provided by this act.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the said circuit courts respectively shall have cognizance of all crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, and committed within their respective districts, or upon the high seas; and also of all cases in law or equity, arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; and also of all actions, or suits of a civil nature, at common law, or in equity, where the United States shall be plaintiffs or complainants; and also of all seizures on land or water, and all penalties and forfeitures, made, arising or accruing, under the laws of the United States; which cognizance of all penalties and forfeitures, shall be exclusively of the State courts, in the said circuit courts, where the offence, by which the penalty or forfeiture is incurred shall have been committed within fifty miles of the place of holding the said courts; and also of all actions or suits, matters or things, cognizable by the judicial authority of the United States, under and by virtue of the Constitution thereof, where the matter in dispute shall amount to four hundred dollars, and where original jurisdiction is not given by the Constitution of the United States to the Supreme Court thereof, or exclusive jurisdiction by law to the district courts of the United States: Provided always, That in all cases where the title or bounds of land shall come into question, the jurisdiction of the said circuit courts shall not be restrained, by reason of the value of the land in dispute.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the said circuit courts, respectively, shall have cognizance, concurrently with the district courts, of all cases which shall arise, within their respective circuits, under the act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and that each circuit judge, within his respective circuit, shall and may perform all and singular the duties enjoined by the said act, upon a judge of a district court: And that the proceedings under a commission of bankruptcy, which shall issue from a circuit judge, shall in all respects be conformable to the proceedings under a commission of bankruptcy, which shall issue from a district judge, mutatis mutandis.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That where any action or suit shall be, or shall have been commenced, in any State court within the United States, against an alien, or by a citizen or citizens of the State in which such suit or action shall be, or shall have been commenced against a citizen or citizens of another State, and the matter in dispute, except in cases where the title or bounds of land shall be in question, shall exceed the sum or value of four hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, and the defendant or defendants in such suit or action shall be personally served with the original process therein, or shall appear thereto; or where, in any suit or action, so commenced or to be commenced, final judgment, for a sum exceeding four hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, shall have been rendered in such State court, against such defendant or defendants, without return of personal service on him, her, or them, of the original process in such suit or action, and without an appearance thereto by him, her, or them, and a writ of error, or writ of review, shall be brought by such defendant or defendants, in such State court, to reverse the said judgment; or where any suit or action shall have been, or shall be commenced in any such court, against any person or persons, in any case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or to be made under their authority; then, and in any of the said cases, it shall be lawful for the defendant or defendants, in such suit or action, at the time of entering his, her, or their appearance thereto, and for the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such writ of error, or writ of review, at the time when such writ shall be returnable, to file in such court a petition for the removal of such suit, action, writ of error, or writ of review, to the next circuit court of the United States, hereby directed to be holden in and for the district within which such State court shall be holden, and to offer to such State court good and sufficient surety for entering, in such circuit court, on the first day of its next ensuing session, true copies of the process and proceedings, in such action, suit, writ of error, or writ of review, and also for his, her, or their, appearance in the said circuit court, at the period aforesaid, and then and there entering special bail, in the said suit or action, if special bail was originally demandable and demanded therein; whereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to accept the said security, and to stay all further proceedings in such suit, action, writ of error, or writ of review, and to discharge any bail that may have been given therein: and that the said copies being filed as aforesaid in such circuit court, and special bail, in manner aforesaid, being given therein, such suit, action, writ of error, or writ of review, shall be therein proceeded on, tried, heard, and determined, in the same manner as if there originally commenced or brought: Provided always, That any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant, by the original process in such suit or action, shall hold the goods or estate so attached to answer the final judgment in the said circuit court, in the same manner as by the laws of the State they would have been holden, to answer the final judgment, had it been rendered by the court in which the suit or action was commenced.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That when in any suit or action, commenced, or to be commenced, in any State court within the United States, between citizens of the same State, the title or bounds of land shall come into question, it shall be lawful for either party, before trial, to state to the said court, and make affidavit if thereby required, that he, she, or they, doth or do claim under, and at the hearing or trial shall rely upon a right or title to the lands in dispute, under a grant or grants from a State other than that wherein such suit or action is, or shall be pending; and to produce to the said court the original grant or grants so claimed under, or exemplifications thereof, except in cases where the loss of public records shall put it out of his, her, or their power so to do; and to move that the adverse party do inform the said court, forthwith, whether he, she, or they, doth or do claim the land in dispute, under a grant or grants from the State wherein such suit or action is, or shall be pending; whereupon the said adverse party shall give such information, or otherwise not be allowed to plead, or give in evidence, in the cause any such grant; and that if it shall appear from such information, that the said adverse party doth claim the said lands, under any such grant, or grants, then it shall be lawful for the party moving for such information, if plaintiff or complainant in the said suit or action, to remove the same, by motion, to the next circuit court of the United States, hereby directed to be holden in and for the district within which such State court shall be holden; and if defendant in the said suit or action, then to remove the same, as aforesaid, in the same manner, and under the like regulations, terms, and conditions, as are provided in and by the preceding section of this act, in the cases of actions thereby directed to be removed; and that the said circuit courts respectively, into which such suit or action shall be removed, pursuant to the provisions in this section contained, shall proceed in, try, hear and determine the same, in like manner as if therein brought, by original process: Provided always, That neither party, so removing any suit or action, shall be allowed, on the trial or hearing thereof, to plead, give evidence of, or rely on, any other title than that by him, her, or them, so stated as aforesaid, as the ground of his, her, or their claim.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That any one judge of any of the said circuit courts shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to hold the same, from day to day, not exceeding five days, to impanel and charge the grand jury, to order process on any indictment or presentment found in the said court; to direct subpoenas for witnesses to attend the same, and the requisite process on the non-attendance of witnesses or jurors; to receive any presentment or indictment from the grand jury; to take recognizance for the attendance of any witness, or for the appearance of any person, presented or indicted; to award and issue process, and order commitment for contempts; to commit any person presented or indicted, for want of security or otherwise; to order publication of testimony; to issue commissions for the examination of witnesses, where allowable by law; to grant rules and orders of survey; to take order, where necessary, relative to jurors, to serve at the next stated session of the said court; to direct the examination of witnesses de bene esse, where allowed by law; to make rules of reference, by consent of parties; and to grant continuances on the motion of either party, upon such terms and conditions, as shall be agreeable to practice and the usages of law; and that if some other judge of the said court shall not attend the same within five days after the commencement thereof, inclusive, then the said court shall, by virtue of this act, be continued over to the next stated session thereof; in which case, all writs, process, and recognizances, returned and returnable to the said court, and all actions, suits, process, pleadings, and other proceedings, of what nature or kind soever, depending before the said court, shall, by virtue of this act, be continued to the next stated session of the same.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be arrested in one of the said districts, for trial in another, before any of the said circuit courts, in any civil action; and that no civil action or suit shall be brought before any of the said courts, by any original process, against an inhabitant of the United States, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ; nor shall any district or circuit court have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note, or other chose in action, in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents, if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the trials of all issues of fact, before any of the circuit courts hereby established, except in cases of equity, and admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That any judge of the said circuit courts shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, in all cases cognizable by the circuit court, whereof he shall be a judge, to grant writs of ne-exeat, and writs of injunction to stay waste, or to stay proceedings at law, on any judgment rendered by such circuit court, upon the like terms and conditions as such writs may be now granted, by the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That if, in the opinion of any circuit judge, of the circuit within which such district may be situated, the life or lives of any person or persons, confined in the prison of such district, under or by virtue of any law of the United States, shall be in imminent danger, arising from the place of such confinement, it shall, in such case, be lawful for such judge, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, to direct the marshal of such district to remove, or cause to be removed, the person or persons so confined to the next adjacent prison, there to be confined until he, she, or they, may safely be removed back to the place of his, her, or their first confinement; and that the said removals shall be at the expense of the United States.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That all actions, suits, process, pleadings, and other proceedings of what nature or kind soever, depending or existing in any of the present circuit courts of the United States, or in any of the present district courts of the United States, acting as circuit courts, shall be, and hereby are, continued over to the circuit courts established by this act, in manner following, that is to say: all such as shall, on the fifteenth day of June next, be depending and undetermined, or shall then have been commenced and made returnable before the district court of Maine, acting as a circuit court, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Maine; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of New Hampshire, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of New Hampshire; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Massachusetts, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Massachusetts; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court of the district of Rhode Island, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Rhode Island; all such as shall be depending or undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Connecticut, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Connecticut; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Vermont, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Vermont; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of New York, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of New York; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of New Jersey, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of New Jersey; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Pennsylvania, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Delaware, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Delaware; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Maryland, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Maryland; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Virginia, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the eastern district of Virginia; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of North Carolina, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of North Carolina; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of South Carolina, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of South Carolina; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the circuit court for the district of Georgia, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Georgia; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the district court of Tennessee, acting as a circuit court, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of East Tennessee; all such as shall be depending and undetermined before the district court of Kentucky, acting as a circuit court, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden within and for the district of Kentucky; and shall there be equally regular and effectual, and shall be proceeded in in the same manner as they could have been if this act had not been made.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That for the better despatch of the business of district courts of the United States, in the districts of Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, additional district courts shall be established therein in manner following, that is to say: The said district of Jersey shall be divided into two districts; one to consist of that part thereof which is called East New Jersey, and to be called the district of East Jersey; a district court in and for which shall be holden at New Brunswick, by the district judge of the district of Jersey, on the fourth Tuesday in May, and on the fourth Tuesday in November, in each and every year; and one other to consist of the remaining part of the said district of Jersey, and to be called the district of West Jersey, a district court in and for which shall be holden at Burlington, by the district judge last aforesaid, on the fourth Tuesday in February, and on the fourth Tuesday in August, in each and every year: And a new district shall be established in the districts of Maryland and Virginia, to consist of the Territory of Columbia, of all that part of the district of Maryland, which lies west and southwest of the river Patuxent, and of the western branch thereof, and south of the line which divides the county of Montgomery in the last mentioned district, from the county of Frederick, and of a line to be drawn from the termination of the last mentioned line, a northeast course to the western branch of the Patuxent; and of all that part of the district of Virginia which lies north of the river Rappahannock, and east of the line which divides the counties of Fauquier and Loudon, in the last mentioned district, from the counties of Fairfax, Prince William, and Stafford; which new district shall be called the district of Potomac, and a district court in and for the same shall be holden at Alexandria, by the district judge of the district of Maryland, on the first Tuesday in April, and the first Tuesday in October, in each and every year: And there shall be a new district established in the district of Virginia, to be called the district of Norfolk, and to consist of all that part of the said district of Virginia, which is contained within the counties of Isle of Wight, Nansemond, Norfolk, Princess Anne, James City, New Kent, Warwick, York, Elizabeth City, Gloucester, Matthews, Middlesex, Accomac, and Northampton; a district court in and for which district of Norfolk shall be holden at Norfolk by the district judge of the district of Virginia, on the first Tuesday in February, on the first Tuesday in May, on the first Tuesday in August, and on the first Tuesday in November, in each and every year: And the district of North Carolina shall be divided into three districts; one to consist of all that part thereof, which, by the laws of the State of North Carolina, now forms the districts of Edenton and Halifax; which district shall be called the district of Albemarle, and a district court in and for the same shall be holden at Edenton, by the district judge of the district of North Carolina, on the third Tuesday in April, on the third Tuesday in August, and on the third Tuesday in December, in each and every year; one other to be called the district of Pamptico, and to consist of all that part of the district of North Carolina aforesaid, which, by the laws of the said State, now forms the district of Newbern, and Hillsborough, together with all that part of the district of Wilmington which lies to the northward and eastward of the river called New river, and for which district of Pamptico, a district court shall be holden at Newbern, by the district judge last aforesaid, on the first Tuesday in April, on the first Tuesday in August, and on the first Tuesday in December, in each and every year: And one other, to consist of the remaining part of the said district of North Carolina, and to be called the district of Cape Fear, in and for which a district court shall be holden at Wilmington, by the district judge last aforesaid, on the last Tuesday in March, on the last Tuesday in July, and on the last Tuesday in November, in each and every year; which said courts, hereby directed to be holden, shall severally and respectively have and exercise within their several and respective districts the same powers, authority, and jurisdiction, in all cases and respects whatsoever, which are vested by law in the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That there shall be clerks for each of the said courts, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which clerks shall reside and keep the records of the said courts, at the places of holding the courts, whereto they respectively shall belong, and shall perform the same duties, and be entitled to and receive the same emoluments and fees, which are established by law for the clerks of the district courts of the United States respectively; and that the marshals and attorneys of the United States, for the districts which are hereby divided, or within the limits of which new districts are hereby erected, shall continue to be marshals and attorneys for the courts hereby appointed to be holden within the limits of their present districts respectively, and shall have, exercise, and perform, within the jurisdictions of those courts respectively, all the powers and duties, and receive all the fees and emoluments, appointed and established by law for the marshals and attorneys of the United States.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That the stated sessions of the district court of the district of Maryland shall hereafter be holden in Baltimore only.

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That the district courts of the United States, in and for the districts of Tennessee and Kentucky, shall be, and hereby are, abolished; and that all and singular the powers, authority, and jurisdiction, of the said courts respectively, shall be and hereby are vested in, and shall be exercised by the circuit courts, by this act directed to be holden in and for the districts of East Tennessee, West Tennessee, and Kentucky, respectively, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions; and that the circuit judges to be appointed for the sixth circuit aforesaid, severally, shall be invested with, possess, and exercise, all and singular the powers now vested by law in the district judges of the United States.

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That, in case of the inability of the district judge of either of the districts of the United States to perform the duties of his office, and satisfactory evidence thereof being shown to the circuit court, in and for such district, it shall be the duty of such circuit court, from time to time, as occasion may require, to direct one of the judges of said circuit court to perform the duties of such district judge, within and for said district, for and during the period the inability of the district judge shall continue: And it shall be the duty of the circuit judge, to whom the duties of the district judge shall be assigned in manner aforesaid, and he is hereby authorized, to perform the duties of said district judge during the continuance of his disability.

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That the several circuit courts hereby established shall have power to appoint clerks for their respective courts; that is to say, one for each district within which such court is or shall be directed by law to be holden; which clerks respectively shall take the same oath or affirmation, and give the like bonds as are by law required to be taken and given by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall be entitled to demand and receive for their services, respectively, the same fees, to be recovered in the same manner as have heretofore been allowed by law, for the like services, to the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That the circuit courts of the United States, heretofore established, shall cease and be abolished; and that the records and office papers of every kind, belonging to those courts respectively, shall be safely kept by the clerks thereof, who shall continue in all respects to act as heretofore in the business of the said courts, until it shall otherwise be ordered by the courts hereby established.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States shall be, and hereby are, constituted courts of record.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That all writs and processes whatsoever, issuing from any of the circuit courts hereby established, shall, after the first day of April next, bear test of the presiding judge of such court; before which time, they shall bear test of the Chief Justice of the United States; all which said writs and processes shall be signed by the clerks of the courts, respectively, from which the same shall issue, and shall be made returnable to the next stated or special session of such court, and all writs and processes which have issued, or may issue, before the first day of April next, returnable to the circuit courts heretofore established, or to any district court acting as a circuit court, shall be returned to the circuit courts hereby established, and shall be there proceeded in in the same manner as they could had they been originally returnable to the circuit courts hereby established.

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That every justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and every judge of any circuit or district court, shall be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment, and thereupon to discharge from confinement, on bail or otherwise: Provided always, That no writ of habeas corpus, to be granted under this act, shall extend to any prisoner or prisoners in jail, unless such prisoner or prisoners be in custody, under or by color of the authority of the United States, or be committed for trial before some court of the same; or be necessary to be brought into court to give testimony.

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That the several courts of the United States shall be, and hereby are, authorized and empowered to grant new trials and rehearings, on motion and cause shown, and to make and establish all necessary rules and regulations for returning writs, filing pleas, and other proceedings, and for regulating the practice and enforcing the orderly conduct of business in the said courts respectively: Provided always, That the said rules and regulations be not repugnant to the laws of the United States: and that all the courts of the United States, and each of the justices and judges thereof, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and empowered, to administer all necessary oaths and affirmations, and to bind to the peace or good behaviour, with surety where necessary, in all cases arising under the authority of the United States.

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall be appointed a judge of any circuit court, hereby established, shall, before he shall begin to exercise the duties of his office, take the following oath or affirmation, that is to say:

"I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will administer justice without respect to persons; and will do equal right to all persons; and will, in all things, faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as a judge of —, according to the best of my abilities and understanding, and to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That, from all final judgments or decrees, in any of the district courts of the United States, an appeal where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum or value of fifty dollars, shall be allowed to the circuit court next to be holden, in the district where such final judgment or judgments, decree or decrees, may be rendered; and the circuit court or courts are hereby authorized and required to receive, hear, and determine such appeal; and that, from all final judgments or decrees in any circuit court, in any cases of equity, of admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction, and of prize or no prize, an appeal, where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum or value of two thousand dollars, shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States; and that upon such appeal, a transcript of the libel, bill, answer, deposition, and all other proceedings of what kind soever in the cause, shall be transmitted to the said Supreme Court; and that no new evidence shall be received in the said court, on the hearing of such appeal; and that such appeals shall be subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions, as are prescribed by law in the case of writs of error; and that the said Supreme Court shall be, and hereby is, authorized and required, to receive, hear, and determine such appeals.

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That all final judgments in civil actions at common law, in any of the circuit courts hereby established, whether brought by original process in such court, or removed thereto from any State court, and all final judgments in any of the district courts of the United States may, where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum or value of two thousand dollars, be re-examined and reversed or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, by writ of error: whereto shall be annexed, and returned therewith, at the day and place therein mentioned, an authenticated transcript of the record and assignment of errors, and prayer for reversal, and also a citation to the adverse party, signed by a judge of such circuit court, or by the district judge, as the case may be; which citation shall be served on the adverse party personally, or by leaving a true copy thereof at his or their usual place or places of residence, at least thirty days before the time mentioned in such writ of error, for the return thereof.

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That the stipulation, bond, or security, taken upon any writ of error or appeal to be brought or allowed as aforesaid, shall be returned by the judge taking the same, to the clerk or register of the court where the judgment or decree complained of was rendered, to be by him annexed to the transcript of the record, hereby directed to be sent up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed, in and for each of the districts established by this act, a marshal, whose duty it shall be to attend the circuit courts of the United States hereby established, when sitting within such district, and who shall have and exercise, within such district, the same powers, perform the same duties, be subject to the same penalties, give the same bond, with sureties, take the same oath, be entitled to and receive the same compensation and emoluments, and in all respects be subject to the same regulations, as are now prescribed by law, in respect to the marshals of the United States heretofore appointed: Provided always, That the several marshals of the United States, now in office, shall, during the periods for which they were respectively appointed, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States, be and continue marshals for the several districts hereby established, within which they respectively reside; and shall perform the duties, exercise the powers, and receive the emoluments, hereby directed to be performed, exercised, and received, by marshals therein.

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed, for each of the districts hereby established, a person learned in the law, to act as attorney for the United States within such district, and in the circuit and district courts which may be holden therein; which attorney shall take an oath or affirmation for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and shall prosecute, in such district, all delinquents for crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions or suits in which the United States shall be concerned, except actions or suits in the Supreme Court of the United States; and shall be entitled to, and receive, for their services, respectively, such compensations, emoluments, and fees, as by law are or shall be allowed, to the district attorneys of the United States: Provided always, That the district attorneys of the United States now in office shall, severally and respectively, be attorneys for those districts hereby established, within which they reside, until removed by the President of the United States; and shall perform the duties, exercise the powers, and receive the emoluments, hereby directed to be performed, exercised, and received by the attorney of the United States therein.

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That jurors and witnesses attending any of the courts, hereby established, shall be entitled to, and receive the same compensations, respectively, as heretofore have been allowed by law to jurors and witnesses, attending the circuit and district courts of the United States.

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That the records of the several circuit courts, hereby established, shall hereafter be kept at the respective places at which the said courts are hereby directed to be holden: Provided always, That in the district wherein there are more than one place directed by this act for holding said circuit courts, the records of the circuit court in such district shall hereafter be kept in either of such places, as the said court in such district shall direct.

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That the privilege from arrest of every person going to, attending at, or returning from, any court of the United States, shall be computed and continue, from the time of his or her departure from his or her habitation, until his or her return thereto: Provided, That such time shall not exceed one day, Sundays excluded, for every twenty miles of the distance, which such person must necessarily travel in so going and returning, over and above the time of attendance.

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That each of the circuit judges of the United States, to be appointed by virtue of this act, shall be allowed, as a compensation for his services, an annual salary of two thousand dollars, to be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States; except the judges of the sixth circuit, who shall be allowed the sum of fifteen hundred dollars each, to be paid in like manner; and that the salaries of the district judges of Kentucky and Tennessee shall be, and hereby are, severally augmented to the like sum of fifteen hundred dollars annually, to be paid in like manner.

Approved, February 27, 1801.

An Act concerning the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, &c., That the laws of the State of Virginia, as they now exist, shall be and continue in force in that part of the District of Columbia, which was ceded by the said State to the United States, and by them accepted for the permanent seat of Government; and that the laws of the State of Maryland, as they now exist, shall be and continue in force in that part of the said district, which was ceded by that State to the United States, and by them accepted as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said District of Columbia shall be formed into two counties; one county shall contain all that part of the said district which lies on the east side of the river Potomac, together with the island therein, and shall be called the county of Washington; the other county shall contain all that part of the said district which lies on the west side of said river, and shall be called the county of Alexandria; and the said river in its whole course through said district shall be taken and deemed, to all intents and purposes, to be within both of said counties.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That there shall be a court in said district, which shall be called the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia; and the said court and the judges thereof shall have all the powers by law vested in the circuit courts and the judges of the circuit courts of the United States. Said court shall consist of one chief judge and two assistant judges, resident within said District, to hold their respective offices during good behaviour; any two of whom shall constitute a quorum; and each of the said judges shall, before he enter on his office, take the oath or affirmation provided by law to be taken by the judges of the circuit courts of the United States; and said court shall have power to appoint a clerk of the court in each of said counties, who shall take the oath and give a bond with sureties, in the manner directed for clerks of the district courts in the act to establish the Judiciary of the United States.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That said court shall, annually, hold four sessions in each of said counties, to commence as follows, to wit: for the county of Washington, at the city of Washington, on the fourth Mondays of March, June, September, and December; for the county of Alexandria, at Alexandria, on the second Mondays of January, April, July, and the first Monday of October.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That said court shall have cognizance of all crimes and offences committed within said district, and of all cases in law and equity between parties, both or either of which shall be resident or be found within said District, and also of all actions or suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, in which the United States shall be plaintiffs or complainants; and of all seizures on land or water, and all penalties and forfeitures made, arising, or accruing, under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 6. Provided, and be it further enacted, That all local actions shall be commenced in their proper counties, and that no action or suit shall be brought before said court, by any original process against any person, who shall not be an inhabitant of, or found within said district at the time of serving the writ.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That there shall be a Marshal for the said District, who shall have the custody of the jails of said counties, and be accountable for the safe-keeping of all prisoners legally committed therein; and he shall be appointed for the same term, shall take the same oath, give a bond with sureties in the same manner, shall have generally, within said District, the same powers, and perform the same duties, as is by law directed and provided in the case of marshals of the United States.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That any final judgment, order, or decree, in said circuit court, wherein the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the value of one hundred dollars, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, by writ of error or appeal; which shall be prosecuted in the same manner, under the same regulations, and the same proceedings shall be had therein as is, or shall be, provided in the case of writs of error on judgments, or appeals upon orders or decrees, rendered in the circuit court of the United States.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed an Attorney of the United States for said District, who shall take the oath and perform all the duties required of the district attorneys of the United States; and the said attorney, marshal, and clerks, shall be entitled to receive for their respective services, the same fees, perquisites, and emoluments, which are by law allowed respectively to the attorney, marshal, and clerk of the United States, for the district of Maryland.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, That the chief judge, to be appointed by virtue of this act, shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars, and the two assistant judges, of sixteen hundred dollars each, to be paid quarterly, at the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed in and for each of the said counties, such number of discreet persons to be justices of the peace, as the President of the United States shall from time to time think expedient, to continue in office five years; and such justices, having taken an oath for the faithful and impartial discharge of the duties of the office, shall, in all matters, civil and criminal, and in whatever relates to the conservation of the peace, have all the powers vested in, and shall perform all the duties required of, justices of the peace, as individual magistrates, by the laws hereinbefore continued in force in those parts of said District, for which they shall have been respectively appointed; and they shall have cognizance in personal demands to the value of twenty dollars, exclusive of costs; which sum they shall not exceed, any law to the contrary notwithstanding; and they shall be entitled to receive for their services the fees allowed for like services by the laws hereinbefore adopted and continued, in the eastern part of said District.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed in and for each of the said counties, a Register of Wills, and a Judge, to be called the Judge of the Orphans' Court, who shall each take an oath for the faithful and impartial discharge of the duties of his office; and shall have all the powers, perform all the duties, and receive the like fees, as are exercised, performed, and received, by the Registers of Wills and Judges of the Orphans' Court within the State of Maryland; and appeals from the said courts shall be to the circuit court of said District, who shall therein have all the powers of the Chancellor of the said State.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where judgment or decrees have been obtained, or hereafter shall be obtained, on suits now depending in any of the courts of the Commonwealth of Virginia, or of the State of Maryland, where the defendant resides or has property within the District of Columbia, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff in such case, upon filing an exemplification of the record and proceedings in such suits, with the clerk of the court of the county where the defendant resides, or his property may be found, to sue out writs of execution thereon, returnable to the said court, which shall be proceeded on, in the same manner as if the judgment or decree had originally been obtained in said court.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That all actions, suits, process, pleadings, and other proceedings, of what nature or kind soever, depending or existing in the courts of hustings for the towns of Alexandria and Georgetown, shall be, and hereby are, continued over to the circuit courts, to be holden by virtue of this act, within the District of Columbia, in manner following; that is to say, all such as shall then be depending and undetermined before the court of hustings for the town of Alexandria, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden in the town of Alexandria; and all such as shall then be depending and undetermined before the court of hustings for Georgetown, to the next circuit court hereby directed to be holden in the City of Washington: Provided nevertheless, That where the personal demand in such cases, exclusive of costs, does not exceed the value of twenty dollars, the justices of the peace, within their respective counties, shall have cognizance thereof.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That all writs and processes whatsoever, which shall hereafter issue from the courts hereby established within the District, shall be tested in the name of the chief judge of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall in any wise alter, impeach, or impair the rights, granted by or derived from the acts of incorporation of Alexandria and Georgetown, or of any other body corporate or politic, within the said District, except so far as relates to the judicial powers of the Corporations of Georgetown and Alexandria.

Approved, February 27, 1801.

An Act supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments."

Be it enacted, &c., That all suits, and process, and proceedings, which on the third day of July, one thousand eight hundred, were pending in any court of either of the counties, which, by the act entitled "An act to divide the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments," has been included within the Indiana Territory; and that all suits, process, and proceedings, which, on the aforesaid third day of July, were pending in the general court of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, in consequence of any writ of removal or order for trial at bar, had been removed from either of the counties now within the limits of the Indiana Territory aforesaid, shall be, and they are hereby, revived and continued; and the same proceedings, before the rendering of final judgment, and thereafter, may and shall be had, in the same courts, in all suits and process aforesaid, and in all things concerning the same, as by law might have been had in case the said Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio had remained undivided.

Approved, March 2, 1801.

An Act to add to the District of Massac, on the Ohio, and to discontinue the District of Palmyra, in the State of Tennessee, and therein to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage."

Be it enacted, &c., That the District of Massac, in addition to the territory it already possesses, shall include all waters, shores, and inlets, now included within the District of Palmyra, and all rivers, waters, shores and inlets, lying within the State of Tennessee.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the thirtieth day of June next, so much of the "Act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," as establishes the District of Palmyra, in the State of Tennessee, shall be repealed, except as to the recovery and receipts of such duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, as shall have accrued, and as to the recovery and distribution of fines, penalties, and forfeitures, which shall have been incurred before and on the said day.

Approved, March 2, 1801.

An Act making appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one.

Be it enacted, &c., That, for defraying the expenses of the Military Establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand eight hundred and one, the pay and subsistence of the officers and men, bounties, and premiums, the clothing, hospital, ordnance, Quartermaster's and Indian departments, the defensive protection of the frontiers, the contingent expenses of the War Department, for the fabrication of cannon and arms, and purchase of ammunition, and for the payment of military pensions, the sum of two millions, ninety-three thousand and one dollars be, and is, hereby appropriated; that is to say,

An Act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ Clerks for completing the abstracts of the valuations of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ clerks, for such compensation as he shall judge reasonable, to complete the abstracts of the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States, under the direction of the commissioners authorized to direct the completing of such abstracts, in those States where clerks cannot be procured by the commissioners, for the compensation allowed by law to clerks for performing that business, agreeably to the provisions of the following acts; that is to say an act entitled "An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves within the United States;" an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the act, entitled 'An act to provide for the valuation of lands and dwelling-houses, and the enumeration of slaves, within the United States;'" and an act, entitled "An act to provide for equalizing the valuation of unseated lands."

Approved, March 3, 1801.

An Act giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio.

Be it enacted, &c., That any person or persons, and the legal representative or representatives of any person or persons, who, before the first day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred, had made any contract or contracts in writing, or by any note or memorandum thereof in writing, either with John Cleves Symmes, or with any of his associates, or who had made to him or them, any payment of money for the purchase of lands, situate between the Miami rivers, within the limits of a survey made by Israel Ludlow, in conformity to an act of Congress of the twelfth of April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, and not comprehended within the limits of a tract of land conveyed to John Cleves Symmes and his associates, by letters patent, bearing date the thirtieth of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, shall be entitled to a preference, in becoming the purchasers, from the United States, of all the lands so contracted for, at the price of two dollars per acre, exclusive of the surveying fees, and other incidental expenses; and payment be made therefor, to the Treasurer of the United States, or the receiver of public moneys for the lands of the United States at Cincinnati, in like instalments, and under the same conditions, as directed by the act, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio and above the mouth of Kentucky river;'" Provided however, That no interest shall be charged upon any of the instalments until they respectively become payable.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That every person claiming the benefit of the first section of this act, shall, on or before the first day of November next, deliver to the receiver of public moneys, for the lands of the United States at Cincinnati, a notice in writing, stating the nature and extent of his claim or contract; and if any person shall neglect to give such notice of his claim or contract, or having given the same, shall neglect to make application for the purchase thereof, as hereinafter directed, or shall fail in making the first payment before the first of January next, all his right of pre-emption, on the terms aforesaid, shall cease and become void.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid receiver of public moneys, on being paid the fees hereinafter provided, shall receive every such notice of claim, or statement thereof, and give a receipt therefor, and carefully put and preserve on file every such paper or writing, and lay the same before the commissioners, when met, for settling and adjusting the claims aforesaid.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid receiver of public moneys, and two other persons, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, alone shall be commissioners for the purpose of ascertaining the rights of persons claiming the benefits of this act, who, previous to entering on the duties of their appointment, shall respectively take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, before some person qualified to administer oaths, to wit: "I ———, do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will impartially exercise and discharge the duties imposed upon me, by an act of Congress, entitled 'An act giving a right of pre-emption to certain persons who have contracted with John Cleves Symmes, or his associates, for lands lying between the Miami rivers, in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, 'to the best of my understanding and ability;' and it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to meet at Cincinnati, between the first and tenth day of November next, of which meeting three weeks' previous notice shall be given by them in a public newspaper printed at Cincinnati; and they, or a majority of them, so met, shall not adjourn to any other place, or for a longer time than three days, until they have finally completed the business of the said appointment; and they, or any two of them, shall have power to hear, and decide in a summary manner, all matters respecting all such claims of which notice may have been filed, pursuant to the third section of this act, also to administer oaths, and examine witnesses, and such other testimony as may be adduced, and to determine thereon according to justice and equity; which determination shall be final; and when it shall appear to them that the claimant is entitled to the right of pre-emption on the terms aforesaid, they shall give a certificate thereof, stating as accurately as may be, the quantity and local situation of the lands to which he may be entitled, directed to the register of the land office at Cincinnati, or when the said register may be a claimant to the surveyor general, copies of which certificates shall be by them recorded, in a book to be provided for that purpose, and deposited for safe keeping with the register of the land office.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid register and surveyor general, respectively, upon application of any person or persons, who shall produce a certificate of the commissioners aforesaid, to him directed, before the first day of January next, and shall also produce a receipt from the Treasurer of the United States, or the aforesaid receiver of public moneys, for at least one-fourth part of the purchase money, and also for the payment of three dollars for each half section or smaller quantity, and shall pay him the fees in like case provided by the act, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States in the Territory of the United States Northwest of the Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky river,'" shall admit such person or persons to become a purchaser or purchasers of the land designated in the said certificate, and shall receive the said certificate, and preserve it on file, and make an entry of the application in his book, kept for the purpose, and on any of the three last payments being made in advance, he shall allow the purchaser the like discount as is allowed by the fourth clause of the fifth section of the act last above recited; and on payment in full, and a final settlement had, he shall give his certificate thereof; upon producing which to the Secretary of the Treasury, a patent shall issue in like manner as is provided by the said act last above recited.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said receiver of public moneys shall be entitled to have and receive, to his own use, from the respective claimants, the following fees, that is to say; for filing a notice and evidence of claim, or statement thereof, twenty-five cents; for giving a copy thereof, twelve and a half cents for every one hundred words: And the said commissioners shall, as a full compensation for their services, be entitled, jointly, to have and receive from the respective claimants, that is to say; for every determination, and entering the result in their book, at the rate of three dollars for every section; for every certificate, and recording the same, at the rate of one dollar for every section.

SEC. 7 And be it further enacted, That all the aforesaid tract of country shall be surveyed by the surveyor general, as soon as may be after the first day of September next, in the manner hereinafter directed.

1. So much of the said tract as lies between the northern boundary line, and the aforesaid patent of John Cleves Symmes, and associates, and Israel Ludlow's southern boundary of the seventh entire range of townships, shall be laid off into sections, agreeably to northwardly and southwardly lines, run under the direction of John Cleves Symmes; and the marks thereon made, at the time of running the aforesaid lines, for the corners of sections shall be established by the surveyor general, and eastwardly and westwardly lines shall be run to intersect the aforesaid northwardly and southwardly lines, in the corresponding marked points.

2. And the residue of the said tract lying north of the aforesaid southern boundary of the seventh entire range, shall be laid off into sections, according to such uniform rule and method, as, in the opinion of the surveyor general, shall best secure the rights and interest of those who are entitled to pre-emption.

3. Such divisions shall be made of sections, according to the claim of such who obtain pre-emption right, and the contents of each and every section, and such division thereof, shall be ascertained, and the surveyor general shall prepare and transmit a plan thereof to the aforesaid register, immediately after the said survey shall be completed, and also forward a copy thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That all persons, availing themselves of a pre-emption under this act, shall make application for a section, or any part or parts of a section or sections, according to the estimated quantity of six hundred and forty acres to a section, and the amount of the excess or deficiency shall be added to or deducted from the last payment, and the purchaser shall make payment for and hold the quantity returned and expressed in the plats, let the quantity be more or less.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the duties of the surveyor general, of the aforesaid register and receiver of public moneys, as nearly as may be consistent with this act, shall respectively be the same as directed in and by the last recited act, and the fees and emoluments shall respectively be the same as provided in the said act last recited.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That after completing the surveys, agreeably to this act, reserving the lots marked sixteen in each township, or fractional part of a township, in which the same may be, for the purposes expressed in the ordinance of Congress of the twentieth of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, the residue of the lands, and so many of the aforesaid pre-emptions as shall become forfeited by reason of failures of payment, shall be sold agreeably to the last recited act.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That this act shall have full operation and effect, anything in any former law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Approved, March 3, 1801.

An Act supplementary to the act, entitled "An act concerning the District of Columbia."

Be it enacted, &c., That the Circuit Courts for the District of Columbia shall be, and they are hereby, invested with the same power respecting constables, inspectors, and the inspection of tobacco and flour, surveyors, mills, highways and ferries, for the county of Alexandria, as have heretofore been vested in county courts of the Commonwealth of Virginia; and for the county of Washington, the same power and authority as have been heretofore exercised by the county and levy courts of the State of Maryland; with power to appoint to all other offices necessary for the said district, under the laws of the respective States of Maryland and Virginia: And all officers for whom no special provision is made by this act, or the act to which this is a supplement, shall receive the same fees and emoluments as they have respectively received under the jurisdiction of the respective States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all indictments shall run in the name of the United States, and conclude, against the peace and government thereof: And all fines, penalties and forfeitures accruing under the laws of the States of Maryland and Virginia, which by adoption have become the laws of this district, shall be recovered with costs, by indictment or information in the name of the United States, or by action of debt, in the name of the United States and of the informer; one half of which fine shall accrue to the United States, and the other half to the informer; and the said fines shall be collected by or paid to the marshal, and one half thereof shall be by him paid over to the board of commissioners hereinafter established, and the other half to the informer; and the marshal shall have the same power regarding their collection, and be subject to the same rules and regulations as to the payment thereof, as the sheriffs of the respective States of Maryland and Virginia are subject to in relation to the same.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all felonies committed within the county of Alexandria shall be punishable in the same manner as such crimes were punishable by the laws of Virginia, as they existed prior to the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six; and the circuit court for the said county of Alexandria shall possess and exercise the same powers and jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as is now possessed and exercised by the district courts of Virginia.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the magistrates, to be appointed for the said district, shall be and they are hereby constituted a board of commissions within their respective counties, and shall possess and exercise the same powers, perform the same duties, receive the same fees and emoluments, as the levy courts or commissioners of county for the State of Maryland possess, perform and receive; and the clerks and collectors, to be by them appointed, shall be subject to the same laws, perform the same duties, possess the same powers, and receive the same fees and emoluments as the clerks and collectors of the county tax of the State of Maryland are entitled to receive.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the clerks of the circuit court shall, within their respective districts, be bound to perform the same duties, respecting the recording of deeds and all other services, and shall receive the same fees and emoluments for the same except in those cases provided for in the ninth section of the act to which this is a supplement) as are now performed and received by the clerks of the counties of the respective States of Maryland and Virginia.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the Constitution or laws of the United States provide that criminals and fugitives from justice, or persons held to labor in any State, escaping into another State, shall be delivered up, the chief justice of the said district shall be, and he is hereby empowered and required to cause to be apprehended and delivered up such criminal, fugitive from justice, or persons fleeing from service, as the case may be, who shall be found within the district, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the executive authority of the several States are required to do the same; and all executive and judicial officers are hereby required to obey all lawful precepts or other process issued for that purpose, and to be aiding and assisting in such delivery.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the sheriffs and collectors of public dues for the counties of Montgomery and Prince George's in the State of Maryland, and for the sheriffs of Fairfax county in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and they shall respectively have full power and authority, to enter into those parts of the now District of Columbia, which were heretofore within the limits of their respective bailiwicks, for the purposes of collecting, by distress or otherwise, as they were heretofore authorized to do, all officers fees, State taxes and county taxes, levies, fines and other public dues, which were due on the first Monday of December, one thousand eight hundred, and still remain uncollected, from persons residing or having property, subject to the payment of such officers fees, State taxes and county taxes, and levies within the said district; and all disputes or controversies that do or may arise between such sheriff or collector, and the person or persons from whom he or they may claim such public dues, shall be cognizable before and tried by the respective State courts to whom the trial of such controversies heretofore belonged, and not before the court of the District of Columbia.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 8, And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the sheriffs of the said counties of Montgomery and Prince George's in the State of Maryland, and for the sheriff of Fairfax county in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and they shall respectively have full power and authority, to enter into those ports parts of the now District of Columbia, which were heretofore within the limits of their respective bailiwicks, for the purpose of arresting and conducting to the respective jails under their keeping and care, as they heretofore might have done had the law to which this is a supplement never passed, each and every person within the limits of the District of Columbia, upon whom such sheriff hath heretofore served a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, capias ad respondendum, attachment or other process, issuing from any State court, which commands and requires such sheriff to have the body of the person before the court from which such writ or process hath issued.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That where by this act, and the act to which this is a supplement, appointments are authorized to be made by the circuit court of the district, it shall be lawful for the chief judge, with one of the associate justices of the said court, to make such appointments.

Approved, March 3, 1801.

An Act authorizing the remission of duties on certain teas destroyed by fire, while under the care of the officers of the customs, in Providence, Rhode Island.

Be it enacted, &c., That the collector of the district of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit the duties on such part of a certain quantity of teas, imported into the port of Providence, in the ship called the Resource, on the twenty-ninth day of July one thousand eight hundred, by Thomas Lloyd Halsey, John Corlis, William F. Megee, and Henry Smith, of the town of Providence, merchants, and on such part of a certain quantity of teas, imported into the said port, in the ship called the Ann and Hope, on the twenty-second day of August, in the same year, by John Innes Clarke, of the said town, merchant, as remained deposited to secure the payment of duties under the care of the officers of the customs, on the twenty-first day of January last, in the aforesaid town of Providence, and shall be proved, to the satisfaction of the said collector, to have been burned and destroyed.

Approved, March 3, 1801.

An Act to amend the act altering the district of Bermuda Hundred and City Point.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the passing of this act, the master or commander of any ship or vessel arriving within the districts of Petersburg or Richmond, laden with goods, wares, and merchandise, belonging or consigned to persons resident within both the said districts, shall make entry of such ship or vessel, in manner already prescribed by law, with the collector of that district wherein the owner or consignee, or the husband or acting manager of such ship or vessel, shall actually reside: And the said master or commander shall, at the time of making the entry aforesaid, deliver a duplicate manifest of the cargo, as now required by law, to the said collector, whose duty it shall then be to certify the same as a true copy, and to transmit it to the collector of the other district; and the delivery of such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be authorized by permits from the collector of each district, respectively, in which the same shall have been duly entered according to law: Provided, That no bona fide importer, owner, or consignee, of goods, wares, or merchandise, residing in either district, shall be admitted to make an entry of such goods, wares or merchandise, with the collector of the district in which such importer, owner or consignee, shall not reside: And provided also, That all entries for goods, wares, or merchandise, made by agents, for persons residing in other districts, shall be made with the collector of the district in which such ship or vessel may discharge.
